After arriving at Louisville, Warten telegraphed the Memphis company that the Louisville firm refused the extension unless he paid $3,000 in cash, and the company replied that they could not give him the money. A settlement was made on the 30th of December between Warten and the Louisville firm, by which the outstanding past-due note was taken up, and Warten furnished an acceptance due on the 15th of January for $1,000, and four other acceptances of $500 each, maturing on the 1st and 15th of February and 1st and 15th of March following, and the balance of the debt, except an item *of about $200, was settled by acceptances maturing the following November and December. At the time of making this settlement or thereafter (up to the 13th of January) the Louisville firm made no reply to the letter from the Memphis firm. From January 1 the embarrassment of Warten became rapidly more flagrant, in consequence of the results of the crop disaster becoming absolutely assured. On the 13th of January, 1890, at about 6 o'clock in the morning, Warten sold to the Memphis firm his stock of goods, safe and store fixtures at Athens, with also a small stock and store fixtures owned by him at Elkmont, and certain accounts, a lot of mules, and an interest in real estate, for the price of $17,032.40, this being the amount of the principal and interest of the notes held by the firm, which have been already mentioned. The sale was accepted in full acquittance and discharge of the debt. A member of the firm, who had come from Memphis, took possession of the property. On the same day Warten sold to the Memphis company certain assets in full payment of an open account due by him, and other transfers of assets in payment of other debts to various creditors were also made at or about that time. On the same day as the sale to the Memphis firm (13th of January, 1890), between 11 and 12 o'clock, Warten made a general assignment of all but his exempt property in favor of his general creditors; the assets covered by this assignment being open accounts due him, and the remaining avails of his business, amounting to the face value of about $50,000; the claim of the creditors in whose favor this assignment was made, including that of the Louisville firm, aggregating about $15,000. Of the accounts assigned, about $30,000 were debts due Warten for business of the current crop year.

A few days after this sale the Louisville firm attached the stock of goods in the Athens store as being yet the property of Warten. The Memphis firm claimed the property seized and bonded it, thus raising the issue to which we have in the outset referred. After the sale by Warten to the Memphis firm, he acted as an employce in the store generally assisting *in [154 the conduct of the business, continuing to do so until the 10th of June, 1890, when what remained of the stock and some other of the property which had been sold to the Memphis firm was resold to the wife of Warten. Although there is no dispute as to the foregoing facts, on every other question of fact there is conflict. The claimants' evidence tended to show that the sale by Warten to them was real, was made for a just price, and that it absolutely extinguished their debt, and that no benefit or expected benefit was expressly or impliedly reserved to the seller; that actual delivery was made of the property sold, and that they were in possession as owners at the time of the attachment; that the employment of Warten was simply in a clerical capacity and was rendered advisable from his knowledge of the business and consequent ability to assist the vendors in converting the stock and assets into cash. On the other hand, the evidence of the attaching creditor (the Louisville firm) tended to show by a mass of circumstances that the sale was intended to and did reserve a benefit to Warten; that his presence in the store after the sale, while ostensibly in the capacity of an employee, was really in that of an owner or of one having an expectancy of ownership. As to the facts connected with the settlement made by the Memphis firm, there was also much conflict in the evidence, Warten swearing that when he presented the letter from the Louisville firm the extension to the next crop year asked by him was refused, unless he paid $3,000 cash, and that it was in consequence of this demand that he telegraphed the Memphis company that the Louisville firm refused the extension and asked $3,000; that when he could not procure the amount of the cash payment demanded, then the settlement was effected, the short term acceptances for $3,000 having been given by him as an equivalent of the cash demanded; the remainder of the debt, except a small sum, having been extended to the next crop season. On the other hand, the testimony of a member of the Louisville house was that no demand of cash was made and that the extension asked by Warten was granted without objection, and was evidenced by the acceptances.

*There was a verdict for the claimants [155 (the Memphis firm), and the seizing creditor (the Louisville firm) prosecutes this writ of error, on which he assigns thirty-six errors, twelve of which are predicated on erroneous rulings asserted to have been made in admitting or rejecting testimony, and the others are directed to the charge of the court to the jury. Only a fragment of the general charge is in the record. Each party, however, presented a series of requests stating the propositions of law which they respectively deemed applicable to the facts, and all the errors assigned growing out of the charge of the court involve the correctness of the court's action in having substantially given the special charges asked by the claimants (the Memphis firm) and rejecting those presented by the attaching creditor (the Louisville firm). In the discussion at bar the plaintiff in error has devoted much of the argument to demonstrate that the trial court erred in declining a request by him made to instruct the jury to render a verdict in his favor, if they believed the testimony, but this request was manifestly rightly refused. It involved a finding by the court as to weight of evidence and practically asked it to usurp the province of the jury, by determining the proper inference to be drawn from the evidence and deciding on which side lay the preponderance of proof. In so far as this request asked the court to instruct that under any hypothesis of fact, as a matter of law, the attaching creditor was entitled to a verdict, it can be more properly considered in reviewing the exceptions taken to the instructions given at the request 158] of *the one, and the consequent refusal to give the converse propositions asked by the other party. It would lead only to confusion and repetition to follow the various assignments of error and review them separately. They group themselves under six headings: First, assertion of error in the charges given as to the legal effect of the sale to the Memphis firm; second, error in the instructions as to the general assignment; third, error as to the ruling with reference to the burden of proof to establish fraud; fourth, error in the charge as to the effect of the employment of Warten after the sale and the resale to Mrs. Warten; fifth, error as to the effect of having included in the debt for which the sale was made the note dated June 10 for $2,500; and, sixth, error as to the bearing on the rights of the parties, of the letter written by the Memphis firm to the Louisville firm, and the settlement had by the latter with Mr. Warten after the letter was received. The consideration of the controversies under these various headings will embrace all the errors assigned, and will dispose of every question in the case, except the twelve errors asserted to have been committed in the admission or rejection of testimony.

First. The validity of the sale to the Memphis firm.

The court charged that, under the law of Alabama, a debtor had the right to prefer a creditor, and that, if the sale was real and was made in good faith for a fair price,—was honestly executed to extinguish the debt, and did extinguish it, and contained no reservation of any interest or benefit in favor of the vendor,—it was valid and passed the property to the vendee; that the sale, if it possessed these enumerated qualities, would be legal, although any of the following facts might be found by the jury to have existed: (a) that the vendor was insolvent to the knowledge of the vendee; (b) even although there was a fraudulent intent on the part of the vendor to defeat his other creditors, because, if the sale possessed the attributes necessary to make it valid, as the law permitted the preference under the conditions stated, the mere intention of the vendor to defraud his other creditors by giving a preference to one would not render the sale invalid; and (c) although its known effect and necessary 159] *consequence were that the remaining creditors of the vendor would be unable to obtain the payment of their debts.

The correctness of these instructions depends necessarily upon the law of Alabama as interpreted and construed by the supreme court of that state, whose rulings in this regard will be followed here. Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 233 [34: 344]; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670 [33: 696]. It was in consonance with this rule that in a given case we enforced the law of the state of Illinois (White v. Cotzhausen, 129 U. S. 329 [32: 677]), and in another that of the state of Iowa (Etheridge v. Sperry, 139 U. S. 267 [35: 173]). The instructions given as above recited were in direct accord with the settled law of Alabama. In Pollock v. Meyer, 96 Ala. 172, it was held that:

“If the property conveyed by an insolvent debtor in payment of pre-existing debts does not materially exceed in value the amount of indebtedness actually owing and paid by the conveyance, and no benefit is reserved to the grantor, the conveyance is lawful as against his other creditors, regardless of the motives of the parties to the conveyance or of badges of fraud in the transaction.”

On page 175 the court cites approvingly from the decision in First Nat. Bank of Birmingham v. Smith, 93 Ala. 97, as follows:

“An insolvent debtor may select which of his creditors, one or more, he will pay, and pay them in full, and thus disable himself to pay the others anything; and it makes no difference if the one or more preferred creditors know the effect of the transaction will be to deprive the debtor of all means with which to pay his other debts. Nor is the wish, motive, or intention of the debtor a material inquiry, if the requisite conditions exist. Those conditions, in a case like the present, are: First, the debt must be bona fide and enforceable, not simulated. Second, the payment must be absolute, and, if made in property, must not be materially in excess of the debt. Third, no pecuniary benefit or consideration of value, other than the liquidation of the debt, must inure or be secured to the debtor. . . .

*The true inquiry at last was and is, Did [160] the creditor bargain for and receive overpayment or payment in excess of his just demand?”

The court further observed, on page 176, as follows:

“The principle of law settled by the decisions of this court is that the payment of an antecedent debt by an insolvent debtor, by a conveyance of his property, rests upon entirely different grounds than when a cash or present consideration is paid. It matters not whether the grantor alone, or grantor and grantee both, devised and intended to get the advantage of other creditors, if, in fact, the effect of the transaction was solely to pay a debt honestly due, and the property was received by the creditor in payment of his debt at a fair and adequate price, and no interest or benefit reserved to the grantor debtor. ‘If the transaction is not assailable on one of these grounds, fraud has no room for operation.’ As was said in Hodges v. Coleman, 76 Ala. 103: ‘What injury can the motive do to a nonpreferred creditor? The act, we have seen, is lawful. Can human tribunals set aside a transaction, lawful in itself, because the actors had an evil mind in doing it? Can there be fraud in doing a lawful act, even though it be prompted by an evil malice or badges of fraud?"

Second. The effect of the general assignment.

The error alleged to exist in the charge of the court as to the legal consequences of the general assignment and its effect on the sale to the Memphis firm, which was made a few hours before the general assignment, is equally unfounded. The instruction given substantially was that if the sale to the Memphis firm was valid, the making of the general assignment on the same day did not render it illegal. The decision of the supreme court of Alabama in Ellison v. Moses, 95 Ala. 221, is decisive of the correctness of this instruction. In that case creditors of a partnership sought to have several conveyances which had been executed by the partnership declared parts of a general assignment subsequently executed. The court held, however, that:

"An insolvent debtor having, under repeated decisions of this court, the right to sell and convey property in absolute *payment of an existing debt, provided the price is fair and reasonable, and no use or benefit is reserved to himself, such absolute sale and conveyance will not, at the instance of other creditors, be declared and treated as part of a general assignment executed soon afterwards (Code, § 1737), though executed in anticipation of it, and with notice on the part of the creditor that the debtor intended to make a general assignment."

In its opinion the court further said (p. 224): "The law of this state permits an insolvent debtor to make preferences among his creditors in the payment of his debts, by an absolute sale or transfer of his property in discharge of such debts. He may convey the whole or any part of his property in payment of an antecedent debt, and if the price is reasonably fair, and there is no reservation of a benefit or trust in his favor, the sale is valid and will be sustained, whatever may have been the debtor's intentions, and though the preferred creditor knew of such intentions, and that the sale would leave the debtor unable to pay his other debts. That such preferences are allowable is settled by numerous decisions of this court. Chipman v. Stern, 89 Ala. 207; Hodges v. Coleman, 76 Ala. 103; Crawford v. Kirksey, 55 Ala. 282, 28 Am. Rep. 704; 3 Brick. Dig. 517. The statutory prohibition against preferences in general assignments (Code, § 1737) does not operate upon an absolute and unconditional sale of a debtor's property to his creditors in payment of the debts due to them. This question, also, is well settled by the former decisions of this court. The general assignment, in which preferences or priorities of payment given to one or more creditors over the others are prohibited, implies the idea of a trust, under the operation of which there is a possibility of a reversion to the debtor of some interest in the proceeds of a sale of the property assigned. No such idea is involved in an unconditional sale of property in absolute payment and discharge of a debt. Here the debt is extinguished, and the debtor is stripped of all interest in the property sold.

Such a sale is not within the purview of the statute, and if a preference is thereby effected, it is not such a preference as the statute prohibits. Otis v. McGuire, 76 Ala. 295; Danner v. Brewer, 69 Ala. 191; Comer v. Constan- [162 tine, 86 Ala. 492. The result is, that the law as it now stands permits an insolvent debtor to prefer one or more of his creditors over the others in the payment of debts by a sale of property in satisfaction thereof, and prohibits preferences or priorities of payment in a general assignment by the debtor for the benefit of his creditors. Only the legislature can make the prohibition against preferences equally operative in both classes of cases. The courts must recognize and enforce the law as it exists. They cannot ignore distinctions created by the lawmaking power."

By recent legislation in Alabama the provisions of Ala. Code, § 1737, upon which these rulings were made, have been amended, so that a conveyance substantially of all a debtor's property in payment of prior debts is put upon the same footing with conveyances for the security of debts. Strickland v. Gay (Ala.) 16 So. 77, 78. The questions, however, here are obviously to be determined by the law of Alabama existing at the time the transactions occurred.

Third. Burden of proof to establish fraud.

The instruction complained of on this subject was that if the proof showed that the Memphis firm had an honest debt, and they purchased the stock at a fair and reasonable price in payment of that indebtedness, the burden was on the plaintiffs to show that a benefit or interest in the sale was reserved to Warten; in other words, that the transfer was fraudulent. It is urged that this instruction ignored the rule of evidence as to the presumption of law which arises from proof of circumstances of suspicion and badges of fraud, which, it is asserted, were shown in this case by the evidence offered in behalf of the Louisville firm. In Curran v. Olmstead, 101 Ala. 692, it was said (p. 694):

"When the transaction is assailed by an antecedent creditor, the burden rests on the creditor who has been preferred to prove the existence, amount, and justness of his claim; and when paid in property he must also prove that the property was taken at a price not materially below its fair market value."

The burden of proof to show fraud and notice of fraud was *on the party alleging [163 fraud. Hodges v. Coleman, 76 Ala. 103; Pollak v. Searcy, 84 Ala. 259. See also Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 615 [29:742, 744]. In Pollak v. Searcy, supra, the court said:

"If the fact of indebtedness and that the goods were sold in payment of such indebtedness at their reasonable fair value are established to the satisfaction of the jury, and if it be contended, in avoidance thereof, that the trade was simulated, that there was a secret trust or benefit reserved to the debtors, the burden was then on the contesting creditor to establish it."

So in Roswald v. Hobbie, 85 Ala. 73, 79, it was held that:

"As against creditors of an insolvent debtor, one claiming as a purchaser must prove that he paid a valuable and adequate consideration, but is not bound to negative the reservation of a benefit to the debtor."

Fourth. As to the effect of the employment of Warten after the sale and the resale to Mrs. Warten.

The charges given by the court on this subject were as follows:

"If the jury find from the evidence, under the instructions given by the court, that Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. made a valid purchase of the stock of goods in controversy from Henry Warten, then Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. had a legal right to employ Warten for their benefit to assist in winding up the business, and turning the goods into money as promptly and economically as possible."

"If the jury find from evidence that prior to the 13th day of January, 1890, Henry Warten had been engaged for several years in an established and extensive business at Athens, Ala., and that he sold his stock of goods to Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. in a valid way, it is but reasonable that Warten might be employed by Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. as a clerk to assist in the winding up of the business for the benefit of Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. Such circumstance is not of itself fraudulent."

"If the jury find from the evidence in this cause, under the instructions given by the court, that the sale by Henry Warten to [164] *Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. is valid, then Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Co. had the legal right to give the stock of goods to Mrs. Warten or sell the same to her on such terms as they desired."

In considering the correctness of these instructions, we necessarily assume the bona fides of the sale made to the Memphis firm and its validity, except in so far as its legality may have been affected by the employment of Warten and the subsequent sale to his wife. But the proof on the subject of the circumstances which gave rise to the employment of Warten and the resale to Mrs. Warten was conflicting. The fact of the employment and resale, no question being made as to the reality of the transfer, could at best have been only competent evidence to be considered by the jury in determining whether or not a secret benefit was reserved to the debtor in the original transaction, which was the issue on this branch of the case. Certainly, if nothing else appeared but the mere employment of Warten, subsequent to the sale, to assist in the disposition of the goods and the getting in of the book accounts, such fact would not be a circumstance in itself sufficient to prove, within the meaning of the Alabama law, that the transaction was fraudulent. Even if, at the time of the sale, there had been an agreement to employ, such fact would not, of itself, have necessarily implied a reservation of benefit in favor of the seller so as to have rendered the sale invalid under the Alabama law. Murray v. McNealy, 86 Ala. 234. Such also is the general rule. Smith v. Craft, 123 U. S. 436 [31: 267]; Burrill, Assignments (6th ed.) p. 471, § 343, and authorities there cited. Indeed, under the rule as announced in Alabama, the court could have affirmatively instructed that the employment of the vendor in a clerical capacity could not affect the validity of the sale. Richardson v. Stringfellow, 100 Ala. 416, 422.

The instruction that if the original sale by Warten was valid, the purchasers had a legal right to dispose of the property to Mrs. Warten, is within the principle of the decision in Young v. Dumas, 39 Ala. 60, 62, where the court said—speaking of a gift by a father to his daughter, of property *which the father had received from his son-in-law in payment of an indebtedness due from the son-in-law to the father—as follows:

"Mr. Horn had the clear right to collect his demand, which we have seen was just, from his son-in-law, Mr. Dumas; and after he thus became the owner of the property, his right to give that property to the sole and exclusive use of his daughter, Mrs. Dumas, cannot be successfully controverted by the creditors of Mr. Dumas. As to them, the gift was harmless. That the effect may have been to delay, and possibly defeat, all other creditors in the collection of their demands, cannot, of itself, avoid the sale."

It is argued that whilst these charges may not have been intrinsically erroneous they were yet illegal, because they singled out some of the strongest badges of fraud upon which the plaintiff relied and weakened, impaired, or destroyed their force and weight as evidence; that they were argumentative deductions, the necessary effect of which was to obscure the force of the inferences of fraud which the jury might have deduced from the fact of the employment and the resale, and therefore practically prevented the jury, in drawing its conclusions, from giving due consideration to these matters. But it nowhere appears that the court instructed the jury that they might not, in reaching a determination upon the bona fides of the sale by Warten to the Memphis firm and the question whether a secret benefit was reserved in his favor, consider such facts as the subsequent employment of Warten and the sale thereafter to his wife. As a matter of fact, the portions of the general charge of the court set forth in the record make it clear that the question of reservation of a secret benefit to Warten in the sale was particularly called to the attention of the jury, as necessary to be considered by them in arriving at a conclusion as to the validity of the transfer. We are unable to see that the charges in question had a tendency to cause the jury to regard the fact of the employment of Warten and the sale to his wife as not important to be weighed by them in passing upon the bona fides of the sale to the Memphis firm.

Fifth. Error as to the effect of having [166 included in the debt for which the sale was made the note dated June 10, for $2,500.*

The three following instructions on the subject were asked and refused:

"33. If any part of the debt claimed by Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Company against Warten as the consideration of the transfer of the goods to them is simulated or pretended, that fact would vitiate the whole transaction. If the jury find from the evidence that part of the consideration is composed of the note of Warten for $2,500, which was due and payable to the Schoolfield-Hanauer Company, a corporation under the laws of Tennessee, and that said note was taken from the account of said corporation and placed upon the account of the claimants for the purpose of increasing the account of Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Company, that account, to the extent of said $2,500, would be simulated, and this would vitiate the transaction, and if the jury so find, their verdict should be for the plaintiffs.

"34. If part of the consideration of the transfer from Warten to the claimants is a note for $2,500, payable to the Schoolfield-Hanauer Company and owned by them, and if the said note was transferred to the account of Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Company, and if said transfer was made for the purpose of increasing the firm's debt against Warten, so as to make it equal in amount to the value of the goods and property transferred by Warten to the claimants, the consideration for such transfer to the extent of said note for $2,500 would be simulated, and this would vitiate the transfer, and if the jury so find the facts, their verdict must be for the plaintiffs."

"36. If the jury believe from the evidence that the promissory note for $2,500, made by Henry Warten on June 10, 1889, payable to the order of Schoolfield, Hanauer, & Company, at the office of the Schoolfield-Hanauer Company, four months after date, and indorsed 'The Schoolfield-Hanauer Company, p'r W. W. Schoolfield, treasurer,' was taken and indorsed by said corporation, and it let said Warten have the amount thereof, less discount being $——, 167] by crediting his*account with said corporation for $——, as shown by said statements of said accounts in evidence in this case, then said draft became the property of said corporation, and it was an indebtedness due by said Warten to it; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that said indebtedness was transferred from the account of said Warten with said corporation to the account of said Warten with said firm on or about the 11th day of January, 1890, for the purpose of evading the law of the state of Alabama, which prohibits foreign corporations from doing business in the state of Alabama without known place of business and authorized agent therein, the jury would be authorized to find that said indebtedness was the property of and due to said corporation, and not said firm, when said alleged transfer of the stock of goods in dispute in this suit to said firm by said Warten was made, and should they so find, in that event their verdict should be for the plaintiffs."

They were rightly refused. There was no proof of any kind even tending to show the simulation of the note. It was certainly, under the undisputed proof, due by Warten; it was drawn to the order of the Memphis firm, who were, as indorsers, necessary parties to its negotiation. That firm had an obvious right, with the consent of the company by whom the paper had been discounted, to use it as a debt due them and thus protect their indorsement. Nor was the sending of a note to Tennessee for discount and its discounting in that state by the Memphis company, carrying on business in Alabama by the Memphis company. The 2d section of the 14th article of the Constitution of Alabama, and the act of the legislature of 1886-87, pp. 102, 104, relied on by the plaintiff in error, have been held by the courts of Alabama not to have been intended to (as of course they could not) interfere with matters of commerce between the states, and to have no application to transactions such as that here under consideration. Ware v. Hamilton Brown Shoe Co. 92 Ala. 145; Cook v. Rome Brick Co. 98 Ala. 409.

160 U. S.

Sixth. Error as to the bearing, on the rights of the parties, of the letter written by the Memphis firm, and the settlement had by the latter with Warten after the writing of the letter.

*Much stress is placed by counsel on this[168 proposition. The contention is that the Louisville firm having been induced to give an extension on the faith of the letter written them by the Memphis firm, the latter could not receive payment by sale, from the debtor, which created a preference, without operating a fraud upon the Louisville firm. To support this contention authorities are cited, holding that when creditors have jointly agreed, each upon the faith of the other's promises, to extend the indebtedness of their codebtor for a fixed and definite period, a party to such an agreement who secures an advantage to himself out of the mutual debtor's property, during such extended period, may be compelled to account for the property received and permit the other creditors to share pro rata with him. But the fallacy is not in the legal proposition but in its application to the facts here considered, and consists in treating the Memphis firm as consenting to and being bound by the terms of the extension granted to Warten by the firm in Louisville. There was no evidence even tending to so prove. The only connection of the Memphis firm with the settlement, even if all the disputed questions of fact were determined in favor of the firm at Louisville, was the letter from the Memphis firm presented by Warten when the extension was made. But the letter could not give rise to the obligations contended for, since the extension granted by the Louisville firm was in conflict with the obvious intent of the letter. It stated that Warten, "through, we believe, no fault of his own, but owing to disastrous failure of crops in his own section, finds himself forced to ask for extension," and expressed a willingness to grant the extension, provided the Louisville firm would do likewise. The extension referred to must necessarily have meant an extension to the next crop year, otherwise the letter was meaningless. The disaster calling for the extension was the crop failure, and, the substantial results of the crop being realized by the end of December, it was self-evident that the extension proposed, and which the Memphis firm was willing to give, in conjunction with the Louisville firm, was one which would carry the debtor to another crop. This becomes more manifest when it is considered *that the extension was only to be[169 asked of three creditors, the Louisville firm, the Memphis firm, and one other, leaving the other debts unextended. But the extension granted by the Louisville firm did not accede to this proposal, since it embraced short-time acceptances for $3,000, which they could only hope to be paid out of the avails of the disastrous failure of the crop which had, by the terms of the letter, given rise to the necessity for the extension. Doubtless it was this view of the relation of the parties which caused the court to instruct the jury that if the Louisville firm took short-time paper from Warten in the hope of obtaining an advantage over the Memphis firm, they would have no right to complain because the Memphis firm overtook them in the race of diligence. Whether, however, this instruction was given because the court took this view of the letter and the legal effect of its unaccepted proposal, is immaterial. The entire charge is not in the record. The court may have expressed itself in this matter to the jury, in connection with observations possibly advanced in argument by counsel for plaintiffs in error upon their claim that the Memphis firm in the letter in question had sought to gain an advantage. And if such were the case, it was not error for the court to call the attention of the jury to the opposing view of the transaction.

381

These conclusions dispose of all the errors assigned which relate to the instructions given by the court, and leave only the exceptions taken to rulings admitting or rejecting testimony. They are twelve in number. We have examined them all, and content ourselves with saying that we find them either not well taken or of such a character, on account of their immateriality, as to create no reversible error.

Affirmed.

170] BOARD OF FLOUR INSPECTORS for the Port of New Orleans ET AL., Appls.,

v.

BOOTH F. GLOVER and FREDERICK J. ODENDAHL, Composing the Firm of GLOVER & ODENDAHL, ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 170.)

When appeal will be dismissed.

An appeal from a decree for an injunction against enforcing a law will be dismissed, if the law itself has been repealed.

[No. 88.]

Argued November 22, 1895. Decided December 9, 1895.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, enjoining the Board of Flour Inspectors for the Port of New Orleans et al. from enforcing against Booth F. Glover et al. an act of the general assembly of Louisiana of 1870. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. R. Beckwith for appellants.

The court declined to hear Mr. Wm. Wirt Howe for appellees.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE: The decree below enjoined appellants from enforcing against appellees act No. 71 of the extra session of the general assembly of Louisiana of 1870. La. Sess. Laws (Extra Sess. 1870) 156. This act was repealed June 28, 1892 (No. 23 of 1892, La. Acts 1892, 34), and the appeal is dismissed on the authority of Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651 [ante, 293].

Appeal dismissed.

PETER DOUGHERTY, Plff. in Err., [171
v.

NEVADA BANK of San Francisco.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 171).

Jurisdiction of this court.

The construction of a state statute by a state court as to the power of a board of supervisors to extend the time for the performance of a street contract does not present a Federal question which this court can review.

[No. 98.]

Argued and Submitted December 6, 1895. Decided December 9, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of California to review a judgment of that court. Dismissed.

Statement from brief of defendant in error:

This writ was brought to reverse a judgment of the supreme court of California, affirming a judgment against the plaintiff, plaintiff in error here, in a suit to foreclose an assessment on a lot of the defendant, defendant in error here, levied to pay for street work in San Francisco under a contract made pursuant to the act of April 1, 1872. The contract was made January 15, 1873, and required the completion of the work in 150 days from that date, which time was subsequently extended for forty days by admittedly valid orders of the board of supervisors, and expired on July 24, 1873. Nearly two years afterwards, on March 29, 1875, a further extension of 645 days, dating from such prior expiration of the time, was granted by the board, and there were numerous like extensions afterwards, before the work was done, granted, in almost every instance, after the time previously allowed had expired. The assessment was made April 11, 1877, shortly after the work was completed. One Charity Hayward, then owner of the defendant's lot, appealed from said assessment to the board of supervisors on the ground, among others, of the alleged invalidity of the aforesaid extensions, granted after expiration of the time, and on such appeal the board confirmed the assessment. The judgment here in question held: (1st) that the extensions above mentioned were unauthorized and invalid, and that the assessment was void for failure to perform the work in time; and (2d) that the decision of the board on said appeal of Charity Hayward did not conclude or estop the defendant on this point.

The plaintiff in error contends that the judgment as to the first point above mentioned impaired the obligation of his contract, which, as he alleges, was made and performed on the faith of Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 246, decided under the acts of 1862 and 1863, which, as he claims, were the same, in this respect, as the act of 1872, and that said judgment, as to the second point, denied him "the equal protection of the laws."

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question; what constitutes Federal question,—see note to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37: 267.

As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution,—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

Mr. J. C. Bates for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Jas. G. Maguire, John Garber, John H. Boalt, and Thomas B. Bishop for defendant in error.

MR. JUSTICE FIELD: The writ of error is dismissed on the authority of Wood v. Brady, 150 U. S. 18 [37: 981].

Writ dismissed.

EDDY B. TOWNSEND, Appt.,

v.

MARY C. VANDERWERKER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 171-184.)

Equity jurisdiction—specific performance—statute of frauds—laches—multifariousness.

1. A court of equity has jurisdiction of an action which, in addition to the recovery of money, seeks to establish a trust in favor of the plaintiff and to obtain a sale of the property to satisfy his claim.
2. Where defendant has only partially disabled himself from carrying out his contract, the plaintiff may be entitled to specific performance so far as it can be enforced, and may receive compensation in damages for the deficiency.
3. Payment of the consideration, accompanied by an entry into the possession of land, under a verbal contract, is such part performance as will remove the bar of the statute of frauds and support an action for specific performance.
4. The question of laches depends upon whether, under all the circumstances, plaintiff is wanting in due diligence in commencing his action. That a party to an agreement has died and his testimony is thereby lost is not conclusive of laches, on demurrer.
5. A bill is not multifarious, although one paragraph sets out a verbal agreement to convey an interest in land, and the prayer is for the payment of money, where, in view of a trust deed, a decree for the interest in land will not satisfy plaintiff's claim, and his lien is claimed to extend to the whole property to satisfy a promise to convey half of its unencumbered value.

[No. 73.]

Argued November 20, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

APPEAL from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia affirming the decree of the Special Term of said Court sustaining a demurrer and dismissing a suit in equity to establish a trust and to recover one half the value of land in Washington with the house standing thereon, and on the rent of said house and lot. Reversed, with directions for further proceedings.

See same case below, 20 D. C. 197.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a bill in equity to recover one half the value of a certain piece of real estate in Washington, with the house thereon standing, of which one Julia R. Marvin died seised, together with a like proportion of the rents of the said house and lot received by Mrs. Marvin during her lifetime, or due and unpaid since her death.

The amended bill, which was brought against the heirs at law of Julia R. Marvin, the administrator of her estate, and the trustee named in a deed of trust of the property in question, averred in substance that said Julia R. Marvin was seised in fee and possessed of a certain lot of land upon Sixteenth street in the city of Washington; that she died on February 3, 1889, intestate as to her real estate; and that letters of administration were granted by the probate court to the defendant Hood.

After several immaterial averments as to the relationship of the several defendants, the execution of a trust deed to secure the payment of $10,000, the collection of rents by the intestate Marvin and her administrator, the bill averred in substance as follows:

That in March, 1879, an agreement was entered into *between the plaintiff and Mrs. Marvin by which he agreed to contribute in money and in labor one half of the original cost of the said parcel of land and a dwelling house to be erected thereon, and in consideration thereof Mrs. Marvin agreed to convey to him a half interest in the land and dwelling house, so that the same should be owned jointly by himself and Mrs. Marvin; "that at the time of making said agreement there was no note or memorandum thereof in writing, but in performance of the same on his part the plaintiff gave his personal attention and supervision to the selection and purchase of the materials for the said dwelling house and the erection of the same," and also expended the sum of $4,000 in defraying the cost of the house; that this agreement, although not reduced to writing, on account of the intimate personal relations existing between the parties and the entire confidence they reposed in each other, had been fully performed by the plaintiff, the amount of money contributed by him, and the value of his services in selecting and purchasing the materials for the dwelling house and in superintending the erection of the same being equal altogether to one half the cost of the land and house; that Mrs. Marvin died without having executed her part of the agreement by conveying to the plaintiff the half interest in the land and house, although she had repeatedly recognized the claim in her lifetime, and had declared to plaintiff and others that she had made adequate provisions for the same in her last will and testament; that the services of the plaintiff were rendered in the years 1879 and 1880, and the money paid by him in defraying the cost of the house and land was paid during the years 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1884 in various sums to Mrs. Marvin, and sent to her

NOTE—As to when specific performance decreed and when refused.—see notes to Hepburn v. Dunlop, 4: 65; Colson v. Thompson, 4: 253; and Brashier v. Gratz, 5: 322.

That plaintiff must show performance or readiness to perform and offer to perform; decree against subsequent purchaser.—see notes to Colson v. Thompson, 4: 253; and Pratt v. Carroll, 3: 627.

As to laches, when a good defense, see note to Felix v. Patrick, 36: 720.

in drafts by mail, as is evidenced by her repeated acknowledgments to him and others during her lifetime and by certain checks indorsed by her.

That from the time of the rendition of the said services and the payment of the said money by the plaintiff in performance of his said agreement, until the day of the death of the said Julia R. Marvin, the plaintiff constantly and repeatedly urged her to come to a settlement with him and to perform her part of the agreement by conveying to him a one-half interest in the parcel of land and the dwelling house erected thereon; that she always, whenever the subject was referred to, recognized and acknowledged the validity and justice of the claim, and assured the plaintiff that she had provided for the same in her last will and testament; that on the 4th day of January, 1888, she "admitted to a mutual friend that the house never would have been built but for the fact that she and the plaintiff had built it together, and that he had taken the management of it all, as she never could have done and never would have attempted; that he had paid her in all $4,000, which she had used; that such was her feeling towards him that she intended the house should be his when she was done with it, and should belong to them jointly while she lived; that on the 14th day of November, 1887, she acknowledged to the same mutual friend that the plaintiff had, since 1878, when the lot was bought and they began planning for the house, up to 1883, paid her $4,000; that she had always regarded the house as belonging to them jointly; that she intended it should be his at her death, and that her will, then written, had so provided;" that on account of her repeated and constant acknowledgment of the validity of his claim by her, and on account of the representations hereinbefore referred to as having been made to the said mutual friend and others, which representations were communicated to the plaintiff, and on account of the intimate personal relations always existing between them, and the unlimited confidence he reposed in her, they having lived together for a long time in the same dwelling house, and she having treated and spoken of him as a foster child, the plaintiff failed and omitted to take such measures for the enforcement of his rights as under other circumstances he would have taken. The plaintiff averred that by the course adopted by her and without any fault on his part he had been lulled into a false security, and that he would have instituted his suit during her lifetime for the specific performance of her contract but for the assurance, repeatedly made to him and to others, that she had by her will devised the entire property to him; [175] that the plaintiff did not know until the death of Mrs. Marvin of her failure to carry out her agreement, when he learned to his surprise that she had died intestate as to her real estate.

The prayer of the bill was that an account might be taken of the debt claimed by the plaintiff to be due him; an account of the debt due to White, in whose favor the trust deed had been executed, and of other debts and demands against the estate; an account of the value of the lot and house and of other real estate of which Mrs. Marvin died seised; an account of the rents received by Mrs. Marvin during her lifetime and since her death; and for a decree directing payment to the plaintiff of a sum equal to half the value of the house and lot and of the rents received or due, for a sale of the house and lot for the purpose of paying the same, and for a distribution of the residue of the proceeds among those entitled thereto as next of kin or heirs at law.

A demurrer was interposed to this amended bill, which was sustained by the supreme court, and an appeal taken to the general term, by which the decree of the special term was affirmed and the bill dismissed. 20 D. C. 197. Plaintiff thereupon took an appeal to this court.

Messrs. John Goode, Benjamin Butterworth, and Julian C. Dowell, for appellant:

If there be any part of the bill that entitles the plaintiff to relief, the demurrer must be overruled.

Gunton v. Carroll, 101 U. S. 428 (25:985).

A resulting trust arises where several pay the consideration and take title to one of their number.

Shoemaker v. Smith, 11 Humph. 81; Edwards v. Edwards, 39 Pa. 369; Letcher v. Letcher, 4 J. J. Marsh. 590; Reese v. Murnan, 5 Wash. 373; Dow v. Jewell, 18 N. H. 340, 45 Am. Rep. 371.

He who purchases at the time and pays after is as much a purchaser as if he bought for cash.

Blodgett v. Hildreth, 103 Mass. 484.

The most common cases of proof by parol of arrangements for joint purchase of land are those of partners. There it has always been held the statute of frauds did not apply.

Foster v. Hale, 5 Ves. Jr. 309; Dale v. Hamilton, 5 Hare, 369; Essex v. Essex, 20 B. & C. 442.

All trusts which arise by operation of law are excepted from the requirements of the statute of frauds.

2 Pom. Eq. § 1030.

There is no arbitrary rule as to laches; if the delay was caused by bad faith and misrepresentation on the part of Julia R. Marvin, no imputation of laches can be made against plaintiff.

Gunton v. Carroll, 101 U. S. 426 (25:985); Loring v. Palmer, 118 U. S. 231 (30:211); Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 586.

When defendant has all along recognized plaintiff's right, delay on part of plaintiff will be excused.

Callender v. Colegrove, 17 Conn. 1; Diokerman v. Burgess, 20 Ill. 266.

Lapse of time alone is not a test of staleness.

Paschall v. Hinderer, 28 Ohio St. 568.

Mr. Jacob H. Lichtner, for appellees:

The suit as for recovery of a debt or of damages for a breach of an oral agreement for the sale of land is barred by the statute of limitations.

Shepherd v. Thompson, 122 U. S. 234 (30:1157); D. C. Comp. Stat. p. 360, § 6.

The appellant's remedy was plain, adequate, and complete at law.

Kempshall v. Stone, 5 Johns. Ch. 193.

The alleged agreement, if made, for a conveyance of a half interest in the lot and house mentioned in the bill, comes within the statute of frauds, and not being in writing no action can be brought upon it.

Purcell v. Coleman, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 513 (18:

160 U. S.

435); Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444 (24: 360); Randall v. Howard, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 589 (17: 271); Dunphy v. Ryan, 116 U. S. 496, 498 (29: 704, 705); May v. Rice, 101 U. S. 237 (25: 799); Repetti v. Maisak, 6 Mackey, 366; Wristen v. Bowles, 82 Cal. 87; Fortesque v. Crawford, 105 N. C. 31; Ryan v. Wilson, 56 Tex. 38; Tilton v. Tilton, 9 N. H. 390; Brown v. Lord, 7 Or. 309.

A mere refusal (or a failure) to perform a parol agreement void under the statute of frauds is in no sense fraud, either in law or equity.

Wheeler v. Reynolds, 66 N. Y. 227, 234; Crabill v. Marsh, 38 Ohio St. 338; Harris v. Harris, 70 Pa. 174.

The least act that constitutes part performance to take a verbal contract for the sale of land out of the statute of frauds is possession taken of the land in pursuance of the contract.

Purcell v. Coleman, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 518 (18: 436); Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 456 (24: 362); Moore v. Small, 19 Pa. 461; Ackerman v. Fisher, 57 Pa. 457; Cuppy v. Hixon, 29 Ind. 522; Dugan v. Gittings, 3 Gill, 139, 157, 43 Am. Dec. 306; Gangwer v. Fry, 17 Pa. 491, 55 Am. Dec. 578; Sage v. McGuire, 4 Watts & S. 229; Heftin v. Milton, 69 Ala. 354; Owings v. Baldwin, 8 Gill, 356; Drury v. Conner, 6 Harr. & J. 236; Brown v. Lord, 7 Or. 312; McKee v. Phillips, 9 Watts, 86; White v. Watkins, 23 Mo. 428; Anderson v. Simpson, 21 Iowa, 404; Neal v. Neal, 69 Ind. 423.

The payment of the purchase money—whether in money or services the value of which can be estimated—is not of itself an act of part performance to take a verbal agreement for the sale of land out of the statute of frauds.

Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 28-30, 3 Am. Rep. 418; Blodgett v. Hildreth, 103 Mass. 486; Temple v. Johnson, 71 Ill. 16, 17; Forrester v. Flores, 64 Cal. 26; Carlisle v. Brennan, 67 Ind. 19, 20; Peckham v. Balch, 49 Mich. 181; Ex parte Storer, 2 Ware, 294; Humbert v. Brisbane, 25 S. C. 510; Crabill v. Marsh, 38 Ohio St. 338; Eaton v. Whitaker, 18 Conn. 229, 44 Am. Dec. 586; Kidder v. Barr, 35 N. H. 255; Cole v. Potts, 10 N. J. Eq. 69; Jackson v. Cutright, 5 Munf. 316, 318; Green v. Jones, 76 Me. 567; Ham v. Goodrich, 33 N. H. 32; Myers v. Byerly, 45 Pa. 368, 372, 84 Am. Dec. 497; Townsend v. Fenton, 30 Minn. 531; Horn v. Ludington, 32 Wis. 73; Edwards v. Estell, 48 Cal. 196; Wright v. Pucket, 22 Gratt. 374.

To constitute part performance the act must show an agreement and the nature of the agreement.

Stoddert v. Tuck, 4 Md. Ch. 482; Semmes v. Worthington, 38 Md. 326.

The appellant has been guilty of laches,—his claim is stale and such as a court of equity will not countenance.

Halstead v. Grinnan, 152 U. S. 412 (38: 495); Johnston v. Standard Min. Co. 148 U. S. 370 (37: 485); Galliher v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 371 (36: 739); Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 250 (36: 145); Underwood v. Dugan, 139 U. S. 384 (35: 199); Hanner v. Moulton, 138 U. S. 492 (34: 1035); Richards v. Mackall, 124 U. S. 183 (31: 396); Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 377 (30: 718); Lansdale v. Smith, 106 U. S. 392 (27: 219); Badger v. Badger, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 87 (17: 836); Mc- 160 U. S.

Knight v. Taylor, 42 U. S. 1 How. 161 (11: 86); Wagner v. Baird, 48 U. S. 7 How. 234 (12: 681); Holt v. Rogers, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 433 (8: 1000); Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 201 (25: 431); Marsh v. Whitmore, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 178 (22: 482); Crosby v. Beale, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 336 (21: 602); Brown v. Buena Vista County, 95 U. S. 157 (24: 422); Piatt v. Vattier, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 416 (9: 177); Stearns v. Page, 48 U. S. 7 How. 819 (12: 928); Bowman v. Wathen, 42 U. S. 1 How. 189 (11: 97).

In the following cases the time was four, five, six, seven, nine, twelve, and seventeen years, under a variety of circumstances.

Sullivan v. Portland & R. R. Co. 94 U. S. 811 (24: 326); McQuiddy v. Ware, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 14, 20 (22: 311, 313); Hayward v. Eliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 617 (24: 857); Harwood v. Cincinnati & C. A. L. R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 79 (21: 558); New Albany v. Burke, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 108 (20: 159); Lupton v. Janney, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 385 (10: 212); Pratt v. Carroll, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 471 (3: 627); Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587 (23: 328).

In cases of this kind the death of parties who could explain the transaction has always been regarded as a controlling circumstance.

Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 273 (36: 153); Mackall v. Casilear, 137 U. S. 566 (34: 776); Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 210 (25: 434); Jenkins v. Pye, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 254 (9: 1075).

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The ultimate object of the bill in this case is the recovery of a pecuniary demand, and, if this were its only object, it *would be [179] obnoxious to the general rule embodied in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 723, inhibiting the maintenance of a suit in equity where the remedy at law is plain, adequate, and complete.

The bill, however, in addition to the recovery of money, seeks to establish a trust in favor of the plaintiff and to obtain a sale of the property to satisfy his claim. The prayer is, not for a reimbursement to the plaintiff of the sums advanced, but for the payment to him of a sum equal to one half of the value of the house and lot in which he claims an interest, and of the rights accrued thereon. Had it not been for the fact that, subsequent to the outlays made by the plaintiff in improving the property, Mrs. Marvin had encumbered it by a trust deed in favor of Amos White, in the sum of $10,000, an ordinary bill for a specific performance would have been the proper remedy; but as the court upon such a bill could only decree him one half the property subject to such mortgage, he claims in this bill the full moiety of the value of the property, as it stood when the disbursements were made and before it was encumbered by the mortgage, and prays that such amount may be awarded him from the sale of the property; and that in respect to the residue, if any, he stand as a general creditor of her estate.

The case is not unlike that of Wylie v. Cox, 56 U. S. 15 How. 415 [14: 753], where a bill was filed to recover a contingent fee of 5 per cent out of a certain fund arising from the prosecution of a claim against the Republic of Mexico. It was held that the death of the owner of the fund did not dissolve the contract, but that the right to compensation constituted a lien upon the money when recovered, and that this was sufficient ground for jurisdiction in equity, inasmuch as the payment of the fund to the executrix in Mexico would place it probably beyond the reach of the complainant.

Still more nearly analogous in principle is the case of Seymour v. Freer, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 202 [19: 306]. This suit was founded upon an agreement between Scymour and one Price, by which Price undertook to devote his time and judgment to the selection and purchase of land to a certain amount, with a stipulation that the lands should be sold within five years, 180] and one half *of the profits should be paid to Price and the other to Seymour. It was held that Seymour took the legal title in trust for the purpose specified, and to this extent Seymour was a trustee and Price the cestui que trust; that the trust continued after the expiration of the five years, unless Price subsequently relinquished his claim, and that the land which was to be converted into money should be regarded and treated in equity as money. "The agreement," said Mr. Justice Swayne, "that the property should be sold and half of the profits paid to Price, was a charge upon the property, and gave him a lien to the extent of the amount to which he should be found entitled upon the execution of the agreement, according to its terms." In reply to the contention that Price had a complete remedy at law, he further observed: "An action at law, sounding in damages, may undoubtedly be maintained in such cases for the breach of an express agreement by the trustee, but this in no wise affects the right to proceed in equity to enforce the trust and lien created by the contract. They are concurrent remedies. Either, which is preferred, may be selected. The remedy in equity is the better one. The right to resort to it under the circumstances of this case admits of no doubt, either upon principle or authority. Such, in our judgment, were the effect and consequences of the contract."

The earlier English cases held broadly that where a vendor of land had disabled himself from carrying out a contract to sell the land to the plaintiff, by a subsequent sale to another party, a court of equity would entertain a bill as for a specific performance and award damages to the plaintiff. This was the distinct ruling in Denton v. Stewart, 1 Cox, C. C. 258, where the court directed an inquiry as to what damages the plaintiff had sustained, and decreed that such damages should be paid by the defendant. A similar ruling was made in Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. Jr. 395, although the master of rolls indicated a doubt with regard to the soundness of the principle announced in Denton v. Stewart. In Gwillim v. Stone, 14 Ves. Jr. 128, the bill asserted from the first that defendant could not make a good title and asked for compensation by reason of the failure of the contract, and a decree was 181]*made for the delivering up the contract, without prejudice to an action, instead of an inquiry before the master.

In Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. Jr. 273, the case of Denton v. Stewart was practically overruled by Lord Chancellor Eldon, who held that the plaintiff in a bill for specific performance was not entitled generally to satisfaction by way of damages for the nonperformance, to be ascertained by an issue or reference to a master, the court saying "that, except in very special cases, it is not the course of proceeding in equity to file a bill for specific performance of an agreement; praying in the alternative, if it cannot be performed, an issue or inquiry before the master with a view to damages. The plaintiff must take that remedy, if he chooses it at law. Generally, I do not say universally, he cannot have it in equity, and this is not a case of exception." This case was followed in Ferguson v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. 77, where the plaintiff prayed the specific performance of a resolution passed by the board of directors of a railway company, under which he alleged that he was entitled to have a certain number of shares allotted to him; and also prayed that if it should appear that all the shares had been allotted to other shareholders, the directors might indemnify him out of their own shares, or might be charged with damages. All the shares having been allotted before the filing of the bill, it was held that, as no remedy by way of specific performance was possible, plaintiff's claim for damages failed also.

The principle of these cases was also adopted by Chancellor Kent in Kempshall v. Stone, 5 Johns. Ch. 193, which is strongly relied upon by the appellees in this connection. In that case, the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to sell and convey him a lot of land, and, after the time of performance had elapsed, sold the land to a third person for a valuable consideration without notice of the agreement. Plaintiff filed his bill for a specific performance, which it was held could not be decreed, the lands having passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice, and the court further held that the plaintiff's remedy was at law for compensation in damages. In this case, as well as in the English*cases [182 above cited, there was no possible lien upon the land, and no trust in favor of the plaintiff which the court could execute, and it was very properly held that his only remedy was at law.

But if the defendant has not wholly disabled himself from carrying out the contract, he may be decreed to perform specifically so much as he is still able to perform, and plaintiff may recover damages for the residue. Thus, in Burrow v. Scammell, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 175, when the defendant's title came to be investigated it was found that she was possessed of only a moiety of the premises she had agreed to lease to the plaintiff, the other moiety being vested in her son, a minor. She was decreed to specifically perform so much of the contract as she was able to perform, with an abatement of half the rent, and an inquiry as to damages was refused only upon the ground that there was no evidence that plaintiff had sustained any damages. The American cases are also to the effect that, where the defendant has only partially disabled himself from carrying out the contract, the plaintiff may be entitled to a specific performance so far as it can be enforced, and may receive compensation in damages for the deficiency. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1405, 1407; Bostwick v. Beach, 103 N. Y. 414.

In the case under consideration, Mrs. Marvin had but partially disabled herself from carrying out her contract with the plaintiff according to its original terms, by encumbering the property with the trust deed in favor of White. Under such circumstances, the plaintiff might have filed a bill for a specific performance pro tanto, and obtained a decree for a conveyance of one half of the property to himself, subject to a moiety of the trust deed; but we think he also had the option of treating the whole property as subject to a lien in his favor, and praying that it be sold to satisfy his claim for half of its original value. He would doubtless have a remedy at law to recover the value of his services as well as the moneys disbursed by him. This, however, under the averments of his bill, would not be the amount to which he would be justly entitled. It is possible that, in an action at law, he might also recover a personal judgment against the estate for one *half the value of the property in question; but this is not the complete and adequate remedy which a bill to enforce a trust in his favor upon the property in dispute would afford to him, and we think it is not beyond the power of a court of equity to entertain a bill for this purpose. Sullivan v. O'Neal, 66 Tex. 433.

2. Does the statute of frauds stand in the way of a decree in his favor? As there was no contract in writing, plaintiff must maintain his bill, if at all, upon the theory of a part performance. He must maintain it, too, upon the same principles and with the same cogency of proof as if it were in fact, as well as in substance, a bill for a specific performance. In this connection, the allegation is in effect that the plaintiff arranged with Mrs. Marvin to pay half the cost of the lot, and half the cost of erecting a dwelling thereon, he to purchase the materials and superintend the erection of the dwelling, and that each was to own half the property; that he performed his contract in full; that she not only never questioned that he had paid his half in full, but stated to him and to mutual friends that he had paid in full, and was jointly interested with her in the premises; that his ownership of half the premises was never disputed by her, but was openly recognized, and that, when he requested a settlement and that she convey his half to him, she replied that she had provided for that in her will, by which she gave him the entire property.

Admitting to the fullest extent the proposition that a mere payment of the consideration in money is insufficient to remove the bar of the statute, there is no doubt that such payment, accompanied by an entry into possession under the contract, is such a part performance as will support the bill. This court so expressly decided in the case of Neale v. Neale, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 1 [19: 590]. And in Brown v. Sutton, 129 U. S. 238 [32: 664], it was held that where the defendant's intestate bought certain property for the complainant, under a promise made orally that he would make over the title to her upon consideration that she should take care of him during the remainder of his life, as she had done in the past, there had been sufficient part performance of this parol contract to take it out of the operation of 184]the statute *of frauds, and render it capable of being enforced by a decree for specific performance. Similar cases of promises to convey property upon the consideration of support are frequent in the books. Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37; Sutton v. Hayden, 63 Mo. 101; Hiatt v. Williams, 72 Mo. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 438; Watson v. Muhan, 20 Ind. 223; Twiss v. George, 33 Mich. 253; Warren v. Warren, 105 Ill. 568; Patterson v. Patterson, 13 Johns. 379.

The general principle to be extracted from the authorities is that if the plaintiff, with the knowledge and consent of the promisor, does acts pursuant to and in obvious reliance upon a verbal agreement, which so change the relations of the parties as to render a restoration of their former condition impracticable, it is a virtual fraud upon the part of the promisor to set up the statute in defense and thus to receive to himself the benefit of the acts done by the plaintiff, while the latter is left to the chance of a suit at law for the reimbursement of his outlays or to an action upon a quantum meruit for the value of his services. In discussing what are and what are not acts done in part performance, which will entitle the plaintiff to a decree in his favor, the entry into possession of the land and the making of valuable improvements thereon are treated by all the cases as one of the most satisfactory evidences of part performance, and entitling plaintiff to a decree in his favor. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1409; Fry, Specific Performance, § 585; Wills v. Stradling, 3 Ves. Jr. 378; Mundy v. Jolliffe, 5 Myl. & C. 167; Williams v. Evans, L. R. 19 Eq. 547.

Although there is no distinct allegation in this bill that the plaintiff entered into possession, there is an allegation that the land in question consisted of a lot 34 feet in width by 110 feet in depth, and that the plaintiff gave his personal attention to the selection and purchase of the materials for a dwelling house and the erection of the same upon this lot, and paid $4,000 in defraying the cost of the house—facts which are inconsistent with any other theory than that he took possession of the lot for the purpose of erecting the house. Whitsett v. Pre-emption Presby. Church, 110 Ill. 125. If he subsequently and after the completion of the house allowed Mrs. *Marvin to take [185 possession of the lot, in view of the intimate relations between them, he lost no rights as against her which he obtained by his original entry and the erection of the house. The possession thus taken was evidently in performance of and in reliance upon the original agreement with the owner, and we think, taken in connection with the improvements made by him, it makes a case of part performance sufficient to remove the bar of the statute. His subsequent relinquishment of such possession was evidently with no intention to abandon the interest he had already acquired in the property. Drum v. Stevens, 94 Ind. 181.

3. We are also of opinion that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, the bill is not open to the defense of laches. It is true the advances were made at sundry times from 1879 to 1884, and the bill was not filed until 1889, but the delay is sufficiently accounted for by the intimate personal relations that had always existed between the plaintiff and Mrs. Marvin and the unlimited confidence he had reposed in her. It is alleged in this connection that they had long lived together in the same house; that she had treated him and spoken of him as a foster child; that from the time the services were rendered until her death he had repeatedly urged her to come to a settlement with him; that, whenever the subject was referred to, she acknowledged the justice of the claim, and assured him she had provided for him in her will, saying that she intended the house to be his when she was done with it, and that it should belong to them both while she lived; that on this account he had neglected to take measures for the enforcement of his rights; and that he did not know until her death that she had failed to carry out her promise to devise the entire property to him.

Dealing with a person who stood in this relation to him, and with whom he had always been upon friendly and even intimate terms, the same diligence could not be expected of him as would have been if he had been treating with a stranger. If, as he avers, she had promised to leave him the entire property at her death, he may have considered it to his advantage to await this contingency, rather than [186] to pursue her for half the property during her life. As she died in February, 1889, and the bill was filed in October of the same year, there can be no claim that, with reference to this event, he did not act with sufficient promptness. The only circumstance that occurred during the period of nine years from the time the contract was made which was calculated to excite his suspicion that she did not intend to carry out her alleged agreement, was the execution of a trust deed in favor of White, of which, however, there is nothing in the bill to indicate that he had actual notice. While the record of this trust deed would operate as constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers of the property, it is at least doubtful whether it would have the same effect as to one who stood in plaintiff's relation to the property. Howard Ins. Co. v. Halsey, 8 N. Y. 271, 59 Am. Dec. 478; Bates v. Norcross, 14 Pick. 224; James v. Brown, 11 Mich. 25; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463; Iglehart v. Crane, 42 Ill. 261; Doolittle v. Cook, 75 Ill. 354.

The question of laches does not depend, as does the statute of limitation, upon the fact that a certain definite time has elapsed since the cause of action accrued, but whether, under all the circumstances of the particular case, plaintiff is chargeable with a want of due diligence in failing to institute proceedings before he did. In this case, we think the delay is fully explained. Gunton v. Carroll, 101 U. S. 426 [25: 985]. It is true that one of the parties to this alleged agreement has died, and that the court has lost the benefit of her testimony with regard to the alleged agreement. This, however, is a circumstance to be considered by the court in weighing the evidence, rather than an obstacle to the maintenance of the bill upon demurrer.

There are doubtless circumstances in the case which indicate at least a difficulty of proof, if not to arouse a suspicion, that perhaps the plaintiff may have overstated his case, but the pleader in a bill in equity is not bound to state either the testimony or facts which militate against his theory, but only to present his case in the light most favorable to his own interests, and asks that, upon such presentation, the court shall decide upon the sufficiency of his bill.

*4. We do not think the bill is open to [187] the charge of multifariousness. While the 10th paragraph sets out a verbal agreement to convey an interest in land, and the prayer is for the payment of a certain amount of money, the discrepancy is explained by the fact that, in view of the trust deed to White, a decree for a half interest in the land will fail to satisfy plaintiff's claim, and that his lien is claimed to extend, not merely to the half interest, but to the whole property, to satisfy her promise to convey to him a moiety of its unencumbered value. Of course, nothing that is here said can affect the rights of White.

The decree of the court below is therefore reversed and the case remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

A. W. BALLEW, Piff. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 187-203.)

Authentication of public record—testimony—withholding money from pensioner—statute—judgment on reversal in criminal case.

1. A certificate by the Commissioner of Pensions, with a certificate of the Secretary of the Interior certifying to the official character of the former, and under the seal of that Department, is sufficient authentication of a copy of a record in the office of the former to authorize it to be admitted in evidence.
2. Testimony on cross-examination as to part of a conversation does not render admissible on re-direct examination the other parts of the conversation on a different subject.
3. Where pension money has been paid over to a pensioner, the obtaining thereafter of such money from him does not constitute a withholding of the same from him under the statute punishing the wrongful withholding of pension moneys from a pensioner.
4. The term "withholding" in the statute punishing the wrongful withholding of pension moneys from a pensioner, is confined to money due, and does not embrace that which had been paid to the pensioner and has passed under his control.
5. Where there is a general verdict of guilty on an indictment containing two counts, and the only errors found in the record relate to and affect the crime covered by the first count, the general judgment of the court below should be reversed and the cause remanded with instructions to enter judgment upon the second count, and for such proceedings as to the first count as may be in conformity to law.

[No. 547.]

Argued October 23, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, to review a judgment convicting A. W. Ballow for wrongfully withholding from a pensioner, one Lucy Burrell, part of a pension allowed and due her, and for receiving, as agent, a greater compensation for services in prosecuting the claim for pension than is provided by the statutes relating to pensions. Reversed, and cause remanded with instructions.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

At the October term, 1893, of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Georgia, an indictment was found against the plaintiff in error, embracing two counts, the first charging him with wrongfully withholding from a pensioner of the United States, one Lucy Burrell, part of a pension allowed and due her, and the second accusing him of demanding and receiving, as agent, a greater compensation for services in prosecuting the claim for pension than is provided by the title of the Revised Statutes pertaining to pensions.

The offenses charged in the indictment are made punishable by the final paragraph of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4786, as amended by the pension appropriation act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. at L. 101, chap. 181, § 4).

On the trial of the case there was conflict in the testimony in many particulars as to the offense charged in the first count. The evidence tended to show that the check issued for the payment of the pensioner was received by the accused, a pension agent; that he went with the pensioner to a bank; that there in the presence of an officer of the bank, the check was indorsed, and was presented to the paying teller, by whom the amount was paid over to or "put in the hat" of the pensioner, who was shown to be an illiterate negro woman; that, either by the suggestion of the bank officer or of the accused, the money was deposited in the bank for account of the pensioner, a deposit slip being issued therefor. The proof, moreover, was that immediately after this deposit the pensioner went to an office in the vicinity, where a check for $1,887.34, one half of the amount of the pension check, was drawn by her, she making her mark, this check being payable to the order of Hurley Ballew, a son of the accused, by whom it was immediately collected. There was conflict as to whether the accused participated in the fraud by which the drawing of the check was brought about, or whether the amount inured to his 189]benefit. The pensioner testified that she supposed the check was drawn for $25 in favor of her son, while the drawee of the check, Hurley Ballew, testified that it was given him in payment for an insignificant service rendered in connection with the procuring of testimony during the prosecution of the claim for the pension. There was testimony on the second count tending to support the same, although as to this count there was also a conflict in the evidence.

During the course of the trial a page from the records of the Pension Office, showing the issue of the pension to the pensioner named in the indictment, was offered and admitted in evidence over the objection of the accused, to which action of the court exception was duly reserved.

One J. B. Chamblee was examined as a witness for the defendant, and exception was reserved to the exclusion of testimony given on his redirect examination. At the close of the evidence the following instruction was requested by counsel for the accused, which was refused and exception noted.

"When a pension check is delivered to a pensioner, and she takes the same to a bank and has it cashed, and then deposits the said fund in a bank and takes a deposit slip therefor, the fund loses its nature and character as pension money, and the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor exists between the pensioner and the bank, and if thereafter, by any device or in any way whatever, the pension attorney obtains a draft from her and draws it out of her general account, he cannot be convicted of withholding under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5485, and it would be your duty to acquit him on that count, if these be the facts as to that branch of the case."

The giving of the following as part of the charge of the court was also excepted to by defendant:

"Now, the defense here is that the amount of the check received from Mr. Rule, the pension agent, really went into the possession of the pensioner in this case, and the contention for the government is that under the facts of the case the money really did not go into her possession in contemplation of law, and they also contend that the attorney, the *defendant 190 in this case, could not withhold the money or any part of it by getting the check, which is in evidence here, for eighteen hundred and odd dollars.

"Upon that branch of the case I instruct you thus: If you believe that the receipt of the pension check under all the circumstances connected with it, and the possession of the pension check by the defendant in this case, and the taking of the check to the bank and his accompanying the pensioner to the bank, the turning of the check into cash, and the payment of money to her, the physical possession placed in her by putting the money in her hat, the deposit of the money in the bank, and the taking of the pensioner to the office of the defendant and the drawing of the check for $1,800,—if you believe that this was all one transaction arranged and designed by the defendant in this case for the purpose of getting into his possession $1,800 of the money which the pensioner received; that it was a scheme designed by him, one continuous transaction, for that purpose, and that he was a party to it and was the beneficiary of the money received,—then that would be in law a withholding of the money under this statute, and the defendant would be guilty, and it would be your duty to convict him; but it would be necessary for you to believe that. The other rule which I gave you is true and exists in law, that is, that the money can be paid by their attorney to the pensioner, and thereafter there might be a transaction between them which, of course, would be entirely legal and honest, by which the cash could pass from the pensioner to the attorney, but that would depend on the character of the transaction. The jury will see the facts, and I state it to you again, that if all these facts or series of facts are one continuous transaction designed by the defendant and arranged by him, as contended by the government, for the purpose of getting into his possession eighteen hundred and odd dollars of the money of the pensioner, and that he did receive it or was the beneficiary of the receipt of it, then that would be withholding in the meaning of the statute. Now, the facts in this case are for the jury to determine. The check signed by the pensioner, which 191]*seems to be made to Hurley Ballew and indorsed by him, is in evidence and you will have that out with you."

The court instructed the jury that if they considered the defendant guilty on one count and innocent on the other, they should so find; and if they found him guilty on both counts, that they should return a general verdict of guilty. This last was the verdict returned. After an ineffectual effort for a new trial, the case was brought here on error.

Messrs. W. C. Glenn and Daniel W. Rountree, for plaintiff in error:

The deposit of money in the bank by the pensioner, under the circumstances, became a general deposit, the pensioner parting with her title to the money, and thereby the relation of debtor and creditor existed between the bank and the pensioner, the bank agreeing to pay said debt by returning the same amount or any part thereof on demand. The money became the property of the depository and the depositor's claim was a mere chose in action. It is impressed with no trust in favor of the depositor, and there is no relation of cestui que trust between her and the banker.

Marine Bank v. Fulton County Bank, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 256 (17: 787); National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152 (19: 897); Marine Bank v. Rushmore, 28 Ill. 463; Atina Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; Jones, Bailm. 102; Story, Bailm. § 88.

If the evidence submitted by the government is true, the defendant, if guilty of any offense, is only guilty of the crime of cheating and swindling under the laws of the state of Georgia.

Ga. Code of 1882, § 4595; Jones v. State, 93 Ga. 552; Johnson v. State, 90 Ga. 411; Doyle v. State, 77 Ga. 515; Ratteree v. State, 74 Ga. 776; Tatum v. State, 58 Ga. 408.

Where the government introduced in evidence a part of a confession or an admission of a party to a cause made in the course of a conversation with a witness, the defendant has the right to lay before the court the entire conversation. In criminal as well as in civil cases the whole of an admission made by a party is to be given in evidence.

Greenl. Ev. (15th ed.) § 218; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. (10th ed.) 54; State v. Hollenscheit, 61 Mo. 302; State v. Martin, 28 Mo. 530; Griswold v. State, 24 Wis. 144; State v. Elliott, 15 Iowa, 72; Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 524 (3); Long v. State, 22 Ga. 40 (7); Alfred v. State, 37 Miss. 296; Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382; Bower v. State, 5 Mo. 364, 32 Am. Dec. 325; William v. State, 39 Ala. 532; Corbett v. State, 31 Ala. 329; Chambers v. State, 26 Ala. 59; Frank v. State, 27 Ala. 37; State v. Mahon, 32 Vt. 241; Kelsey v. Bush, 2 Hill, 440; People v. Johnson, 2 Wheel. Crim. Cas. 361; Com. v. Keyes, 11 Gray, 323; State v. Worthington, 64 N. C. 594; Crawford v. State, 4 Coldw. 190; Tipton v. State, Peck (Tenn.) 308; State v. Isaac, 3 La. Ann. 359; People v. Navis, 3 Cal. 106; People v. Murphy, 39 Cal. 52; People v. Gelabert, 39 Cal. 663; Respublica v. McCarty, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 86 (1: 300); United States v. Prior, 5 Cranch, C. C. 37; United States v. Wilson, 1 Baldw. 78; Rex v. Jones, 2 Car. & P. 629; Rex v. Higgins, 3 Car. & P. 603; People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151; Coffman v. Com. 10 Bush, 495; State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491.

Where the charge of the judge to the jury, is of a character to mislead the jury, the error is one of law and may be corrected in an appellate court.

Washington & G. R. Co. v. Varnell, 98 U. S. 485 (25: 235); Edwards v. Darby, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 212 (6: 605); Loring v. Frue, 104 U. S. 223 (26: 713).

It is error for the judge to submit to the jury a fact or state of facts which there is no evidence tending to prove, or to give instructions with reference to a state of facts not in evidence.

Wakefield v. Smithwick, 4 Jones, L. 327; Gilchrist v. Rogers, 6 Watts & S. 488; Herdie v. Bilger, 47 Pa. 60; Kelso v. Townsend, 13 Tex. 140; Bogle v. Kreitzer, 46 Pa. 465; Sartwell v. Wilcox, 20 Pa. St. 117; Switland v. Holgate, 8 Watts, 385; Sutton v. Madre, 2 Jones, L. 320; Bond v. Hall, 8 Jones, L. 14; Webster College v. Tyler, 35 Mo. 268; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Swift, 26 Ind. 459; Dickerson v. Johnson, 24 Ark. 251; Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541; Herndon v. Bryant, 39 Miss. 336; Oliver v. State, 39 Miss. 526; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 20 Ill. 487; Swank v. Nichols, 24 Ind. 199; Starr v. United States, 153 U. S. 624, 625 (38: 845), and cases cited; Cobb v. Fogelman, 1 Ired. L. 440.

If upon any one issue error was committed, either in the admission of evidence or in the charge of the court, a general verdict upon several issues cannot be upheld.

Maryland v. Baldwin, 112 U. S. 490 (23: 822); Com. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 133 Mass. 383, 392; Wood v. State, 59 N. Y. 117, 122.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error:

A pension is not a vested right, but a periodical bounty.

Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 166 (39: 657, 659), and cases cited.

The copy is sufficient under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 882, which requires merely that such copies be "authenticated under the seals of such departments." It was signed by the Commissioner of Pensions himself and attested under the seal of the Interior Department by the acting Secretary of the Interior.

Thompson v. Smith, 2 Bond, 320; Catlett v. Pacific Ins. Co. 1 Paine, 594, 612; Stephens v. Westwood, 25 Ala. 716.

It is claimed that the court should have directed a verdict of acquittal at the close of the government's evidence. It is unnecessary to discuss this claim, as the exception taken was waived by putting in testimony on behalf of the defendant.

Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder ("Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels") 152 U. S. 684 (38: 597); Wilson v. Haley Live Stock Co. 153 U. S. 49 (38: 627); Runkle v. Burnham, 153 U. S. 216 (38: 694).

It was claimed that the court erred in excluding from the jury a portion of the testimony of J. B. Chamblee to the effect that A.

W. Ballew, at some subsequent time not definitely stated, claimed that the $1,800 check was paid to his son for services in prosecuting the pension claim, and that his own fee was simply what he got from the pension office as attorney.

This testimony was all admitted without objection, but subsequently excluded from the consideration of the jury by instruction of the court. Whether or not this instruction was proper, it is submitted that the defendant could not have been prejudiced, as this statement, admittedly made post litem motam, was reiterated most strongly by himself and his son in their own testimony on the trial. Whatever weight the jury might have given to statements in his own behalf had any been made by the defendant before any controversy or question had arisen, this statement, made under circumstances at least questionable, could not possibly have had even the slight effect on the case which is sufficient to require a retrial.

Lucas v. Brooks, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 436, 454 (21: 779, 783).

There would be no safety in putting a general question to a witness upon his cross-examination if his answer might be the means of rendering the declaration of the opposite party evidence in his own favor without being called for by his antagonist.

Winchell v. Latham, 6 Cow. 682, 685.

When a man is sued upon two independent causes of action or indicted for two separate crimes, and on cross-examination of one of his witnesses a conversation was referred to in which he declares his innocence of one of the two charges against him, that does not entitle his own counsel to draw out upon re-examination other declarations of innocence relating to the other charge as made in the same conversation.

Prince v. Samo, 7 Ad. & El. 627; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 467, and cases cited. See also cases cited in note to 1 Greenl. Ev. (15th ed.) § 201.

A witness on redirect examination can be asked as to so much only of a conversation brought out in his cross-examination as could in any way qualify or explain the statement as to which he had been cross-examined.

Queen's Case, 2 Brod. & B. 297; Rouse v. Whited, 25 N. Y. 170, 82 Am. Dec. 337; People v. Beach, 87 N. Y. 508-512.

Nor can a statement on direct, which is absolutely adverse to the party calling the witness, as a general rule, require or justify any explanation or qualification upon cross-examination, although there may be cases where it may be justifiable to supplement the statement.

Simmons v. Havens, 101 N. Y. 427, 433; Cook v. State, 24 N. J. L. 843.

Perhaps the rule in criminal cases may be thus briefly stated. If, on the trial of an indictment, the state offers in evidence any verbal or written declaration of the defendant, or any act done by him, admitting his guilt, either expressly or by implication, or from which a jury may legitimately draw any inference prejudicial to the defendant's claim of innocence, the defendant is entitled to offer in evidence the whole of the conversation, writing, or transaction.

Com. v. Keyes, 11 Gray. 323, 325; Com. v. Goddard, 14 Gray, 402, 404.

160 U. S.

Because it is held that the issues upon one count were improperly submitted to the jury, that does not render nugatory the whole trial upon the other count and their verdict thereon.

Claassen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140 (35: 966); Evans v. United States (No. 1), 153 U. S. 584, 588 (38: 830, 832).

An error in the sentence does not vitiate the verdict (Re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 262 (38: 149, 153)) and the case may be remanded for resentencing.

Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. §§ 780, 928; Act of Feb. 6, 1889, chap. 113, § 6; cases cited in 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1082, 1083.

If error be found to exist in instructions concerning one of two crimes tried together, the district attorney should be given the same right which plaintiff has in a civil action.

Washington & G. R. Co. v. Tobriner ("Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon's Exr.") 147 U. S. 571 (37: 284).

The broad authority given to this court in criminal cases is equivalent to the powers given to many state courts in such cases to render, on appeal, such judgment upon the verdict as the trial court should have rendered.

Ex parte Frederick, 149 U. S. 70 (37: 653); Simpson v. State, 56 Ark. 8, 19.

A general verdict of guilty upon a series of counts for different crimes (as distinguished from a series of counts intended to cover the same crime) is practically equivalent to a separate verdict upon each.

Com. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 133 Mass. 383; Com. v. Andrews, 132 Mass. 263; Wood v. State, 59 N. Y. 117; Blitz v. United States, 153 U. S. 308, 317 (38: 725, 728).

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The assignments of error address themselves to four rulings of the court, the one admitting in evidence the pension certificate and the other excluding certain testimony, and two to the refusal to give the instruction requested as well as to the error alleged in the instruction given.

The ground of objection relied upon as to the record from the Pension Office is that the copy was improperly authenticated, because the certificate signed by the acting Secretary of the Interior, and under the seal of the Department, referred only to the official character of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the faith and credit to which his attestations were entitled, and U. S. Rev. Stat. § 882, is cited in support of the contention. That section reads as follows:

"Copies of any books, records, papers, or documents in any of the executive departments, authenticated under the seals of such departments, respectively, shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals thereof."

By reference to the transcript in question in the record, we find that the certificate of the acting Secretary of the Interior was preceded by a certificate signed "Wm. Lochren, Commissioner of Pensions," certifying that "the accompanying page, *numbered 1, is truly [192 copied from the original in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions." The records of the Pension Office constitute part of the records of the Department of the Interior, of which executive department the Pension Office is but a constituent. We think that the certificates in question, taken together, were a substantial compliance with the statute.

The exception taken to the ruling out of certain answers made by Chamblee, one of defendant's witnesses, on his redirect examination, results from the following facts: The witness upon his examination-in-chief testified solely with reference to the circumstances connected with the giving by the pensioner of the check of $1,887.34, which formed the basis of the charge of withholding covered by the first count in the indictment. The cross-examination was confined to the same subject. At the close of the cross-examination the witness stated that he had been asked by a special examiner of pensions, who was investigating the matter, what he knew about the consideration of the check in question. The witness further said that A. W. Ballew came and asked him if he had been interviewed by the examiner, to which inquiry of Ballew the witness stated he had answered yes, and had informed Ballew that the examiner had questioned him about the $1,800 check, and that he told him that he thought the check had been given for a house and lot. The witness next stated that Mr. Ballew then told him that the pensioner had given the check to Hurley Ballew.

Upon redirect examination he testified as follows:

"Q. In that conversation with A. W. Ballew, the defendant here, what did he say was the basis of that money given to Hurley Ballew?

"A. What did A. W. Ballew say he done as a matter of inducement to her?

"Q. Yes.

"A. I don't know anything, only that he prosecuted this pension claim, and as to what he had to do with Hurley I don't know that he ever said anything. I think he told me he got his fee from the Pension Department as attorney.

193] *Q. That is all he ever got?

"A. That is all he got, I think he told me.

"Q. That he got his fee from the Pension Department?

"A. That is all he ever got."

Objection being interposed by the district attorney to proof of Ballew's declarations, the objection was sustained and the testimony excluded from the consideration of the jury.

The ground upon which counsel for plaintiff in error rests his claim of admissibility is that when a confession is put in evidence by the prosecution, it is the right of the accused to demand that all the conversation in which the alleged confession was made should be received. We are unable to reach the conclusion that Ballew's mere statement to a witness that the pensioner had given his son the check was a confession or in the nature of a confession. It had no tendency to establish his guilt or to operate to his prejudice, and confessions are only admitted as being statements against the interest of the party by whom they are claimed to have been made. But the re-examination of the witness was not directed to the ascertainment of what other statements had been made in the conversation upon the subject about which he had testified on his cross-examination, to wit, the check to Hurley

Ballew, but to the drawing out of new matter, not connected with the subject to which the cross examination related. This was clearly improper. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 467, and cases cited. See also cases cited in note a to Greenl. Ev. (15th ed.) § 201, and People v. Beach, 87 N. Y. 508, 512.

The statute upon which the first count is based reads as follows:

"Any agent or attorney or other person instrumental in prosecuting any claim for pension or bounty land, who shall directly or indirectly contract for, demand, or receive, or retain any greater compensation for his services or instrumentality in prosecuting a claim for pension or bounty land than is herein provided, or for payment thereof at any other time or in any other manner than is herein provided, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension or claim allowed and due such pensioner *or claimant, or the land[194 warrant issued to any such claimant, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall for every such offense be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court."

The refusal of the court to give the charge asked, and the charge by it given, proceeded upon the theory that although pension money was actually paid over to the pensioner and by her deposited in bank, the obtaining thereafter of such money from the pensioner constituted a withholding under the statute just quoted. The word "withholding" has a definite signification, and we think contemplates, as used in the statute under consideration, not the fraudulent obtaining of money from a pensioner, but the withholding of the money before it reaches the hands of the pensioner and passes under his dominion and absolute control. The context of the statute supports this view, for its penalty is imposed for the wrongful withholding of the whole or any part of the pension claim allowed and due such pensioner, and not for a wrongful obtaining of the same. The fact that the offense of withholding is limited to any agent or attorney or other person instrumental in prosecuting any claim for pension demonstrates that Congress intended to legislate merely against the wrongful withholding by certain individuals, who, by reason of their relation to the pensioner and his claim, might lawfully obtain possession of the same from the government, and upon whom rested the duty of paying it over to the pensioner. If withholding had been considered as applicable to the retaining of pension money obtained from the pensioner by false pretenses, the limitation as to particular persons would not have been enacted. Indeed, to construe the word "withholding" as relating to money received from a pensioner, not only reads the word "due" out of the statute, but also leads to the inevitable conclusion that Congress, whilst intending to make it an offense to obtain from a pensioner pension money by false pretenses, has yet confined the offense to particular individuals, and permitted all others to commit with impunity the crime it was intended to punish. It also follows if the statute *be construed as embracing money ob-[195 from a pensioner by false pretense, that the act forbids withholding money thus obtained, but does not forbid or punish the act of obtaining the money by a false or fraudulent pretense. These reasons make it clear that the purpose of the statute in punishing a withholding by certain persons standing in a fiduciary relation to the pensioner is consistent only with the theory that Congress was legislating to prevent an embezzlement of pension money, not a larceny thereof from the pensioner or the obtaining of the same from him by false pretenses. This construction of the statute is further supported by reference to the act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. at L. 575), in § 31 of which is contained the original provision making it an offense to withhold pension money. In juxtaposition to that section, in § 32, was the following:

"Any person acting as attorney to receive and receipt for money for and in behalf of any person entitled to a pension shall, before receiving said money, take and subscribe an oath, to be filed with the pension agent, and by him to be transmitted, with the vouchers now required by law, to the proper accounting officer of the treasury, that he has no interest in said money by any pledge, mortgage, sale, assignment, or transfer, and that he does not know or believe that the same has been so disposed of to any person."

The portion of § 32 above quoted was subsequently embodied in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4745.

The signification which we affix to the word "withholding" is also shown to be the one intended by Congress, by the previous portion of the paragraph of the act of 1884, which not only makes it an offense to directly or indirectly contract for, demand, or receive, or retain any greater compensation for services, or for instrumentality in prosecuting a pension claim than allowed by the act, but specifically inhibits the obtaining of payment thereof "at any other time or in any other manner" than as provided in the act, thus making it clear that where it was intended to punish the offense of receiving an illegal fee as well after the payment of the pension to the pensioner as before the receipt by him of the money, the intention [196]* was unequivocally conveyed. The clause "payment thereof at any other time or in any other manner than is herein provided," was not contained in the act of 1873, nor in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5485, but was first embodied in the act of 1884, whereas the provision as to withholding of a pension has always been confined to the withholding of a pension "due" the pensioner. In the very next sentence of the act of 1873, following the designation of the offense of withholding, there is a provision affixing a penalty to the offense of embezzlement of pension money by a guardian from his ward. This latter offense is now embodied in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4783, which reads as follows:

"Every guardian having the charge and custody of the pension of his ward, who embezzles the same in violation of his trust, or fraudulently converts the same to his own use, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $2,000 or imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding five years, or both."

It may be remarked, in passing, that it would be as reasonable to argue that one who had fully accounted as guardian and paid over to his ward the balance due, when the ward had attained his or her majority, could be prosecuted under § 4783, if, after such accounting and payment, he fraudulently obtained money from his former ward which might from the proof appear to be a portion of the balance so paid on the accounting, as to contend that when a pension, allowed and due from the government, had been paid to the pensioner, it continued to be "due," in any money transaction between the pensioner or his former agent or attorney.

The instruction given by the trial court that there was a withholding under the statute if the transaction in this case was a continuous scheme designed by the accused for the purpose of getting into his possession a portion of the pension money, made his guilt or innocence depend, not alone upon whether there was a withholding in the statutory sense of the word, but on whether there was a scheme to defraud. It was tantamount to instructing the jury that they should convict even though they were satisfied that the money had not been *withheld, if they believed that before [197] payment over a scheme to defraud had arisen which was carried out after the pensioner had received the amount of the pension, and after it had been by her deposited in bank, and had created between her and the bank the legal relation of debtor and creditor. Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 363, 369, 370 [23: 483, 485, 486]; Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 385, 391 [31: 424, 427]. Of course, if the indictment had been so framed as to bring the facts which it alleged constituted a withholding within the reach of the first clause of the statute, which forbids the taking of illegal compensation, the instruction given by the court would have been sound. In that case, the taking of the money is made criminal, whether done before payment to the pensioner, at the time of such payment, or at any other time; withholding, on the contrary, is confined to money due, which, in no sense, embraces that which has been actually paid over to a pensioner and has passed under his complete control. However much pension money, even when taken into the possession of a pensioner, may retain its identity for certain purposes, we do not think, for the reasons just stated, that this instruction given was sound in law. The elementary rule is that penal statutes must be strictly construed, and it is essential that the crime punished must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute. United States v. Brewer, 139 U. S. 278 [35: 190]. It follows, therefore, that the instruction asked was wrongfully refused and the instruction given was erroneous, and that there was error in the conviction as to the first count in the indictment.

The verdict was a general verdict. That in a case such as this a general verdict is proper and imports of necessity a conviction as to both crimes is settled. Claasen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140, 146 [35: 966, 968]. It follows, then, that though there was error as to the conviction of one of the offenses charged, there was no error in the conviction upon the other. The question therefore arises whether error as to one only of the counts must lead to reversal of the conviction on that count alone or to like reversal as to the count where no error exists; in other words, whether, after reversing the judgment, which was on both counts, we can annul the verdict upon 198] the first *count alone, and leave the verdict to stand as to the second count unaffected by the reversal.

It was held in England that at common law a reviewing court upon a writ of error in a criminal case had not the power, upon a reversal, to enter a proper judgment or to remand the cause for that purpose. Ex parte Frederick, 149 U. S. 70, 74 [37: 653, 656], citing Rex v. Bourne, 7 Ad. & El. 58. This conclusion rested upon the theory that a court of error was confined exclusively to the determination whether error existed, and if it found that it did, its duty was to reverse and discharge the prisoner. In Reg. v. Holloway, 17 Q. B. 317, 328, it was held that since the passage of the act of 11 & 12 Vict. chap. 78, § 5, the English courts possessed ample power upon the reversal of a judgment to remand the case for a proper judgment. The act referred to provided as follows:

"That whenever any writ of error shall be brought upon any judgment on any indictment, information, presentment, or inquisition in any criminal case, and the court of error shall reverse the judgment, it shall be competent for such court of error either to pronounce the proper judgment or to remit the record to the court below, in order that such court may pronounce the proper judgment upon such indictment, information, presentment, or inquisition."

In order to save all doubt on the subject, so also in the several states statutes have been adopted expressly conferring upon reviewing courts authority upon reversal to remand the cause to the lower court with such directions for further proceedings as would promote substantial justice.

The statutes in reference to the power of Federal appellate tribunals have from the beginning dealt with the subject.

By the judiciary act of September 24, 1789 (1 Stat. at L. 85), it was provided in § 24 "that when a judgment or decree shall be reversed in a circuit court, such court shall proceed to render such judgment or pass such decree as the district court should have rendered or passed, and the Supreme Court shall do the same on reversals therein, except where the reversal is in favor of the plaintiff or petitioner in the original suit, and the damages to be 199] assessed or matter to be decreed, *are uncertain, in which case they shall remand the same for final decision."

By § 25 of the same act, this court was given power on writs of error to the state courts to re-examine, reverse, or affirm their final judgments "in the same manner and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a circuit court, and the proceeding upon reversal shall also be the same, except that the Supreme Court, instead of remanding the cause for a final decision, . . . may, at their discretion, if the cause shall have been once remanded before, proceed to a final decision of the same, and award execution."

Under the power thus conferred it has never been questioned that this court possessed authority upon reversal for error of a final judgment to award a new trial. The recognition of this right involves necessarily a denial of the principle upon which the case of Rex v. Bourne proceeded. As we have seen, the postulate upon which that case rested was the absence of power to render such judgment or order as the ends of justice might require, because of the want of authority to do anything else but determine the existence of the error complained of. It is clear that by § 24 of the judiciary act of 1789, power was conferred upon the circuit courts when reviewing the judgments or decrees of district courts to render such judgment or pass such decree as the district court should have rendered or passed, and that upon this court was conferred the same power. True, at the time the judiciary act was passed, no jurisdiction to review final judgments in criminal cases was vested in circuit courts or in this court, except in cases of error to courts of last resort of a state, but as the power on writs of error to state courts embraced criminal cases, it could not have been contemplated that the general grant of authority on such writs to render the judgment required by the justice of the case was restricted to civil cases alone. The subsequent statutes add cogency to the view that this was not contemplated.

The 2d section of the act of June 1, 1872 (17 Stat. at L. *196, chap. 255), provided that [200 the appellate court (referring to this court and circuit courts) may affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment, decree, or order brought before it for review, or may direct such judgment, decree, or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had, by the inferior court as the justice of the case may require.

The subsequent embodiment of the provision just quoted in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 701, makes clear the fact that Congress in conferring the power to review an error did not intend that the power, on reversal, to make such order as was called for by the nature of the error found to exist, should be limited to civil cases. Section 701 reads as follows:

"The Supreme Court may affirm, modify, or reverse any judgment, decree, or order of a circuit court, or district court acting as a circuit court, or of a district court in prize causes lawfully brought before it for review, or may direct such judgment, decree, or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had, by the inferior court as the justice of the case may require."

The re-enactment of the provisions as to writs of error to the highest court of a state, contained in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, manifests the purpose to continue in force the power in such cases to render the judgment required by the ends of justice. The language of the statute is that on such writs the judgment of the state court—

"May be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States.

"The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such state court, and may, at their discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ."

By the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. at L. 354, chap. 176), jurisdiction was conferred in certain criminal cases upon circuit courts to review judgments of the district courts, and it was provided in § 3 that "in case of an affirmation of the judgment of the district court, the circuit court shall proceed to pronounce final sentence and to award execution thereon; but if such judgment shall be reversed, the circuit court may proceed with the trial of said cause de novo or remand the same to the district court for further proceedings."

The act of February 6, 1889 (25 Stat. at L. 655, chap. 113), which gave jurisdiction to this court by writ of error in all capital cases tried before any court of the United States, provided that the final judgment of such court against the respondent, upon the application of the respondent, should be re-examined, reversed, or affirmed, upon writ of error, under such rules and regulations as this court might prescribe. And the act further declared:

"When any such judgment shall be either reversed or affirmed the cause shall be remanded to the court from whence it came for further proceedings in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court, and the court to which such cause is so remanded shall have power to cause such judgment of the Supreme Court to be carried into execution."

By the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), jurisdiction was conferred upon this court "in cases of conviction of a capital or otherwise infamous crime;" and jurisdiction was conferred in other criminal cases upon the circuit courts of appeals established by that act.

With reference to the newly established courts, in § 11 of the act it was provided as follows:

"And all provisions of law now in force regulating the methods and systems of review through appeals or writs of error shall regulate the methods and system of appeals and writs of error provided for in this act, in respect of the circuit courts of appeals, including all provisions for bonds or other securities to be required and taken on such appeals and writs of error."

It thus conclusively appears that the authority of this court to reverse, and remand with directions to render such proper judgment as the case might require, upon writs of error in criminal cases, to state courts, and to the circuit courts in capital cases, was confessedly conferred [202] by express statutory provisions, and that a like power was conferred upon the circuit courts of appeals and circuit courts in cases where they exercised jurisdiction by error in criminal cases over the district court.

From this and from a review of the legislation on the subject of the powers conferred upon this court as a reviewing court, it follows as a necessary conclusion that general authority was given to it on writ of error to take such action as the ends of justice, not only in civil, but in criminal, cases, might require. To contend otherwise presupposes that Congress had conferred this power upon this court on writs of error to state courts, on writs of error to the circuit courts in capital cases, and had also conferred like power upon circuit courts and the circuit courts of appeals, and yet had denied it to this court in a class of criminal cases where jurisdiction was conferred by writ of error under the act of 1891. To so conclude would work out an absurdity, and would destroy the unity of the Federal judicial system. The contrary conclusion finds support only in the contention that because in each concession of jurisdiction, by writ of error, there was not a re-expression of the general method by which such writ should be exercised, therefore the grant of power was divested of its efficacy. But this is fully answered by the entire history of the legislation which demonstrates that the general grant of power to render a proper judgment on writs of error was evidently not reiterated in express terms when new subjects-matter of jurisdiction were vested in this court, because such authority was deemed to be already adequately provided by the general statutes on the subject. For this reason, in speaking of the act of 1891, this court said, in Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 277, 282 [39: 424, 425]: "As to the methods and systems of review, through appeals and writs of error, including the citation, supersedeas, and bond or other security, in cases, either civil or criminal, brought to this court from the circuit court or the district court, Congress made no provision in this act, evidently considering those matters to be covered and regulated by the provisions of earlier statutes forming parts of one system."

In Re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 262 [38: 149, 153], we held that an error in a sentence did not vitiate a verdict, and that this court, sitting in habeas corpus, might remand for resentencing one whose conviction was lawful but against whom a judgment, erroneous in part, had been rendered. In this case, as the only errors found in the record relate to and affect the crime covered by the first count, substantial justice requires, and it is so ordered, that the general judgment rendered by the court below should be reversed, and the cause be remanded to that court with instructions to enter judgment upon the second count of the indictment, and for such proceedings with reference to the first count as may be in conformity to law.

JOHN ALLISON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 203-217.)

Self-defense—witness in criminal case—party—instruction to jury—recent threats—demonstration of violence—evidence of ill-will.

1. Where homicide is sought to be justified as committed in self-defense, by the testimony of the accused, the instruction to the jury that,

NOTE.—As to threats by deceased in cases of homicide; when admissible in evidence,—see note to Wiggins v. Utah, 23: 941.

"you must have something more tangible, more real, more certain, than that which is a simple declaration of the party who slays, made in your presence by him as a witness when he is confronted with a charge of murder. All men would say that,"—is erroneous as practically depriving him of the benefit of his testimony.

2. The wise and humane provision of the law that the person accused is a competent witness should not be defeated by hostile intimations of the trial judge.
3. As a witness a defendant is no more to be visited with condemnation than he is to be clothed with sanctity, simply because he is under accusation, and there is no presumption of law in favor of or against his truthfulness.
4. The instruction to the jury that they are to draw the distinction between where a man arms himself from ill-will and animosity and hunts up his adversary and slays him, and where he arms himself for self-defense, is erroneous as ignoring the evidence that defendant had not armed himself at all, but had a gun with him for the purposes of sport and that his being at the place of the homicide had no connection with the deceased, and does not allude to defensive matter which throws a different light on the transaction.
5. Communicated recent threats are admissible in evidence on the question whether defendant had reasonable cause to apprehend an attack fatal to life or fraught with bodily injury, and was justified in acting on a slight hostile demonstration from the other.
6. What is or is not an overt demonstration of violence varies with the circumstances. Under some circumstances a slight movement may justify instant action because of reasonable apprehension of danger.
7. An instruction that threats by deceased to take the life of defendant may be treated as evidence of spite or ill will by the latter is misleading in itself and erroneous where it omits all reference to the conduct of the deceased at the time of the killing, which showed an intention then and there to carry out the previous threats.

[No. 693.]

Submitted November 20, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas, to review a judgment convicting John Allison of the murder of his father, William Allison, and sentencing him to be hanged. Reversed, with directions for a new trial.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

John Allison, some twenty years old, was indicted for the murder of his father, William Allison, on the 5th day of January, 1895, at the Cherokee Nation in the Indian country, in the western district of Arkansas, found guilty by a jury, under the instructions of the court, and sentenced to be hanged, whereupon he sued out this writ of error.

The evidence tended to show that the Allisons resided up to the year 1893 in the state of Washington; that the parents had been divorced; that the father had repeatedly threatened the lives of the members of his family, and for an assault upon one of his sons and his son-in-law, by shooting at them with a pistol, had been sent to the penitentiary for a year; and that thereupon the family left the state of Washington and came to the Indian country. In about a year the father appeared, first at Hot Springs, Arkansas, where one daughter had located, and then in the neighborhood of the other members of the family in the Indian country; and at once began threatening the lives of the entire family, and particularly that of his son John. A great variety of vindictive threats by the deceased in Washington, at Hot Springs, and in the Indian country, was testified to.

Evidence was also adduced that on one occasion he came to the house where the mother and her children were living and demanded to see the children, who (except John and one whom he had seen) were not at home, and he then wished to see their mother, who objected to meeting him; that he persisted, whereupon his son John, who had a gun in his hand, told him he must leave, and the father dared John to come out and he would fight him outside, but John answered that he did not want any trouble with him—only wanted him to stay away from there, and the deceased replied: "God damn you, I will go off and get a gun and kill the last damned one of you;" that he subsequently told his son-in-law to tell John Allison "that he would blow his God damned [205] brains out the first time he seen him; told him to tell him he would kill his mother and the entire family;" that the day after this occurrence John Allison and his mother made an affidavit to get a peace warrant for William Allison, and on that occasion John told the prosecuting attorney that the old man threatened his life, and he thought he was in danger, and asked him if he killed the old man what would he done with him, and he replied that "if the old man came to his house and raised a racket and tried to carry out his threats that he told me he had made on him, I told him he would be justified in doing it," but that he must not go "hunting the old man up and trying to kill him;" and that John said: "I will not bother him; if he will let me alone, I will let him alone;" and that this was five or six days before the killing. The evidence further tended to show that the deceased had been in the habit of carrying a pistol; that he stated that he had one; that on New Year's day he threatened one of the witnesses with that weapon, and another witness testified to catching a glimpse of it once when he put his hand around to his hip pocket; but that he had no pistol on him when he was killed. The deceased was staying at the house of one Farris, and a witness testified in rebuttal to conversing with John when he was "warming" on one occasion at the barn—presumably Farris' barn—and asking him why he did not go up to the house, and he said he did not want to go up there; that he was afraid he and his father would have some trouble; that he was afraid his father would hurt him; and that he was going to kill him just as quick as he caught him away from the house.

As to the circumstances immediately surrounding the homicide, the defendant testified that he and a man by the name of Rucker had killed a deer near Rucker's the day before, and that he had promised Rucker to come back the next day to hunt for others, and was riding by Farris' place, which was on the road to Rucker's, with his gun in his hand, on that errand, on the morning of January 5, when he saw a person whom he took to be his brother Jasper up at Farris' house; that 206] *this person turned out to be Farris with his brother's coat on; but he stopped at the stable thinking that his brother would come down that way, as he had learned from his sister that his brother was to be at the place at that time for the purpose of removing some household goods; that he did not go up to the house because he did not want to meet his father; that shortly after he arrived at the barn his father came through the gate, and he stepped to one side to let him go into the barn if he wished to, but deceased did not go towards the door, came straight towards him, and when he got a few feet from him said: "You have got it, have you?" and threw his hand back as if he was going to get a pistol; "made a demonstration that way," and that this demonstration and the threats he had made led defendant to believe that he was going to draw a pistol, and he fired; that he fired three shots, but none after the deceased fell. Defendant was corroborated by Rucker and others in many particulars, but contradicted by the government's witnesses in respect of firing after his father was down, they testifying that he fell at the first shot.

Mr. William M. Cravens for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It was claimed on behalf of defendant that the homicide was excusable because committed in self-defense, in that, his life having been repeatedly threatened by deceased, when he saw him on this occasion moving his hand as if to take a pistol from his hip pocket, he believed, and, as a prudent man, might reasonably have believed, at that time and under those circumstances, that he was in imminent and deadly peril which could only be averted by the course he pursued; or that, at the most, he could only be found guilty of manslaughter for acting under an unreasonable access of fear, but without malice.

The threats were conceded; and there was evidence that *the deceased was in the habit of carrying a pistol; that he had recently carried one in his hip pocket; that he had sent word to defendant that he should kill him on sight; that defendant had started on a hunting expedition that morning; and that his stopping at Farris' place was accidental; but the facts that he at first stepped away from his father, and that the latter advanced on him and made the threatening demonstration as if to draw a pistol, which the defendant knew he was accustomed to have upon him, apparently depended on defendant's testimony alone. The question for the jury to determine, from all the facts and circumstances adduced in evidence, was the reasonableness of the belief, or fear, of the existence of such peril of death or great bodily harm as would excuse the killing. And it was for the jury to test the credibility of the defendant as a witness, giving his testimony such weight under all the circumstances as they thought it entitled to, as in the instance of other witnesses, uninfluenced by instructions which might operate to strip him of the competency accorded by the law.

160 U. S.

We repeat what was said by Mr. Justice Shiras, speaking for the court, in Hicks v. United States, 150 U. S. 442, 452 [37: 1137, 1141]: "It is not unusual to warn juries that they should be careful in giving effect to the testimony of accomplices, and perhaps a judge cannot be considered as going out of his province in giving a similar caution as to the testimony of the accused person. Still it must be remembered that men may testify truthfully, although their lives hang in the balance, and that the law, in its wisdom, has provided that the accused shall have the right to testify in his own behalf. Such a privilege would be a vain one if the judge, to whose lightest word the jury, properly enough, give a great weight, should intimate that the dreadful condition in which the accused finds himself should deprive his testimony of probability. The wise and humane provision of the law is, that 'the person charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness.' The policy of this enactment should not be defeated by hostile comments of the trial judge, whose duty it is to give reasonable effect and force to the law."

*Similar views have been expressed in [208] many cases in the state courts.

In Com. v. Wright, 107 Mass. 403, it was held that there was no presumption either way as to the truthfulness of a defendant's testimony in a criminal case, and that his testimony is to be considered and weighed by the jury, taking all the circumstances of the case and all the other evidence into consideration, and giving such weight to the testimony as in their judgment it ought to have.

"It cannot," observed Scholfield, J., in Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 409, "be true that the evidence given by the defendant charged with crime is not to be treated the same as the evidence of other witnesses. It could not even be true as a universal proposition that, as matter of law, it is not to have the same effect as the evidence of other witnesses. Many times it certainly cannot have that effect, but there are times when it can and should,—and of this the jury are made the judges."

And see Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420; Veatch v. State, 56 Ind. 584, 26 Am. Rep. 44; Buckley v. State, 62 Miss. 705; State v. Johnson, 16 Nev. 36.

Among the errors assigned in the present case was one to so much of the charge as is given below in italics, in respect of which a sufficient exception was preserved. The trial judge said:

"You have heard in argument here, incidentally dropped, no doubt, because these things have been repeated here so often in this court that every child knows what the law of self-defense is, that if a man thinks he has a right to slay he can slay. That is a great misapprehension of what this proposition of the law is and what it means. If that was the case how many men, when they were arraigned for the killing of a human being, would not assert that they thought they had a right to kill; they might be mistaken, but they thought so. They perhaps had a misunderstanding of the law, but then they thought they had the right to kill. What a perversion of this protection agency called the law of the land this would be! No, that is not the law. It must be 209 shown by the evidence that the party who was slain was at the time doing something that would satisfy a reasonable man, situated as was the defendant, that the deceased, William Allison, then and there was about to do that which would destroy the life of the defendant, and that he could not prevent it except by doing as he did do. The question as to whether that is the state of case or not is a question that is to be finally passed upon by the juries of the country, and by you in this case, and you must have something more tangible, more real, more certain, than that which is a simple declaration of the party who slays, made in your presence by him as a witness when he is confronted with a charge of murder. All men would say that. No man created would say otherwise when confronted by such circumstances, and the juries as a matter of fact would have nothing to do but to record the finding which was willed or established by the declaration of the party who did the killing."

397

In this there was error. While the trial judge may not have intended to be understood that the defendant could not prove his defense by his own testimony, and had it in his mind simply to warn the jury that they should not rely on the defendant's opinion that his conduct was justifiable, but on the facts, or what reasonably appeared to him to be such, we think these remarks had a much wider scope, and must have been so understood by the jury. The "state of case" put to the jury was whether William Allison was at the time doing something that would satisfy a reasonable man, situated as defendant was, that he was about to do what would destroy defendant's life, and which defendant could not prevent except by doing as he did; and the question as to the existence of that state of case was required by the instruction to be passed on by the jury on something more than defendant's declaration, which, it was stated, would certainly be made by any man created when confronted with a charge of murder.

Defendant had testified to the facts upon which he based his belief that he was in peril, and it was for the jury to say from the evidence whether the facts as he stated them actually or apparently existed, and whether the 210 homicide could therefore be excused either wholly or in part. And if the jury regarded the remarks of the court as applicable generally to defendant's testimony, then defendant was practically deprived of its benefit, and the statute enabling him to testify was rendered unavailing. In our opinion the liability of the jury to thus understand these observations was so great that their utterance constitutes reversible error.

Nor was this error obviated by what, some time after,—the intervening portion of the charge occupies six closely printed pages,—was said by the trial judge, as follows: "The defendant has gone upon the stand, and he has made his statement. See if it is in harmony with the statements of witnesses you find to be reliable. If they are not, they stand before you as contradicted. If they are, they stand before you as strengthened as you may attach credit to the corroborating facts. In passing upon his evidence you are necessarily to consider his interest in the result of this trial, in the result of this case. He is related to the case more intimately than anybody else, and you are to apply the principle of the law that is laid down everywhere in all civilized countries, commanding you to look at a man's statements in the light of the interest that he has in the case. There is no odor of sanctity thrown around the statements of the defendant as a witness, as is sometimes supposed, because he is charged with crime. You are to view his statements in the light of their consistency, their reasonableness, and their probability, the same as the statements of any other witness, and you are to look at them in the light of the interest he has in the result of the case." If this could be, in any aspect, treated as a modification of the previous assertions of the court, it was too far separated from that connection to permit us to attribute that operation to it, and moreover it was, in itself, erroneous. As a witness, a defendant is no more to be visited with condemnation than he is to be clothed with sanctity, simply because he is under accusation, and there is no presumption of law in favor of or against his truthfulness.

Exception was taken, not with much precision, but, we are disposed to hold, sufficiently to save the point, to the following 211 instruction, given in discussing the question of malice aforethought:

"Now, of course, you are to distinguish (and I have to be particular upon this point; I have my reasons for it, and it is not necessary to name to you what they are) between a case where a man prepares simply to defend himself and keeps himself in the right in that defense, and a state of case where he prepares himself recklessly, wantonly, and without just cause to take the life of another. If he prepares himself in the latter way, and he is on the lookout for the man he has thus prepared himself to kill, and he kills him upon sight, that is murder, and it would shock humanity or even the most technical and hair-splitting court to decide anything else. That can be nothing else but murder. If he is in the right—if he is in the right at the time of the killing—and simply prepared himself to defend his own life, that is preparation, not to take the life of another, but preparation to defend himself. That is the distinction, a distinction that is clear and comprehensive."

And also to this in reference to the exercise of the right of self-defense:

"The first proposition is as follows: 'A man who, in the lawful pursuit of his business'—I will tell you after awhile what is meant by that. I will tell you, in short, in this connection it means that the man is doing at the time just exactly what he had a right to do under the law. When so situated—'is attacked by another under circumstances which denote an intention to take away his life or to do him some enormous bodily harm, may lawfully kill the assailant, provided he uses all the means in his power, otherwise, to save his own life or to prevent the intended harm—such as retreating as far as he can, or disabling his adversary without killing him, if it be in his power.' Now, that means by its very language that the party was in the right at the time. If he was hunting up his father for the purpose of getting an opportunity to slay him without just cause and in the absence of legal provocation, he was not in the right, and the consequence would be that he would be deprived of the law of self-defense, as you will learn presently, when such a condition as that 212 exists. Now, of course, in this connection—and I am this particular again for certain reasons—you are to draw the distinction between a state of case where a man arms himself, where there is ill-will, or grudge, or spite, or animosity, existing, and he hunts up his adversary and slays him, and the state of case where he simply arms himself for self defense. He has a right to do the latter as long as he is in the right, but he has no right to do the former, and if he does the former and slays because of that condition he is guilty of murder."

We are of opinion that defendant's objections to these portions of the charge are well founded. The hypothesis upon which the defense rested on the trial was that John Allison had a gun with him on the morning of the tragedy in order to hunt deer, and that his stopping at Farris' place, which was on his way to Rucker's, was accidental. His testimony to this effect was corroborated and was not contradicted.

Justice and the law demanded that so far as reference was made to the evidence that which was favorable to the accused should not be excluded. His guilt or innocence turned on a narrow hinge, and great caution should have been used not to complicate and confuse the issue. But the charge above quoted ignored the evidence tending to show that defendant had not armed himself at all, but had a gun with him for purposes of sport, and that his halt at Farris' had no connection whatever with the deceased; and invited the jury to contemplate the spectacle of a son hunting up his father with the deliberately preconceived intention of murdering him, unrelieved by allusion to defensive matter, which threw a different light on the transaction.

If defendant were "in the right at the time of the killing," the inquiry as to how he came to be armed was immaterial, or, at least, embraced by that expression. If there were evidence, and as to this the record permits no doubt, tending to establish that defendant carried his gun that morning for no purpose of offense or defense, then this disquisition of the court was calculated to darken the light cast on the homicide by the attendant circumstances as defendant claimed them to be; and of this he had just cause to complain, even though there 213 were competent evidence indicating that he harbored designs against his father's life, as frequently intimated by the court,—intimations which we fear seriously trenching on that untrammelled determination of the facts by a jury to which parties accused are entitled.

As will have been seen, the theory of the defense was that the defendant was in terror of his life by reason of the threats of deceased to take it, and was therefore led to interpret the alleged menacing action of deceased as demonstrating an intention then and there to carry those threats into execution. The bearing of the previous threats then was very important, and in relation to them the trial judge admonished the jury as follows:

"Now, then, these mitigating facts which reduce the killing so as to make it manslaughter cannot be previous acts of violence exerted at some other time, and so far in the past as that there was time for the blood to cool, or the party to think or to deliberate—it cannot be an act of that kind that can be taken into account to mitigate the crime. Nor can they exist in the shape of previous threats, made at some other time than the killing, or, if you please, if the proof had shown that they were made at the time of the killing, because threats of violence, mere threats of that character, cannot be used to justify nor to mitigate a killing, unless they are coupled with some other condition which I will give you in connection with the law given you showing the figure that threats cut in a case. . . . If threats were made previous to the time of the killing, and they were not coupled with the condition that they may be used to illustrate, as I will give it to you presently, and the party kills because of those threats, that is evidence of spite, that is evidence of grudge, that is evidence showing that he kills because of ill-will and special animosity existing upon his part against the party who is slain."

After much intervening discussion on other matters, the subject was returned to thus:

"You want to know, of course, what figure threats cut. Evidence has been offered here of threats made by the deceased. You want to know what office they perform in the case 214 how you are to view them, whether you are to say that the law authorizes you to say that if a man has been threatened at some time previous to the killing, and that he kills because of these threats, or he kills when no overt demonstration of violence, really or apparently, is being made by the party slain at the time, whether or not those threats can be taken into consideration by you to excuse that killing or to mitigate it.

. . . Now, you see, they do not cut any office at all in favor of a defendant unless at the time, in this case, his father was doing some act, making some actual attempt, to execute the threat, as shown by some act or demonstration at the time of the killing, taken in connection with the threat, that would induce a reasonable belief upon the part of the slayer that it was necessary to deprive his father of life in order to save his own or prevent some felony upon his person. That is the law, stated plainly, as to the office of communicated threats. . . . If he (the deceased) was doing some act or making some demonstration that really or apparently was of a character that indicated a design to take life, then the defendant could couple previous threats made with the act or demonstration. Now, the act or demonstration must have gone sufficiently far to show a reasonable purpose or to induce a reasonable belief, when coupled with threats, under the circumstances, that that was William Allison's purpose at the time. It must have gone to that extent. It must have gone sufficiently far, the overt act done by him, as to induce a reasonable belief, when coupled with threats, that that was his purpose. . . . Now, you see that no matter how many threats William Allison may have made against his family, and no matter to what extent this family broil had gone, this defendant, because of threats of that character, could not hunt him up and shoot him down because of those threats. If that was the state of case the threats cannot be considered in his favor, but they may be considered to show that he killed him because of malice, because of malice aforethought existing, because of a spirit of spite, or ill will, or grudge, that he was seeking to satisfy by that sort of attack."

Defendant excepted to so much of these 215] instructions as ruled *that threats to take his life might be treated as constituting evidence of spite, or ill will, or grudge on his part.

In Wiggins v. Utah, 93 U. S. 465 [23: 941], it was held that, on a trial for a homicide committed in an encounter, where the question as to which of the parties commenced the attack is in doubt, it is competent to prove threats of violence against defendant made by deceased, though not brought to defendant's knowledge, for the evidence, though not relevant to show the quo animo of the defendant, would be relevant, under such circumstances, to show that at the time of the meeting deceased was seeking defendant's life. Whart. Crim. Ev. § 757; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 174, 13 Am. Rep. 492; Campbell v. People, 16 Ill. 17, 61 Am. Dec. 49; People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676; Roberts v. State, 68 Ala. 156. It is from the dissenting opinion in Wiggins's Case that the trial judge indulged in quotation in connection with the undisputed proposition that a person's life is not to be taken simply because he has made threats.

Here the threats were recent and were communicated, and were admissible in evidence as relevant to the question whether defendant had reasonable cause to apprehend an attack fatal to life or fraught with great bodily injury, and hence was justified in acting on a hostile demonstration and one of much less pronounced character than if such threats had not preceded it. They were relevant because indicating cause for apprehension of danger and reason for promptness to repel attack, but they could not have been admitted on a record such as this, if offered by the prosecution as tending to show spite, ill-will, or grudge on the part of the person threatened; nor could they, being admitted on defendant's behalf, if coupled with an actual or apparent hostile demonstration, be turned against him in the absence of evidence justifying such a construction. The logical inference was that these threats excited apprehension, and another and inconsistent inference could not be arbitrarily substituted. If defendant, to use the graphic language of the court, hunted his father up and shot him down merely because he had made the threats, speculation as to his mental processes was uncalled for. If defendant committed the homicide because of the threats, in the sense *of acting upon emotions aroused by them, [216 then some basis must be laid by the evidence other than the threats themselves before a particular emotion different from those they would ordinarily inspire 'under the circumstances could be imputed as a motive for the fatal shot.

What is or is not an overt demonstration of violence varies with the circumstances. Under some circumstances a slight movement may justify instant action because of reasonable apprehension of danger; under other circumstances this would not be so. And it is for the jury, and not for the judge, passing upon the weight and effect of the evidence, to determine how this may be. In this case it was essential to the defense that the jury should be clearly and distinctly advised as to the bearing of the threats and the appearance of danger, at the moment, from defendant's standpoint, and particularly so as it did not appear that the deceased then had a pistol upon him, though there was evidence that it was his habit to carry one, and that he had had one immediately before.

We think that the language of the court in the particulars named is open to the criticism made in reference to like instructions under consideration in Thompson v. United States, 155 U. S. 271, 281 [39: 146, 151], where we remarked: "While it is no doubt true that previous threats will not, in all circumstances, justify or, perhaps, even extenuate the act of the party threatened in killing the person who uttered the threats, yet it by no means follows that such threats, signifying ill-will and hostility on the part of the deceased, can be used by the jury as indicating a similar state of feeling on the part of the defendant. Such an instruction was not only misleading in itself, but it was erroneous in the present case, for the further reason that it omitted all reference to the conduct of the deceased at the time of the killing, which went to show an intention then and there to carry out the previous threats."

Other exceptions to parts of the charge were taken, but, while not to be understood as holding that there was no error in respect thereof, we do not feel called upon to prolong this opinion by their consideration, and they may not arise upon another trial.

*Where the charge of the trial judge [217 takes the form of animated argument, the liability is great that the propositions of law may become interrupted by digression, and so intermingled with inferences springing from forensic ardor, that the jury are left without proper instructions; their appropriate province of dealing with the facts invaded; and errors intervene which the pursuit of a different course would have avoided.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with a direction to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

INTERIOR CONSTRUCTION & IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Piff. in Err.,
v.

JOHN C. GIBNEY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 217-220.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court—who may object.

1. The question of jurisdiction of the circuit court is sufficiently certified to this court, where the record shows that the only matter tried and decided was a demurrer to the plea to the jurisdiction, and the petition on which the writ of error was allowed asks only for the review of the judgment that the court had no jurisdiction of the action.
2. Defendants who have appeared generally in an action in a Federal court cannot object that themselves or other defendants were not inhabitants of the district in which the action was brought, where the ground of jurisdiction is diversity of citizenship.

[No. 99.]

Argued December 6, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana to review a judgment of that court in favor of defendants, John C. Gibney et al., in a suit brought by the Interior Construction & Improvement Company, on a bond for the performance of a contract. Reversed with directions to sustain the demurrer to the plea, and for further proceedings.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action at law, brought June 9, 1890, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, by the Interior Construction & Improvement Company against John C. Gibney and Harvey Bartley, copartners under the name of J. C. Gibney & Company, and James B. McElwaine and James B. Wheeler, upon a bond, by which "J. C. Gibney & Co., as principals, and J. B. McElwaine and J. B. Wheeler, as sureties, are holden and firmly bound," jointly and severally, to the plaintiff, in the sum of $20,000, for the performance of a contract made by "said J. C. Gibney & Co." with the plaintiff.

The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was incorporated under the laws of the state of New Jersey, and was a citizen thereof; and that all the defendants were citizens and residents of the state of Indiana.

On June 19, 1890, the defendants, Gibney, McElwaine, and Wheeler, by their attorney, entered a general appearance. But Gibney never pleaded or answered; and the defendant Bartley never appeared or made any defense.

On September 19, 1891, McElwaine and Wheeler pleaded in abatement that at the time of the bringing of this action, and ever since,

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court depending on parties and residence,—see note to Emory v. Greenough, 1: 640.

As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court dependent on residence of parties; proper place of suit,—see note to Roberts v. Lewis, 36: 579.

As to colorable conveyances to enable suit to be brought; motive of transfer; when no objection; coupons; residence of assignor,—see note to M'Donald v. Smalley, 7: 237.

160 U. S.

Gibney and Bartley were citizens of the state of Pennsylvania, and not citizens or residents of the state of Indiana; and that therefore the court had no jurisdiction of the case.

The plaintiff demurred to this plea as not containing facts sufficient to constitute a cause for the abatement of the action. The plaintiff declining to plead further, but electing to stand upon its demurrer to the plea, the court adjudged that the plaintiff take nothing by its action and that the defendant recover costs.

The plaintiff thereupon presented a petition for the allowance of a writ of error "for the review of the judgment heretofore rendered therein in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff, therein holding and deciding that this court has no jurisdiction of said action;" and assigned, as errors, that the circuit court erred: 1st, in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the plea in abatement; 2d, in sustaining the plea in abatement, and holding that the court had no jurisdiction of the cause; 3d, in entering judgment in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff on the plea in abatement, and dismissing and quashing the proceedings. The writ of error was thereupon allowed by the judge presiding in the circuit court.

Mr. John C. Donnelly for plaintiff in error.

No counsel for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The record shows that the only matter tried and decided in the circuit court was a demurrer to the plea to the jurisdiction, and the petition upon which the writ of error was allowed asked only for the review of the judgment that the court had no jurisdiction of the action. The question of jurisdiction alone is thus sufficiently certified to this court, as required by the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 828, chap. 517, § 5). Re Lehigh Min. & Mfg. Co. 156 U. S. 322 [39: 438]; Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 168 [39: 660].

The act of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, confers upon the circuit courts of the United States original jurisdiction of all civil actions, at common law or in equity, between citizens of different states, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000; and provides that "where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant." 24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373; 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866.

The circuit courts of the United States are thus vested with general jurisdiction of civil actions, involving the requisite pecuniary value, between citizens of different states. Diversity of citizenship is a condition of jurisdiction, and, when that does not appear upon the record, the court, of its own motion, will order the action to be dismissed. But the provision as to the particular district in which the action shall be brought does not touch the general jurisdiction of the court over such a cause between such parties, but affects only the proceedings taken to bring the defendant within such jurisdiction, and is a matter of personal privilege, which the defendant may insist upon, or may waive, at his election; and the defendant's right to object that an action within the general jurisdiction of the court is brought 220] in the wrong district is waived *by entering a general appearance, without taking the objection. Gracie v. Palmer, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 699 [5: 719]; Toland v. Sprague, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 300, 330 [9: 1093, 1105]; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 378 [24: 853, 855]; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McBride, 141 U. S. 127 [35: 659]; Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 206 [36: 942, 945]; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Saunders, 151 U. S. 105 [38: 90]; Central Trust Co. v. McGeorge, 151 U. S. 129 [38: 98]; Southern Exp. Co. v. Todd, 12 U. S. App. 351.

In Smith v. Lyon, 133 U. S. 315 [33: 635], this court held that the provision of the act of 1888, as to the district in which a suit between citizens of different states should be brought, required such a suit, in which there was more than one plaintiff or more than one defendant, to be brought in the district in which all the plaintiffs or all the defendants were inhabitants.

When there are several defendants, some of whom are and some of whom are not inhabitants of the district in which the suit is brought, the question whether those defendants who are inhabitants of the district may take the objection, if the nonresident defendants have not appeared in the suit, has never been decided by this court. Strong reasons might be given for holding that, especially where, as in this case, an action is brought against the principals and sureties on a bond, and one of the principals is a nonresident and does not appear, the defendants who do come in may object, at the proper stage of the proceedings, to being compelled to answer the suit.

But in the present case it is unnecessary to decide that question, because one of the principals and both sureties, being all the defendants who pleaded to the jurisdiction, had entered a general appearance long before they took the objection that the sureties were citizens of another district. Defendants who have appeared generally in the action cannot even object that they were themselves inhabitants of another district, and, of course, cannot object that others of the defendants were such.

Judgment reversed and case remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the plea, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Re KEASBEY & MATTISON COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 221-231.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court—suit against corporation.

1. The United States circuit court for the southern district of New York has not jurisdiction of an action for infringement of a trade-mark brought by a corporation of Pennsylvania against a corporation of Massachusetts, which has its principal office and place of business in New York city, unless the objection to the jurisdiction is waived.

2. A corporation cannot be compelled to answer in a United States circuit court in a district in which neither the defendant nor the plaintiff is an inhabitant.

[No. 6, Original.]

Submitted October 14, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to the judges of the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York to command them to take jurisdiction and proceed against the E. L. Patch Company, in a suit in equity brought by the Keasbey & Mattison Company. Writ of mandamus denied.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a petition for a writ of mandamus to the judges of the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York to command them to take jurisdiction and proceed against the E. L. Patch Company, upon a bill in equity filed in that court on January 26, 1895, by the petitioner, described in the bill as a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, against the E. L. Patch Company, alleged in the bill to be a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Massachusetts, and having its principal office and place of business in the city and state of New York, and against Henry E. C. Kuehne and Edward H. Lubbers, alleged to be citizens of the United States and of the state of New York, and managing or general agents of the E. L. Patch Company in that state, for infringement of a trade-mark, owned by the petitioner, registered in the Patent Office under the laws of the United States, and used in commerce between the United States and several foreign nations named in the bill; and alleging that "this is a suit of a civil nature in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and arising under the laws of the United States, and also in which there is a controversy between citizens of different states, within the intent and meaning of the statute in such case made and provided."

*Upon the filing of the bill in equity, a 222 subpoena addressed to all the defendants was issued and was served in the city of New York upon the E. L. Patch Company, by exhibiting the original, and delivering a copy to Kuehne, one of its managing agents in the district, and was also served upon Kuehne and Lubbers individually.

Upon the return of the subpoena, the E. L. Patch Company, by its solicitor appearing specially for this purpose, moved to set aside the alleged service of the subpoena upon the company; and the circuit court, upon a hearing, ordered that the motion be granted, and pons; residence of assignor,—see note to McDonald v. Smalley, 7: 287.

As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court dependent on residence of parties; proper place of suit,—see note to Roberts v. Lewis, 38: 579.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court depending on parties and residence,—see note to Emory v. Greenough, 1: 640.

As to colorable conveyances to enable suit to be brought; motive of transfer; when no objection; cou-that service set aside as null and void, and the company relieved from appearing to plead or answer the bill.

Mr. Edward K. Jones, for petitioner:

The circuit court clearly has jurisdiction of the defendant corporation.

Act of March 3, 1881, relating to trade-marks (21 Stat. at L. 503, §7); act of 1887, as amended (25 Stat. at L. 433).

There can therefore be no question of jurisdiction.

The place or district where suits in the courts of the United States are to be brought is a mere privilege which the defendant may waive.

Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369 (24: 853); St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McBride, 141 U. S. 127 (35: 659); Central Trust Co. v. McGeorge, 151 U. S. 129 (38: 98).

The present suit being founded on the special act of Congress relating to trade-marks, the privilege of being sued only in the district of the defendant's residence provided by the act of 1887, as amended, does not apply.

As the trade-mark statute, unlike the act of 1887, does not confer upon defendants the privilege of being sued only in the districts of their residence, it leaves it to the circuit courts to assume jurisdiction whenever the ordinary conditions to its exercise exist, i. e., whenever the defendant is present in such a way that courts of general jurisdiction may assert their authority over his person or property. And in the case of a foreign or nonresident corporation this condition exists whenever such foreign or nonresident corporation comes within the territorial limits of a state and Federal district, and there carries on business by agents or servants pursuant to local laws, providing, as a condition to such corporation doing business there, that it shall submit to the authority of the courts of the place where it is thus permitted to exercise its functions.

Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 59 U. S. 18 How. 404 (15: 451); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 65 (20: 354); Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369 (24: 853); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 10 (26: 643, 644); St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350 (27: 222); New England Mut. Ins. Co. v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 138 (28: 379); Re Louisville Underwriters, 134 U. S. 483 (33: 991).

This suit, being founded upon a special act of Congress, is not subject to the operation of the general judiciary act of 1887 as amended.

Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653 (37: 1211); United States v. Mooney, 116 U. S. 104 (29: 550); Third Nat. Bank v. Harrison, 3 McCrary, 162; Ex parte Kang-Gi-Shun-Ca, 109 U. S. 556 (27: 1030); Thorpe v. Adams, L. R. 6 C. P. 135.

A general act is not to be construed to repeal a previous particular act unless there is some express reference to the previous legislation on the subject, unless there is a necessary inconsistency in the two acts standing together.

Fitzgerald v. Champneys, 30 L. J. Ch. 782, 2 Johns. & H. 31-54; Earl of Derby v. Bury Imp. Comrs. L. R. 4 Exch. 226; Kidston v. Empire Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 546; Broom, Legal Maxims (6th Eng. ed.) 24.

As the suit in question is brought under the trade-mark statute, which, like the patent laws, contains no limitation as to the place of suit and no limitation as to the amount involved, the restrictions of the exercise of jurisdiction contained in the subsequent act of 1887 as amended do not operate upon this case.

By doing business in the state the laws of which require a nonresident corporation to designate a person upon whom service may be made, or, in case such designation be not made, that service may be made upon its managing agent, the defendant waived its privileges of being sued only in the place of its inhabitancy; and the suit not being one where jurisdiction depends only on diverse citizenship, the court is not only competent to take cognizance of the case, but may subject the defendant to its process.

The cases of Ex parte Shaw ("Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co.") 145 U. S. 444 (36: 768); Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202 (36: 942); and Empire Coal & Transp. Co. v. Empire Coal & Min. Co. 150 U. S. 159 (37: 1037), were cases where the sole ground of jurisdiction was diverse citizenship.

Conceding that the act of 1887, as amended, applies, this case rests upon the other clause which provides that "no civil suit shall be brought before either of the said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant;" and under this clause it is insisted that the defendant may waive its privilege of being sued in its place of residence, and that it has waived it by doing business and having agents in the state and city of New York.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 65 (20: 354); St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350 (27: 222).

If a state permits a foreign corporation to do business within her limits, and at the same time provides that in suits against it for business there done process shall be served upon its agents, the provision is to be deemed a condition of the permission; and corporations that subsequently do business in the state are to be deemed to assent to such condition as fully as though they had specially authorized their agents to receive service.

New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 607 (37: 292, 300); Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 59 U. S. 18 How. 404 (15: 451); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 65 (20: 354); Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 207 (36: 942, 945); Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 114, 20 Am. Rep. 513; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 977.

The principle applicable under such circumstances is that if the corporation does business in the state, it will be presumed to have assented to the statute and will be bound accordingly.

Van Dresser v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 48 Fed. Rep. 202; Consolidated Store Service Co. v. Lamson Consolidated Store-Service Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 833; Smith v. Sargent Mfg. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 801, the latter of which overrules Union Stritch & S. Co. v. Hall Signal Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 625, cited by Judge Lacombe in dismissing the present suit.

The laws of the state of New York where the present suit was brought contain similar provisions to those considered in the foregoing cases.

The subpoena was duly served on one of the firm of Kuehne & Lubbers, as managing agent of the defendant corporation, in his district on the 28th of January, 1895; and, as it does not appear that the corporation has designated a particular person upon whom service may be made, this is a strict compliance with N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 432, subd. 3.

St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 359 (27: 222, 226); Société Foncière et Agricole v. Milliken, 135 U. S. 304 (34: 208); Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194 (37: 699); Tuchband v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 437; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 432.

Mr. Wm. A. Abbott, for respondent:

The United States circuit court for the southern district of New York had no jurisdiction, the respondent not being an inhabitant of that district.

Judiciary act of March 3, 1887, § 1 (24 Stat. at L. 552), as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433).

The jurisdictional question is res judicata.

Ex parte Shaw ("Shaw v. Quincy Mfg. Co.") 145 U. S. 444 (36: 768); Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 292 (36: 942); Empire Coal & Transp. Co. v. Empire Coal & Min. Co. 150 U. S. 159 (27: 1037); Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Gonzales, 151 U. S. 496 (38: 248).

The prohibition in the act of 1887 and 1888, that no civil action shall be brought in any district against any person in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, has been uniformly (with but one exception) applied by circuit courts of the United States in suits for infringements of patents.

Donnelly v. United States Cordage Co. 66 Fed. Rep. 613, and cases there cited; Adriance, P. & Co. v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. 55 Fed. Rep. 287; Cramer v. Singer Mfg. Co. 59 Fed. Rep. 74; Union Switch & S. Co. v. Hall Signal Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 625. Contra, Smith v. Sargent Mfg. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 801.

The circuit court had no jurisdiction by reason of diversity of citizenship of the parties.

The application for mandamus should be denied.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents a single question of jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States, and involves no consideration of the merits of the cause of action asserted in the bill filed in that court.

By the act of March 3, 1881, chap. 138, "owners of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or with the Indian tribes, provided such owners shall be domiciled in the United States or located in any foreign country or tribe which by treaty, convention, or law affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, may obtain registration of such trade-marks" by causing to be recorded in the Patent Office a statement and description thereof, and complying with other requirements of the act. 21 Stat. at L. 502.

By § 7 of that act, "any person who shall reproduce, counterfeit, copy, or colorably imitate any trade-mark registered under this act, and affix the same to merchandise of substantially the same descriptive properties as those described in the registration, shall be liable to an action on the case for damages for the wrongful use of said trade-mark at the suit of the owner thereof; and the party aggrieved shall also have his remedy, according to the course of equity, to enjoin the wrongful use of such trade-mark used in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes, as aforesaid, and to recover compensation therefor in any court having jurisdiction over the person guilty of such wrongful act; and courts of the United States shall have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases, without regard to the amount in controversy."

By § 11, nothing in this act shall be construed "to give cognizance to any court of the United States in an action or suit between citizens of the same state, unless the trade-mark in controversy is used on goods intended to be transported to a foreign country, or in lawful commercial intercourse with an Indian tribe."

*While § 7 provides that "courts of the [227 United States shall have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases, without regard to the amount in controversy," and while the provision of § 11, that nothing in the act shall be construed to give "cognizance to any court of the United States in an action or suit between citizens of the same state," unless the trade-mark is used in commerce with a foreign country or an Indian tribe, implies that a suit for infringement of a trade mark used in such commerce may be maintained in some court of the United States; yet neither of those sections, and no other provision of the act, specifies in what court of the United States, or in what district, suits under the act may be brought; but the jurisdiction of such suits, in these respects, is left to be ascertained from the acts regulating the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

At the time of the passage of the trade-mark act of 1881, the only act to which reference could be had to ascertain such jurisdiction was the judiciary act of March 3, 1875, chap. 137, § 1, providing that "the circuit court of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made or which shall be made, under their authority, . . . or in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different states, . . . or a controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects. . . . But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court. And no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person, by any original process or proceeding, in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceeding," except in certain cases not material to the present inquiry. 18 Stat. at L. 470.

The restriction of jurisdiction with respect to amount, in the act of 1875, was perhaps superseded as to trade-mark cases by the [228 express provision of § 7 of the act of 1881; but the jurisdiction with regard to the court, as well as to the district, in which such suits should be brought, was controlled by the act of 1875, as the only act in force upon the subject. Under the provision of that act, which allowed a defendant to be sued in the district of which he was an inhabitant, or in that in which he was found, a corporation could doubtless have been sued either in the district in which it was incorporated or in any district in which it carried on business and had a general agent. Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 377 [24: 853, 854]; New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Woodward, 111 U. S. 138, 146 [28: 379, 381]; Ex parte Shaw ("Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co.") 145 U. S. 444, 452 [36: 768, 772]; Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 207 [36: 942, 945].

But when this suit was brought, the 1st section of the judiciary act of 1875 had been amended by the act of March 3, 1887, chap. 373, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, chap. 866, in the parts above quoted, by substituting for the jurisdictional amount of $500, exclusive of costs, the amount of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs; and by striking out, after the clause: "and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant,"—the alternative, "or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceeding," and by adding "but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant." 24 Stat. at L. 552; 25 Stat. at L. 433.

The last clause is added by way of proviso to the next preceding clause, which, in its present form, forbids any suit to be brought in any other district than that of which the defendant is an inhabitant; and the effect is that, in every suit between citizens of the United States, when the jurisdiction is founded upon any of the grounds mentioned in this section, other than the citizenship of the parties, it must be brought in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant; but when the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the 229 parties are citizens of different states, the suit shall be brought in the district of which either party is an inhabitant. And it is established by the decisions of this court that, within the meaning of this act, a corporation cannot be considered a citizen, an inhabitant, or a resident of a state in which it has not been incorporated; and, consequently, that a corporation incorporated in a state of the Union cannot be compelled to answer to a civil suit, at law or in equity, in a circuit court of the United States held in another state, even if the corporation has a usual place of business in that state. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Walthers, 134 U. S. 41, 43 [33: 833, 834]; Ex parte Shaw ("Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co.") 145 U. S. 444 [36: 768]; Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202 [36: 942]. Those cases, it is true, were of the class in which the jurisdiction is founded only upon the fact that the parties are citizens or corporations of different states. But the reasoning on which they proceeded is equally applicable to the other class, mentioned in the same section, of suits arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States; and the only difference is that, by the very terms of the statute, a suit of this class is to be brought in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, and cannot, without the consent of the defendant, be brought in any other district, even in one of which the plaintiff is an inhabitant.

When the parties are citizens of different states, so that the case comes within the general grant of jurisdiction in the first part of the section, the defendant, by entering a general appearance in a suit brought against him in a district of which he is not an inhabitant, waives the right to object that it is brought in the wrong district. Interior Const. & Imp. Co. v. Gibney, 160 U. S. 221 [ante, 401] and cases there cited. But a corporation, by doing business or appointing a general agent in a district other than that in which it is created, does not waive its right, if seasonably availed of, to insist that the suit should have been brought in the latter district. Ex parte Shaw ("Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co.") and Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, above cited.

In the case of Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653 [37: 1211], on which the petitioner in this case principally relied, the decision was that the provision of the act of 1888, forbidding suits to be *brought in any other district than that [230 of which the defendant is an inhabitant, had no application to an alien or a foreign corporation sued here, and especially in a suit for infringement of a patent right; and therefore such a firm or corporation might be so sued by a citizen of a state of the Union in any district in which valid service could be made on the defendant. That case is distinguishable from the one now before the court in two essential particulars: First, it was a suit against a foreign corporation, which, like an alien, is not a citizen or an inhabitant of any district within the United States; and was therefore not within the scope or intent of the provision requiring suit to be brought in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant. See Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Gonzales, 151 U. S. 496 [38: 248]. Second, it was a suit for infringement of a patent right, exclusive jurisdiction of which had been granted to the circuit courts of the United States by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 629, cl. 9, and § 11, cl. 5, re-enacting earlier acts of Congress; and was therefore not affected by general provisions regulating the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States concurrent with that of the several states.

In United States v. Mooney, 116 U. S. 104 [29: 550], it was likewise held that the 1st section of the judiciary act of 1875 did not take away the exclusive jurisdiction conferred by earlier statutes upon the district courts of the United States over suits for the recovery of penalties and forfeitures under the customs laws of the United States.

No such rule is applicable to a suit for infringement of a trade-mark under the act of 1881. That act, while conferring upon the courts of the United States, in general terms, jurisdiction over such suits, without regard to the amount in controversy, does not specify either the court or the district of the United States in which such suits shall be brought; nor does it assume to take away or impair the jurisdiction which the courts of the several states always had over suits for infringement of trade-marks.

This suit, then, assuming it to be maintainable under the act of 1881, is one of which the 231 courts of the United States* have jurisdiction concurrently with the courts of the several states. The only existing act of Congress which enables it to be brought in the circuit court of the United States is the act of 1888. The suit comes within the terms of that act, both as arising under a law of the United States and as being between citizens of different states. In either aspect, by the provisions of the same act, the defendant cannot be compelled to answer in a district of which neither the defendant nor the plaintiff is an inhabitant. The objection, having been seasonably taken by the defendant corporation, appearing specially for the purpose, was rightly sustained by the circuit court.

Whether the provision in § 7 of the trade-mark act of 1881, that the courts of the United States should have original jurisdiction in such cases, without regard to the amount in controversy, would control the pecuniary limit of jurisdiction in the subsequent act of 1888, as in the prior act of 1875, of which that act was an amendment, it is unnecessary to consider, because this bill distinctly alleges that the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000.

Writ of mandamus denied.

GEORGE E. WHITTEN, Appt.,

v.

CHARLES A. TOMLINSON, Sheriff of New Haven County, Connecticut.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 231-247.)

Habeas corpus—general allegations—discharge on committal—objections to indictment—extradition proceedings—defect in return—questions for state courts—when writ denied.

1. No allegation of fact in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus can be assumed to be admitted, unless distinct and unambiguous.

NOTE.—As to when habeas corpus may issue, and when not; and from what courts, and by what judges; what may be inquired into by writ of,—see note to United States v. Hamilton, 1: 490.

As to what questions may be considered on habeas corpus, see note to Ex parte Carll, 27: 288.

As to suspension of writ of habeas corpus, see note to Luther v. Borden, 12: 581.

As to extradition from another state; right to try person extradited for a different crime from that for which he was surrendered; who are fugitives from justice; character of offense; demand for arrest and delivery of fugitives; surrender of fugitive,—see note to Cook v. Hart, 36: 934.

Extradition; interstate; trial for a different crime; character of offense; international extradition.

A fugitive from justice surrendered to the authorities of a state upon their demand, by the governor of another state, can be held or tried in the former state for another crime than that charged in the warrant, by virtue of which he was arrested and surrendered, where the act for which he was

2. General allegations in the petition, that the petitioner is detained in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the state, and is held without due process of law, are averments of mere conclusions of law and not of matters of fact.

3. A hearing and discharge upon an application for committal to jail to await prosecution is no ground for discharge on habeas corpus from imprisonment under an indictment.

4. That an indictment in a state court lacks the words, "a true bill," and was found by the grand jury by mistake and misconception, are proper subjects of inquiry in the courts of the state, but are not ground for interposition by the United States courts by writ of habeas corpus.

5. A warrant of extradition by the governor of a state issued upon the requisition of a governor of another state, accompanied by a copy of the indictment, is prima facie evidence that the accused had been indicted and was a fugitive from justice, and, if the state court has jurisdiction of the offense, prevents interposition by United States courts by writ of habeas corpus until the lawfulness of his detention is determined by the state courts.

6. Any defect in the sheriff's return to the writ of habeas corpus in failing to set forth the indictment and warrant of extradition, is no reason why the United States courts should take the prisoner out of the custody of the authorities of the state.

7. The questions whether a recognizance for appearance on the first day of the term can be construed as requiring an appearance on a subsequent day in the term, and whether the word "resides" in a statute implies domicile, or only presence in the county, should be left to the decisions of the state courts.

8. A prisoner in custody under the authority of a state should not, except in a case of peculiar urgency, be discharged by a court or judge of the United States upon a writ of habeas corpus, in advance of any proceedings in the courts of the state to test the validity of his arrest and detention.

[No. 619.]

Argued November 20, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut denying a writ of habeas corpus extradited and that for which he is afterwards indicted are the same. People v. Cross, 135 N. Y. 536, distinguishing United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407 (30: 425).

Whether the rule would be the same with respect to the trial of a person extradited for another and different offense—query. People v. Cross, supra.

Substantial defects, under the laws of the demanding state, in an indictment upon which extradition is sought, are not cause for discharge of the fugitive upon habeas corpus, where it reasonably appears that he is charged by indictment with an offense. Ex parte Pearce, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 301, 48 Alb. L. J. 525.

A person is a fugitive from justice when, having committed a crime within a state, he withdraws himself from the jurisdiction of its court without waiting to abide the consequences of his act, although some other cause than a desire to flee induces his withdrawal. Re White, 55 Fed. Rep. 54.

Upon an application for a warrant of removal of an alleged offender to another district, the judge is not precluded from hearing other evidence, and to discharge George E. Whitten from imprisonment. Affirmed.

See same case below, 67 Fed. Rep. 230.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a petition filed March 26, 1895, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Connecticut, and addressed to the Honorable William K. Townsend, the district judge, as a judge of the circuit court, for a writ of habeas corpus to the sheriff of the county of New Haven in the state of Connecticut. The petition was signed by the petitioner and verified by his oath and was as follows:

"The petition of George E. Whitten respectfully shows to your honor that he is now a prisoner confined in the custody of Charles A. Tomlinson, sheriff of the county of New Haven, in the county jail in the city of New Haven in said county, for a supposed criminal offense, to wit, a crime of murder in the second degree.

"Your petitioner also shows that such confinement is by virtue of a warrant, a copy whereof is in the possession of said sheriff; and your petitioner avers that, to the best of his knowledge, he is not committed or detained by virtue of any process of law known to the courts of the United States *or the [233 several states, but he is now detained in violation of the Constitution of the United States, in violation of the laws of the United States, and in violation of the Constitution and laws of the state of Connecticut; and that he is not held in confinement by virtue of any final judgment or decree of any competent court or tribunal of criminal jurisdiction, or by virtue of any process issued upon such judgment or decree, but is held without due process of law.

"And your petitioner further says that at the time of his arrest, and for a long time prior thereto, he was a citizen of Massachusetts, and was extradited from Massachusetts for said alleged crime in January, 1895; and he says that he is advised by his counsel, William H. Baker, residing at Boston, and so believes, that his said imprisonment is illegal, and that said illegality consisted in this, to wit:

"That in August and September, 1893, this petitioner was tried before the local court sitting within and for the county of New Haven, state of Connecticut, upon a charge of murder confined to mere inspection of the indictment in all cases, but may require that he be satisfied that there is evidence on which a conviction might be had in the state to which removal is sought. United States v. Fowkes, 53 Fed. Rep. 13, 3 U. S. App. 247.

One extradited from another state may be tried for a different crime from that for which he was extradited. State v. Glover, 112 N. C. 896.

Upon the surrender of a fugitive from justice by one state to the state demanding his return in pursuance of national law, he may be tried in the state to which he is returned for any other offense than that specified in the requisition for his rendition, without first having an opportunity to return to the state from which he was extradited; and in so trying him against his objection, no right, privilege, or immunity secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States is thereby denied. Lascelles v. Georgia, 148 U. S. 537 (37: 549).

The right to try a criminal in a state to which he has been surrendered by another state in extradition proceedings is not limited to the offense specified in the requisition. Com. v. Wright, 153 Mass. 149, 19 L. R. A. 206.

A fugitive from justice fleeing from one state to another and surrendered on demand under the provisions of the United States Constitution may be tried for any offense committed in the state to which he is returned, although such offense was committed before the demand and surrender, and is not that on account of which he was brought back for trial. Lascelles v. State, 90 Ga. 347.

A complaint for extradition need not have the precision and particularity of an indictment, but should set forth the substantial and material features of the offense. Re Adutt, 55 Fed. Rep. 376.

A complaint which charges the forging of certain bills of exchange of the value of 81,000 gulden, Austrian coin, is sufficient to give jurisdiction as charging the crime of forgery, although if objected to as wanting in particularity an amendment may be required so as to fully inform the accused of the special charge for which he is sought to be extradited, and of all its particulars. Re Adutt, supra.

A requisition to another state for the extradition of a criminal may be granted in a case of misdemeanor as well as in one of felony. State v. Hudson, 2 Ohio Dec. 41, 2 Ohio N. P. 1.

160 U. S.

No presumption can be made in extradition proceedings against the prisoner. He is to be adjudged by strict construction of the charge against him. Re Hampton, 2 Ohio Dec. 579, 1 Ohio N. P. 181.

A recital in the requisition and warrant in extradition proceedings, of "shooting and wounding with intent to kill" does not state a crime under a statute denouncing the offense of shooting and wounding "a person" with intent to kill. Re Hampton, supra.

A copy of an indictment certified only by the judge and clerk of the court in which it was found is not sufficiently authenticated for the purposes of extradition, where there is no certificate or statement by the governor that it is a copy of the indictment, or certificate that those certifying to it are respectively clerk and judge. Re Hampton, supra.

The sufficiency of an indictment in another state, which conforms to a statute of that state, but is attacked on the ground that the statute violates the Federal Constitution, need not be decided by a state court on a writ of habeas corpus for the release of a fugitive from justice who has been surrendered on requisition by the governor, but may be remitted to the courts of the state in which the indictment was found for a decision of that question in the first instance. Pearce v. Texas, 155 U. S. 311 (39: 164).

An information cannot be regarded as a substitute for an indictment within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278, providing for the surrender of a fugitive from justice from another state. Ex parte Hart, 25 U. S. App. 22, 63 Fed. Rep. 249, 28 L. R. A. 801.

The departure of a purchaser of goods to his home in another state after making criminally false representations, in reliance on which the goods were subsequently delivered to a common carrier and shipped to him, is within the meaning of the law a flight from justice for which he may be surrendered on a requisition. Re Sultan, 115 N. C. 57, 28 L. R. A. 294.

A person not in the demanding state at the time of the commission of the alleged offense or after its commission cannot be extradited as a fugitive from justice. Ex parte Knowles, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 263.

in the second degree, being the same alleged charge for which he was extradited, and was after a full hearing thereof discharged from said court.

"That thereafterwards this petitioner remained in the city of New Haven, state of Connecticut, for a long time,—during at least two sessions of the grand jury,—and then removed to Newton, in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, some time early in the year 1894.

"That he was, in January, 1895, while such citizen of Massachusetts, arrested and extradited from the state of Massachusetts upon a warrant issued by the governor of Massachusetts on demand and application of the governor of Connecticut, alleging that an indictment had been found by the grand jury against him of murder within and for the county of New Haven, being the same charge on which he was tried as above. This petitioner was taken to the said city of New Haven by virtue thereof.

"This petitioner avers that no indictment was ever found against him by any grand jury sitting at any time within the state of Connecticut, nor no indictment as and for a true 234] bill*ever was presented by any grand jury in said state of Connecticut against him, which he is ready to verify and prove, and any pretended indictment was found by mistake or misconception, and was not their true verdict or finding.

"Further, your petitioner says that he was not, at the time of this extradition as aforesaid, a fugitive from justice from said state of Connecticut.

"Wherefore your petitioner prays a writ of habeas corpus, to the end that he may be discharged from custody and be allowed to depart safely from out the state of Connecticut to the commonwealth of Massachusetts, without interference in any way by the state authorities of the state of Connecticut, without reference to said charge made against him."

On March 27, a writ of habeas corpus was issued accordingly by the district judge, returnable forthwith at a special term of the circuit court.

On March 28, the sheriff made his return to the writ, stating, as the cause of the petitioner's detention and imprisonment, that he was committed to the jail by virtue of the following mittimus:

"To the sheriff of New Haven county, his deputy, or any proper officer or indifferent person, Greeting:

"Whereas Lucius B. Hinman, of New Haven, Connecticut, did on the 17th day of January, 1895, enter into a recognizance in the

One who by interstate rendition proceedings is brought to a state from another state or territory as a fugitive from justice is not exempt from civil prosecution while detained in the former state under such proceedings. Reid v. Ham, 54 Minn. 305, 21 L. R. A. 232.

One extradited under an indictment for assault with intent to murder cannot be convicted of an assault in the second degree, where the treaty between the two countries makes no provision for extradition for such an offense. People v. Stout, 81 Hun. 336.

A fugitive seeking an asylum upon a war vessel of the United States cannot make it a condition that he shall be transferred to another vessel or placed without the jurisdiction of the United States. Re Ezeta, 62 Fed. Rep. 964.

Justification of a killing as in self-defense is not available on a proceeding for extradition to a foreign country. Re Ezeta, supra.

Crimes by officers of the established government of a foreign country, directly connected with a conflict existing between such governments and revolutionary forces, are political offenses not extraditable. Re Ezeta, supra.

Interstate extradition only is referred to by N. Y. Penal Code, § 51, which makes it a misdemeanor for an officer of the state to receive any compensation for service or "expense incurred in procuring from the governor . . . a demand upon the executive authority of a state or territory of the United States, or of any foreign government, for the surrender of any fugitive from justice." People v. Columbia County Supers, 134 N. Y. 1.

One who while within a state sets in motion the machinery for crime and commits an act in furtherance of the offense, but departs the state before its consummation, is a fugitive from justice within the law relating to interstate extradition. Re Cook, 49 Fed. Rep. 833.

As between the United States and foreign governments, the surrender of fugitives from justice depends upon treaties. Dos Santos' Case, 2 Brock. 493; United States v. Davis, 2 Sumn. 482; Re Metzger, 46 U. S. 5 How. 176, 12 L. ed 104; 6 Ops. Atty.

Gen. 85; 2 Ops. Atty. Gen. 359; 7 Ops. Atty. Gen. 536; 1 Kent, Com. 89, note; Wheat. International Law, 171.

The United States government has never recognized the right, unless under treaty stipulations. Re Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 313, 57 Am. Dec. 384; Com. v. Deacon, 10 Serg. & R. 135; Story, Conf. L. §§ 626, 1808.

Complaint on oath for the arrest and commitment of a person for the purpose of extradition, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5270, must be a complaint by some one authorized to represent the executive department of the foreign treaty power. Re Ferrelle, 24 Blatchf. 155, 28 Fed. Rep. 878.

On the examination of a party before a United States commissioner in the state of Minnesota, in extradition proceedings under the treaty of 1842 with Great Britain he has the right to examine witnesses in his own behalf. Re Kelley, 25 Fed. Rep. 268.

The testimony of the accused is not admissible, although the judge be sitting in a state where such evidence is admissible. Re Dugau, 2 Low. Dec. 367.

Extradition proceedings do not invalidate in their nature the right of accused not to be prosecuted upon any other charge than that upon which his extradition is asked. United States v. Lawrence, 13 Blatchf. 295; 6 Ops. Atty. Gen. 691; United States v. Caldwell, 8 Blatchf. 131; Adrian v. Lagrave, 59 N. Y. 110, 17 Am. Rep. 317; Re Miller, 23 Fed. Rep. 33.

But one extradited from a foreign country may claim exemption from trial upon any one charge other than that mentioned in the extradition proceedings, and this right cannot be waived. Ex parte Coy, 32 Fed. Rep. 911.

In a proceeding under a treaty with Great Britain evidence of criminality must be such as would justify the arrest and commitment of the accused according to law in the place where he is found. Re McPhun, 24 Blatchf. 254, 30 Fed. Rep. 57; Ex parte Kaine, 3 Blatchf. 1; United States v. Warr, 3 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 346; 4 Ops. Atty. Gen. 201, 330; Re Kelley, 2 Low. Dec. 339; Re Macdonnell, 11 Blatchf. 170; Re Farce, 2 Abb. U. S. 346.

sum of $5,000 for the appearance of George E. Whitten, of the town of Newton, state of Massachusetts, before the superior court to be holden at New Haven within and for the county 235] of New Haven on the first Tuesday of January, 1895, and the said Lucius B. Hinman now believes that said George E. Whitten intends to abscond, and having produced the evidence that he is surety as aforesaid for the said George E. Whitten, and hath applied to me for a mittimus, and hath made oath before me that the statements in his said application are true:

"These are therefore by authority of the state of Connecticut, to command you that you forthwith arrest the said George E. Whitten and him commit to the jail of said New Haven county; and the keeper of said jail is hereby ordered to receive the said George E. Whitten, and him safely keep within said jail until he be discharged by due order of law. Hereof fail not, but due service and return make.

"Dated at New Haven this 26th day of March, A. D. 1895.

"John S. Fowler,
"Justice of the Peace."

The petitioner moved to quash the return as insufficient to justify his detention.

The circuit court, upon a hearing, denied the motion and discharged the writ of habeas corpus without prejudice to the right of the petitioner to renew the motion; and filed an opinion by the district judge (67 Fed. Rep. 230) in which the grounds of decision were stated as follows:

"The writ was issued; and the sheriff brought the petitioner into this court, and made return, as to the cause of his detention and imprisonment, that he was committed to jail by virtue of a mittimus, in the form provided for by statute, duly issued by a justice of the peace on the application of the bondsman, upon oath, that the petitioner intended to abscond. A hearing was had upon a motion to quash the return."

"The petitioner was arrested in Massachusetts, and brought into this state under a warrant issued by the governor of Massachusetts, upon the requisition of the governor of Connecticut, accompanied by a certified copy of the indictment charging the crime and an affidavit that the petitioner was a fugitive from justice.

"It is claimed, in support of the petition, that the indictment was procured by mistake, and that the prisoner was not in fact a fugitive from justice. These claims are denied by the attorney for the state. In view of the conclusions reached, it is not necessary to pass upon these questions of fact. It may be assumed, in the disposition of this motion, that all the allegations in the petition are true.

"Counsel for the petitioner claims that he can prove, in the first place, that the indictment is invalid or void, by reason of some mistake on the part of the grand jury. But the effect of 236] *an inquiry into this question, assuming such evidence to be admissible and true, would be to call upon the Federal court to examine into the proceedings under which said indictment was obtained, and to determine collaterally its sufficiency under the laws of this state."

"It is further claimed that the petitioner was not a fugitive from justice, and that, inasmuch as extradition proceedings are based upon the statutes of the United States, the question whether he was in fact such fugitive is a Federal question which it is the duty of this court to decide. But it is not denied that the demand made upon the executive authority of the asylum state, and his action thereon, were proper in form; and it will not be assumed in advance that he has surrendered the petitioner upon insufficient evidence."

"I do not mean to be understood as denying the right to this prisoner, at an appropriate time, to introduce evidence that he was not a fugitive from justice, or that the evidence before the governor of Massachusetts was insufficient to authorize his action; nor do I intend at this time to pass upon the merits of this or any other questions presented, nor to intimate what disposition might be made of these claims, in case they were brought before this court after final action in the state court. All that is now decided is that it must be assumed in advance that the petitioner may obtain all the protection to which he may be entitled in the courts of this state."

"In view of the principle of right and law underlying the forbearance which the Federal and state courts exercise towards each other in order to avoid conflict, I should not be justified in passing upon such questions in advance of the proceedings in the state courts."

On April 25 the petitioner filed in the circuit court an appeal, reciting the petition, the return, and the motion to quash the return, and concluding as follows:

"The said circuit court of the United States for the district of Connecticut, on the 28th day of March, 1895, made final ruling, and decreed that upon the face of the petition, without hearing any evidence to sustain the petition [and *denying the petitioner the right to [237 introduce any evidence to sustain said petition or tending to sustain it, which the plaintiff duly offered], the writ should be discharged, and that the motion to quash said return be denied, and it was afterwards so decreed and ordered.

"Wherefore this petitioner appeals from the whole of said decree of said circuit court, and the petition, return, motion to quash, decree, writ, and all other papers forming a record of said cause may be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States without delay, together with this appeal, and moves that the said Supreme Court will proceed to hear the said cause anew, and that the said decree of the said circuit court be reversed, and for such further order and decree to be made as will to the Supreme Court of the United States seem just and right. The petition for the writ of habeas corpus, the writ of habeas corpus, the return of the sheriff, the motion to quash, and the decree of the court are hereby made a part of this appeal."

On the same day that appeal was allowed by the district judge.

On May 8 the petitioner filed a paper purporting to amend his appeal by inserting the words above printed in brackets, and with this paper filed the following letter addressed to his counsel by the district judge:

"United States Courts, Judges' Chambers, New Haven, May 4, 1895. William H. Baker, Esq., 39 Court Street, Boston, Mass. Dear

Sir: Continuous court engagements night and day for two days have prevented an earlier reply to your letter of April 29th. I had supposed that the record contained a statement of the fact that the court declined to hear the evidence; and, if not, I am willing that the statement of said fact should be inserted in the record, provided it can be properly done at this time.

"Yours truly, William K. Townsend."

The record transmitted to this court set forth 238] the matters*above stated; but showed no further order amending the record, or allowing the amendment of the appeal.

Mr. William H. Baker, for appellant:

There is no presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, but it must be affirmatively shown by the record.

State v. Hartwell, 35 Me. 129; Re Hersom, 39 Me. 476; Lane v. Crosby, 42 Me. 327; Water-ville Iron Mfg. Co. v. Goodwin, 43 Me. 431; Rossiter v. Peck, 3 Gray, 538; Gurney v. Tufts, 37 Me. 130, 58 Am. Dec. 777; Vinton v. Weaver, 41 Me. 430.

If the original recognizance is void the magistrate or justice would have no authority to issue the mittimus or cause the arrest.

This is an undertaking on the 17th day of January, 1895, to perform something on the 1st Tuesday of January of the same year, which is an impossible contract and absolutely void, because there is no possible day certain fixed for performance.

State v. Sullivan, 3 Yerg. 281; Com. v. Bolton, 1 Serg. & R. 330; Butler v. State, 12 Smedes & M. 470; Thurston v. Com. 3 Dana, 225; Wegner v. State, 28 Tex. App. 419; State v. Casey, 27 Tex. 111; Brite v. State, 24 Tex. 219; State v. Allen, 33 Ala. 422; Henry v. Com. 4 Bush, 427; State Treasurer v. Merrill, 14 Vt. 64.

One deprived of his liberty on such or like process is deprived of it without due process of law, and the Federal courts in such a case will grant relief.

Re Monroe, 46 Fed. Rep. 52.

A return to a writ of habeas corpus is bad if it does not show for what cause the prisoner is detained in custody.

Church, Habeas Corpus, 123; Ex parte Trader, 24 Tex. App. 393; Barkham's Case, 3 Cro. Cas. 507.

The return is bad because it does not state the crime, the place of commission, the time, and person upon whom committed. It should so state the facts as to apprise the opposite party of what was intended to be proved.

State v. Reuff, 29 W. Va. 751; Souden's Case, 4 Barn. & Ald. 294; Re Doo Woon, 18 Fed. Rep. 898; Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 255-257.

And the mittimus should state with certainty for what offense the commitment is made in order for the court to determine if it be lawful.

2 Hale, P. C. 122; 2 Hawk. P. C. chap. 16. § 16; Ex parte Burford, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 448 (2: 495); Rex v. Croker, 2 Chitty, 138, 18 Eng. C. L. 279; 4 Coke, Inst. 290; Vintners Co. v. Clerke, 5 Mod. 159; Bracy's Case, 1 Salk. 349; State v. Everett, 1 Dud. L. 295.

A return showing an award to prison "and to remain there until further order" is uncertain.

Re Secles, 3 Cro. Car. 557; Re Douglas, 3 Q. B. 825.

A return may be disputed in the petition by anticipation as well as by special traverse.

Seavey v. Seymour, 3 Cliff. 439-455.

The Federal courts, recognizing this wholesome principle of law, have often discharged persons at once on habeas corpus when the return on its face was defective, without further considering the case.

Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean, 121; Re Doo Woon, 18 Fed. Rep. 898; Ex parte Jenkins, 2 Wall, Jr. 521; Ex parte Burford, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 448 (2: 495); Ex parte Friday, 43 Fed. Rep. 916; Re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 283 (33: 155).

After the writ of habeas corpus has once issued and the prisoner been brought before the court, it is the duty of the court to proceed in a summary way to determine the facts by hearing the testimony and arguments, and then dispose of the party as law and justice require.

Cunningham v. Neagle, 135 U. S. 1 (34: 55); U. S. Rev. Stat. § 761.

If this is not done by the circuit court, all the proceedings can be revised on appeal.

Ex parte McCardle, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 325 (18: 817).

There being no indictment, the state court had no jurisdiction over the person or subject-matter.

Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1 (30: 842); Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. Rep. 66; Re Buell, 3 Dill. 116.

A Federal court has no legal discretion, but must discharge the prisoner unless it appears he is held on some state process valid on its face.

Re Monroe, 46 Fed. Rep. 52; Re Nielsen, 131 U. S. 182 (33: 120); Re McDonald, 9 Am. L. Reg. 661.

A habeas corpus proceeding is a civil action between the petitioner and the person detaining him, for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of his commitment and detention.

Ex parte Milligan, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 2 (18: 281); Ex parte Frederick, 149 U. S. 75 (37: 656); Ex parte Tom Tong, 108 U. S. 556 (27: 826).

Messrs. Edward H. Rogers and Tilton E. Doolittle, for appellee:

The only questions reviewable by this court upon this appeal are such as are raised by the pleadings, the petition, the return, and the motion to quash.

England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502 (28: 811); Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462 (35: 225).

It appears from the record that there is an indictment against the petitioner in the state of Connecticut. The circuit court had no jurisdiction of the petition, in the absence of an averment that the petitioner had been denied protection in the state courts of Connecticut.

Pearce v. Texas, 155 U. S. 311 (39: 164); Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 252 (29: 868, 871); New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89, 94 (39: 80, 82); Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183 (36: 934).

Neither the alleged insufficiency or defectiveness of the indictment, nor the alleged prior trial and "discharge" of Whitten for the same offense by a "local court" in Connecticut, gave the circuit court jurisdiction.

Duncan v. McCall, 139 U. S. 449 (35: 219);

Wood v. Brush ("Re Wood") 140 U. S. 278 (35: 505); Ex parte Fonda, 117 U. S. 516 (29: 994); Ex parte Frederick, 149 U. S. 70, 75 (37: 653, 656).

It must be presumed that the governor of the state of Massachusetts surrendered the petitioner upon sufficient evidence that he was a fugitive from justice.

Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642 (29: 250); Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700 (32: 283); Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436 (30: 421).

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

By the judicial system of the United States, established by Congress under the power conferred upon it by the Constitution, the jurisdiction of the courts of the several states has not been controlled or interfered with, except so far as necessary to secure the supremacy of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States.

With this end, three different methods have been provided by statute for bringing before the courts of the United States proceedings begun in the courts of the states.

First. From the earliest organization of the courts of the United States, final judgments, whether in civil or criminal cases, rendered by the highest court of a state in which a decision in the case could be had, against a right specially set up or claimed under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed by this court on writ of error. Acts of September 24, 1789, chap. 20, § 25 (1 Stat. at L. 85); February 5, 1867, chap. 28, § 2 (14 Stat. at L. 386); U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709; Martin v. Hunter, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 304 [4: 97]; Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 264 [5: 257]. Such appellate jurisdiction is expressly limited to cases in which the decision of the state court is against the right claimed under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, because, when the decision of that court is in favor of such a right, no revision by this court is necessary to protect the national government in the exercise of its rightful powers. Gordon v. Caldwell, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 268 [2: 436]; Montgomery v. Hernandez, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 129 [6: 575]; Commonwealth Bank of Kentucky v. Griffith, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 56, 58 [10: 352, 353]; Missoni v. Andriano, 138 U. S. 496, 500, 501 [34: 1012, 1014].

239 *Second. By the judiciary act of 1789 the only other way of transferring a case from a state court to a court of the United States was under section 12, by removal into the circuit court of the United States, before trial, of civil actions against aliens or between citizens of different states. 1 Stat. at L. 79. Such right of removal for trial has been regulated and extended to cases arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, by successive acts of Congress, which need not be particularly referred to, inasmuch as the present case is not one of such a removal.

Third. By section 14 of the old judiciary act, the courts of the United States were authorized, in general terms, to issue writs of habeas corpus and other writs necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions: "provided, that writs of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to prisoners in jail, unless when they are in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States, or are committed for trial before some court of the same, or are necessary to be brought into court to testify." 1 Stat. at L. 81. Under that act, no writ of habeas corpus, except ad testificandum, could be issued in the case of a prisoner in jail under commitment by a court or magistrate of a state. Ex parte Dorr, 44 U. S. 3 How. 103 [11: 514]; Ex parte Burrus, 136 U. S. 586, 593 [34: 500, 503].

By subsequent acts of Congress, however, the power of the courts of the United States to issue writs of habeas corpus of prisoners in jail has been extended to the case of any person in custody for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order or process of a court or judge thereof; or in custody in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States, or who, being a subject or citizen of and domiciled in a foreign state, is in custody for an act done or omitted under any right or exemption claimed under a foreign state, and depending upon the law of nations. Acts of March 2, 1833 (4 Stat. at L. 634, chap. 57, § 7); August 29, 1842 (5 Stat. at L. 539, chap. 257); February 5, 1867 (14 Stat. at L. 385, chap. 28, § 1); U. S. Rev. Stat. § 753.

By the existing statutes, this court and the circuit and district courts and any justice or judge thereof, have power *to grant writs [240 of habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of restraint or liberty of any prisoner in jail, who "is in custody in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States;" and "the court or justice or judge to whom the application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto;" and "shall proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case, by hearing the testimony and arguments, and thereupon to dispose of the party as law and justice may require." U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 751-755, 761.

The power thus granted to the courts and judges of the United States clearly extends to prisoners held in custody, under the authority of a state, in violation of the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. But in the exercise of this power the courts of the United States are not bound to discharge by writ of habeas corpus every such prisoner.

The principles which should govern their action in this matter were stated, upon great consideration, in the leading case of Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241 [29: 868], and were repeated in one of the most recent cases upon the subject, as follows:

"We cannot suppose that Congress intended to compel those courts, by such means, to draw to themselves, in the first instance, the control of all criminal prosecutions commenced in the state courts exercising authority within the same territorial limits, where the accused claims that he is held in custody in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The injunction to hear the case summarily, and thereupon 'to dispose of the party as law and justice require,' does not deprive the court of discretion as to the time and mode in which it will exert the powers conferred upon it. That discretion should be exercised in the light of the relations existing, under our system of government, between the judicial tribunals of the Union and of the states, and in recognition of the fact that the public good requires that those relations be not disturbed by unnecessary conflict between courts equally bound to guard and protect rights secured by the Constitution. . . . Where a person is in custody, under process from a state court of original jurisdiction, for an alleged offense against the laws of such state, and it is claimed that he is restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution of the United States, the circuit court has a discretion whether it will discharge him upon habeas corpus in advance of his trial in the court in which he is indicted; that discretion, however, to be subordinated to any special circumstances requiring immediate action. When the state court shall have finally acted upon the case, the circuit court has still a discretion whether, under all the circumstances then existing, the accused, if convicted, shall be put to his writ of error from the highest court of the state, or whether it will proceed, by writ of habeas corpus, summarily to determine whether the petitioner is restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution of the United States." Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 251-253 [29: 863, 871, 872]; New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89, 93-95 [39: 80, 82].

In Ex parte Royall and in New York v. Eno it was recognized that in cases of urgency, such as those of prisoners in custody, by authority of a state, for an act done or omitted to be done in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order or process of a court of the United States, or otherwise involving the authority and operations of the general government or its relations to foreign nations, the courts of the United States should interpose by writ of habeas corpus.

Such an exceptional case was Cunningham v. Neagle ("Re Neagle") 135 U. S. 1 [34: 55], in which a deputy marshal of the United States, charged under the Constitution and laws of the United States with the duty of guarding and protecting a judge of a court of the United States, and of doing whatever might be necessary for that purpose, even to the taking of human life, was discharged on habeas corpus from custody under commitment by a magistrate of a state on a charge of homicide committed in the performance of that duty.

Such, also, was Thomas v. Loney ("Re Loney") 134 U. S. 372 [33: 949], in which a person arrested by order of a magistrate of a state, for perjury in testimony given in the case of a contested congressional election, was discharged on habeas corpus because a charge of such perjury was within the exclusive cognizance [242] of the courts of the United States, and to permit it to be prosecuted in the state courts would greatly impede and embarrass the administration of justice in a national tribunal.

Such, again, was Mali v. Hudson County Jail Keeper ("Wildenhuis Case") 120 U. S. 1 [30: 565], in which the question was decided on habeas corpus whether an arrest, under authority of a state, of one of the crew of a foreign merchant vessel charged with the commission of a crime on board of her while in a port within the state, was contrary to the provisions of a treaty between the United States and the country to which the vessel belonged.

But, except in such peculiar and urgent cases, the courts of the United States will not discharge the prisoner by habeas corpus in advance of a final determination of his case in the courts of the state; and, even after such final determination in those courts, will generally leave the petitioner to the usual and orderly course of proceeding by writ of error from this court. Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241 [29: 863]; Ex parte Pondou, 117 U. S. 516 [29: 994]; Duncan v. McCall ("Re Duncan") 139 U. S. 449 [35: 219]; Wood v. Brush ("Re Wood") 140 U. S. 278 [35: 505]; Jugiro v. Brush ("Re Jugiro") 140 U. S. 291 [35: 510]; Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183 [36: 934]; Ex parte Frederick, 149 U. S. 70 [37: 653]; New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89 [39: 80]; Pepke v. Cronan, 155 U. S. 100 [39: 84]; Bergemann v. Backer, 157 U. S. 655 [39: 845].

In a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, verified by the oath of the petitioner, as required by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 754, facts duly alleged may be taken to be true, unless denied by the return or controlled by other evidence. But no allegation of fact in the petition can be assumed to be admitted, unless distinct and unambiguous.

The facts upon which the lawfulness of the imprisonment of this petitioner depends are obscurely and imperfectly presented in his petition and in the record transmitted to this court.

The general allegations in the petition, that the petitioner is detained in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and of the Constitution and laws of the state of Connecticut, and is held without due process of law, are averments of mere conclusions of law and not of matters of fact. Re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 286 [33: 154, 157].

*The petition begins by alleging that [243] the petitioner is a prisoner confined by the sheriff of the county of New Haven in the county jail for a supposed criminal offense, to wit, the crime of murder in the second degree, and that his imprisonment is by virtue of a warrant, a copy whereof is in the possession of the sheriff. It also alleges that the petitioner was a citizen of Massachusetts, and was extradited from that state for said alleged crime in January, 1895. So far, certainly, no unlawful imprisonment is shown.

The allegation that in August and September, 1893, he was tried before a local court in New Haven upon the same charge, and, upon a full hearing, was discharged by the court, would seem to point to a hearing and discharge upon an application for his committal to jail to await prosecution, rather than to a formal trial and acquittal; and, whatever effect it might have if pleaded to a subsequent indictment, affords no ground for his discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte Bigelow, 113 U. S. 328 [28: 1005]; Re Belt, 159 U. S. 95 [ante, 88].

It is then alleged that he remained in New Haven during at least two sessions of the grand jury, and then, early in 1894, removed to Massachusetts; and that in January, 1895, he was arrested in Massachusetts, and brought to New Haven upon a warrant of extradition issued by the governor of Massachusetts upon the demand of the governor of Connecticut, alleging that an indictment for murder had been found against him by the grand jury of the county of New Haven. These allegations are immaterial, except as introductory to the remaining allegations of the petition.

One of these allegations is "that no indictment was ever found against him by any grand jury sitting at any time within the state of Connecticut, nor no indictment as and for a true bill ever was presented by any grand jury in said state of Connecticut against him, which he is ready to verify and prove, and any pretended indictment was found by mistake or misconception, and was not their true verdict or finding."

It is not alleged that it appears by the records of the court that no indictment was presented by the grand jury; and it is by no means clear that [244] it was intended to allege anything *more than that an indictment, actually presented by the grand jury to the court, lacked the words "a true bill," and was found by the grand jury by mistake and misconception. Such matters are proper subjects of inquiry in the courts of the state, but afford no ground for interposition by the courts of the United States by writ of habeas corpus. Wood v. Brush ("Re Wood"), 140 U. S. 273 [35: 505]; Re Wilson, 140 U. S. 575 [35: 513].

The only other allegation in the petition is that the petitioner was not, at the time of his extradition from Massachusetts, a fugitive from the justice of Connecticut.

The record, independently of the opinion of the circuit court, does not show what, if any, evidence was introduced at the hearing upon which the writ of habeas corpus was discharged and the prisoner left in custody. The case was heard by the circuit court, and not by the district judge at chambers or out of court. Had it been so heard by him, there could have been no appeal to this court from his decision. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 751, 752, 764; Act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 437, chap. 353); Carper v. Fitzgerald, 121 U. S. 87 [30: 882]; Lambert v. Barrett, 157 U. S. 697 [39: 865]; The subsequent correspondence between the district judge and the petitioner's counsel had no proper place in the record of the court, and it does not appear that the judge intended or expected his letter to be filed or recorded. In that letter he did no more than express his willingness that the record should be amended, provided it could properly be done. It does not appear that the judge afterwards allowed, or was requested to allow, any amendment of the record or of the appeal; and the petitioner or his counsel could not amend either the record or the appeal by his own act, without leave of the judge.

If, in order to ascertain what was proved or offered to be proved at the hearing, we turn to the opinion filed in the court below and sent up with the record, it thereby appears that the petitioner offered to prove that the indictment against him was procured by some mistake of the grand jury, and that he was not in fact a fugitive from justice; and that the judge assumed, for the purpose of the disposition of the writ of habeas corpus, that all the allegations of the petition were true.

[245] *But if the opinion can be referred to as showing part of what took place at the hearing, 160 U. S.

it may likewise be referred to as showing other matters then before the court, and especially the proceedings for extradition.

As to those proceedings, the opinion (consistently with the allegations of the petition, so far as anything upon the subject is distinctly and unequivocally alleged therein) not only states, as uncontroverted facts, that the petitioner was arrested in Massachusetts, and brought into Connecticut under a warrant of extradition issued by the governor of Massachusetts upon a requisition of the governor of Connecticut, accompanied by a certified copy of the indictment and by an affidavit that the petitioner was a fugitive from justice; but expressly says that it was not denied that the demand upon the executive authority of Massachusetts, and his action thereon, were proper in form.

A warrant of extradition of the governor of a state, issued upon the requisition of the governor of another state, accompanied by a copy of an indictment, is prima facie evidence, at least, that the accused had been indicted and was a fugitive from justice, and, when the court in which the indictment was found has jurisdiction of the offense (which there is nothing in this case to impugn), is sufficient to make it the duty of the courts of the United States to decline interposition by writ of habeas corpus, and to leave the question of the lawfulness of the detention of the prisoner in the state in which he was indicted to be inquired into and determined, in the first instance, by the courts of the state which are empowered and obliged, equally with the courts of the United States, to recognize and uphold the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States. Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624 [28: 542]; Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642 [29: 250]; Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80 [29: 544]; Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183 [36: 934]; Pearce v. Texas, 155 U. S. 311 [39: 164].

The return of the sheriff to the writ of habeas corpus does not (as it might well have done) set forth the indictment and the warrant of extradition as grounds for the detention of the prisoner. But any defect in the return in this respect affords no *reason why the courts [246] of the United States should take the prisoner out of the custody of the authorities of the state.

The return does show that the petitioner is held in custody by the sheriff by virtue of a mittimus issued to him by a justice of the peace, in accordance with Conn. Gen. Stat. 1887, §§ 962, 1613,* which authorize the surety on a recognizance, either in civil or in criminal proceedings, upon making affidavit that his principal intends to abscond, to obtain from a justice of the peace a mittimus to commit him to jail.

* § 962. Any bail or surety who has entered into a recognizance for the personal appearance of another, and shall afterwards believe that his principal intends to abscond, may apply to a justice of the peace in the county in which such principal resides, produce his bail bond or evidence of his being bail or surety, and verify the reason of his application by oath or otherwise; and thereupon such justice shall forthwith grant a mittimus, directed to a proper officer or indifferent person of such county commanding him forthwith to arrest such principal, and commit him to the jail of such county; and the keeper of such jail shall receive such principal, and retain him in jail until discharged by due order of law; and such surrender of the principal shall be a full discharge of the surety upon his bond or recognizance.

§ 1613. Any surety in a recognizance in criminal proceedings who believes that his principal intends to abscond may have the same remedy, and proceed and be discharged in the same manner, as sureties upon bail bonds in civil actions.

The only objections taken by the petitioner to the sufficiency of this mittimus are, 1st, that it shows that the recognizance was entered into on the 17th of January, 1895, for his appearance "before the superior court to be holden at New Haven within and for the county of New Haven on the first Tuesday of January, 1895," which was a day already passed; and 2d, that it describes him as "of the town of Newton, state of Massachusetts," while the statute only authorizes the issue of a mittimus by "a justice of the peace of the county in which such principal resides." But the first Tuesday of January was the day appointed by law for the beginning of the term of the superior court. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 1615. And the question whether the recognizance might be construed as requiring an appearance at a subsequent day in the course of the term, *as well as the question whether the word "resides," as used in the statute, implies domicile, or only presence in the county, is a question which should be left to the decision of the courts of the state.

There could be no better illustration than this case affords of the wisdom, if not necessity, of the rule established by the decisions of this court above cited, that a prisoner in custody under the authority of a state should not, except in a case of peculiar urgency, be discharged by a court or judge of the United States upon a writ of habeas corpus, in advance of any proceedings in the courts of the state to test the validity of his arrest and detention. To adopt a different rule would unduly interfere with the exercise of the criminal jurisdiction of the several states, and with the performance by this court of its appropriate duties.

Order affirmed.

Re SANFORD FORK & TOOL COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 247-259.)

Amending pleadings—decision of this court

1. Upon reversal by this court of the decree of the circuit court sustaining plaintiff's exceptions to the answer and granting the relief prayed for, this court remanding the case for further proceedings, the plaintiff has the right to file a replication and the circuit court can, in its discretion, allow amendments to the pleadings for the purpose of more fully or clearly presenting the facts at issue between the parties.
2. No questions once considered and decided by this court can be re-examined at any subsequent stage of the same case.

[No. 8, Original.]

Submitted December 2, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to the judge of the Circuit Court to command him to enter a final decree in accordance with a mandate of this court. Denied.

See same case, 157 U. S. 312 [39: 713].

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

*This was a petition for a writ of mandamus to the Honorable William A. Woods as judge of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, to command him to enter, in a suit of equity pending before him, a final decree in favor of the present petitioners, defendants in that suit, in accordance with a mandate of this court upon reversing a decree of that court, on an appeal reported as Sanford Fork & T. Co. v. Howe, B. & Co. 157 U. S. 312 [39: 713].

By the former opinion and mandate of this court, the petition for a mandamus and the return to the rule to show cause, the case appeared to be as follows:

A bill in equity was filed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, by creditors of the Sanford Fork & Tool Company against that company and certain of its directors and stockholders, to set aside a mortgage made by the company to the other defendants to secure them for their indorsements of promissory notes of the company.

To that bill the defendants filed an answer under oath, insisting that the mortgage was valid; and the plaintiffs filed exceptions to the answer upon the ground that the matters therein averred were insufficient to constitute a defense to the bill or to any part thereof, as well as upon the ground that the defendants had not duly answered specific allegations of the bill. The circuit court, held by Judge Woods, after hearing arguments upon those exceptions, sustained them; and the defendants declining to plead further and electing to stand by their answer, the court, "having considered the pleadings, and being fully advised in the premises," entered a final decree, adjudging the mortgage to be void as against the plaintiffs, and granting them the relief prayed for.

The defendants appealed to this court, which, after hearing the appeal, delivered an opinion beginning thus: "In the absence of any testimony, and in the manner in which this case was submitted for decision, it must be assumed that the matters alleged in the bill and not denied in the answer and the new matters set forth in the answer are true. And the question which arises is whether, upon these admitted facts, the decree in favor of the plaintiffs can be sustained." 157 *U. S. [249 316 [39: 716]. This court, for reasons stated in that opinion, held that the mortgage was valid, and therefore that the circuit court erred; and in the opinion, as well as by its mandate set down to the circuit court, ordered the decree of that court to be "reversed, and the cause remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court." The mandate concluded, in usual form, as follows: "You, therefore, are hereby commanded that such execution and further proceedings be had in said cause, in conformity with the opinion and decree of this court, as according to right and justice and the laws of the United States ought to be had, the said appeal notwithstanding."

The defendants presented the mandate and a certified copy of the opinion of this court to the circuit court held by Judge Woods; and moved for a final decree that the former decree of the circuit court be reversed; that the cause be held to have been submitted by the plaintiffs upon bill and answer; and that, upon the facts alleged in the bill and answer, the law is with the defendants, and the plaintiffs take nothing by their bill, and the defendants have judgment for their costs.

The circuit court overruled the motion of the defendants, and, on motion of the plaintiffs, granted leave to amend the bill, but stayed proceedings to enable the defendants to apply to this court for a writ of mandamus.

The petition to this court for a writ of mandamus alleged that the order of the circuit court, overruling the motion of the defendants for a final decree in their favor, and granting the motion of the plaintiffs for leave to amend their bill, was inconsistent with and in violation of the opinion, decree, and mandate of this court; and prayed for a writ of mandamus to Judge Woods to grant the motion of the defendants and to overrule the motion of the plaintiffs.

This court granted a rule to show cause, in the return to which Judge Woods stated that his action, complained of by the petitioners, arose upon his construction of the opinion and mandate of this court, on reversing his former decree; and set forth his view of the matter as follows:

250] "Exceptions had been improperly sustained to the answer of defendants (petitioners). For this error, as respondent construes the opinion and mandate, the decree was reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, with the usual directions for further proceedings there. Upon the return of the cause there, and after the erroneous decree had been set aside, but before other step was taken, petitioners moved for decree in their favor, on the ground that this court had treated the cause as having been submitted below on bill and answer, and that, this court having held the answer sufficient, it followed they were entitled to such decree. Respondent could not adopt that view, since it plainly was not what had occurred. There was no such submission of the cause below on bill and answer. Nor, in rendering the decree in favor of complainants, had respondents 'considered' the answer; but had, since sweeping exceptions had been sustained to it, treated it as out of the record, for any purpose of the decree—a fact plainly manifest in the record before this court on appeal. He could not, therefore, suppose that this court meant, in what is said upon this point, to hold more or other than that the answer was sufficient, and that he had erred in holding it insufficient.

"Respondent, therefore, having in view the rules of practice prescribed by this court for the government of the circuit court, held that since, if he had overruled the exceptions to the answer, complainants would have been entitled to file replication, as provided by rule 66 in equity, and, if they desired it, to have leave to amend their bill, under rule 45, he did not, nor does, believe this court, in reversing the decree, meant to deprive complainants of these rights; but inferred rather, as the more reasonable and logical deduction, that, when the circuit court had retraced its steps to the point where the first error occurred, the parties would stand, in respect of the case and of each other, as if, in the progress of the cause, it had but then arrived at that juncture. To hold, instead of this view, that complainants had, by their mistake in filing exceptions, or by the court's mistake in sustaining them, or by both things together, forfeited their right to have the cause proceed when the errors had been corrected in the *orderly manner indicated [251 above seemed and seems entirely illogical, and as therefore foreign to the purpose of this court. Respondent accordingly ruled that, when he retraced the steps held erroneous by this court, the cause should progress as if they had not been taken at all, and as if we were but now arrived at that point. To that end, he granted, when it was craved, leave to complainants to amend their bill, and would have entered the usual order against them to file replication on or before the next rule day, had not petitioners thereupon interposed their motion for stay of proceedings until this application could be heard here."

Judge Woods, in his return, declared himself ready, if his construction of the opinion and mandate should not accord with that of this court, to make and enter such order and decree, under its direction, as would carry out its opinion and mandate.

Messrs. Alpheus H. Snow and George A. Knight, for petitioners:

If this court, by its opinion, decree, and mandate, had authorized any further proceedings after reversal except an entry of a decree by the court below in favor of the defendants on the bill and answer, it must necessarily have held that the circuit court had jurisdiction to receive and rule upon the so-called "exceptions to answer" which were, in fact, demurrers to the answer, and that it erred in its ruling on the so-called exceptions. The effect of the opinion, decree, and mandate, had such further proceedings been authorized, would have been to put this court in the position of having conferred jurisdiction upon the circuit courts of the United States to receive and rule upon a demurrer to a sworn answer in equity, and thus of having indirectly promulgated a new rule in equity setting aside the settled principle of equity practice which forbids that the sufficiency of an answer to constitute a defense to the bill should ever be tested.

This court, however, carefully guarded against such a result of its decision in this case by holding in its opinion that the case had been decided and should be thereafter treated as if submitted on the bill and answer, and that the circuit court erred in its finding and decree on the facts stated in the bill and answer; and by issuing a mandate commanding the court below to proceed in conformity with the opinion and decree, plainly meaning to command the court below to set aside its decree in favor of the complainants on the bill and answer and to proceed to render a decree in favor of the defendants on the bill and answer.

The writ of mandamus prayed for should issue to effectuate the plain language and purpose of the opinion, decree, and mandate.

Circuit courts of the United States have no authority or jurisdiction to receive on their files and rule upon a demurrer to an answer in equity, and if a demurrer is filed, the case will be treated as if set down for hearing on bill and answer.

Banks v. Manchester, 128 U. S. 244, 250 (32:425, 428).

Exceptions cannot be entertained for the purpose of testing the sufficiency of an answer in equity to constitute a defense to the bill.

Adams v. Bridgewater Iron Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 179; United States v. McLaughlin, 24 Fed. Rep. 823; Travers v. Ross, 14 N. J. Eq. 257, 258; Crouch v. Kerr, 38 Fed. Rep. 549.

Assuming, but by no means admitting, that the opinion, decree, and mandate of this court are open to a construction which would authorize the ruling of the respondent, as sole judge of the circuit court, counsel for petitioners cannot believe, as was claimed by counsel for the complainants in the circuit court, that this court intended that such construction should be placed upon them in order to relieve the complainants from the consequences of their mistake in filing their so-called "exceptions to answer" and in order to punish the defendants because they did not point out the mistake by filing a motion to strike the so-called "exceptions to answer" from the files. Had this court intended that any such construction should be placed upon the opinion, decree, and mandate, the effect of its decision would have been to hold that the parties, by their agreement or acquiescence, may set aside the settled rules of equity practice and confer jurisdiction on the circuit courts of the United States.

The rulings of the respondent, as judge, adverse to the petitioners, are not justified by the words of the mandate directing that "such execution and further proceedings be had in said cause, in conformity with the opinion and decree of this court, as, according to right and justice and the laws of the United States, ought to be had." These words are not inconsistent with an entry by the circuit court of a final decree for the appellants. This court has held that a mandate framed in similar language may necessitate the entry of a final decree in favor of the appellants.

Stewart v. Salamon, 94 U. S. 434 (24:275), 97 U. S. 361 (24:1045); Gaines v. Caldwell ("Gaines v. Rugg") 148 U. S. 228 (37:432).

The method adopted by the petitioners to obtain a construction by this court of its mandate, of making an application for leave to file a petition for a writ of mandamus, after notice, and of presenting therewith a verified petition to be filed, is authorized by the statutes of the United States and numerous decisions of this court. Such petition, upon leave being granted to file it, seems necessarily to be an advanced cause. If, however, a motion to advance the cause for hearing is necessary, the petitioners have complied with the requirement by incorporating such motion in their application for leave to file.

U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 688, 716; Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 69 (17:514); Ex parte Washington & G. R. Co. 140 U. S. 91 (35:339); Gaines v. Caldwell ("Gaines v. Rugg") supra; Re Humes, 149 U. S. 192 (37:699); Re City Nat. Bank, 153 U. S. 246 (38:705).

Messrs. S. B. Davis and C. F. McNutt for respondents.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

When a case has been once decided by this court on appeal and remanded to the circuit court, whatever was before this court, and disposed of by its decree, is considered as finally settled. The circuit court is bound by the decree as the law of the case; and must carry it into execution, according to the mandate. That court cannot vary it or examine it for any other purpose than execution; or give any other or further relief; or review it, even for apparent error, upon any matter decided on appeal; or intermeddle with it, further than to settle so much as has been remanded. Sibbald v. United States, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 488, 492, [9: 1167, 1169]; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Anderson, 149 U. S. 237 [37: 717]. If the circuit court mistakes or misconstrues the decree of this court, and does not give full effect to the mandate, its action may be controlled, either upon a new appeal (if involving a sufficient amount) or by a writ of mandamus to execute the mandate of this court. Perkins v. Fourniquet, [256 55 U. S. 14 How. 313, 330 [14: 435, 442]; Re Washington & G. R. Co. 140 U. S. 91 [35:339]; City Nat. Bank v. Hunter, 152 U. S. 512 [38: 534, 153 U. S. 246 [38: 705]. But the circuit court may consider and decide any matters left open by the mandate of this court; and its decision of such matters can be reviewed by a new appeal only. Hinckley v. Morton, 103 U. S. 764 [26: 458]; Mason v. Peoabie Min. Co. 153 U. S. 361 [38: 745]; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 5 U. S. App. 97, 51 Fed. Rep. 929. The opinion delivered by this court at the time of rendering its decree may be consulted to ascertain what was intended by its mandate; and either upon an application for a writ of mandamus, or upon a new appeal, it is for this court to construe its own mandate, and to act accordingly. Sibbald v. United States, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 488, 493 [9: 1167, 1169]; West v. Brashear, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 51 [10: 350]; Wayne County Suprs. v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 498 [24: 260]; Gaines v. Caldwell ("Gaines v. Rugg") 148 U. S. 228, 238, 244 [37: 432, 434, 437].

In the case now before us, it is important, in determining what was heard and decided by the circuit court in the first instance, and by this court upon the appeal, to bear in mind the settled practice of the courts of chancery, recognized and regulated by the rules established by this court for the circuit courts sitting in equity. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 916-918.

Upon the coming in of defendant's answer, several courses are open to the plaintiff:

First. The plaintiff may, upon motion, without notice to the defendant, have leave to amend his bill, with or without the payment of costs, as the court may direct. Equity rules 29, 45.

Second. The plaintiff may file exceptions to the answer for insufficiency. Equity rule 61. If the defendant does not submit to the exceptions, and file an amended answer, the plaintiff may set down the exceptions for hearing. Equity rule 63. If the exceptions are thereupon allowed by the court, the defendant must put in a full and complete answer; otherwise, the plaintiff may take the bill, so far as the matter of exceptions is concerned, as confessed. Equity rule 64.

Third. If the answer is not excepted to, or if it is adjudged or deemed sufficient, the plaintiff may file a general replication; whereupon the cause is to be deemed, to all intents 257] and *purposes, at issue, without further pleading on either side. Equity rule 66.

Fourth. A demurrer to the answer is unknown in equity practice. But the plaintiff may set down the case for hearing upon bill and answer; whereupon all the facts alleged in the bill and not denied in the answer, as well as all new facts alleged in the answer, are deemed admitted, as upon a demurrer to an answer in an action at law. Equity rule 41, as amended at December term, 1871, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. XI [20: 914]; Equity rule 60; Leeds v. Marine Ins. Co. 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 380 [4: 266]; Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 409 [28: 733, 735]; Banks v. Manchester, 128 U. S. 244, 250, 251 [32: 425, 428].

For the purpose of the hearing upon exceptions to an answer, the facts alleged in the bill and in the answer must indeed be considered as admitted, and only matter of law is presented for decision, as in a case set down for hearing upon bill and answer. But the difference between the two cases is this: When a case in equity is set down for hearing on bill and answer, the whole case is presented for final decree in favor of either party. But when the matter set down for hearing is the plaintiff's exceptions to the answer, the case is not ripe for a final decree; the only question to be decided is the sufficiency of the answer; and no final decree can be entered against either party, unless it declines or omits to plead further.

In the present case, the plaintiffs, upon the coming in of the answer, neither moved for leave to amend the bill, nor filed a replication, nor set down the case for hearing upon bill and answer.

But they filed exceptions to the answer; and those exceptions only were set down for hearing, and were heard and passed upon by the court. While some of the exceptions were directed, as is usual, to the want of due answer to specific allegations of the bill, others of the exceptions related to the sufficiency of the whole answer to constitute any defense. Its sufficiency in the latter respect might properly have been questioned by setting down the case for hearing upon bill and answer. But neither for this nor for any other reason was 258] *any objection made to the exceptions as irregular or improper in form.

The circuit court, upon sustaining the exceptions, could not (unless the defendants chose to stand by their answer) enter a final decree against the defendants; or do anything more than order them to put in a full and complete answer, on pain of being held to have confessed the bill. If the circuit court, instead of sustaining the exceptions to the answer, had overruled those exceptions, the plaintiffs would have had the right to file a replication, and the bill could not be dismissed unless and until they neglected to file one.

When the decree of the circuit court, sustaining the plaintiffs' exceptions to the answer, and (because the defendants declined to plead further) granting to the plaintiffs the relief prayed for in the bill, was reversed by this court, the only matter which was or could be decided by this court, upon the record before it, was that the answer was sufficient. This court, in so deciding, could go no further than the circuit court could have done, had it made the like decision. Neither the circuit court, nor this court, upon adjudging that the answer was sufficient, could, without any consent or neglect on the part of the plaintiffs, deprive them of their right, under the general rules in equity, to file a replication.

Nor did this court undertake, either by its opinion or by its mandate, to preclude the plaintiffs from filing a replication. On the contrary, at the outset of the opinion, after observing that, in the manner in which the case was submitted for decision, the facts alleged in the bill and not denied in the answer, and the new facts alleged in the answer, must be assumed to be true, the question arising upon those admitted facts was stated to be "whether the decree in favor of the plaintiffs can be sustained;" and, while the opinion declared that, assuming those facts, the mortgage was valid, yet both the opinion and the mandate ordered no final judgment for the defendant, but only ordered the judgment for the plaintiff to be reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

*The case being thus left open, by the [259] opinion and mandate of this court and by the general rules of practice in equity, for further proceedings, with a right in the plaintiffs to file a replication, putting the cause at issue, the circuit court might, in its discretion, allow amendments of the pleadings for the purpose of more fully or clearly presenting the facts at issue between the parties. Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 206, 218 [3: 200, 203]; Neale v. Neale, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 1 [19: 596]; Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756 [28: 1141].

The case is quite different, in this respect, from those in which the whole case, or all but a subsidiary question of accounting, had been brought to and decided by this court upon the appeal, as in the cases principally relied on by the petitioner. Stewart v. Salamon, 94 U. S. 434 [24: 275], and 97 U. S. 361 [24: 1044]; Gaines v. Caldwell ("Gaines v. Rugg") 148 U. S. 228 [37: 432]; Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 69 [17: 514]; Re Washington & G. R. Co. 140 U. S. 91 [35: 339].

It must be remembered, however, that no question once considered and decided by this court can be re-examined at any subsequent stage of the same case. Clark v. Keith, 106 U. S. 464 [27: 302]; Sibbald v. United States, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 483 [9: 1167]; and Texas & P. R. Co. v. Anderson, 149 U. S. 237 [37: 717], cited at the beginning of this opinion.

Writ of mandamus denied.

CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY of New Jersey, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BERNARD KEEGAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 259 268.)

Who are fellow servants.

The conductor of a drill crew in a railroad yard who is a component part of the crew and an active coworker in the manual work of switching, with the specific duty assigned to him by the yardmaster of turning the switches, is a fellow-servant of a member of his crew, and the railroad company is not liable to the latter for the negligence of such conductor in failing to place himself or some one else at the brake of backwardly moving cars to control their movement.

[No. 373.]

Submitted December 3, 1894. Decided December 23, 1895.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit certifying certain questions to this court for decision in a suit brought by Bernard Keegan against the Central Railroad Company for damages for personal injuries sustained while acting as brakeman in the employ of the company. The first question answered in the affirmative; the second in the negative.

NOTE.—As to fellow-servants and their negligence; who are fellow-servants; vice principal; superior servant; liability of master.—see note to Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 37: 772.

The following are the more recent decisions as to who are fellow-servants, within the rule exempting from liability the master for injuries committed by the negligence of a servant upon a fellow-servant.

Employees are not fellow-servants unless they are under the control and direction of a common master. Krulder v. Woolverton, 11 Misc. 537.

Where a railroad company furnished proper appliances and ropes to its freight handlers, and supplied proper materials for their repair, not of a permanent character and requiring skilled mechanics,—Held, that the duty of keeping them in repair fell upon the freight handlers, and the neglect of one to the injury of another was that of a coservant, in the absence of notice to the employer of any defect. Conway v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 13 Misc. 53, Reversing 11 Misc. 641.

Evidence in an action for the death of a fireman occasioned by the collapse of the crown sheet of a locomotive due to its scorching, considered, and held, in view of expert testimony, that such scorching occurred at the time of the accident and was the fault of the engineer, the coservant of deceased, and that a judgment in favor of plaintiff should be reversed. Hudson v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 408.

Death of an assistant steward on a vessel by falling overboard through a gangway at night in an unexplained manner,—Held, not to sustain action, the failure to close the gangway doors, if negligent, being the duty of the mate of the vessel. Geoghegan v. Atlas S. S. Co. 146 N. Y. 369.

Where there was posted on the bulletin boards of a railroad company a rule to the effect that if the conductor of a freight train about to pass over a summit and descend a steep grade, had a train which in his judgment was too heavy to pass with safety, he should apply for additional brakemen,

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

The action below was brought by Keegan to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while acting as brakeman in the employ of the railroad company. Judgment having been rendered upon the verdict of a jury, in favor of Keegan, the company sued out a writ of error from the circuit court of appeals for the second circuit. Two circuit judges, sitting as the court, differed in opinion upon questions of law arising, and thereupon certified two questions to this court. The certificate sets forth the following statement of facts:

‘Five men—O’Brien, Keegan, Lally, Gooley, and Ward—were, on the night of the accident (October 7, 1889), in the service of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and employed in its yard at Jersey City. They comprised what was called the ‘night float drill crew,’ the duty of such crews being to take cars from the tracks on which they had been left by incoming trains and place them on the floats, by which they were transported across the North river to the city of New York. The drill crews, like others employed in the same yard, received their general instructions from Dent, the yardmaster. The men composing such crews were hired by Dent and discharged by him, and he had the general charge of the yard and yardmen, and assigned them to their duties.

‘The course of business was as follows: Dent, the yardmaster, gave to O’Brien drill slips—that is, slips of paper containing the or set off some of the cars,—Held, that this exercise of discretion committed to him did not change his character of fellow-servant to his brakemen, and that his omission to avail himself of the rule did not charge the railroad company with liability for an injury suffered by a brakeman in consequence. Wooden v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 147 N. Y. 508.

Though a brakeman employed on a railroad has a right to assume that a car just returned from the repair shop is in order, if he discovers a defect and in attempting to remedy it is injured by the negligence of a fellow-workman, he assumes the risk, and cannot recover damages from his employer. Howey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 13 Misc. 641.

Car inspectors employed in the yard of a railroad are not fellow-servants of a yard brakeman so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for injuries resulting from improper inspection. Jennings v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 12 Misc. 408.

Where plaintiff, employed by a contractor in repairing defendant's elevator, was injured by the negligence of the person operating the elevator, who was endeavoring to assist in the work, the operator remaining in defendant's employ and under its control,—Held, that the negligence was not that of a fellow-servant so as to exonerate defendant from liability. Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 11 Misc. 32.

In employing competent foremen and proper appliances to excavate a trench the employer discharges his duty toward the laborers employed, and in such case, in the absence of personal participation on the part of the employer, negligence in the conduct of the work on the part of a foreman is negligence of a fellow-servant of the laborer. Collins v. Crimmins, 11 Misc. 24.

The unauthorized use of a switchboard as a passageway, by reason of which plaintiff was injured through the carelessness of a fellow-servant,—Held, to call for a reversal of a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff against his employer. Tetsel v. Simmons, 88 Hun, 621.

Where a railroad company has promulgated numbers of the cars and the particular tracks leading to the floats on which these cars were to be placed. These float tracks were five in number and were connected by switches with the other tracks in the yard. The execution of this order required frequent switching of cars 261] from one set of cars to another in order to sort out from arriving trains the particular car or cars to be placed on a particular float track. It also required the making up of trains of cars sometimes longer, sometimes shorter; their movement by the engine attached to them, forward or backward and at varying rates of speed; the braking, coupling, and uncoupling of the cars composing them. Ward was engineer. Lally had his post on some car near the engine in order to transmit to the engineer any signals received. He also helped the engineer with coal and water and acted as brakeman. Keegan did the coupling, Gooley the uncoupling and acted as brakeman, while the turning of the switches was attended to by O'Brien. The direction of all these operations was with O'Brien, who was called in the evidence sometimes 'foreman driller,' sometimes 'conductor of the drill crew.' He was the one to direct what cars should be taken on by the engine, and when and where they should be moved to, when the movement should start, and where it should stop, and it was in obedience to his orders that one or other of the men employed in this crew went to one place or another, and coupled or uncoupled particular cars. The general management of the operation was with him, and he had control over the persons employed therein.

"On the night of the accident Keegan, who had been relighting his lantern at the engine, which was then standing still, attached to several cars, walked to the rear end of the train. O'Brien and Gooley were standing there looking over the drill slip. There were some other cars standing on the same track, about 40 feet beyond the end of the cars to which the engine was attached. O'Brien told Gooley what cars were to be uncoupled. He then told Keegan to couple the train onto the cars beyond. Keegan took the coupling link of the rear car in his right hand, and, having signalled for the train to back slowly, walked towards the detached cars, with the rear end of the last car at his back. Before he reached them he caught his right foot in the guard rail of a switch, and at once called out to hold up the train. His call was heard and the engine stopped immediately. Gooley, however, had [262 already, on O'Brien's order, drawn the pin and thus uncoupled the cars indicated, so that when the engine pulled up it did not stop their backward movement. Neither Gooley nor O'Brien were on the cars thus moving backwards, so there was no one to check their motion by applying the brakes, and as a con-rules, known to its employees, which, if observed, would have rendered the accident improbable, if not impossible, and their nonobservance by a co-employee causes the death of a fireman in a collision of trains,—the railroad company is not liable in damages. Smith v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 88 Hun, 468.

A switchman in the employ of a railroad company which had granted the right to use its tracks to a company employing plaintiff as a locomotive engineer, the persons operating that part of the road being, under the terms of the agreement, joint employees, to be paid by each company in proportion to its business, and each to be responsible to the employers when engaged in its business,—Held, not to be a fellow-servant of plaintiff, whose employer had no interest in or care of the tracks, and the switchman being paid by, and responsible to, the division superintendent of the lessor company only. Strader v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 86 Hun, 613.

Where a fireman on a locomotive was killed by a collision of railroad trains due to the neglect of the conductor of the train he was on to send back a messenger to warn a train which the conductor knew was due at the time he was attempting to get his train which had been delayed, upon a siding,—Held, that the negligence was that of a fellow-servant and that a recovery for causing his death could not be had against the railroad company which employed them. Herrington v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 83 Hun, 365.

It being the duty of the master to furnish suitable appliances for doing the work, their reparation and adjustment, though entrusted by him to a fellow-servant of the person operating them, is within the master's responsibility, and he is liable for the negligence of the one making the repairs. Scherer v. Holly Mfg. Co. 86 Hun, 37.

A gang boss in a railroad repair shop in suggesting that a workman go down to a track used for the shifting of cars needing repairs and take a required article from one of the cars to be found there for use in the job upon which such workman is engaged, does not represent the common employer, and the act being dangerous and injuries resulting therefrom, an action will not lie against the employer for the injuries sustained. Keenan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 190.

Where the foreman of a gang of masons had practical charge of the work, the employers exercising no further authority over the work than occasionally consulting with him,—Held, that as to the employees the foreman stood in the place of the employers and his negligence resulting in injury to an employee was imputable to them. Kimmer v. Weber, 81 Hun, 599.

Employees under the control and direction of different masters are not fellow-servants. Krulder v. Woolverton, 11 Misc. 537.

Servants working in the same department are not fellow-servants, unless they directly co-operate with each other in the same line of employment, or by their usual duties are brought into habitual association so that they may exercise a mutual influence upon each other. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 155 Ill. 628.

One hired as a substitute is a fellow-servant with a fellow-servant of the hirer. Anderson v. Guinean, 9 Wash. 304.

One assisting the servants of another to facilitate his own business or that of another is not their fellow-servant. O'Donnell v. Maine C. R. Co. 86 Me. 552, 25 L. R. A. 658.

A riveter and carpenters under the same superintendent engaged in shipbuilding are fellow-servants, so as to preclude recovery by the riveter for injuries caused by negligence of the carpenters in constructing a scaffold on which he works. Beesley v. F. W. Wheeler & Co. 103 Mich. 196, 27 L. R. A. 266.

An employee of an iron company engaged in unloading cars is not a fellow-servant with the employees of the railroad company engaged in shifting the cars, although both are under the direction of the foreman of the iron company. Noll v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 504.

A coal passer at the boilers of a manufacturing sequence the rear wheel passed over Keegan's leg, producing the injuries complained of.

"There was evidence tending to show that under circumstances such as these O'Brien or some one else should have been on the rear car of those moving backward, and the negligence complained of was his ordering defendant in error to couple cars which he had just ordered to be uncoupled from a backwardly moving train to stationary cars beyond them without himself being on the moving cars or seeing that either Gooley or Lally was there to exercise control over their movement.

"The jury, by their verdict, found that O'Brien was negligent."

The questions of law arising from these facts, upon which the court desired instruction for the proper decision of the writ of error were certified as follows: 1, whether the defendant in error and O'Brien were or were not fellow-servants; and, 2, whether from negligence of O'Brien in failing to place himself or some one else at the brake of the backwardly moving cars, the plaintiff in error is responsible.

Messrs. Robert W. Deforest and George Holmes, for plaintiff in error:

If the act is one done in the discharge of some positive duty of the master to the servant, then negligence in the act is the negligence of the master, but if it be not one in the discharge of such positive duty, then there should be some personal wrong on the part of the employer before he is held liable therefor.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 387 (37: 781).

establishment is not a fellow-servant with the chief engineer in charge of the factory. Mattise v. Consumers' Ice Mfg. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1535.

Railroad employees may be fellow-servants although employed in different departments of labor and wholly separate and disconnected in the performance of their duties, where in performing their separate and distinct functions they are so habitually thrown together or consociated as to exercise an influence upon each other promotive of proper caution. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 56 Ill. App. 53.

The porter of a palace car, employed by a palace car company, although bound by his contract to obey all rules for employees of carriers on whose lines his car may run, is not a fellow-servant of those operating the engine and train which his car accompanies. Jones v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. 125 Mo. 666, 26 L. R. A. 718.

A trainmaster in ordering cars to be taken out of a train without notice to a brakeman engaged in making a coupling acts as a fellow-servant of such brakeman. Martin v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 384.

A station agent in discharging his duty of placing cars upon side tracks is not a fellow-servant of a section hand upon a work train passing such station. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Biggs, 53 Ill. App. 550.

Two engine crews engaged in switching cars in the yards of a company, each of which has a foreman who gives orders to his own crew, while both crews are under the command of a common yardmaster and are associated together in the business of switching cars in the company's yards, are fellow-servants. O'Leary v. Wabash R. Co. 52 Ill. App. 641.

A railroad company is not liable to a brakeman, under the North Dakota statute providing that an

The liability does not depend in any manner on the grade of service of a coemployee, but upon the character of the act itself and a breach of the positive obligation of the master.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Hamblly, 154 U. S. 360 (38: 1013); Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478 (27: 1003); Northern P. R. Co. v. Hubert, 116 U. S. 642 (29: 755); Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375 (33: 656); Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377 (28: 787).

The liability of the master for negligence of a fellow-servant depends, not upon the grade of service, but upon the character of the act, and upon a breach of positive obligation of the master to the servant.

McKinney, Fellow Servants (1890) p. 53, § 25, and numerous cases there cited; Potter v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 136 N. Y. 77.

Mr. A. G. Vanderpoel, for defendant in error:

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377 (28: 787), stands as the law to day in fact and in law. In that case there was a conductor of a freight train present.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368 (37: 772), was a case where in fact and in law there was no conductor present.

The case of Northern P. R. Co. v. Hamblly, 154 U. S. 349 (38: 1009), may be taken as the judicial construction of the relation of the Baugh Case to the Ross Case.

The test of liability of the master for the act of a servant is given in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, in the following words: "The conductor has entire control and management of employer is not liable for injuries to an employee by the negligence of a fellow employee in the same general business for injuries received, because of the negligence of the conductor of the train. Northern P. R. Co. v. Hogan, 63 Fed. Rep. 102.

A conductor on one train is the fellow-servant of a fireman on another train who is injured by the negligence of the former in leaving the switch open. Northern P. R. Co. v. Mase, 63 Fed. Rep. 114.

An engineer in charge of an engine on the main track is not as a matter of law a fellow-servant of a brakeman at the rear of a train on a side track, who signals the engineer to go ahead. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Flynn, 154 Ill. 448.

A gripman on a cable car and the crew of a wrecking train are not fellow-servants. West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dwyer, 57 Ill. App. 440.

A railroad hostler and his helper are fellow-servants, although the former is superior to the latter and has supervision and direction of the work or service, where they are both engaged in cleaning an engine, and the former gives no direction to the latter which increases the usual hazard of their undertaking. Clay v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 56 Ill. App. 235.

The men engaged upon a railroad work train, and section hands engaged upon a hand car, in keeping the roadbed in order, are fellow-servants although under separate foremen. Thom v. Pittard, 62 Fed. Rep. 232.

A brakeman on a railroad train running on the tracks of another company is not a fellow-servant with a switchman in the latter company's employ, although the superintendent of such company has power in certain cases to discharge the employees of the former company for misconduct while running trains on its tracks. Tierney v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 85 Hun, 146.

the train to which he is assigned. He directs when it shall start, at what speed it shall run, at what station it shall stop and for what length of time, and everything essential to its successful movements, and all persons employed on it are subject to his orders." 112 U. S. foot of p. 391 (28: 792). In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, Judge Brewer cites with approval the same words, as above quoted. 149 U. S. 381 (37: 779).

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Humbly, Judge Brown characterizes the Ross Case, and quotes from it as follows: "The case was decided not to be one of fellow-service upon the ground that the conductor was [he here adopts the words of the Ross Case] 'in fact, and should be treated as, the personal representative of the corporation, for whose negligence it is responsible to subordinate servants.' The court drew a distinction 'between servants of a corporation exercising no supervision over others engaged with them in the same employment and agents of a corporation clothed with the control and management of a distinct department, in which their duty is entirely that of direction and superintendence.' In that particular case the court found that the conductor had entire control and management of the train to which he was assigned, directed at what time it should start, at what speed it should run, at what stations it should stop, and for what length of time, and everything essential to its successful movements, and that all persons employed upon it were subject to his orders. [The word 'orders' referred to the orders of the conductor.] Under such circumstances, he was held not to be a fellow-servant with the fireman, brakeman, and engineer, citing certain cases from Kentucky and Ohio." 154 U. S. 359 (38: 1013).

O'Brien was a conductor, and the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury was his, O'Brien's, negligent order to Gooley to pull the pin; the giving that order was a negligent masterial act in law.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

We held in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 264] *U. S. 368 [37: 772], that an engineer and fireman of a locomotive engine running alone on a railroad, without any train attached, when engaged on such duty, were fellow-servants of the railroad company, hence that the fireman was precluded from recovering damages from the company for injuries caused, during the running, by the negligence of the engineer. In that case it was declared that "prima facie, all who enter the employment of a single master are engaged in a common service, and are fellow-servants. . . . All enter in the service of the same master to further his interests in the one enterprise." And whilst we in that case recognized that the heads of separate and distinct departments of a diversified business may, under certain circumstances, be considered, with respect to employees under them, vice principals or representatives of the master, as fully and as completely as if the entire business of the master was by him placed under the charge of one superintendent, we declined to affirm that each separate piece of work was a distinct department, and made the one having control of that piece of work a vice principal or representative of the master. It was further declared that "the danger from the negligence of one specially in charge of the particular work was as obvious and as great as from that of those who were simply coworkers with him in it; each is equally with the other an ordinary risk of the employment" which the employee assumes when entering upon the employment, whether the risk be obvious or not. It was laid down that the rightful test to determine whether the negligence complained of was an ordinary risk of the employment was whether the negligent act, constituted a breach of positive duty owing by the master, such as that of taking fair and reasonable precautions to surround his employee with fit and careful coworkers, and the furnishing to such employee of a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe tools or machinery with which to do the work, thus making the question of liability of an employer for an injury to his employee turn rather on the character of the alleged negligent act than on the relations of the employees to each other, so that if the act is one done in the discharge of some positive duty of the master to the servant, then [265 negligence in the act is the negligence of the master; but if it be not one in the discharge of such positive duty, then there should be some personal wrong on the part of the employer before he is liable therefor.

There is nothing in the latter decision of this court in Northern P. R. Co. v. Humbly, 154 U. S. 349 [38: 1009], militating against the views expressed in the Baugh Case. On the contrary, that case is approvingly referred to (p. 359 [1013]), although said there to involve a different question from that which was in the Humbly Case.

The principles thus applied in the case referred to are in perfect harmony with the rules enforced by the supreme court of the state of New Jersey, within whose territory the accident happened which gave rise to the present controversy.

In O'Brien v. American Dredging Co. 53 N. J. L. 291, O'Brien sought to hold the company liable for an injury sustained by him while employed as a deck hand on one of their dredges, at the time used in dredging the James river, near Richmond, under a contract with the United States government. The ground of liability alleged was that the injury had been caused by the negligence of another employee, one Cannon, who was called the "captain" of the dredge. Cannon was authorized to employ men to work on the dredge, subject to the approval of the general superintendent (who had his headquarters at the home office of the company) who had power to disapprove or discharge them; the duty of the captain was to operate the dredge in said dredging; plaintiff was employed by Cannon as a deck hand on the dredge and his duty was to aid in the operation of the dredge; and Cannon had charge of the men so employed and they were under him. The court held that while Cannon was intrusted with some authority to employ the workmen, yet, with respect to the operation of the dredge in the prosecution of defendant's business, he was not a general superintendent, but a mere foreman of the gang of workmen, engaged with them in the execution of the master's work. He 266] was a superior and they *were inferior workmen, but all were employed in a common operation, though in different grades of service. In the course of the opinion, on the question of the risks which must be contemplated and assumed by one entering the service of another, the court said:

"Whether the master retains the superintendence and management of his business, or withdraws himself from it and devolves it on a vice principal or representative, it is quite apparent that, although the master or representative may devise the plans, engage the workmen, provide the machinery and tools, and direct the performance of the work, neither can, as a general rule, be continually present at the execution of all such work. It is the necessary consequence that the mere execution of the planned work must be intrusted to workmen, and where necessary to groups or gangs of workmen, and in such case that one should be selected as the leader, boss, or foreman to see to the execution of such work. This sort of superiority of service is so essential and so universal that every workman, in entering upon a contract of service, must contemplate its being made use of in a proper case. He therefore makes his contract of service in contemplation of the risk of injury from the negligence of a boss or foreman, as well as from the negligence of another fellow-workman. The foreman or superior servant stands to him, in that respect, in the precise position of his other fellow-servants."

Applying the principles announced by this court and the supreme court of New Jersey to the facts of the case at bar, it is clear that O'Brien and Keegan were fellow-servants. O'Brien's duties were not even those of simple direction and superintendence over the operations of the drill crew; he was a component part of the crew, an active coworker in the manual work of switching, with the specific duty assigned to him by the yardmaster of turning the switches. He was subordinate to the yardmaster who had jurisdiction over this and other drill screws, and it was the yardmaster who employed and discharged all the workmen in the yard, giving them their general instructions, and assigning them to their duties. O'Brien's control over the other members of the 267] drill crew *was similar to the control which a section foreman exercises over the men in his section; and, following its construction of the decisions of this court in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368 [87: 772], and Northern P. R. Co. v. Hamblly, 154 U. S. 349 [38: 1009], the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit has held that a section foreman is a fellow-servant of a member of his crew, and that one of the crew, injured by the negligence of the foreman, cannot recover. Kansas & A. V. R. Co. v. Waters, 70 Fed. Rep. 28.

In Potter v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 136 N. Y. 77, employees of a railroad company, while switching cars in the company's yard under the direction of a yardmaster, shunted a number of cars onto a track so that they collided with a car being inspected, and caused the death of the inspector. It was claimed that the proper and reasonable care required that there should have been a brakeman on the front of the cars to control in an emergency their motion when detached from the engine. In the absence of allegation of proof to the contrary, the court presumed that competent and sufficient servants were employed, and proper regulations for the management of the business had been established, and observed (p. 82):

"It is quite obvious that the work of shifting cars in a railroad yard must be left in a great measure to the judgment and discretion of the servants of the railroad who are intrusted with the management of the yard. The details must be left to them, and all that the company can do for the protection of its employees is to provide competent co-servants, and prescribe such regulations as experience shows may be best calculated to secure their safety."

We adopt this statement as proper to be applied to the case at bar. A personal, positive duty would clearly not have been imposed upon a natural person, owner of a railroad, to supervise and control the details of the operation of switching cars in a railroad yard; neither is such duty imposed as a positive duty upon a corporation; and if O'Brien was negligent in failing to place himself or some one else at the brake of the backwardly moving cars, such omission not being the performance of a positive duty owing by the master, the plaintiff in error is not responsible therefor.

*These conclusions determine both 268 questions certified for our decision, and accordingly the first question is answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, and Mr. Justice Field, and Mr. Justice Harlan dissent.

GEORGE S. MOORE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 268-276.)

Indictment for embezzlement — description of property.

1. An indictment which charges, under the act of 1875, that defendant, being an assistant, clerk, or employce in a postoffice, did embezzle a certain sum of money, the property of the United States, is insufficient on demurrer in not alleging that such sum came into his possession in that capacity, as it should do if the allegation of employment be material; but if that allegation be rejected as descriptio personæ, then the property should be identified particularly.
2. The general rule in the absence of a statute is that an averment of the embezzlement of a certain amount in dollars and cents is insufficient.

[No. 719.]

Submitted November 20, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of 160 U. S.

Alabama to review a judgment of that court convicting George S. Moore of embezzling certain moneys of the United States. Reversed and case remanded with directions to quash the indictment.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

Plaintiff in error, late assistant postmaster of the city of Mobile, was indicted and convicted of embezzling certain moneys of the United States to the amount of $1,652.59.

There were four counts in the indictment, to one of which a demurrer was sustained, and upon two others defendant was acquitted. The fourth count, upon which he was convicted, charged that "the said George S. Moore, being then and there an assistant, clerk, or employee in or connected with the business or operations of the United States postoffice in the city of Mobile, in the state of Alabama, did embezzle the sum of $1,652.59, money of the United States, of the value of $1,652.59, the said money being the personal property of the United States."

Moore, having been sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor, sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. M. D. Wickersham and W. H. McIntosh, for plaintiff in error:

The court erred in overruling the demurrers of defendant to the fourth count of the indictment. The count in question under which the defendant was convicted charged no offense against the laws of the United States.

There must be some averment of the fiduciary relations sustained by the defendant and made by the statute an element of the offense.

2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 323; 2d ed. § 519.

A distinct fact necessary to be proved at the trial must be averred in the indictment.

United States v. Atkinson, 34 Fed. Rep. 317; United States v. Carll, 105 U. S. 611 (26: 1135).

It must be averred that the defendant stood in some fiduciary relation, and that by virtue of said relation he did embezzle.

2 Archb. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 1337; 1 Whart. Proc. of Indictments, p. 465; Loveland, Fed. Proc. No. 483, p. 453; United States v. Hartwell, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 385 (18: 830); United States v. Bornemann, 36 Fed. Rep. 258; United States v. Harper, 33 Fed. Rep. 474; Huffman v. State, 89 Ala. 33; Lowenthal v. State, 32 Ala. 589.

In criminal cases, prosecuted under the laws of the United States, the accused has the constitutional right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation.

United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 (23: 588); United States v. Mills, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 142 (8: 637); United States v. Cook, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 168 (21: 538).

An indictment for embezzlement must set forth the actual fiduciary relations and their breaches. Everything must be averred which is necessary to bring the case within the statute.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 495; United States v. Mann, 95 U. S. 585 (24: 533); United States v. Hess, 124 U. S. 483 (31: 516).

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error:

If the defects in the indictment are defects of form only, they are cured by the verdict, and cannot be considered by this court, even though raised before the trial by demurrer.

160 U. S.

Connors v. United States, 158 U. S. 408, 411, (39: 1033, 1034).

The meaning of the term "embezzle" is simple and familiar. The crime established by our legislative bodies has become known as "embezzlement." Hence it is not necessary in an indictment to describe the wrongful act with more particularity than by the simple word "embezzle," whose meaning is both clear and familiar.

2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 322.

This principle has been more than once recognized by the supreme court.

United States v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655 (27: 520); United States v. Northway, 120 U. S. 327, 331 (30: 664, 665); Batchelor v. United States, 156 U. S. 426, 429 (39: 478, 480); United States v. Jackson, 2 Fed. Rep. 502, 504; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 315.

Mere mistakes, however serious, in expressing the substance of a crime, if the meaning can be understood, are formal.

Babcock v. United States, 34 Fed. Rep. 873, 876; United States v. Patterson, 6 McLean, 466; United States v. Hess, 124 U. S. 483 (31: 516); United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 557 (23: 588, 593).

The word "embezzle" implies an allegation that the moneys were in the hands of defendant to hold for the owner, and also an allegation that he converted them to his own use, animo furandi.

The moneys are described with sufficient certainty.

United States v. Bornemann, 36 Fed. Rep. 257.

It is not necessary in an indictment to negative defenses or exceptions, as claimed in the motion in arrest of judgment.

Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 238; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 638; Evans v. United States (No. 1) 153 U. S. 584, 593 (38: 831, 834); Stokes v. United States, 157 U. S. 187, 191 (39: 667, 669).

It is assigned for error that the court denied a motion "to exclude the testimony of the witness Hancock." This motion was made after the testimony was all in. It was therefore discretionary.

Defendant's remedy, if he desired to preserve the point for use upon a writ of error, was to move for the proper instruction to the jury.

1 Thomp. Trials, §§ 715, 716; Pontius v. People, 82 N. Y. 339, 347; Gitmore v. Pittsburg, B. & C. R. Co. 104 Pa. 275, 281, 282; McFarland v. Bellows, 49 Mo. 311; People v. Long, 43 Cal. 444; Brockett v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 156; Wilcox v. Stephenson, 30 Fla. 377; Gurley v. Park, 135 Ind. 440; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lamothe, 76 Tex. 219, 223; Little Klamath Water-Ditch Co. v. Ream, 39 Pac. 998.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was indicted under the 1st section of the act of March 3, 1875, "to punish certain larcenies and the receivers of stolen goods" (18 Stat. at L. 479), which enacts "that any person who shall embezzle, steal, or purloin any money, property, record, voucher, or valuable thing whatever, of the moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of the United States shall be deemed guilty of felony," etc.

The principal assignment of error is to the action of the court in overruling a demurrer to the fourth count of the indictment, which charges, in the words of the statute, that "the said George S. Moore, being then and there an assistant, clerk, or employee in or connected with the business or operations of the United States postoffice in the city of Mobile, in the state of Alabama, did embezzle the sum of . . . money of the United States, of the value of . . . , the said money being the personal property of the United States."

Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom such property has been intrusted or into whose hands it has lawfully come. It differs from larceny in the fact that the original taking of the property was lawful *or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking.

It is objected to the indictment in this case that there is no direct allegation that defendant was an assistant, clerk, or employee in or connected with the business or operations of the postoffice at Mobile; that the money of the United States is not identified or described, and that there is no allegation that it came into the possession of the defendant by virtue of his employment.

The act in question has never been interpreted by this court, nor has our attention been called to any case where it has received a construction in this particular, except that of McCann v. United States, 2 Wyo. 274, decided in the territorial supreme court of Wyoming, in which the allegation was that McCann, . . . at and within the district aforesaid, twenty thousand pounds of sugar . . . of the goods, chattels, and property of the United States of America, then and there being found, then and there feloniously and fraudulently did embezzle, steal, and purloin," etc. This allegation was held to be defective in charging a mere legal conclusion, "leaving it impossible to determine whether the offense was committed, and the conclusion correct." It was said that the indictment for this offense must set forth the actual fiduciary relation and its breach; that the indictment did not identify the offense on the record; and did not secure the accused in his right to plead a former acquittal or conviction to a second prosecution for the offense. It was held that the words "to embezzle" were equivalent to the words "to commit embezzlement," and that a count in the words of the statute was not sufficient; that "all the ingredients of fact that are elemental to the definition must be alleged, so as to bring the defendant precisely and clearly within the statute; if that can be done by simply following the words of the statute, that will do; if not, other allegations must be used." The general principle here alluded to has been applied by this court in several cases. United States v. Carll, 105 U. S. 611 [26: 1135]; United States v. Cook, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 168 [21: 538]; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 [23: 588].

In the case of United States v. Northway, 120 271 U. S. 327 [30: 664], *the word "embezzle" was recognized as having a settled technical meaning of its own, like the words "steal, take, and carry away," as used to define the offense of larceny. In this case the allegation was that the defendant "as such president and agent" (of a national bank) "then and there had and received in and into his possession certain moneys and funds of said banking association . . . and then and there being in possession of the said" defendant "as such president and agent aforesaid, he, the said" defendant, "then and there . . . wrongly, unlawfully, and with intent to injure and defraud said banking association, did embezzle and convert to his . . . own use." In respect to this it was said to be quite clear that the allegation was sufficient, as it distinctly alleged that the moneys and funds charged to have been embezzled were at the time in the possession of the defendant as president and agent. "This necessarily means," said the court, "that they had come into his possession in his official character, so that he held them in trust for the use and benefit of the association. In respect to those funds, the charge against him is that he embezzled them by converting them to his own use. This we think fully and exactly describes the offense of embezzlement under the act by an officer and agent of the association."

In the case of Claasen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140 [35: 966], an allegation similar in substance and effect was also held to be sufficient. The indictment, said the court, "avers that the defendant was president of a national banking association; that by virtue of his office he received and took into his possession certain bonds (fully described), the property of the association; and that, with intent to injure and defraud the association, he embezzled the bonds and converted them to his own use. On principle and precedent, no further averment was requisite to a complete and sufficient description of the crime charged."

The cases reported from the English courts and from the courts of the several states have usually arisen under statutes limiting the offense to certain officers, clerks, agents, or servants of individuals or corporations, and the rulings that the *agency or fiduciary relation [272 must be averred, as well as the fact that the money embezzled had come into the possession of the prisoner in that capacity, are not wholly applicable to a statute which extends to every person, regardless of his employment, or of the fact that the money had come into his possession by virtue of any office or fiduciary relation he happened to occupy. These cases undoubtedly hold, with great uniformity, that the relationship must be averred in the exact terms of the statute; that the property embezzled must be identified with great particularity; and that it must also be averred to have come into the possession of the prisoner by virtue of his fiduciary relation to the owner of the property.

Thus, in Com. v. Smart, 6 Gray, 15, it was held that an indictment which averred that the defendant "was intrusted" by the owner "with certain property, the same being the subject of larceny" (describing it) "and to deliver the same to" the owner "on demand," and afterwards "refused to deliver said property to said" owner, "and feloniously did embezzle and fraudulently convert to his own use, the same then and there being demanded of him by said" owner, was fatally defective, by reason of omitting to state the purpose for which the defendant was intrusted with the property, or what property he fraudulently converted to his own use. So in People v. Allen, 5 Denio, 76, under a statute limiting the offense to clerks and servants, it was held that a count charging the defendant with having collected and received certain money as the agent of an individual was defective.

On the other hand, in Lorentthal v. State, 32 Ala. 589, an indictment charging, in the form prescribed by the Code, that the defendant, being agent or clerk of another, "embezzled, or fraudulently converted to his own use, money to about the amount of $1,800 . . . which came into his possession by virtue of his employment," was sufficient. See also People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 344; Com. v. Hussey, 111 Mass. 432. It was held, however, in State v. Stimson, 24 N. J. L. 9, that it was not sufficient to describe the offense in the words of the statute, and that there should be 273] some description either *of the number or denomination of the coins and of the notes, and also an averment of the value of the notes.

Indeed, the rulings in this class of cases became in some instances so strict that statutes were passed in several of the states defining what should be necessary and sufficient in indictments for embezzlement. Thus, in the Criminal Code of Illinois, it is declared to be sufficient to allege, generally, in the indictment, an embezzlement, fraudulent conversion or taking with intent to embezzle and convert funds of any person, bank, corporation, company, or copartnership, to a certain value or amount, without specifying any particulars of such embezzlement. Under this statute, it was held proper for the court to permit all the evidence of what the defendant did by reason of his confidential relations with the banking firm whose clerk he was to go to the jury, and if the jury found, from the whole evidence, any funds or credits for money had been embezzled or fraudulently converted to his own use by defendant, it was sufficient to maintain the charge of embezzlement. "The view taken by the defense," said the court, "of this statute is too narrow and technical to be adopted. It has a broader meaning, and when correctly read will embrace all wrongful conduct by confidential clerks, agents, or servants, and leave no opportunity for escape from just punishment on mere technical objections not affecting the guilt or innocence of the party accused." Ker v. People, 110 Ill. 627, 647, 51 Am. Rep. 706.

The ordinary form of an indictment for larceny is that J. S., late of, etc., at, etc., in the county aforesaid (specifying the property), of the goods and chattels of one J. N., "feloniously did steal, take, and carry away." In other words, the whole gist of the indictment lies in the allegation that the defendant stole, took, and carried certain specified goods belonging to the person named. The indictment under consideration is founded upon a statute to punish larcenies of government property. It applies to "any person," and uses the words "embezzle, steal, or purloin" in the same connection, and as applicable to the same persons and to the same property. There can be no doubt that a count charging the prisoner *with 274 stealing or purloining certain described goods the property of the United States would be sufficient, without further specification of the offense; but whether an indictment charging in such general terms that the prisoner "embezzled" the property of the government (identifying it), would be sufficient, we do not undertake to determine; although we think the rules of good pleading would suggest, even if they did not absolutely require, that the indictment should set forth the manner or capacity in which the defendant became possessed of the property.

For another reason, however, we think the indictment in this case is insufficient. If the words charging the defendant with being an employee of the postoffice be material, then it is clear, under the cases above cited, that it should be averred that the money embezzled came into his possession by virtue of such employment. Unless this be so, the allegation of employment is meaningless and might even be misleading, since the defendant might be held for property received in a wholly different capacity—such, for instance, as a simple bailee of the government. In the absence of a statutory regulation the authorities upon this subject are practically uniform. Whart. Crim. L. § 1942; Rex v. Snowley, 4 Car. & P. 390; Com. v. Simpson, 9 Met. 138; People v. Sherman, 10 Wend. 208, 25 Am. Dec. 563; Rex v. Prince, 2 Car. & P. 517; Rex v. Thorley, 1 Mood. C. C. 343; Rex v. Bakewell, Russ. & R. 35.

On the other hand, if these words be rejected as surplusage and mere descriptio personæ, then the property embezzled should be identified with particularity, the general rule in the absence of a statute being that an averment of the embezzlement of a certain amount in dollars and cents is insufficient. Rex v. Furneaux, Russ. & R. 336; Rex v. Fowler, 5 Car. & P. 736; Com. v. Sawtelle, 11 Cush. 142; People v. Bogart, 36 Cal. 245; People v. Cor, 40 Cal. 275; Barton v. State, 29 Ark. 68; State v. Thompson, 42 Ark. 517; State v. Ward, 48 Ark. 36.

There are undoubtedly cases which hold that, where the crime consists, not in the embezzlement of a single definite quantity of coin or bills, but in a failure to account for a number *of small sums received,—a series 275 of petty and continuous peculations,—where it would be manifestly impossible, probably for the defendant himself, but much more for the prosecution, to tell of what the money embezzled consisted, an allegation of a particular amount is sufficient. These cases, however, are confined to public officers, or to the officers of corporations, and where the embezzlement consists of a single amount of property, the general rule above stated still holds good. The leading case upon this point is that of People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54, 89. In this case the treasurer of the state of Michigan was charged with the embezzlement of $4,000 belonging to the state. It was held that, as the treasurer had by law the entire custody and management of the public money, with authority to receive such descriptions of funds as he chose, the public could exercise no control or constant supervision over him, and that it would be wholly impracticable to trace or identify the particular pieces of money or bills received by him, and hence that the allegation of a certain amount was sufficient. This case has been followed by several others and may be said to apply to all instances where it would be impracticable to set forth or identify the particular character of the property embezzled. State v. Munch, 22 Minn. 67; State v. Ring, 29 Minn. 78; State v. Smith, 13 Kan. 274, 294; State v. Carrick, 16 Nev. 120; United States v. Bornemann, 36 Fed. Rep. 257. In some jurisdictions, however, notably in England, California, Louisiana, and Massachusetts, the difficulty has been entirely remedied by statute. Greaves' Crim. L. 156; Rex v. Grove, 1 Mood. C. C. 447; Com. v. Butterick, 100 Mass. 1, 97 Am. Dec. 65; Com. v. Bennett, 118 Mass. 443; People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226; State v. Thompson, 32 La. Ann. 796.

If, then, the indictment in this case had charged that the defendant, being then and there assistant, clerk, or employee in or connected with the business or operations of the United States postoffice in the city of Mobile, embezzled the sum stated, and had further alleged that such sum came into his possession in that capacity, we should have held the indictment *sufficient, notwithstanding the general description of the property embezzled as consisting of so many dollars and cents. But if the words charging him with being in the employ of the government be stricken out, then there would be nothing left to show why the property embezzled could not be identified with particularity and the general rule above cited would apply. The indictment would then reduce itself to a simple allegation that the said George S. Moore, at a certain time and place, did embezzle the sum of $1,652.59, money of the United States, of the value, etc., said money being the personal property of the United States, which generality of description would be clearly bad. As there was a demurrer to this count, which was overruled, we do not think the objection is covered by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1025, or cured by the verdict.

As we hold the indictment in this case to be bad, we find it unnecessary to consider the other errors assigned.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed and the case remanded, with directions to quash the indictment.

JOHN KEANE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ANNA SOPHIA BRYGGER, Executrix, and Ole Schillestead, Executor, of the Estate of JOHAN BRYGGER, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 276-288.)

Relinquishment of homestead entry.

A voluntary formal relinquishment of a homestead entry restores the land to the public domain and makes it subject to selection by others, and their rights are not affected by the fact that the relinquishment was not returned to and noted on the records of the land office until afterwards.

[No. 94.]

Argued December 4, 5, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Washington to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the Superior Court of King County in that State in favor of the plaintiffs, Anna Sophia Brygger et al., executors, against John Keane, defendant, for the recovery of the possession of certain land in that county. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

*This is an action for the possession of [277 certain parcels of land in Washington territory, brought in its third judicial district. The land constitutes the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 11 in township 25 north, of range 3 east, in King county, in that territory.

The complaint alleges that one Johan Brygger was, in his lifetime, the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of the land described; that he died in that county and territory on the 20th of November, 1888, the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of the premises; that he left a last will and testament, which was admitted to probate in the probate court of King county, in that territory, on the 20th of December, 1888; that the plaintiff Anna Sophia Brygger was appointed executrix, and the plaintiff Ole Schillestead was appointed executor, of the estate of decedent on the 20th day of December, 1888, and that both qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties. The plaintiffs also allege that the real property described is assets in their hands for the payment of debts and legacies and expenses of administration, and that they have been in possession of the same since their appointment, and that the decedent, at the time of his death, was in its possession, and had been in actual possession thereof for over ten years before his death; that a part of the dwelling house of the decedent, in which his family resides, is on the property, and that there is on the land a large and costly barn and outhouses, an orchard and garden, and the same is surrounded with a fence, and is mostly improved. And the plaintiffs allege that the defendant, on the 12th of February, A. D. 1889, opened the fences surrounding the land, and with servants and teams and lumber entered upon the same with the declared intention of building a house thereon, and to claim the same, and announced his intention to hold the possession of all the described lands. They also allege that Anna Sophia Brygger is not only executrix of the estate of said Johan Brygger, deceased, but the residuary devisee of all of his estate remaining after the payment of the legacies and bequests mentioned in the will of the decedent; that the plaintiffs' title to the land and the *claim [278 to the possession thereof is as executors of the estate of Johan Brygger, deceased, and that the estate is unsettled, and that legacies, bequests, and expenses of administration are to be paid. That the defendant has threatened to continue the opening and breaking of the fences on the land, and to continue the hauling of lumber and other materials thereon, and to continue to enter the same by himself and servants, and to erect a house and other buildings thereon.

NOTE.—As to pre-emption rights, see note to United States v. Fitzgerald, 10: 785.

And the plaintiffs also aver that the orchard and garden and dwelling house, outhouses, and barn are all thereby exposed to destruction or great damage by stock, and the estate of Johan Brygger, deceased, to be greatly impaired; that the defendant is unable to answer in damages for the injury already done and that which is threatened by him, and that there is great danger that he will put the same into execution; and they ask for judgment for the recovery of the land and for an order restraining the defendant, his servants or agents, from interfering with its possession of the land or the improvements thereon, and restraining him or his servants from opening or breaking the fences, or doing other damage thereto during the pendency of this litigation, and for his costs and disbursements to be taxed.

The complaint was filed on the 15th of February, 1889, and on the same day an order was issued by the court directing the defendant to show cause on a day named why a temporary restraining order should not be granted, and in the meantime enjoining him from opening or breaking down the fences enclosing the land, and from entering upon the same with wagons, teams, or otherwise, and from erecting a house or other structure thereon, and from interfering with the buildings or any of them upon the same.

On the 21st of February, 1889, the defendant filed an answer and counterclaim, protesting that the court had not jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, and, saving all his rights by reason of the want of such jurisdiction, yet for answer and defense denies each and every allegation of the 1st and 2d paragraphs of the complaint except the allegation as to the place and date of the death of Johan 279] Brygger; alleging that, as to the 3d paragraph, he has not sufficient knowledge or information upon which to form a belief respecting the allegations therein, and therefore denies each of them; and, answering the 4th paragraph, he denies that the real property therein referred to is assets in the hands of the plaintiffs or any of them for the payment of debts, legacies, and expenses of administration, or of any or either of said matters, or for any purpose whatever, or in any respect or manner whatever. He further denies that the plaintiffs have or that any or either of them has been in the possession of the real property since their or either of their appointment as executrix and executor respectively, as in the complaint set forth, if such appointment has been made, or at any time, or at all, and alleges that if they have or any or either of them has been in such possession the same was at all times wrongful and unlawful and without any color of right. He further denies that Johan Brygger at the time of his death, or at any time, or at all, was in possession of said real property, and alleges that if said Brygger ever was in such possession the same was at all times wrongful and unlawful and without any color of right. And also denies that Johan Brygger was in possession of said real property for over ten years before his death, or for ten years, or for any time, or at all, and alleges that if he ever was in such possession the same was wrongful and unlawful and without any color of right.

The defendant, further answering, alleges that if a part of the dwelling house of Johan Brygger is on the said property the same was wrongfully and unlawfully placed there, and that if the barn, outhouses, orchard, and garden mentioned are upon the property, the same were and each of them was put there wrongfully and unlawfully and without any color of right. And he denies that there is any fence surrounding the land, or that he opened fences surrounding the same, and alleges that the rails temporarily removed by him for the purpose of reaching the land had been wrongfully and unlawfully placed where they were, notwithstanding which he has restored the same to the position in which he had first found them.

And the defendant, answering the 5th paragraph, alleges *that he has not had sufficient knowledge or information upon which to form a belief respecting the allegations of any of them therein contained; wherefore he denies the same. And also denies that Johan Brygger ever had any title, legal, equitable, or otherwise, to the land or any part thereof, and denies that the estate of Johan Brygger has or ever had any right, title, interest, or claim in or to the land or any part thereof.

Answering the 7th paragraph of the complaint, the defendant denies that the orchard and garden and dwelling house, outhouses, and barn therein mentioned are, or that any or either of them is, in the least exposed to destruction or damage by stock or otherwise, or to any injury or loss whatsoever by reason of anything done or intended or attempted by the defendant, and denies that the estate of Johan Brygger is thereby exposed in any manner to the least impairment or damage. And he further alleges that he has done and intends to do no damage whatsoever to any fence or fences on the land, if any there are, notwithstanding that the same, if any, have been wrongfully and unlawfully placed thereon without color of right.

Answering the 8th paragraph of the complaint, the defendant denies each and every allegation therein contained, and in particular that any injury has been done or threatened by him to any interest, property, or claim of the plaintiff, and denies that he had any intention to do such injury, and alleges that he is fully able to answer in damages for any injury which can or may arise from his occupation of the land.

And further answering the complaint, and as and for new matter constituting a first and separate defense thereto, the defendant alleges that on and before the 20th day of October, 1888, the land described in the complaint, and 40 acres, according to the United States survey, was unappropriated public land of the United States; that on the date mentioned the defendant was the head of a family, over the age of twenty-one years, and was a citizen of the United States, and had never theretofore taken up or entered any public land of the United States under the homestead laws; *that 281 on the date mentioned, being duly qualified, he tendered at the United States land office in Seattle his application to enter and appropriate the land described under the provisions of the homestead laws; that he made application for his exclusive use and benefit, and for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not either directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person, and paid to the United States the legal fees in such cases prescribed, and was thereupon duly permitted to enter the land, and did on the day mentioned enter the same; that his entry of the land was thereupon duly made of record, and has ever since continued to be and now is a valid subsisting entry, and that six months have not elapsed since the appropriation of the land by him; and that neither Johan Brygger nor the plaintiffs, nor either of them, ever had or now have any right, title, or interest in the land or any part thereof.

To the 4th paragraph of the defendant's answer, the plaintiffs reply and deny that the possession of Johan Brygger, their testator, or their possession after his death, was wrongful or unlawful or without color of right, and deny that the dwelling house on the property described was wrongfully and unlawfully placed there, or that the barn, outhouses, orchard, and garden on the land were wrongfully or unlawfully placed there; also deny that the rails removed by the defendant had been wrongfully or unlawfully placed where they were; deny also that the defendant was not doing damage; and deny that he did not intend to do any damage to the fence or fences on the land.

In reply to the second defense and counterclaim, they deny that the land described in the 1st paragraph of the defense or counterclaim, being the same as that described in the complaint, was, on and before the 20th day of October, 1888, unappropriated and public land of the United States, and deny that the same has been unappropriated and public land since the 10th day of March, A. D. 1864.

In reply to the 3d paragraph of the defense, the plaintiffs deny that the defendant, on the 20th day of October, A. D. 1888, or at any other time, duly tendered to the United States 282] *land office in Seattle or elsewhere his application to enter or take up or appropriate the land under the provisions of the homestead law.

In reply to paragraph 4 they deny that the defendant was duly permitted to enter the land under the provisions of the homestead law; and deny that his application or entry was duly made of record in the land office mentioned; and that the same has been since or continues to be and now is a valid or subsisting entry and appropriation of the land. And, in reply to the 7th paragraph of the defense, they deny each and every allegation of the same.

On the 9th of August, 1890, the defendant requested the court to find the following facts:

1st. That on the 14th day of February, 1864, and on the 10th day of March, 1864, and at all times in February and March, 1864, the land in controversy was included in homestead entry No. 204, of Lemuel J. Holgate, and was included in and covered by his homestead entry until the 20th day of December, 1871. 2d. That on the 14th day of February, 1864, and on the 10th day of March, 1864, and on the 14th day of March, 1864, and at all times in February and March, 1864, Holgate was living upon the land as a homestead settler and entryman, and improving the same for the purpose of making it his permanent home, and did not leave the same until about December, 1864. 3d. That on the 4th day of April, 1889, the receiver of the United States land office at Seattle, Washington, transmitted to the defendant by unregistered mail, in care of his attorney, a letter to the effect that the Commissioner of the General Land Office held defendant's entry for cancellation, which letter was the first and only notice of the holding or decision given to defendant. 4th. That No. 77 of the rules of practice in cases before the district land offices, the General Land Office, and the Department of the Interior in force at the time, the defendant had thirty days, together with ten days for transmission through the mail to him and from him, from the 4th day of April, 1889, for filing, either in the Seattle land office, or in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a motion *for 283 rehearing or review of the holding or decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that within the period so allowed by that rule the defendant did file both in the Seattle land office and in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office a motion for rehearing and review of the holding and decision. 5th. That before the period had elapsed, and on the 22d day of April, 1889, the Secretary of the Interior certified the land to the University of the Territory of Washington, which certification was subsequently entered of record under the seal of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 9th day of May, 1889, and before the period had elapsed within which defendant could legally file his motion for rehearing and review. 6th. That by reason of the certification in the land department the United States lost jurisdiction over the land. 7th. That by the loss of jurisdiction the defendant had no further remedy in the land department. 8th. That the complaint in this action was filed in this court on the 15th day of February, 1889, prior to the time of certification and before the time had elapsed for the defendant to move for such rehearing and review, and before the land department had lost jurisdiction over the land, and while the title to the land was still in the United States. 9th. That on the 11th day of January, 1861, the legislative assembly of the territory of Washington passed an act appointing Daniel Bagley, John Webster, and Edmund Carr a board of commissioners to select, locate, and dispose of lands reserved for university purposes in the territory of Washington by the act of Congress of July 17, 1854.

And the defendant requested the court to find the following conclusions of law: 1st. That by reason of the homestead entry No. 204 of Lemuel J. Holgate remaining uncancelled on the records of the land department until December 20, 1871, the land did not become vacant public land of the United States and subject to selection for the University of the Territory of Washington until the last-named date. 2d. That upon that date it became vacant public lands of the United States, and open to pre-emption or homestead settlement, and was so vacant when the defendant filed 284] his homestead entry *thereon. 3d. That by defendant's homestead entry the land was appropriated to him. 4th. That defendant's homestead entry was unlawfully canceled. 5th. That the land was unlawfully certified by the land department to the territory of Washington, and no right passed to the plaintiffs or to their testators, his grantors, by such certification. 6th. That the legal title to the land conveyed by that certification enures to the benefit of the defendant, and the plaintiffs hold the same in trust for him. 7th. That the defendant is entitled to a decree for the conveyance of the legal title to him, and for the dismissal of this action, and for the dissolution of the temporary restraining order heretofore issued in this cause.

The issues involved in this cause came on to a hearing on the 18th and 19th days of June, 1890, in the superior court of King county, state of Washington, upon the pleadings and evidence taken, and the court found that said tract of land was selected by the territory of Washington, through its university commissioners, on the 10th day of March, 1864, as university lands, and that the university commissioners did upon that date execute and deliver to one John Ross a deed to the land in controversy for the consideration of $240, paid by him to them; that on the 4th day of April, A. D. 1876, Ross sold and conveyed the lands by deed to Johan Brygger, the testator herein, and that both of the deeds were duly recorded; that prior to the year 1864 one Lemuel Holgate had made a homestead filing on the land in controversy, but that he had relinquished his right, title, and interest in and to the same in the month of February, 1864; that the university commissioners filed a list of such selections in the local land office in the territory, which list was known and recognized in the land department of the government as list number 2, and that the same was filed in the proper local land office in March, 1867, and that in that list the land was located and selected for university purposes; that on the 22d day of April, A. D. 1889, the Secretary of the Interior issued his certificate under the act of Congress approved March 14, 1869, after due proof, including the land in controversy, and approving the same as a grant 285] in fee simple *to the territory and to its vendees, under and by virtue of said act; that on or about October 20, A. D. 1888, the plaintiff in error entered his homestead filing in the land office at Seattle, on the land in controversy, and that in February, 1889, he took up his residence on a portion of the land and erected a building on the same; that prior to the erection of that building defendants in error notified him of their rights, claims, and titles to the land.

The contest between the parties to the premises in controversy arises from a claim made by each of them to a segregation of a portion of such lands for a homestead under the act of Congress of July 17, 1854.

Messrs. James K. Redington, S. F. Phillips, and Frederic D. McKenney for plaintiff in error.

160 U. S.

Messrs. Charles K. Jenner and Louis Henry Legg for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Field, after stating the facts as above and referring to the act of Congress mentioned, reserving to the states, respectively, certain lands for university purposes and authorizing each of the states named to appoint commissioners for the selection and location of such lands, delivered the opinion of the court as follows:

By the 4th section of the act of July 17, 1854, referred to (10 Stat. at L. 305), it is provided "that, in lieu of the two townships of land granted to the territory of Oregon by the 10th section of the act of 1850 for universities, there shall be reserved to each of the territories of Washington and Oregon two townships of land of 36 sections each, to be selected in legal subdivisions, for university purposes, under direction of the legislatures of said territories, respectively."

On the 11th day of January, 1861, the legislative assembly of the territory of Washington passed an act appointing a board of commissioners to select, locate, and dispose of lands *reserved for university purposes in the [286] territory of Washington by the act of Congress quoted.

It appears, from an examination of the proceedings read in connection with the legislation of Congress and the action of the commissioners of the state, that a doubt was created as to the legality of the conveyance by the commissioners of the land in controversy, to John Ross, from the fact that, previous to that conveyance, one Lemuel J. Holgate had filed upon and entered as a homestead the land described, which was not canceled until December 20, 1871. It appears that Holgate executed a relinquishment of his homestead entry upon the land previous to the execution by the commissioners of their conveyance of the same to John Ross. That relinquishment was executed and delivered in February, 1864, and the selection of lands by the university commissioners was on the 10th day of March, 1864. But it is contended by the plaintiff that the relinquishment was in effect a quitclaim from Holgate to Ross, as there was no provision for a voluntary relinquishment prior to May 14, 1890, and that the only way by which lands once filed on under the homestead acts could be restored to the public domain was either by lapse of time or by contest.

But this position is not sustained by the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, nor was it in harmony with the rulings of the land department. In its legal effect the relinquishment by Holgate was to the United States.

Section 1 of the act of May 14, 1880, provides "that when a pre-emption, homestead, or timber culture claimant shall file a written relinquishment of his claim in the local land office the land covered by such claim shall be held as open to settlement and entry without further action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office;" and, as held by the Commissioner, the effect of the law was to give authority to local land offices to cancel the entry at once without awaiting the action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as had been, preceding that time, its custom.

As stated by the Commissioner, it had previously been the *uniform practice of the land department to cancel entries on the voluntary relinquishment of the entryman, and it would be a strange doctrine to announce that a party did not have the right to relinquish any right that he had to or in any property, and that it was the intention of the government to compel its citizens to go to the expense and delay of a contest to extinguish an interest of another citizen who was willing to make a disclaimer of that interest.

He very justly remarks that the object of the homestead law was to furnish homes to the citizens of the government and to encourage the settlement of its public domain, and to make the accession of these homes as easy and cheap as possible, and not to wantonly and senselessly place obstructions in the way of such acquisition. He observed that it is the policy of the government to protect the rights of the homestead claimant while he is endeavoring to comply with the requirements of the law; but when the government becomes satisfied that there has been an abandonment of such right by the applicant, the entry will be canceled, and the land will be subject to the re-entry of some one who will comply with the law, and that the question whether or not there has been an abandonment must be determined, like every other question of the kind, by evidence, and there certainly could be no higher or more convincing testimony than the testimony of the applicant himself, by a formal relinquishment of his rights to the land indorsed on his original receipt and filed in the land office. Secretary Teller well said that the fact that Holgate's relinquishment was not returned to and noted on the records of the land office until 1861 showed irregularity on the part of the local officers, but could not affect the rights of the university.

It appearing, therefore, that the action of the board of university commissioners, in conveying to John Ross the land involved in this case, who subsequently conveyed it to Johan Brygger, under whose will the appellees claim title to the same, was in conformity with the act of Congress of July 17, 1854 (10 Stat. at L. 305, § 4), and the amendatory act of March 14, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 28), this court finds no error [288] in the decision *of the supreme court of the state of Washington, and its judgment is hereby affirmed.

JERSEY CITY & BERGEN RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff in Err.,

v.

JAMES E. MORGAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 288-293.)

Worn silver coin—Federal question.

1. So long as a genuine silver coin is worn only by natural abrasion, is not appreciably diminished in weight, and retains the appearance of a coin duly issued from the mint, it is a legal tender for its original value.

2. A claim in a state court by defendant that a coin was not legal tender under the laws of the United States because it was worn smooth by circulation, without setting up any right under any statute of the United States as to the effect of the reduction in weight, will not give this court jurisdiction to review the state judgment.

[No. 97.]

Submitted December 2, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New Jersey to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court of Hudson County, New Jersey, in favor of plaintiff, James E. Morgan, against the defendant, the Jersey City & Bergen Railroad Company, for damages for his ejection from a street car of said company. Dismissed. See same case below, 52 N. J. L. 60, 558.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action of trespass brought by James E. Morgan against the Jersey City & Bergen Railroad Company in the circuit court of Hudson county, New Jersey, to recover damages for his ejection from a street car of the company by the conductor thereof. The defendant pleaded the general issue and a special plea of molliter manus impositus in defense of possession, to which plaintiff filed a replication de injuria. Issues were joined accordingly. There was verdict and judgment for plaintiff, which was affirmed on error by the supreme court (52 N. J. L. 60); that judgment was affirmed by the court of errors and appeals for the reasons given by the court below (52 N. J. L. 558); the record remitted to the supreme court; and this writ of error allowed.

The facts were that the company was running a horse-car railroad in certain streets of Jersey City; that plaintiff and his *wife entered [289] one of the cars, and, after riding a short distance, plaintiff handed to the conductor a ten cent piece, which was the requisite amount for two fares, but the conductor refused to receive the coin because it was worn smooth. Plaintiff protested, paid his wife's fare of five cents, and, on refusal to pay for himself with any other money than the dime he had offered, was ejected from the car. Thereupon this action was brought. The foregoing facts were proved, and, as stated by the supreme court, the coin was shown to the jury, and it did not appear in the evidence to have been so worn that it was light in weight or not distinguishable as a genuine dime; nor was it defaced, cut, or mutilated, but only made smooth by constant and long-continued handling while being circulated as part of the national currency. At the close of the evidence, defendant's counsel asked the court "to direct the jury to bring in a verdict for defendant on the ground that the coin was not a current coin, one that was not mutilated, a perfect coin, one that is worth its face value." The trial judge remarked: "It is not mutilated in the ordinary sense. Mutilation implies the taking away of some part. It is not mutilated in the ordinary sense of the term; a portion of it is gone only by use, by currency, and that happens to any coin after it has passed through numerous hands. How soon after use, such use as the government intends,—how soon does the coin cease to be coin? I have looked into the statutes and am unable to find any limitation upon the legal-tender character of silver coin; there is an express limitation on the gold coin, and that is when its circulation has resulted in the loss of one half of one per cent of its standard weight for twenty years of circulation. But that limitation does not extend to silver coin, and the provision of the statutes is that silver coin shall be lawful tender so long as it remains lawful money of the country;" and overruled the motion to direct the verdict for the defendant, who excepted. The judge charged the jury, among other things, as follows: "The first question to decide is whether the plaintiff tendered his lawful fare. He tendered this ten cent piece, a genuine and recognizable 290] coin of the *United States, and that was his lawful fare, provided you believe that the coin is in the condition in which it was when issued from the mint, except as it has been changed by proper use. If there has been no other abrasion, no other wearing away, no other defacement of that coin, except such as it has received in passing from hand to hand, then it is still, under the laws of the country, a good ten cent piece and was the fare of the plaintiff. If you think it has been otherwise changed, wilfully changed, by being rubbed, or in any other way, why then it has ceased to be a lawful coin of the country; it has ceased to be lawful tender. This distinction rests upon the idea that the government issues this coin for circulation, and if the government does not choose to put any limit upon the circulation it shall receive it continues to be legal tender just as long as it is circulating and receiving only such injury as circulation gives. Every piece of money that passes through our hands is to some extent abraded thereby, and the government knows and expects that its coin will be abraded, will be worn, and will be in that way defaced, and the government does not withdraw coin that is only defaced in that way; it is still a legal tender. But if anybody chooses to resort to any other means of defacement, then the government does not any longer sanction that coin. But so long as it is only defaced by lawful use, this coin remains good current coin and lawful tender for all debts. Now if you believe that is the character of this ten cent piece, then this plaintiff lawfully tendered his fare. If you do not believe that it is of that sort, then plaintiff did not lawfully tender his fare."

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question; what constitutes Federal question,—see note to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37: 267.

As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution,—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

To this portion of the charge defendant excepted.

The following are sections of the Revised Statutes:

"§ 3505. Any gold coins of the United States, if reduced in weight by natural abrasion not more than one half of one per centum below the standard weight prescribed by law, after a circulation of twenty years, as shown by the date of coinage, and at a ratable proportion for any period less than twenty years, shall be received at their nominal value by the United States Treasury and its offices, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe for the *protection [291 of the government against fraudulent abrasion or other practices."

"§ 3511. The gold coins of the United States shall be a one dollar piece, which, at the standard weight of twenty-five and eight tenths grains, shall be the unit of value; a quarter eagle, or two and a half dollar piece; a three dollar piece; a half eagle or five dollar piece; an eagle or ten dollar piece; and a double eagle or twenty dollar piece. And the standard weight of the gold dollar shall be twenty-five and eight tenths grains; of the quarter eagle or two and a half dollar piece, sixty-four and a half grains; of the three dollar piece, seventy-seven and four tenths grains; of the half eagle or five dollar piece, one hundred and twenty-nine grains; of the eagle or ten dollar piece, two hundred and fifty-eight grains; of the double eagle or twenty dollar piece, five hundred and sixteen grains."

[Section 3513 enumerates the dime or ten cent piece among the silver coins of the United States.]

"§ 3585. The gold coins of the United States shall be a legal tender in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance provided by law for the single piece, and, when reduced in weight below such standard and tolerance, shall be a legal tender at valuation in proportion to their actual weight."

"§ 3586. The silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding five dollars in any one payment."

The 1st and 3d sections of the act of June 9, 1879 (21 Stat. at L. 7, chap. 12), are as follows:

"That the holder of any of the silver coins of the United States of smaller denominations than one dollar may, on presentation of the same in sums of twenty dollars, or any multiple thereof, at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, receive therefor lawful money of the United States."

"§ 3. That the present silver coins of the United States of smaller denominations than one dollar shall hereafter be a legal tender in all sums not exceeding ten dollars in full payment of all dues, public and private."

Mr. A. Q. Garretson for plaintiff [292 in error.

Mr. Thomas J. Kennedy for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court of New Jersey, after referring to the legislation of Congress above quoted, said: "This particularity in the limitation and allowance as to gold coin is not found in the case of natural abrasion in silver coin. This difference is very noticeable and important in a question of statutory construction and legislative intention. It seems by these statutes, that so long as a genuine silver coin is worn only by natural abrasion, is not appreciably diminished in weight, and retains the appearance of a coin duly issued from the mint, it is a legal tender for its original value. United States v. Lissner, 12 Fed. Rep. 840." The instructions of the trial court were therefore sustained and the judgment affirmed.

By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a state in which a decision could be had may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in this court upon a writ of error, where, among other things, "any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution or any treaty or statute thereof, or commission held, or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority." Neither in defendant's pleadings, nor in the motion to direct the jury to find for defendant, nor in the objection and exception to the instructions, was any such right specially set up or claimed. The claim which defendant now states it relied on is that the coin in question was not legal tender under the laws of the United States. This, however, is only a denial of the claim by plaintiff that the coin was such, and as, upon the facts determined by the verdict, the state 293 courts so adjudged, *the decision was in favor of and not against the right thus claimed under the laws of the United States, if such a right could be treated as involved on this record, and this court has no jurisdiction to review it. Missouri v. Andriano, 138 U. S. 496 [34: 1012], and cases cited. And, although denying plaintiff's claim, defendant did not pretend to set up any right it had under any statute of the United States in reference to the effect of reduction in weight of silver coin by natural abrasion.

No other ground of jurisdiction under § 709 is suggested, and this is insufficient to maintain it.

Writ of error dismissed.

HENRY KOHL, Appt.,
v.

HERMAN LEHLBACK, Sheriff of Essex County, New Jersey.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 293-303.)

Sufficiency of indictment—appeal—refusal of writ of error—denial of right of review—alien juror—habeas corpus.

1. Where the state court has jurisdiction of the offense charged and of the accused, it is for that court to determine whether the indictment sufficiently charges the crime of murder in the first degree and this court will not review its decision by habeas corpus proceedings.
2. An appeal to a higher court from a judgment of conviction is not a matter of absolute right independently of constitutional or statutory provisions allowing it, and a state may accord it to a person convicted of crime upon such terms as it thinks proper.

visions allowing it, and a state may accord it to a person convicted of crime upon such terms as it thinks proper.

3. The refusal of a state court to grant a writ of error to a person convicted of murder will not itself warrant a court of the United States in interfering in his behalf by writ of habeas corpus.

4. The denial by a state court of the right of review in an appellate court in a criminal case constitutes no violation of the Constitution of the United States.

5. That one of the jurors in a criminal case was an alien, although cause of challenge, is not a denial of due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws to the person convicted.

[No. 650.]

Argued December 13, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

APPEAL from an order of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey denying a writ of habeas corpus on the petition of Henry Kohl therefor. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, entered May 16, 1895, denying a writ of habeas corpus on the petition of Henry Kohl therefor. Petitioner represented that he was indicted in the court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery of Essex county, New Jersey, for the crime of murder, in December, 1894; that he moved to quash the indictment, which motion was denied, and an exception duly taken; that his trial commenced January 14 and ended January 25, 1895, in the rendition of a verdict of murder in the first degree; that on February 12 application was made for a new trial, and rule to show cause was granted and discharged February 14, 1895; that he was sentenced February 21, to be hanged on March 21, 1895; and that he was unlawfully held in imprisonment by Herman Lehlback, sheriff of Essex county, by virtue of said sentence.

It was also averred that "Samuel Ader, a juror on the jury that convicted your petitioner, is not and never was a citizen of the United States of America;" and that petitioner was restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the state of New Jersey in that petitioner was indicted for an offense having no existence under the laws of New Jersey, which recognized no such crime as murder, the common-law crime of murder having been divided by statute into two degrees, and the indictment not having distinctly set out the statutory crime.

Petitioner further showed that on the 27th day of February application for a writ of error was made to the chancellor of New Jersey, which was denied, and "that an appeal had been duly taken from the order of the said chancellor to the court of errors and appeals, where such appeals are reviewable, and said appeal

NOTE.—When habeas corpus may issue, and when not; and from what courts, and by what judges; what may be inquired into by writ of,—see note to United States v. Hamilton, 1: 490.

As to what questions may be considered on habeas corpus, see note to Ex parte Carll, 27: 288.

As to suspension of writ of habeas corpus, see note to Luther v. Borden, 12: 581.

is now pending in said court of errors and appeals in the state of New Jersey." It was further represented that petitioner was entitled, 295]and *desired, to have the verdict and all the proceedings on his trial, various objections and exceptions thereto having been made and taken, adjudicated by the highest courts of New Jersey; "that on the sixth day of April last past your petitioner's counsel, in open court, in the said Essex oyer and terminer, in the presence of the prosecutor, presented a writ of error, signed by the clerk of the supreme court of New Jersey, sealed with the seal of said court, from the said supreme court to the said oyer and terminer; that the said court would not allow the writ, but permitted it to be filed with the clerk of said court. That said writ was presented under and by virtue of the act of 1881 of New Jersey. That the said act is valid and effectual; that the act of 1878 of New Jersey made writs of error writs of right in all cases;" and further, "that the presiding judge of the said oyer and terminer court has instructed the clerk of Essex county, who is the clerk of said oyer and terminer, not to furnish your petitioner's counsel with a copy of the record and proceedings in this case; that the supreme court of New Jersey has refused your petitioner a stay of execution, and your petitioner has exhausted all remedies in the state court."

The petition then assigned in repetition the several grounds on which it was contended that the conviction was unlawful, to the effect that the indictment was insufficient; that petitioner had been denied by the state of New Jersey the equal protection of the laws; and that petitioner's conviction not only was in violation of the laws of New Jersey but of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because not by due process of law. And it was further alleged that, under and by virtue of the sentence, the sheriff of Essex county threatened to execute the sentence of death on the petitioner, May 16, to which time he had been reprieved.

Messrs. Arthur English and Thomas S. Henry for appellant.

Mr. Elvin W. Crane for appellee.

296] Mr. Chief Justice Fuller* delivered the opinion of the court:

In Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 231 [ante, 406], the power vested in the courts and judges of the United States to grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the restraint of liberty of persons held in custody under state authority, in alleged violation of the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, is considered, and the principles which should govern their action in the exercise of this power stated; and attention is there called to the necessary and settled rule that, "in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, verified by the oath of the petitioner, as required by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 754, facts duly alleged may be taken to be true, unless denied by the return or controlled by other evidence, but no allegation of fact in the petition can be assumed to be admitted, unless distinct and unambiguous;" and that "the general allegations in the petition, that the petitioner is detained in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and of the Constitution and laws of the particular state, and is held without due process of law, are averments of mere conclusions of law and not of matters of fact. Re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 286 [33: 154, 157].

1. Having jurisdiction of the offense charged and of the accused, it was for the state courts to determine whether the indictment in this case sufficiently charged the crime of murder in the first degree. Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 692, 698 [34: 816, 818]; Bergemann v. Backer, 157 U. S. 655 [39: 845].

In the latter case it was decided, in reference to a similar objection to the indictment to that made here, and upon an examination of the statutes and judicial decisions of the highest courts of New Jersey, that it could not be held that the accused was proceeded against under an indictment based upon statutes denying to him the equal protection of the laws, or that were inconsistent with due process of law, as prescribed by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. Graves v. State, 45 N. J. L. 203, 358; Titus v. State, 49 N. J. L. 36. We do not deem it necessary to reconsider in this case the conclusion there reached.

*2. In McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684 [297 [38: 867], we held that an appeal to a higher court from a judgment of conviction is not a matter of absolute right independently of constitutional or statutory provisions allowing it, and that a state may accord it to a person convicted of crime upon such terms as it thinks proper; and in Bergemann v. Backer, supra, that the refusal of the courts of New Jersey to grant a writ of error to a person convicted of murder, or to stay the execution of a sentence, will not itself warrant a court of the United States in interfering in his behalf by writ of habeas corpus.

Appellant insists that he has been denied the equal protection of the laws because he has been deprived of a writ of error for the review of the record and proceedings in his case in violation of the laws of New Jersey.

Section 83 of the criminal procedure act of New Jersey, brought forward from § 13 of an act of March 6, 1795 (Paterson's N. J. Laws, 162), provided that "writs of error in all criminal cases not punishable with death shall be considered as writs of right, and issue of course; and in criminal cases punishable with death writs of error shall be considered as writs of grace, and shall not issue but by order of the chancellor for the time being, made upon motion or petition, notice whereof shall always be given to the attorney general or the prosecutor for the state." N. J. Rev. 283. By an act approved March 12, 1878, this section was amended so as to read: "Writs of error in all criminal cases shall be considered as writs of right, and issue of course; but in criminal cases punishable with death, writs of error shall be issued out of and returnable to the court of errors and appeals alone, and shall be heard and determined at the term of said court next after the judgment of the court below, unless, for good reasons, the court of errors and appeals shall continue the cause to any subsequent term." N. J. Rev. Supp. 209, 210.

In Entries v. State, 47 N. J. L. 140, a writ of error under this act was dismissed by the court of errors and appeals, the court holding that such a writ would not go directly from that court to the oyer and terminer, and that "the legislature cannot sanction such a proceed-298] ing, as it is one of the prerogatives *of the supreme court to exercise, in the first instance, jurisdiction in such cases."

By an act of March 9, 1881, it was provided in the 1st section that "in case a writ of error shall be brought to remove any judgment rendered in any criminal action or proceeding, in any court of this state, and such writ of error shall be presented to such court, the said writ of error shall have the effect of staying all proceedings upon the said judgment, and upon the sentence which the court or any judge thereof may have pronounced against the person or persons obtaining and prosecuting the said writ of error, pending and during the prosecution of such writ of error;" and by the 2d section, that pending the prosecution of such writ of error, the court may require the party prosecuting the writ to give bail, "provided, that this section of this act shall not apply to capital cases." N. J. Rev. Supp. 210. And by an act passed May 9, 1894, it was provided that the entire record of the proceedings on the trial of any criminal cause might be returned by the plaintiff in error with the writ of error and form part thereof, and if it appeared from said record that the plaintiff in error had suffered manifest wrong or injury in the matters therein referred to, the appellate court might order a new trial. N. J. Laws 1894, 246.

Clearly whether a writ of error in criminal cases punishable with death can or cannot be prosecuted under these various acts, unless allowed by the chancellor of the state under § 83 of the criminal procedure act, and, if so, under what circumstances and on what conditions, are matters for the state courts to determine. Petitioner alleged that an appeal from the chancellor's order refusing a writ of error was pending in the court of errors and appeals, and also that a writ of error signed by the clerk of the supreme court of New Jersey, and sealed with the seal of that court, from the supreme court to the oyer and terminer, had been presented to the latter court under the act of 1881, but that the court of oyer and terminer would not allow the writ, and instructed its clerk not to furnish a copy of the record and proceedings. It is, however, averred that the 299] supreme court had refused a stay *of execution, so that it would appear that if that court really issued a writ of error, it had either arrived at the conclusion that this was improvidently done or that for other reasons it could not be maintained.

And the petition set up no action by the supreme court to compel its writ to be respected and no effort on petitioner's part to procure such action, nor any effort to supply a copy of the record and proceedings. Ableman v. Booth, 62 U. S. 21 How. 506, 512 [16: 169, 172].

The averments in reference to this matter are so vague and indefinite that interference might well be declined for that reason. At all events, inasmuch as the right of review in an appellate court is purely a matter of state concern, we can neither anticipate nor overrule the action of the state courts in that regard, since a denial of the right altogether would constitute no violation of the Constitution of the United States. What petitioner asks us to do is to construe the laws of New Jersey for ourselves, hold that they give a writ of error to the supreme court, and discharge petitioner on the ground, either that the courts of New Jersey have arrived at a different conclusion and denied the writ, or have granted it and refused to make it effectual. In either aspect, we are unable thus to revise the proceedings in those courts.

3. It is further contended that the petitioner was denied due process of law and the equal protection of the laws in that one of the jurors by whom he was tried was an alien. The allegation of the petition is "that Samuel Ader, a juror on the jury that convicted your petitioner, is not and never was a citizen of the United States of America."

Nothing is said as to when this matter came to petitioner's knowledge, and, for ought that appears, it may have been inquired into by the courts of New Jersey, and the fact determined to be otherwise than alleged, or the objection may have been raised after verdict and overruled because coming too late. The statute of New Jersey provides that every petit juror returned for the trial of any action of a criminal nature shall be a citizen of the state, and resident within the county from which he shall be taken, and above the age of *twenty- [300] one and under the age of sixty-five years; and if any person who is not so qualified shall be summoned as a juror on a trial of any such action in any of the courts of the state, it shall be good cause of challenge to any such juror, "Provided, That no exception to any such juror on account of his citizenship, or age, or any other legal disability, shall be allowed after he has been sworn or affirmed." N. J. Rev. 532. This proviso is brought forward from an act of November 10, 1797 (N. J. Acts, 22d Gen. Assem. 1797, 250). The Constitution of New Jersey of 1776 provided that "the inestimable right of trial by jury shall remain confirmed as a part of the law of this colony, without repeal, forever." And the Constitution of 1844 declares that "the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate." It is urged that the above-mentioned proviso, which has been part of the laws of New Jersey for nearly one hundred years, should now be held by this court contrary to the Constitution of that state, although the courts of the state may have held it in this case in harmony therewith, and have certainly not pronounced it invalid.

The line of argument seems to be that by the common law as obtaining in New Jersey an alien was disqualified from serving on a jury; that the disqualification was absolute; that the common law could not be changed in that particular under the state Constitution; that the proviso was therefore void; and that, if an alien sat upon a jury, the common-law right of trial by jury would have been invaded. So far as the petition shows, this contention may have been disposed of adversely to petitioner by the state courts; and moreover, we are of opinion that in itself it cannot be sustained as involving an infraction of the Constitution of the United States.

In Hollingsworth v. Duane, reported in Wall. C. C. 147, and also, but imperfectly, in 4 Dall. 353 [1: 864], it was held by the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, at October term, 1801, that alienage of a juror is cause of challenge, but is not per se sufficient to set aside a verdict, and this whether the party complaining knew of the fact or not; and that this was the rule at common law as shown by authorities cited from the Year Books and otherwise.

301*In Wassum v. Feeney, 121 Mass. 93, 23 Am. Rep. 258, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts held that "a verdict will not be set aside because one of the jurors was an infant, where his name was on the list of jurors returned and impaneled, though the losing party did not know of the infancy until after the verdict." And Mr. Justice Gray, then chief justice of Massachusetts, delivering the opinion, said: "When a party has had an opportunity of challenge, no disqualification of a juror entitles him to a new trial after verdict. This convenient and necessary rule has been applied by this court, not only to a juror disqualified by interest or relation (Jeffries v. Randall, 14 Mass. 205; Woodward v. Dean, 113 Mass. 297), but, even in a capital case, to a juror who was not of the country or vicinage, as required by the Constitution. Declaration of Rights, art. 13; Anonymous, cited by Jackson, J., in 1 Pick. 41, 42. The same rule has been applied by other courts to disqualification by reason of alienage, although not in fact known until after verdict. Hollingsworth v. Duane, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 353 [1: 864], Wall. C. C. 147; State v. Quarrel, 2 Bay, 150, 1 Am. Dec. 637; Presbury v. Com. 9 Dana, 203; Rex v. Sutton, 8 Barn. & C. 417, same case, nom. Rex v. Despard, 2 Man. & R. 406. In Re Chelsea Waterworks Co. 10 Exch. 731, Baron Parke said: 'In the case of a trial by jury de medietate linguæ, which by the 47th section of the jury act is expressly reserved to an alien, he may not know whether proper persons are on the jury; yet if he was found guilty, and sentenced to death, the verdict would not be set aside because he was tried by improper persons, for he ought to have challenged them.' See also Case of a Jurymen, 12 East, 231, note; Hill v. Yates, 12 East, 229."

The great weight of authority is to that effect, 302† though *there are a few cases to the contrary. Thus in Guykowski v. People, 2 Ill. 476, it was held that a new trial should be granted because one of the jurors was an alien when sworn, of which fact the defendant was ignorant at the time; but in Greenup v. Stoker, 8 Ill. 202, the supreme court of Illinois, through Purple, J., reluctantly concluded that it was not indispensable to hold that that case was not the law, but limited its application to capital cases; and in Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 352, it was finally overruled. Mr. Justice Breese spoke for the court, and it was held that alienage in a juror was not a positive disqualification, but ground of exemption or of challenge and nothing more.

It has been held that, under the Constitution of New York, the defendant in a capital case cannot consent to be tried by less than a full jury of twelve men (Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128), and that, under the Constitution of California, a law authorizing a change of the place of trial of a criminal action to another county than that where the crime was committed, on application of the prosecution without defendant's consent, was invalid (People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 11 L. R. A. 75); but in neither of these cases was it intimated that objection to individual jurors could not be waived by the accused, or that trial by jury would be violated if persons who were open to challenge happened to be impaneled. The disqualification of alienage is cause of challenge propter defectum, on account of personal objection, and if, voluntarily or through negligence or want of knowledge, such objection fails to be insisted on, the conclusion that the judgment is thereby invalidated is wholly inadmissible. The defect is not fundamental as affecting the substantial rights of the accused, and the verdict is not void for want of power to render it. United States v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 72 [27: 857, 859]. Whether, where the defendant is without fault and may have been prejudiced, a new trial may not be granted on such ground, is another question. That is not the inquiry here, but whether the law of New Jersey is invalid under the Constitution of that state, and this judgment void because one of the jurors who tried petitioner may have been an alien. If, prior to the filing of the petition, the objection had been *brought before the state 303 courts and overruled, we perceive no reason for declining to be bound by their view of the effect of the state Constitution; and, if the matter had not been called to their attention, it does not appear why that should not have been or should not now be done.

In any view, we cannot hold, on this petition, that petitioner has been denied due process of law or that protection of the laws accorded to all others similarly situated.

The circuit court was right in declining by writ of habeas corpus to obstruct the ordinary administration of the criminal laws of New Jersey through the tribunals of that state in Wood v. Brush ("Re Wood") 140 U. S. 278, 289 [35: 505, 509], and its order is affirmed.

†Wharton's Case, Yelv. 24; 1 Co. Inst. 158a; 21 Vin. Abr. 274, Trial; 2 Hale, P. C. chap. 36, 271; 2 Hawk. P. C. 568, 572; Queen v. Hepburn, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 290 [3: 348]; Brewer v. Jacobs, 22 Fed. Rep. 217; Gillespie v. State, 3 Yerg. 507, 29 Am. Dec. 137; Costly v. State, 19 Ga. 614, 628; Siller v. Cooper, 4 Bibb, 90; State

v. Bunger, 14 La. Ann. 465; State v. Beeder, 44 La. Ann. 1007; Forman v. Hunter, 59 Iowa, 550; State v. Patrick, 3 Jones, L. 443; Brown v. State, 52 Ala. 345; Brown v. People, 20 Colo. 163; State v. Jackson, 27 Kan. 581, 41 Am. Rep. 424, and cases there collected.

WILLIAM HAWS ET AL., Appts.,
v.
VICTORIA COPPER MINING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 303-319.)

Jurisdiction of this court—order on new trial—description of property—objection—suit for mining claim—notice of location—marking boundaries—testimony.

1. Under the act of April 7, 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 27), the jurisdiction of this court on appeal from the judgment of a territorial supreme court is limited to determining whether the facts found are sufficient to sustain the judgment, and to reviewing the rulings of the court on the admission or rejection of testimony, when exceptions have been duly taken.
2. The objection that the trial court did not consider, on the motion for new trial, affidavits of newly discovered evidence, is answered by the order which recites that it was heard upon such affidavits.
3. Findings sufficiently describe property where the judgment and complaint together furnish means to identify the property.
4. A party cannot avail himself on appeal of the objection that a finding is not supported by the evidence, where he omits to object in the trial court to such finding and thereby causes the omission from the record of the testimony in supporting it.
5. An employee who makes a relocation of a mining claim on which he is employed to work, and takes forcible possession thereof, cannot set up any flaw in the title of his employer, in an action by the latter to recover possession.
6. A notice of mining location is not required to be recorded when there is no mining district recorder, and the rules and regulations of the district are no longer in force and effect.
7. Mining locations distinctly marked on the ground so that their boundaries can be readily traced are sufficient under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324, as against subsequent locators, irrespective of the posting of notices.
8. Testimony of the amount expended in working a mine, by plaintiff in an action to recover it, is admissible in view of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324, requiring a certain amount of labor in improvements on it each year.

[No. 66.]

Argued November 15, 18, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

APPPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah, affirming a judgment of a lower court of that territory in favor of the plaintiff, the Victoria Copper Mining Company, against William Haws et al., defendants, for the recovery of two mining claims. Affirmed.

See same case below, 7 Utah, 515.

304] *The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederic D. McKenney, S. F. Phillips, Charles H. Toll, and D. V. Burns for appellants.

Messrs. C. H. Armes, A. A. Birney, and C. C. Dey for appellee.

NOTE.—As to ownership of mines; United States statutes as to right of support of surface,—see note to United States v. Castillero, 17: 448.

As to title to water by appropriation; common-law rule; rule of mining states,—see note to Atchison v. Peterson, 22: 414.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The Victoria Copper Mining Company, a corporation created under the laws of the state of Illinois, brought its action to recover possession of two mining claims known as the "Antietam lode" and the "Copper the Ace lode." The mines thus designated were fully and specifically described in the complaint, which averred that the defendant had by force and violence ousted the complainants from the property. In addition to the averments essential to justify a judgment for possession, the complaint contained allegations deemed to be sufficient to authorize the granting of an injunction, which was prayed for, restraining the defendant from taking or shipping or selling ore extracted or to be extracted from the mines in controversy. The prayer of the complaint was for possession and $25,000 damages, the value of ore averred to have been previously unlawfully taken by the defendants. The defendants jointly answered, specifically denying each allegation of the complaint, and by cross-complaint, Edward W. Keith, Samuel R. Whitall, William V. R. Whitall, and Michael Smith alleged that they were the owners in fee of the mines, subject to the paramount title of the United States, and they prayed that their title be quieted. The averments of the cross-bill were traversed by specific denials. Upon these issues, a jury having first been waived, the case was tried by the court, which found the following facts, which findings were tantamount to concluding that the averments of the bill of complaint had been proved:

"Findings of Fact.

"First. That Lewis R. Dyer, the locator of the two mining claims described in the complaint herein, called respectively *'Antie-[305] tam lode' and 'Copper the Ace lode,' and situated in Uintah county, territory of Utah, at and prior to the time of locating the same, discovered and appropriated a mineral vein or lode of rock in place.

"Second. That at the time of discovery of said vein or lode and the location of said mining claims, the land included within the boundaries of said mining claims was public mineral land, wholly unoccupied and unclaimed.

"Third. That after the discovery of said vein or lode or mineral-bearing rock in place, to wit, on the 17th day of September, 1887, said Lewis R. Dyer, being a citizen of the United States, located the two mining claims described in the complaint herein by writing on a tree standing at, or in close proximity to, the place or places of discovery of said vein or lode the two notices of location, one for each of said claims.

"Fourth. That said notices each described the respective claims by reference to said tree; also respectively described the boundaries of each claim by courses and distances from said tree; that each of said notices contained the name of the locator and date of location; that said tree was a sufficient natural object by which said claims and each of them could be identified.

"Fifth. That soon after the writing of said notices of location and during the month of September, 1887, said Dyer marked sufficiently on the ground the boundaries of said mining claims and each of them by setting suitable stakes or posts at the corners of each of said claims; also at the center of the respective side lines of each of said claims; also by writing on the stakes to identify them with reference to the respective claims, and securing said stakes by stones piled around them.

"Sixth. That thereafter, on the 13th day of February, 1888, said Dyer caused a copy of said location notices and each of them to be recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county of Uintah; that there was not at that time, or at the time of locating said claims, any mining district recorder; that said mining claims were situated in what had 306] *been known as the 'Carbonate mining district;' that the rules and regulations of said mining district had long prior to the 17th day of September, 1887, fallen into disuse, and were not then, or for a long time prior thereto had not been, in force and effect.

"Seventh. That the plaintiff is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and was so organized on the 15th day of May, 1888.

"Eighth. That on the 4th day of May, 1888, said Lewis R. Dyer duly transferred an equal undivided one half of said mining claims, and each of them, to Edward A. Ferguson and August Bohn, Jr., and that thereafter, to wit, on the 28th day of May, 1888, said Lewis R. Dyer, Edward A. Ferguson, and August Bohn, Jr., duly transferred and conveyed said mining claims and each of them to the plaintiff company.

Ninth. That since said 17th day of September, 1887, until the 10th day of June, 1889, said Dyer and his grantee, the plaintiff herein, continuously worked upon and improved said mining claims and each of them, and actually possessed the same, and have expended in said work and improvements upward of the sum of $7,000; that said mining claims are contiguous to each other, and were worked jointly and in common; that the work done and improvements made on said claims were such as did develop said claims and each of them and that for each of the calendar years of 1887, 1888, and 1889 more than $100 worth of work was actually done on each of said claims by said Dyer and his grantee, the plaintiff herein.

"Tenth. That on Sunday night, the 9th day of June, 1889, while said plaintiff was in actual possession of said claims and working the same, by its agents and employees, the defendant William Haws went upon the grounds of said mining claims with two men, and wrongfully took possession of the same and the working upon the same, prepared to hold such possession by force, and did wrongfully keep the plaintiff and its employees from thereafter working on said mining claims, and wrongfully excluded them therefrom, and that said William Haws and Heber Timothy and their 307] grantees, the other *defendants therein, have ever since wrongfully excluded the plaintiff from the possession of said mining claims.

"Eleventh. That prior to the said 9th day of June, 1889, said William Haws was an employee of the plaintiff and its grantors working on said mining claims; that said Haws so worked from the 11th day of February, 1888, until the 13th day of August, 1888, and from October 24, 1888, to December 21, 1888, and again resumed work in the month of March, 1889, and continued to work for plaintiff up to and including the 1st day of June, 1889, when he voluntarily left the employ of plaintiff; that while at work for plaintiff in the year of 1888 said Haws formed the secret intention of taking possession of said mines and mining claims.

"Twelfth. That on or about the 7th day of June, 1889, said Haws procured the defendant Heber Timothy to join and assist him in making a location of the ground described in the complaint herein, which was then being actually possessed and worked by plaintiff, and on that day said Haws and Timothy, without right of entry on the ground, set sufficient stakes to mark the boundaries of the two claims, which they called 'Scottish Chief' and 'Ontario mine' lode mining claims; that they also posted on a stake placed near the place of discovery of plaintiff's aforesaid claims location notices for each of said claims; that the location notice of said Scottish Chief lode was signed by said Heber Timothy and William Haws, and recited that the location was a 'relocation' of the Antietam lode; that the said location notice of the Ontario mine lode was signed by said William Haws, and recited that the location was a 'relocation' of the Copper the Ace.

"Thirteenth. That on the 4th day of June, 1889, a mining district was organized including within its boundaries the ground heretofore described called the 'Carbonate district;' that said Scottish Chief and Ontario mine location notices were recorded on the 11th day of June, 1889, in the records of said Carbonate mining district.

"Fourteenth. That on or about the 12th day of September, 1889, while holding possession of said mining claims of plaintiff aforesaid, under the wrongful entry of said Haws aforesaid, *aided by said Timothy, with the consent 308 of said Haws and at his instigation, and for the purpose of omitting the name of said Haws from the location notices, in anticipation of proceedings being taken by plaintiff to regain possession of its said mining claims, set a discovery stake within the limits and boundaries of plaintiff's said mining locations and not far distant from the place of discovery of plaintiff's said mining claims, and then and there placed two notices of locations signed by said Heber Timothy, claiming to locate two mining claims under the respective names of 'Valao' and 'Copper King,' and set sufficient stakes and marks to describe and designate the boundaries of said mining locations and each of them.

"Fifteenth. That said Haws was to have and own by agreement made with said Timothy all of said Copper King and one half of said Valao; that said claims include substantially the same ground included in and covered by plaintiff's aforesaid claims.

"Sixteenth. That on the 9th day of August, 1890, said William Haws, by an instrument in writing, conveyed to the defendant Heber Timothy his interest in the Scottish Chief and Ontario mine mining claims aforesaid, and that on the same day said Timothy conveyed to the defendant Michael E. Smith the aforesaid Scottish Chief and Ontario described in said deed as relocated September 12, 1889, as the Copper King and Valao lode claims, and that on the 11th day of August, 1890, said defendant Smith, by an instrument in writing, conveyed to the defendants Samuel R. Whitall, William V. R. Whitall, Edward Keith, and Frank A. Keith an undivided one half interest in said Valao and Copper King claims.

"Seventeenth. That on or about the 29th day of August, 1890, plaintiff had its aforesaid mining claims surveyed and stakes reset that sufficiently marked the boundaries of said claims and each of them and the place of discovery; that at the place of discovery plaintiff caused to be posted, on the 29th day of August, 1890, an addendum notice to each of the original notices of location, which said addendum notices were duly signed by the secretary of plaintiff and dated, and respectively described the claims by metes and bounds 309]as *ascertained by actual survey, and also by reference to the permanent workings of the claims; that said notices were recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county of Uintah on August 29, 1890.

"Eighteenth. That the description of said claims as given in said addendum notices is the same description as given in the complaint of the plaintiff herein; also that the official survey for patent of said mining claims of plaintiff was made in exact accordance with said description and the boundary stakes of said claims.

"Nineteenth. That in the months of August and September, 1890, and prior to the commencement of this action, the defendants wrongfully extracted and carried away 25 tons of ore taken from plaintiff's said mining claims, and sold all but 7 tons thereof for the net sum of $1,897.57, except as to the cost of hauling and extracting, amounting to $34 per ton."

From these findings the court deduced the following conclusions of law:

"1. That the plaintiff was at the time of the commencement of this action, and still is, the owner of and entitled to the possession of the mining claims particularly and specifically described in the complaint of the plaintiff herein, and called respectively 'Antietam lode' and 'Copper the Ace lode' mining claims, which said mining claims and each of them were at the time of the commencement of this action, and have ever since continued to be, and now still are, valid mining claims, embracing the premises described in the complaint herein, subject only to the paramount title of the United States.

"2. That the defendants or any of them or any person claiming under them have no title or interest in said premises whatsoever and had none at the time of the commencement of this action.

"3. That said plaintiff is entitled to a judgment or decree against said defendants for the possession of the Antietam lode and Copper the Ace lode' mining claims and premises embraced therein, as described in said complaint, and confirming its title to the same, and that the defendants have no right, title, or interest in said premises or any part thereof or*in[310 the ores extracted therefrom; also that plaintiff is entitled to the 7 tons of ore removed by the defendants and not disposed of, and also for $1,047.57 damages, and also for the costs of this action; also enjoining the said defendants and each of them, their servants, agents, and employees, and every one acting under them or any of them, from extracting or removing ore therefrom."

Upon these findings and conclusions a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, that it "recover from the defendants, William Haws, Heber Timothy, Edward W. Keith, Frank H. Keith, Samuel R. Whitall, William V. R. Whitall, and Michael E. Smith, the possession of the Antietam lode and Copper the Ace lode mining claims, situated in the Carbonate mining district, in the county of Uintah, territory of Utah, and the premises embraced therein, and each and every part thereof, the same being specifically described in the complaint of the complainant herein, and confirming the title to said plaintiff in and to the same." There was also judgment for damages and costs in the sum of $1,692.17, and a decree for an injunction restraining the defendants from extracting or removing ore from the mines.

On December 3, 1890, the defendants filed their notice of intention to apply for a new trial on the following grounds:

"1. Irregularities in the proceedings of the court and an abuse of discretion in the court by which defendants were prevented from having a fair trial.

"2. Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and decision.

"3. Newly discovered evidence material to defendants, and which could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at the trial.

"4. That the findings are against law.

"5. Errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by defendants."

On the day this notice was given the court extended the time for filing the "specifications of particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and the affidavits as to the newly discovered evidence." When this period *elapsed the defendants pre- [311 sented their specifications of particulars (which was required by the Utah law, Stringfellow v. Cain, 99 U. S. 613 [25:422]), complaining only of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 12, 14, 17, and 19. The affidavits relied on as to the newly discovered evidence, for the purpose of obtaining a new trial, were also filed. In support of the complaint as to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings specially objected to on that ground, there was filed an excerpt from the testimony, the certificate appended thereto reciting: "The foregoing, together with Exhibits C and D and the map Exhibit 3, is the substance of all the evidence tending to support the findings which are pointed out in defendant's specification of errors as not supported by the evidence and the substance of all the evidence pertaining to or illustrating defendant's assignments of error." Previously to the filing of this statement of the proof which related solely to the controverted findings, the defendant presented his "assignment as to errors of law occurring at the time of the trial, and duly excepted to by the defendants." The errors thus assigned were eleven in number, and all referred to the rulings of the court, in the progress of the trial, rejecting or admitting testimony. On the 13th of February, 1891, the application for a new trial was overruled, the order to that end reciting: "Said motion is heard upon the records and statements, and upon affidavits filed by the defendants in support of their motion." An appeal was taken to the supreme court of the territory, where the judgment was affirmed. 7 Utah, 515. The opinion of the court announced that the findings of the court below were sustained by the proof, and that, as these findings were supported by "competent, relevant, and material evidence," without reference to the action of the court admitting or rejecting testimony, it was unnecessary to determine whether error had been committed in such respect, since, if it had been, it was not reversible because not prejudicial. Subsequently, there was filed in the supreme court an assignment of errors, alleging that the court had erroneously affirmed the judgment below, when it should have reversed the same because of *errors committed by the trial court in admitting incompetent testimony. The matters referred to in the assignment thus filed in the supreme court are identical with those which were embraced in the assignment which had been made below on the application for a new trial, except that the eleventh alleged error assigned upon the appeal to the territorial appellate court is omitted from the latter assignment. Thereafter a paper was filed in the supreme court of the territory beginning as follows:

"This is to certify that on the trial of this cause in the trial court the following rulings of the court on the rejection and admission of evidence were made, all of which were excepted to by defendants and assigned by them as error on appeal to this court, to wit."

This was followed by a brief excerpt from the proceedings had before the trial court, purporting to show exactly what occurred when the rulings rejecting or admitting testimony were made. All the facts which are stated in this paper are also in the record in connection with the specification of errors presented and the assignment of errors made in the trial court on the appeal taken to the supreme court. Appended to the paper is the following certificate:

"The above statement embraces part of the testimony of the witnesses named, but not all, nor does it contain the testimony of other witnesses sworn in the case, but is correct so far as it goes, except showing the corrections and explanations appearing.

"October 12, 1891.

"James A. Miner, Judge.

"C. S. Zane, C. J."

The defendants below prosecute this appeal from the judgment of the supreme court of the territory of Utah.
160 U. S.

Under the act of April 7, 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 27), our jurisdiction on appeal from the judgment of a territorial supreme court is limited to determining whether the facts found are sufficient to sustain the judgment rendered, and to reviewing the rulings of the court on the admission or rejection of testimony, *when exceptions have been duly taken to such rulings. We cannot, therefore, enter into an investigation of the preponderance of proof, but confine ourselves to the findings and their sufficiency to support the legal conclusions which the court below has rested on them. Stringfellow v. Cain, 99 U. S. 610, 613 [25:421, 422]; Idaho & O. Land Improv. Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 509 [33:433]; Mammoth Min. Co. v. Salt Lake Foundry & Mach. Co. 151 U. S. 447 [38:229]. The statement of facts contemplated by the statute is one to be made by the supreme court from whose judgment the appeal is taken. But where that court affirms the findings of the trial court, being thus adopted by the supreme court of the territory, they subserve the purpose of a finding of fact on the appeal to this court. Stringfellow v. Cain, ubi supra. Guided by this rule, we will examine the errors pressed upon our attention, considering first in order those which are general in their nature, and, second, those which it is claimed result from the action of the trial court in rejecting or admitting testimony.

1. The contention that the trial court did not consider the affidavits as to the newly discovered evidence presented for the purpose of obtaining a new trial, is fully answered by the order refusing the new trial, which recites "that it was heard upon the record and statement and upon the affidavits filed by the defendants in support of their motion." This takes the case entirely out of the principle announced in Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 140 [36:917]. That case involved a refusal to exercise discretion, whilst the contention here amounts to the assertion of a right to control a discretion when it has been lawfully exerted.

2. A further claim of error is that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, because the Utah statute (2 Comp. Laws, § 3241) requires that "in an action for the recovery of real property, it must be described in the complaint with such certainty as to enable an officer, upon execution, to identify it;" and that the mines in dispute are designated in the findings solely by reference to the descriptions contained in the complaint which it is asserted does not sufficiently identify the premises to enable an officer to execute a writ of *possession. If this proposition was [314 supported by the record, the necessary result would be that the judgment of the court below operates upon no property which can be identified; hence the defendant, and not plaintiffs in error, would be prejudiced thereby, and would be the only party entitled to complain. But the findings amply support the reference made in the judgment to the premises sued for, to wit, the "Antietam lode and Copper the Ace lode mining claims, situated in the Carbonate mining district in the county of Uintah, territory of Utah, and premises embraced therein, and each and every part thereof, the same being specifically described in the complaint herein." It is not doubtful that the decree and complaint taken together fully describe and furnish ample means for identification of the property to which defendant in error was adjudged to be entitled.

3. It was also urged, for the first time, upon the argument at bar, that as U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2310, provides that no location of a mining claim shall be made until the discovery of a vein or lode within the limits of the mine located, the complaint was fatally defective in not averring such a discovery prior to Dyer's alleged location, and that there was an entire absence of evidence to justify the trial judge in concluding as he did in his first finding that Dyer, "at and prior to the time of locating the claims, discovered and appropriated a mineral vein or lode of rock in place." The contention that the complaint did not aver discovery is without merit. No demurrer was filed, and so far as the record discloses, no objection was made to the admissibility of proof of discovery on the ground that it was not alleged, nor was error in this particular assigned in the lower court or in the supreme court of the territory or in the record as required by law. We might well dismiss the assertion that there was no evidence which justified the trial judge in stating in his first proposition of fact that there had been a discovery, with the answer that it amounts merely to a contention that the evidence did not justify the finding. The record, however, demonstrates the unsoundness of the contention. Under the law of Utah, those 315] against whom the judgment *was rendered in the trial court were obliged, on motion for a new trial, to specify what particular findings of fact were objected to as unsupported by the evidence. In obedience to this requirement, the defendant specified the findings which he charged were not borne out by the proof, and in so doing made no complaint as to the first finding which contains the matter now asserted here to have no support whatever in the proof. The practice in addition required the trial court to certify to the supreme court of the territory only "so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the particular errors or grounds specified and no more." Stringfellow v. Cain, 99 U. S. 601 [21. 421], and such is the certificate annexed to the extracts from the evidence which made up the record taken to the supreme court of the territory. It therefore follows that the defendants below, after failing in the trial court to object to the first finding as unsupported by the evidence, and thereby securing the omission from the record of all the testimony supporting such finding, now seek to avail themselves of the absence of the proof which they have caused to be omitted from the record.

4. It is contended that the findings do not justify the decree because on their face it appears that the discovery by Dyer was merely of one vein, and as the claims located under this discovery were two in number and 3,000 feet in length, they were void because in excess of the quantity allowed by law. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2320.

Premitting the question whether this contention is not in reality a mere assertion that the findings are not supported by the evidence, it is without merit. Obviously, if the legal proposition upon which it depends be well founded, as to which we express no opinion, it is equally applicable to the mining claims asserted by the plaintiff in error. The findings conclusively establish that the Haws and Timothy pretended locations, upon which the whole case as to the plaintiffs in error rests, were placed upon practically the same ground covered by the mining claims of the defendant in error; indeed, the finding is that they (the Haws' claims) were mere relocations of the existing mines, and therefore equal to them* [316 in length. It follows that if there was an excess of quantity as to the claims asserted, on the one hand, a like excess necessarily existed in the claim relied upon on the other. True the location by Haws was made, not only in his own name, but in the name of Timothy, thereby, on the face of such location, implying that there was not one location of 3,000 feet but two locations of 1,500 feet each, by different persons. The findings, however, completely dispel this situation, for they conclusively determine that Timothy was a mere instrumentality for Haws in the execution of his wrongful purposes, and hence that the two mines, which were apparently located in the name of Haws and Timothy, were in reality each located by Haws himself. But the findings go further than this; they absolutely preclude the possibility of a discovery or valid location by Haws or his confederate Timothy. The facts on this subject, established by the findings, are briefly these: Haws, an employee of the defendant in error, while engaged in such employment in working the mines by it located and of which it was in the actual possession, conceived the secret intention of taking possession of the property of his employers for his own benefit. In execution of this illegal purpose he procured the assistance of Timothy in making a so-called location on the ground which was then occupied by his employer and upon which he (Haws) was working as its servant. That they set stakes and posted notices so as to cover the claims already discovered and which he knew were being worked at the time these stakes were placed and notices posted, and that shortly after this wrongful driving of stakes, Haws, in the night-time, ousted the defendant in error from the possession which it enjoyed, and the illegal dispossession thus accomplished was thereafter maintained by force. The elementary rule is that one must recover on the strength of his own and not on the weakness of the title of his adversary, but this principle is subject to the qualification that possession alone is adequate as against a mere intruder or trespasser without even color of title, and especially so against one who has taken possession by force and violence. This exception is based upon the *most obvious conception of justice. [317 and good conscience. It proceeds upon the theory that a mere intruder and trespasser can not make his wrongdoing successful by asserting a flaw in the title of the one against whom the wrong has been by him committed. In Christy v. Scott, 55 U. S. 14 How. 282, 292 [14: 422, 426], this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Curtis, said:

"A mere intruder cannot enter on a person actually seised, and eject him, and then question his title, or set up an outstanding title in another. The maxim that the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of the defendant's, is applicable to all actions for the recovery of property. But if the plaintiff had actual prior possession of the land, this is strong enough to enable him to recover it from a mere trespasser, who entered without any title. He may do so by a writ of entry, where that remedy is still practiced (Jackson v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 1 Cush. 575), or by an ejectment (Allen v. Rivington, 2 Saund. 111; Doe, Burroughs, v. Read, 8 East, 356; Doe, Hughes, v. Dyball, 1 Mood. & M. 346; Jackson v. Hazen, 2 Johns. 438; Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. 171), or he may maintain trespass (Catteris v. Coeper, 4 Taunt. 548; Graham v. Peat, 1 East, 246)."

So, also, in Burt v. Panjaud, 99 U. S. 180, 182 [25: 451, 453], it was said, Mr. Justice Miller expressing the opinion of the court: "In ejectment or trespass quare clausum fregit, actual possession of the land by the plaintiff, or his receipt of rent therefor prior to his eviction, is prima facie evidence of title, on which he can recover against a mere trespasser." The same principle was enforced in Campbell v. Rankin, 99 U. S. 261, 262 [25: 435, 436], and application of it to various conditions of fact is shown in Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513 [24: 732]; Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 287 [26: 735, 738]; Glacier Mountain S. Min. Co. v. Willis, 127 U. S. 471, 481 [32: 172, 174].

There remains only to consider the errors which are asserted to have arisen from rulings of the trial court, admitting or rejecting testimony.

(a) The objections to the admissibility of the copies of Dyer's notice of location become wholly immaterial, in view of the findings on the subject of the actual location made by Dyer. The sixth finding establishes that there [318] was not at the* time the copies were left for record any mining district recorder, and that the rules and regulations of what had been known as the "Carbonate mining district," in which said claim was situated, had long prior to Dyer's location fallen into disuse, and were not then, and for a long time prior thereto had not been, in force and effect. In such event there was no statutory requirement that notices should be recorded. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324; North Noonday Min. Co. v. Orient Min. Co. 1 Fed. Rep. 522, 533. Moreover, the acts of Dyer, enumerated in the fourth finding, constituted a sufficient location by him of the two claims, as against subsequent locators, irrespective of the posting of notices. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324, merely required that the locations shall be distinctly marked on the ground, so that their boundaries can be readily traced. Book v. Justice Min. Co. 58 Fed. Rep. 109, 112 et seq. and authorities cited, p. 113.

(b) The testimony of McLaughlin, tending to show knowledge by Haws of Dyer's location, that he recognized it, also becomes immaterial, in view of the findings establishing the nature and extent of such location. The same reason is applicable to the objection made to the testimony of Doneher.

(c) It is contended that the district court erred in permitting two witnesses to testify as to the conversation had with Haws relative to his intention to take possession of the mines operated by the plaintiff. This evidence tended to support certain allegations contained in the second cause of action set out in the complaint, and appears material to such allegations; and was doubtless accepted as evidence in support of the fact, stated at the close of the eleventh finding of the trial judge, "that while at work for the plaintiff in the year 1888, said Haws formed a secret intention of taking possession of the mines and mining claims of plaintiff." There was no attack upon the sufficiency of the proof to sustain this finding; moreover, the testimony of Haws as contained in the record admits that he formed the intention to take possession under the suggestion that he considered that he had the right to make a relocation.

(d) Lastly, it is contended that the district court erred* in permitting the plaintiff to [319] prove that it had expended between $7,000 and $8,000 in working the mines, from the time it took possession until it was ousted therefrom by the defendant Haws. This testimony was offered to show good faith in working the property by the plaintiff company. We think it was competent, in view of the requirements of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324, "that on each claim located after May 10, 1872, and until a patent has been issued therefor, no less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year."

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Gray was not present at the argument and took no part in the decision of this case.

WILLIAM H. MARKHAM, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 319-326.)

Sufficiency of indictment—perjury—substance of offense.

1. An oath is sufficiently alleged in an indictment for perjury in taking it, where it is stated to have been taken before a special examiner of the pension bureau of the United States, as that officer had authority to administer the oath under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4744, as amended by the act of July 25, 1882, and under the act of March 3, 1891.
2. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5396, an indictment for perjury is sufficient after verdict, which states the officer before whom the alleged false oath was taken, that he was competent to administer an oath, gives the words of the alleged false statement, and charges that it was part of a deposi-

NOTE.—The oath must be lawfully administered by competent authority, to convict of perjury. See note to United States v. Curtis, 27: 534.

As to sufficiency of evidence to convict of perjury, see note to United States v. Wood, 10: 527.

tion given by the accused before such officer and was material to an inquiry then pending before and within the jurisdiction of the United States Commissioner of Pensions, where the inquiry manifestly related to a claim of the accused for a pension on account of injuries received by him as a soldier.

8. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1025, does not dispense with the requirement in § 5396 that an indictment for perjury must set forth the substance of the offense charged.

[No. 544.]

Submitted November 18, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky to review a judgment of that court convicting William H. Markham of the crime of perjury. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

The plaintiff in error was indicted in the district court of the United States for the district of Kentucky for the crime of perjury as defined in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5392.

The defendant pleaded not guilty. The first and second counts related to certain statements by the accused, alleged to have been wilfully, falsely, and feloniously made, in a deposition given, under oath, before G. C. Loomis, a special examiner of the pension bureau of the United States, such statements being material to an inquiry pending before the Commissioner of Pensions in reference to a claim of the accused for a pension from the United States. The third count set out another statement of the accused in the same deposition, and charged that he did not believe it to be true.

The defendant was found guilty upon the fourth count of the indictment, which was as follows:

"And the grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that at Bowling Green, in the district aforesaid, on the seventh day of October, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-two, the matter of the hereinafter-mentioned deposition became and was material to an inquiry then pending before and within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions of the United States, at Washington, in the District of Columbia; whereupon said William H. Markham did then, at said Bowling Green, wilfully and corruptly take a solemn oath before G. C. Loomis, then and there a special examiner of the pension bureau of the United States, and then and there a competent officer and having lawful authority to administer said oath, that a certain written deposition then and there by said Markham subscribed was then and there true, and in giving said deposition said Markham was asked by said Loomis a question in substance and effect as follows, to wit: 'Have you received any injury to forefinger of right hand since the war or since your discharge from the army?' (by which said question said 321)*Loomis referred and said Markham well understood said Loomis to refer to the right hand of said Markham) and in answer to said question said Markham then and there made and subscribed an answer and statement in substance and effect as follows, to wit: 'No, sir: I never have;' which said statement that said Markham never had received any injury to the forefinger of his right hand since his, said Markham's, discharge from the army was then and there material to said inquiry, and 'was then and there not true. Whereas in truth and in fact the said Markham had then and theretofore received an injury to the forefinger of his, said Markham's, right hand, as he, the said Markham, then and there very well knew. And so the jurors aforesaid upon their oaths aforesaid say that said Markham did commit wilful and corrupt perjury in the manner and form as in this count aforesaid, against," etc. There was no demurrer to the indictment, nor any motion to quash either of the counts.

The defendant moved for an arrest of judgment upon the following grounds: 1st. That the count upon which he was found guilty charged no offense under the statute. 2d. That its averments did not inform the court that any offense had been committed, nor show that Loomis, the examiner, was authorized to administer the oath alleged. 3d. That the averments did not set forth the proceeding or cause in which the defendant was charged to have given his deposition or made oath to the statement alleged to be false, in such manner as to show that the deposition and the alleged false statement were material to any inquiry or matter before the Commissioner of Pensions, nor to what said inquiry related, nor show that Loomis, special examiner, had any lawful authority to swear or require the defendant to swear to the deposition or statement averred to be false, nor for what purpose, nor upon what cause, or investigation of what claim, or of any claim pending before any department of the government or in any court. 4th. That it did not aver facts sufficient to show the materiality of the oath or statement alleged to have been made. 5th. That the words charged to have been sworn *to by 322 defendant were not averred to have been sworn to wilfully and corruptly. 6th. That it failed to aver what charge was under investigation.

The motion in arrest of judgment was overruled, and the accused was sentenced to make his fine to the United States by the payment of $5, and to be imprisoned at hard labor in the Indiana state prison, south, at Jeffersonville, Indiana, for the full period of two years from a day named. From that judgment the present writ of error was prosecuted.

Mr. Samuel McKee for plaintiff in error.
Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The contention that the indictment was insufficient in law cannot be sustained.

By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4744, as amended by the act of July 25, 1882, chap. 349, it is provided: "The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail from time to time clerks or persons employed in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pension or bounty land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party appearing on such examinations to be guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims; and any person so detailed shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits and depositions in the course of such examinations, and to orally examine witnesses, and may employ a stenographer when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions, in important cases, such stenographer to be paid by such clerk or person, and the amount so paid to be allowed in his 323 counts." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4744, *22 Stat. at L. 175. And by § 3 of the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 548, it was provided: "That the same power to administer oaths and take affidavits, which by virtue of section 4744 of the Revised Statutes is conferred upon clerks detailed by the Commissioner of Pensions from his office to investigate suspected attempts at fraud on the government through and by virtue of the pension laws, and to aid in prosecuting any person so offending, shall be, and is hereby, extended to all special examiners or additional special examiners employed under authority of Congress to aid in the same purpose." 26 Stat. at L. 1083.

In view of these enactments, the averment that the oath, charged to have been wilfully and corruptly taken, was taken "before G. C. Loomis, then and there a special examiner of the pension bureau of the United States, and then and there a competent officer and having lawful authority to administer said oath," was sufficient, in connection with the statute, to inform the accused of the official character and authority of the officer before whom the oath was taken.

It is provided by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5392, that "every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or other certificate by him subscribed is true, wilfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed."

And by section 5396 it is declared that "in every presentment or indictment prosecuted against any person for perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offense charged upon the defendant, and by what court, and before whom the oath was taken, averring such court or person to have competent authority to administer the same, together with the proper averment to falsify the matter wherein the perjury is assigned, with- 324 out setting forth the bill, answer, *information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, either in law or equity, or any affidavit, deposition, or certificate, other than as hereinbefore stated, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed."

160 U. S.

The requirement that it shall be sufficient in an indictment for perjury to set forth the substance of the offense is not new in the statutes of the United States. It is so provided in the crimes act of April 30, 1790 (1 Stat. at L. 112, 116, chap. 9, § 18), and the latter act, in the particular mentioned, was the same as that of 23 Geo. II. chap. 11 (7 British Stat. at L. (ed. 1769) p. 221). Referring to the English statute and to the objects for which it was enacted, Mr. Chitty says that the substance of the charge is intended in opposition to its details. 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 307; Rex v. Dowlin, 5 T. R. 311, 317.

Did the fourth count set forth the substance of the offense charged? It gave the name of the officer before whom the alleged false oath was taken; averred that he was competent to administer an oath; set forth the very words of the statement alleged to have been wilfully and corruptly made by the accused; and charged that such false statement was part of a deposition given and subscribed by the accused before that officer, and was material to an inquiry then pending before and within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions of the United States.

The question propounded to the accused, and to which he was alleged wilfully and corruptly to have made a false answer, manifestly pointed to an inquiry pending before the Commissioner of Pensions, in relation to himself as a former soldier in the army; that inquiry presumably related to a claim by him for a pension on account of personal injuries received by him in the service; and the general charge that the statement was made with reference to a pending inquiry before, and within the jurisdiction of, the Commissioner of Pensions, in connection with the distinct, though general, averment that such statement was material to that inquiry, was quite sufficient under the statute. Under the plea of not guilty the government was required to show the materiality of the alleged false statement, and in so doing must *necessarily have 325 disclosed the precise nature of the inquiry to which it related. And it may well be assumed, after verdict, that all such facts appeared in evidence, and that the accused was not ignorant of the nature of the inquiry to which his deposition related and to which the indictment referred.

It was not necessary that the indictment should set forth all the details or facts involved in the issue as to the materiality of such statement, and the authority of the Commissioner of Pensions to institute the inquiry in which the deposition of the accused was taken. In 2 Chitty's Criminal Law, 307, the author says: "It is undoubtedly necessary that it should appear on the face of the indictment that the false allegations were material to the matter in issue. But it is not requisite to set forth all the circumstances which render them material; the simple averment that they were so will suffice." In Rex v. Dowlin, above cited, Lord Kenyon said that it had always been adjudged to be sufficient, in an indictment for perjury, to allege generally that the particular question became a material question. So, in Com. v. Pollard, 12 Met. 225, 229, which was a prosecution for perjury, it was said that

It must be alleged in the indictment that the matter sworn to was material, or the facts set forth as falsely and corruptly sworn to should be sufficient in themselves to show such materiality. In State v. Hayward, 1 Nott & McC. 546, 553, which was also a prosecution for perjury, the court, after observing that it should appear, on the face of the indictment, that the false allegations were material to the matter in issue, adjudged that it was not necessary "to set forth all the circumstances which render them material; the simple averment that they became and were so will be sufficient." Many other authorities are to the effect that the substance of the offense may be set forth without encumbering the indictment with a recital of its details and circumstances.

As the count in question set forth the words of the alleged false statement, and thereby made it impossible for the accused to be again prosecuted on account of that particular statement; as it charged that such statement was material to an inquiry pending before, and within the jurisdiction of, the Commissioner [326] *of Pensions; and as the fair import of that count was that the inquiry before the Commissioner had reference to a claim made by the accused under the pension laws, on account of personal injuries received while he was a soldier, and made it necessary to ascertain whether the accused had, since the war or after his discharge from the army, received an injury to the forefinger of his right hand,—we think that the fourth count, although unskillfully drawn, sufficiently informed the accused of the matter for which he was indicted, and therefore met the requirement that it should set forth the substance of the charge against him.

It is proper to add that U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1025, providing that "no indictment found and presented by a grand jury in any district or circuit or other court of the United States shall be deemed insufficient, nor shall the trial, judgment, or other proceedings thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant," is not to be interpreted as dispensing with the requirement in § 5396 that an indictment for perjury must set forth the substance of the offense charged. An indictment for perjury that does not set forth the substance of the offense will not authorize judgment upon a verdict of guilty. Dunbar v. United States, 156 U. S. 185, 192 [39: 390, 393].

We perceive no error of law in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

327] *LEHIGH MINING & MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Pff. in Err.,

v.
J. J. KELLY, JR., ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 327-355.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court.

Where a corporation was organized in another

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court depending on parties and residence, see note to Emory v. Greenough, 1: 640.

As to colorable conveyances to enable suit to be
444

state than that in which the action was brought, by the stockholders and officers of a corporation of the latter state, and land was conveyed to the former by the latter corporation, without consideration, and only for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the United States circuit court of an action to recover the land on the ground of the diverse citizenship of the parties, the arrangement was collusive and a fraud upon that court, and it properly dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction.

[No. 617.]

Submitted November 11, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia to review a judgment of that court dismissing for want of jurisdiction an action brought by the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, against J. J. Kelly, Jr., et al., to recover the possession of lands. Affirmed.

See same case below, 64 Fed. Rep. 401.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

This action was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Virginia by the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, as a corporation organized under the laws of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Its object was to recover from the defendants, who are citizens of Virginia, the possession of certain lands within the territorial jurisdiction of that court.

*The defendants pleaded not guilty of [328 the trespass alleged, and also filed two pleas, upon which the plaintiff took issue.

The first plea was that "the Virginia Coal & Iron Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Virginia; that as such it has been for the last ten years claiming title to the lands of the defendant J. J. Kelly, Jr., described in the declaration in this case, and said defendants say that, for the purpose of fraudulently imposing on the jurisdiction of this court, said Virginia Coal & Iron Company has during the year 1893 attempted to organize, form, and create under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania a corporation out of its (the Virginia Coal & Iron Company's) own members, stockholders, and officers, to whom it has fraudulently and collusively conveyed the land in the declaration mentioned for the purpose of enabling this plaintiff to institute this suit in this United States court, and said defendants say that said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company is simply another name for the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, composed of the same parties and organized alone for the purpose of giving jurisdiction of this case on [to] this court; wherefore the defendants say that this suit is in fraud of the jurisdiction of this court and should be abated."

The second plea was that "said plaintiffs should not further have or maintain said suit against them, because they say there was no such legally organized corporation as the plaintiff company at the date of the institution brought; motive of transfer; when no objection; coupons; residence of assignor,—see note to M'Donald v. Smalley, 7: 287.

As to jurisdiction of United States courts over
160 U. S.

of this suit, and they say that the real and substantial plaintiff in this suit is the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, which is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Virginia and a citizen of Virginia. And said defendants further say that said Virginia Coal & Iron Company, for the purpose and with the view of instituting and prosecuting this suit in the United States court and of conferring an apparent jurisdiction on said court, did by prearrangement, fraud, and collusion attempt to organize said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company as a corporation of a foreign state, to take and hold the land in the declaration mentioned, for the purpose of giving this court jurisdiction of said suit; where-329] fore defendants say that "the said plaintiff has wrongfully and fraudulently imposed itself on the jurisdiction of this court, has abused its process, and wrongfully impleaded these defendants in this court. Wherefore they pray judgment, etc., that this suit be abated and dismissed, as brought in fraud of this court's jurisdiction."

The cause was submitted by the parties upon the two pleas to the jurisdiction and upon a general replication to each plea, as well as upon an agreed statement of facts.

The agreed statement of facts was as follows: "1. That the land in controversy in this case was, prior to March 1, 1893, claimed by the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, and had been claimed by said last-named company for some twelve years prior to said date. 2. That said Virginia Coal & Iron Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Virginia, and is a citizen of Virginia. 3. That on March 1, 1893, said Virginia Coal & Iron Company executed and delivered a deed of bargain and sale to said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company by which it conveyed all its right, title, and interest in and to the land in controversy to said last-named company in fee simple. 4. That said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, that it was organized in February, 1893, prior to said conveyance, and is and was at the date of commencement of this action a citizen of the state of Pennsylvania, and that it was organized by the individual stockholders and officers of the Virginia Coal & Iron Company. 5. That the purpose in organizing said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company and in making to it said conveyance was to give to this court jurisdiction in this case, but that said conveyance passed to said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company all of the right, title, and interest of said Virginia Coal & Iron Company in and to said land, and that since said conveyances said Virginia Coal & Iron Company has had no interest in said land, and has not and never has had any interest in this suit, and that it owns none of the stock of said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, and it has no interest therein whatever."

330] *It was also agreed that the two pleas should be tried by the court, without a jury, upon the above statement of facts, with the right in either party to object to any fact stated in it on the ground of irrelevancy or incompetency.

The plaintiff, by counsel, objected and excepted to the statement in the first part of the fifth clause of the foregoing statement, viz., "that the purpose of organizing the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company and in making it to said conveyance was to give to this court jurisdiction in this case," because the same was irrelevant and immaterial.

The circuit court, Judge Paul presiding, dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction in the circuit court. 64 Fed. Rep. 401.

Messrs. R. A. Ayers, R. C. Dale, J. F. Bullitt, Jr., J. L. White, A. L. Pridemore, and E. M. Fulton, for plaintiff in error:

The fact that the plaintiff and defendants are citizens of different states, and that "said conveyance passed to said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company all the right, title, and interest of said Virginia Coal & Iron Company in and to said land, and that since said conveyance said Virginia Coal & Iron Company has had no interest in said land, and has not and never has had any interest in this suit, and that it owns none of the stock of the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, and has no interest therein whatever," gave to the circuit court jurisdiction, and the motive in making the conveyance is wholly immaterial, and will not be considered by the court.

Barney v. Baltimore, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 280 (18: 825); McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620 (7: 287); Smith v. Kernochen, 48 U. S. 7 How. 198 (12: 666); Marion v. Ellis, 10 Fed. Rep. 410; Delareaga v. Williams, 5 Sawy. 573; Hoyt v. Wright, 4 Fed. Rep. 163; Briggs v. French, 2 Sumn. 251.

Messrs. F. S. Blair and H. S. K. Morrison, for defendants in error:

The record presents a jurisdictional question only based upon diverse citizenship of the parties, and it was obtained by collusion and a fraud upon the law.

Where no alienation is shown of property or abandonment of the occupancy of offices, and both are shown to have been once possessed, possession is presumed to continue.

2 Whart. Ev. § 1286; Magee v. Scott, 9 Cush. 148, 55 Am. Dec. 49.

The fact that a different name was given by request of these persons in another state for the purpose of forcing upon the United States the jurisdiction of this cause and depriving the courts of Virginia of their lawful jurisdiction, does not destroy the identity or accomplish the intent of the plaintiff, but upon the contrary establishes that it was done to evade the law. Clearly this is an artifice or device to evade the law that controls jurisdiction and deprives another of a legal right. Being such, it falls within the letter and spirit of cases adjudged to be fraudulent.

The William King, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 148 (4: 206); Lee v. Lee, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 44 (8: 860); Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. 186; People, Cald- common-law offenses, see note to United States v. Coolidge, 4: 124.

As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court dependent on residence of parties; proper place of suit,—see note to Roberts v. Lewis, 36: 579.
 160 U. S.

well, v. Kelly, 35 Barb. 452; Randall v. Howard, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 590 (17: 271); Butler v. Farnsworth, 4 Wash. C. C. 101; Morris v. Gilmer, 129 U. S. 315 (32: 690).

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Some of the paragraphs of the agreed statement of facts are so drawn as to leave in doubt the precise thought intended to be expressed in them. But it is clear that the individual stockholders and officers of the Virginia corporation, in February, 1893, organized the Pennsylvania corporation; that immediately thereafter, on the 1st day of March, 1893, the lands in controversy, which the Virginia corporation had for many years claimed to own, and which, during all that period, were in the possession of and claimed by the present defendants, who are citizens of Virginia, were conveyed by it in fee simple to the Pennsylvania corporation so organized; and that the only object for which the stockholders and officers of the Virginia corporation organized the Pennsylvania corporation, and for which the above conveyance was 331] made, was to *create a ease cognizable by the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Virginia. In order to accomplish that object, the present action was commenced on the 2d day of April, 1893. Although the parties have agreed that the above conveyance passed "all of the right, title, and interest" of the Virginia corporation to the corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, it is to be taken, upon the present record, and in view of what the agreed statement of facts contains, as well as of what it omits to disclose, that the conveyance was made without any valuable consideration; that, when it was made the stockholders of the two corporations were identical; that the Virginia corporation still exists with the same stockholders it had when the conveyance of March 1, 1893, was made; and that, as soon as this litigation is concluded, the Pennsylvania corporation, if it succeeds in obtaining judgment against the defendants, can be required by the stockholders of the Virginia corporation, being also its own stockholders, to reconvey the lands in controversy to the Virginia corporation without any consideration passing to the Pennsylvania corporation.

Was the circuit court bound to take cognizance of this action as one that involved a controversy between citizens of different states within the meaning of the Constitution and the acts of Congress regulating the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States? This question can be more satisfactorily answered after we shall have adverted to the principal cases cited in argument. The importance of the question before us, to say nothing of the ingenious and novel mode devised to obtain an adjudication of the present controversy by a court of the United States, justifies a reference to those cases.

The first case is that of Maxwell v. Levy, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 381 [1: 424], decided in the circuit court of the United States for the Pennsylvania district. That was an action of ejectment. The lessor of the plaintiff was a resident and citizen of Maryland, the defendant being a resident and citizen of Pennsylvania. A bill of discovery was filed against the lessor of the plaintiff, in which it was alleged that the conveyance of the premises in controversy was made by one Morris, a citizen of* Pennsylvania, for no other purpose [332 than to give jurisdiction to the circuit court. The answer to that bill admitted that "the lessor of the plaintiff had given no consideration for the conveyance; that his name had been used by way only of accommodation to Morris." Upon a rule to show cause why the action of ejectment should not be stricken from the docket, Mr. Justice Iredell held that the conveyance was "colorable and collusive, and therefore incapable of laying a foundation for the jurisdiction of the court." The full opinion is reported in 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 330 [1: 854].

In Hurst v. McNeil, 1 Wash. C. C. 70, 82,—which was ejectment in a circuit court of the United States, the parties being alleged to be citizens of different states,—one of the questions was as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court. Mr. Justice Washington said: "By the deed of the 15th January, 1774, from Timothy Hurst, Charles, Thomas, and John became entitled to the land therein conveyed, as tenants in common. The deed from Charles Hurst to Biddle, and the reconveyance to Charles, vested the legal estate in this land in Charles; but John and Thomas, it is admitted, were not thereby divested of their rights in equity, though they might be in law. Now the deed to John Hurst was meant to be a real deed or was merely fictitious, and intended to enable John Hurst to sue in this court. If the former, it was void, as the assent of the grantee was not given at the time, nor has it ever been since given; for, though the assent of a grantee to a deed, clearly for his benefit, may be presumed, yet, if a consideration is to be paid, as in this (£1,000 is mentioned), the assent must be proved, or nothing passes by the deed. If it was not meant as a real conveyance, then it may operate to pass to John Hurst a legal title to his own third, which had become vested in Charles, but to which John still retained an equitable title. As to any thing more, the deed cannot be supported; because, as to the rights of Charles and Thomas Hurst and John Baron, they remain unaffected by the deed to John; and being merely a fictitious thing to give jurisdiction to this court, it will not receive our countenance."

McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620, 624 [7: 287, 289], was a suit in equity* in the [333 circuit court of the United States for the district of Ohio to obtain a conveyance of a tract of land situated in that state—the plaintiff, McDonald, being a citizen of Alabama and deriving title from one McArthur, a citizen of Ohio, and the defendants, Smalley and others, being citizens of Ohio. The circuit court dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction and the judgment was reversed by this court. Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for the court, said: "This testimony, which was all that was laid before the court, shows, we think, a sale and conveyance to the plaintiff, which was binding on both parties. McDonald could not have maintained an action for his debt nor McArthur a suit for his land. His title to it was extinguished and the consideration was received. The motives which induced him to make the contract, whether justifiable or censurable, can have no influence on its validity. They were such as had sufficient influence with himself, and he had a right to act upon them. A court cannot enter into them when deciding on its jurisdiction. The conveyance appears to be a real transaction, and the real as well as nominal parties to the suit are citizens of different states. . . . The case depends, we think, on the question whether the transaction between McArthur and McDonald was real or fictitious; and we perceive no reason to doubt its reality, whether the deed be considered as absolute or as a mortgage."

In Smith v. Kernochen, 48 U. S. 7 How. 198, 216 [12: 666, 673], which was ejectment brought in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama, the plaintiff, a citizen of New York, was the assignee for value of a mortgage upon the premises executed by the owner in fee to an Alabama corporation to secure a sum of money. It was charged that the motive of the corporation in making the assignment was to obtain a decision of the Federal courts upon certain matters in dispute between it and the owner in fee of the premises. One of the questions to be determined was whether any title passed to the plaintiff which the circuit court could enforce, if it appeared that the transfer of the mortgage was for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to 334] that court and to enable the *company to prosecute its claim therein, and if it also appeared that the plaintiff was privy to such purpose when he took the assignment. This court, speaking by Mr. Justice Nelson, said: "But the charge [to the jury], we think, may also be sustained upon the ground on which it was placed by the court below. For, even assuming that both parties concurred in the motive alleged, the assignment of the mortgage, having been properly executed and founded upon a valuable consideration, passed the title and interest of the company to the plaintiff. The motive imputed could not affect the validity of the conveyance. This was so held in McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620 [7: 287]. The suit would be free from objection in the state courts. And the only ground upon which it can be made effectual here is, that the transaction between the company and the plaintiff was fictitious and not real, and the suit still, in contemplation of law, between the original parties to the mortgage. The question, therefore, is one of proper parties to give jurisdiction to the Federal courts, not of title in the plaintiff. That would be a question on the merits, to decide which the jurisdiction must first be admitted. The true and only ground of objection in all these cases is, that the assignor or grantor, as the case may be, is the real party in the suit, and the plaintiff on the record but nominal and colorable, his name being used merely for the purpose of jurisdiction. The suit is then, in fact, a controversy between the former and the defendants, notwithstanding the conveyance; and if both parties are citizens of the same state, jurisdiction of course cannot be upheld. McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 625 [7: 289]; Maxwell v. Levy, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 381 [1: 424],

160 U. S.

4 U. S. 4 Dall. 330 [1: 854]; Hurst v. McNeil, 1 Wash. C. C. 70, 80; Briggs v. French, 2 Sumn. 251.

The next case is Jones v. League, 59 U. S. 18 How. 76, 81 [15: 263, 264]. The plaintiff, League, claimed to be a citizen of Maryland. The defendants were citizens of Texas. The action, which was trespass to try title to land, was brought in the district court of the United States for the district of Texas, in which state the land was situated. League claimed under a deed by one Power, a citizen of Texas. This court, speaking by Mr. Justice McLean, said: "In this case jurisdiction is claimed by the citizenship of the parties. The plaintiff avers that he is a citizen of Maryland, and that the defendants are citizens of Texas. In one of the pleas it is averred that the [335] plaintiff lived in Texas twelve years and upwards and that for the purpose of bringing this suit, he went to the state of Maryland, and was absent from Texas about four months. The change of citizenship, even for the purpose of bringing a suit in the Federal court, must be with the bona fide intention of becoming a citizen of the state to which the party removes. Nothing short of this can give him a right to sue in the Federal courts held in the state from whence he removed. If League was not a citizen of Maryland, his short absence in that state, without a bona fide intention of changing his citizenship, could give him no right to prosecute this suit. But it very clearly appears from the deed of conveyance to the plaintiff, by Power, that it was only colorable, as the suit was to be prosecuted for the benefit of the grantor, and the one third of the lands to be received by the plaintiff was in consideration that he should pay one third of the costs, and superintend the prosecution of the suit. The owner of a tract of land may convey it in order that the title may be tried in the Federal courts, but the conveyance must be made bona fide, so that the prosecution of the suit shall not be for his benefit. The judgment of the district court is reversed for want of jurisdiction in that court."

In Barney v. Baltimore, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 280, 288 [18: 825, 827], which was a suit in equity in the circuit court of the United States for Maryland for a partition of real estate and for an account of rents and profits, etc., it appeared that certain persons, citizens of the District of Columbia, conveyed their interest in the property to a citizen of Maryland. It was admitted that the conveyance was made for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, was without consideration, and that the grantee, on the request of the grantors, would reconvey to the latter. Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court, said: "If the conveyance by the Ridgeleys of the district to Samuel C. Ridgeley, of Maryland, had really transferred the interest of the former to the latter, although made for the avowed purpose of enabling the court to entertain jurisdiction of the case, it would have accomplished that purpose. McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620 [7: 287], and several cases since, have well established this rule. But in point of *fact, that conveyance [336] did not transfer the real interest of the grantors. It was made without consideration, with a distinct understanding that the grantors retained all their real interest, and that the deed was to have no other effect than to give jurisdiction to the court. And it is now equally well settled that the court will not, under such circumstances, give effect to what is a fraud upon the court, and is nothing more."

None of these cases sustain the contention of the plaintiffs. All of them concur in holding that the privilege of a grantee or purchaser of property, being a citizen of one of the states, to invoke the jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States for the protection of his rights as against a citizen of another state—the value of the matter in dispute being sufficient for the purpose—cannot be affected or impaired merely because of the motive that induced his grantor to convey, or his vendee to sell and deliver, the property, provided such conveyance or such sale and delivery was a real transaction by which the title passed without the grantor or vendor reserving or having any right or power to compel or require a reconveyance or return to him of the property in question. We adhere to that doctrine.

In harmony with the principles announced in former cases, we hold that the circuit court properly dismissed this action. The conveyance to the Pennsylvania corporation was without any valuable consideration. It was a conveyance by one corporation to another corporation—the grantor representing certain stockholders, entitled collectively or as one body to do business under the name of the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, while the grantee represented the same stockholders, entitled collectively or as one body to do business under the name of the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company. It is true that the technical legal title to the lands in controversy is, for the time, in the Pennsylvania corporation. It is also true that there was no formal agreement upon the part of that corporation "as an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law," that the title should ever be reconveyed to the Virginia corporation. But *when the inquiry involves the jurisdiction of a Federal court,—the presumption in every stage of a cause being that it is without the jurisdiction of a court of the United States, unless the contrary appears from the record (Grace v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278, 283 [27: 932, 934]; Börs v. Preston, 111 U. S. 252, 255 [28: 419, 420]),—we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there exists what should be deemed an equivalent to such an agreement, namely, the right and power of those who are stockholders of each corporation to compel the one holding the legal title to convey, without a valuable consideration, such title to the other corporation. In other words, although the Virginia corporation, as such, holds no stock in the Pennsylvania corporation, the latter corporation holds the legal title, subject at any time to be divested of it by the action of the stockholders of the grantor corporation who are also its stockholders. The stockholders of the Virginia corporation,—the original promoters of the present scheme, and, presumably, when a question of the jurisdiction of a court of the United States is involved, citizens of Virginia,—in order to procure a determination of the controversy between that corporation and the defendant citizens of Virginia, in respect of the lands in that commonwealth, which are here in dispute, assumed, as a body, the mask of a Pennsylvania corporation for the purpose, and the purpose only, of invoking the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States, retaining the power, in their discretion, and after all danger of defeating the jurisdiction of the Federal court shall have passed, to throw off that mask and reappear under the original form of a Virginia corporation—their right, in the meantime, to participate in the management of the general affairs of the latter corporation not having been impaired by the conveyance to the Pennsylvania corporation. And all this may be done, if the position of the plaintiffs be correct, without any consideration passing between the two corporations.

It is not decisive of the present inquiry that under the adjudications of this court the stockholders of the Pennsylvania corporation—the question being one of jurisdiction—must be conclusively presumed to be citizens of that commonwealth. *Nor is it material, if [338] such be the fact, that the Pennsylvania corporation could not have been legally organized under the laws of that commonwealth in February, 1893, unless some of the subscribers to its charter were then citizens of Pennsylvania. We cannot ignore the peculiar circumstances which distinguish the present case from all others that have been before this court. The stockholders who organized the Pennsylvania corporation were, it is agreed, the same individuals who at the time were the stockholders of the Virginia corporation. And under the rule of decision adverted to, the stockholders of the Virginia corporation, just before they organized the Pennsylvania corporation, as well as when the Virginia corporation conveyed the legal title, were presumably citizens of Virginia. If the rule which has been invoked be regarded as controlling in the present case, the result, curiously enough, will be that immediately prior to February, 1893,—before the Pennsylvania corporation was organized,—the stockholders of the Virginia corporation were, presumably, citizens of Virginia; that, a few days thereafter, in February, 1893, when they organized the Pennsylvania corporation, the same stockholders became, presumably, citizens of Pennsylvania; and that, on the 1st day of March, 1893, at the time the Virginia corporation conveyed to the Pennsylvania corporation, the same persons were presumably citizens, at the same moment of time, of both Virginia and Pennsylvania.

It is clear that the record justifies the assumption that there was no valuable consideration for the conveyance to the Pennsylvania corporation. Why should a valuable consideration have passed at all, when the stockholders of the grantor corporation and the stockholders of the grantee corporation were, at the time of the conveyance, the same individuals? Could it be expected that those stockholders, acting as one body, under the name of the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, would take money out of one pocket for the purpose of putting it into another pocket which they had and used only while acting under the name of the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company? A valuable consideration cannot be presumed merely because the agreed statement of facts recites 339] that the *Virginia corporation executed and delivered a deed of "bargain and sale" conveying all its right, title, and interest to the Pennsylvania corporation. In view of the admitted facts, that recital must be taken as meaning nothing more than that the deed was, in form, one of bargain and sale, conveying the technical legal title. The deed cannot be regarded even as a deed of gift, unless we suppose that a body of stockholders, acting under one corporate name, solemnly made a gift of property to themselves acting under another corporate name. When it is remembered that the plaintiff in error stipulates that all that was done had for its sole object to create a case cognizable in the Federal court, which would otherwise have been cognizable only in a court of Virginia, it is not difficult to understand why the agreed statement of facts failed to state, in terms, that a valuable consideration was paid by the grantee corporation.

The arrangement by which, without any valuable consideration, the stockholders of the Virginia corporation organized a Pennsylvania corporation and conveyed these lands to the new corporation for the express purpose—and no other purpose is stated or suggested—of creating a case for the Federal court, must be regarded as a mere device to give jurisdiction to a circuit court of the United States and as being, in law, a fraud upon that court, as well as a wrong to the defendants. Such a device cannot receive our sanction. The court below properly declined to take cognizance of the case.

This conclusion is a necessary result of the cases arising before the passage of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 137). The 5th section of that act provides that if, in any suit commenced in a circuit court, it shall appear to the satisfaction of that court, at any time after such suit is brought, that it "does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within the jurisdiction of said circuit court, or that the parties have been improperly or collusively made or joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, for the purpose of creating a case cognizable . . . under this act, the said circuit court shall proceed no further therein, but shall dismiss the suit." This part of the act of 1875 340] was not superseded *by the act of 1887, amended in 1888. 25 Stat. at L. 434, chap. 866. Its scope and effect were determined in Williams v. Nottawa, 104 U. S. 209, 211 [26: 719, 720], and Morris v. Gilmer, 129 U. S. 315 [32: 690]. In the first of those cases the court, referring to the act of 1875, said: "In extending a long way the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, Congress was specially careful to guard against the consequences of collusive transfers to make parties, and made it the duty of the court, on its own motion, without waiting for the parties, to stop all further proceedings and dismiss the suit the moment anything of the kind appeared. This was for the protection of the court as well as parties against frauds upon its jurisdiction."

The organization of the Pennsylvania corporation and the conveyance to it by the Virginia corporation, for the sole purpose of creating a case cognizable by the circuit court of the United States is, in principle, somewhat like a removal from one state to another with a view only of invoking the jurisdiction of the Federal court. In Morris v. Gilmer, just cited, the court said: "Upon the evidence in this record, we cannot resist the conviction that the plaintiff had no purpose to acquire a domicil or settled home in Tennessee, and that his sole object in removing to that state was to place himself in a situation to invoke the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States. He went to Tennessee without any present intention to remain there permanently or for an indefinite time, but with a present intention to return to Alabama as soon as he could do so without defeating the jurisdiction of the Federal court to determine his new suit. He was therefore a mere sojourner in the former state when this suit was brought. He returned to Alabama almost immediately after giving his deposition. The case comes within the principle announced in Butler v. Farnsworth, 4 Wash. C. C. 101, 103, where Mr. Justice Washington said: 'If the removal be for the purpose of committing a fraud upon the law, and to enable the party to avail himself of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and that fact be made out by his acts, the court must pronounce that his removal was not with a bona fide intention of changing his domicil, however frequent and public his *declarations to the contrary may have been.'" 129 U. S. 328, 329 [32: 694, 695].

Other cases in this court show the object and scope of the above provision in the act of 1875. In Farmington v. Pillsbury, 114 U. S. 138, 139, 145 [29: 114-116],—which was a suit upon coupons of bonds issued in the name of Farmington, a municipal corporation of Maine, the bonds themselves being owned by citizens of that state,—it appeared that the bonds were purchased and held by such citizens while a suit was pending in one of the courts of Maine to test their validity. The state court decided that they were void and inoperative. After that decision coupons of the same amount, gathered up and held by citizens of Maine, were transferred, by their agent, to Pillsbury, a citizen of Massachusetts, under an arrangement by which he gave his promissory note for $500, payable in two years from date with interest, and agreed, "as a further consideration for said coupons," that if he succeeded in collecting the full amount thereof he would pay the agent, as soon as the money was gotten from the corporation, 50 per cent of the net amount collected above the $500. Pillsbury then brought his suit on these coupons, he being a citizen of Massachusetts, against the town of Farmington, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maine. Here was, in form, a sale and delivery of coupons for a valuable consideration. This court regarded the whole transaction as a sham, and speaking by Chief Justice Waite, said: "It is a suit for the benefit of the owners of the bonds. They are to receive from the plaintiff one half of the net proceeds of the case they have created by their transfer of the coupons gathered together for that purpose. The suit is their own in reality, though they have agreed that the plaintiff may retain one half of what he collects for the use of his name and his trouble in collecting. It is true the transaction is called a purchase in the papers that were executed, and that the plaintiff gave his note for $500, but the time for payment was put off for two years, when it was, no doubt, supposed the result of the suit would be known. No money was paid, and as the note was not negotiable, it is clear the parties intended to keep the control of the whole matter 342 *in their own hands, so that if the plaintiff failed to recover the money he could be released from his promise to pay." The court, adopting the language of Mr. Justice Field, in Detroit v. Dean, 106 U. S. 537, 541 [27:300, 302], adjudged the transfer of the coupons to be "a mere contrivance, a pretense, the result of a collusive arrangement to create" in favor of the plaintiff "a fictitious ground of Federal jurisdiction." Referring to the above provision in the act of 1875, the court, after declaring it to be a salutary one, said that "it was intended to promote the ends of justice, and is equivalent to an express enactment by Congress that the circuit courts shall not have jurisdiction of suits which do not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy of which they have cognizance, nor of suits in which the parties have been improperly or collusively made or joined for the purpose of creating a case cognizable under the act." p. 144 [116].

These principles were reaffirmed in Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 596, 603 [30: 269, 271], in which Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, said that under the act of 1875, where the interest of the nominal party is "simulated and collusive and created for the very purpose of giving jurisdiction, the court should not hesitate to apply the wholesome provisions of the law."

The case before us is one that Congress intended to exclude from the cognizance of a court of the United States. The Pennsylvania corporation neither paid nor assumed to pay anything for the property in dispute, and was invested with the technical legal title for the purpose only of bringing a suit in the Federal court. As we have said, that corporation may be required by those who are stockholders of its grantor, and who are also its own stockholders, at any time, and without receiving therefor any consideration whatever, to place the title where it was when the plan was formed to wrest the judicial determination of the present controversy from the courts of the state in which the land lies. It should be regarded as a case of an improper and collusive making of parties for the purpose of creating a case cognizable in the circuit court. If this action were not declared collusive, within the meaning of the act of 1875, then the provision 343 making it the duty of the *circuit court to dismiss a suit, ascertained at any time to be one in which parties have been improperly or collusively made or joined, for the purpose of creating a case cognizable by that court, would become of no practical value, and the dockets of the circuit courts of the United States will be crowded with suits of which neither the framers of the Constitution nor Congress ever intended they should take cognizance.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Shiras dissenting:

In April, 1893, the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, asserting itself to be a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, and a citizen and resident of said state, brought, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Virginia, an action of ejectment for a tract of land in Wise county, state of Virginia, and within the jurisdiction of that court, against J. J. Kelly, James C. Hubbard, and others, all of whom were averred to be citizens of the state of Virginia and residents of the western district thereof.

The defendants filed two special pleas which were traversed by replications. The record shows that subsequently the cause was submitted to the court on the issues thus made and with an agreed statement of facts, and that the court, on May 30, 1893, sustained the pleas, found that it had no jurisdiction of the case, and dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction, but without prejudice. Upon exceptions duly taken, this judgment was brought to this court.

It is admitted, in the agreed statement of facts, that the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company was, in February, 1893, duly organized as a corporation of the state of Pennsylvania, and was existing as such at the time of the commencement of this action.

The Constitution of Pennsylvania, of which we take judicial notice, provides in the 7th section of article 3 that such *a corporation 344 cannot be created by any local or special law, and we are thus given to know that the company in question was organized under a general law of the state. On resorting to that law, being the act of April 29, 1874 (1 Purdon's Dig. 335), and of the contents of which we also take judicial notice, we find it provided that to become duly organized as a mining and manufacturing company the charter must be subscribed by five or more persons, three of whom at least must be citizens of Pennsylvania; that the certificate must set forth that ten per centum of the capital stock has been paid in cash to the treasurer of the intended corporation; and these facts as to citizenship and the payment of the requisite proportion of the capital in cash must be sworn to by at least three of the subscribers. Upon such proof the governor is authorized to direct letters patent to be issued, but no corporation shall go into operation without first having the name of the company, the date of the incorporation, the place of business, the amount of capital paid in, and the names of the president and treasurer registered in the office of the auditor general of the state. While, therefore, it is stated in the agreed statement of facts that the said company was organized by the individual stockholders and the officers of the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, such statement is by no means inconsistent with the other statement that the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company was duly organized, and therefore included in its membership citizens of Pennsylvania.

The presumption, therefore, must be that the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company was, in all respects, a corporation regularly and legally organized, and the concession of the agreed statement is that, as matter of fact, at least three of its corporators are citizens of the state of Pennsylvania. As matter of law, as we shall presently see, all of its incorporators are to be indisputably deemed, for the purpose of jurisdiction in the circuit court of the United States, citizens of that state.

The record, therefore, discloses that a regularly organized body corporate of the state of Pennsylvania, seeking to assert its title to a tract of land situated in Wise county, Virginia, 345] *as against certain citizens of Virginia in possession of said tract, and having brought an action of law in the circuit court of the United States, has been dismissed from that court for alleged want of jurisdiction.

Such want of jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the record, apart from the allegations contained in the special pleas. That the circuit court of the United States has jurisdiction of a dispute about the title to land between a corporation of another state and citizens of the state where the land is situated is, of course, now settled beyond controversy. After a long dispute, the history of which we need not here follow, it was finally decided in Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Letson, 43 U. S. 2 How. 497 [11: 353], that "a corporation created by and transacting business in a state, is to be deemed an inhabitant of the state, capable of being treated as a citizen, for all purposes of suing and being sued, and an averment of the facts of its creation and the place of transacting business is sufficient to give the circuit court jurisdiction." Accordingly, in that case, a plea to the jurisdiction, alleging that some of the corporators of the defendant company, which was a corporation of the state of South Carolina, were citizens of New York, of which latter state the plaintiff was a citizen, was on demurrer overruled. In Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 296 [17: 133], the court, speaking by Chief Justice Taney, said: "Where a corporation is created by the laws of a state, the legal presumption is that its members are citizens of the state in which alone the corporate body has a legal existence; and that a suit by or against a corporation, in its corporate name, must be presumed to be a suit by or against citizens of the state which created the corporate body; and that no averment or evidence to the contrary is admissible, for the purpose of withdrawing the suit from the jurisdiction of a court of the United States."

... After these successive decisions, the law upon this subject must be regarded as settled; and a suit by or against a corporation in its corporate name as a suit by or against citizens of the state which created it."

If these cases correctly state the law, was it 346] competent *for the court below, upon the facts agreed upon, to disregard the corporate character of the plaintiff company, and to find that it was composed, in a jurisdictional sense, of citizens of Virginia? It is true that the defendants, in their second plea, alleged that "there was no such legally organized corporation as the plaintiff company at the date of the institution of this suit." But, as we have seen, the statement of facts agreed upon after the pleas were filed states that the plaintiff company was a duly organized corporation of the state of Pennsylvania, and was existing as such at the time of the bringing of the suit.

Assuming, then, as we have a right to do, that the corporate existence of the plaintiff company is conceded, and that, under the authorities, the members of the company are to be deemed citizens of the state of Pennsylvania, and that no averment or evidence to the contrary is admissible for the purpose of withdrawing the suit from the jurisdiction of the circuit court, were there any other facts which justified the action of the court below in dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction?

It is said that because it is conceded, in the agreed statement of facts, that the land in controversy had been claimed by the Virginia Coal & Iron Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Virginia, and that said company had executed and delivered a deed of bargain and sale to the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, by which it conveyed all its right, title, and interest in and to the land in controversy to the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company in fee simple, and because it is admitted that the Pennsylvania company was organized by the individual stockholders and officers of the Virginia company, and that the purpose in organizing said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company and in making to it said conveyance was to give the circuit court jurisdiction in the case, that the legal effect of such a state of facts would constitute a fraud upon the court, and would justify it in dismissing the suit.

It is difficult to see, in the first place, how this could be a case of fraud. The facts were conceded, not concealed nor *falsely stated. [347] It would be one thing to say that an acknowledged state of facts failed to confer jurisdiction; another thing to say that such acknowledged state of facts, though formally conferring jurisdiction, constituted fraud on the court, not because untrue and pretended and intended to deprive a court of jurisdiction, but because intended to bring a legal cause of action within its jurisdiction. We have seen that, ex necessitate and as matter of fact, there were citizens of Pennsylvania who had, as members of a corporation of that state, an interest in the subject matter of the suit; and we have seen that, by a well-settled proposition of law, the Pennsylvania company must, for jurisdictional purposes, be indisputably deemed to be wholly composed of citizens of the state that created it. How, then, in the absence of misstatement or suppression of facts, can it be said that the Pennsylvania company was guilty of any fraud in invoking the jurisdiction of the Federal court?

I submit that the true question, under the pleadings and statement of facts, was whether the transaction, whereby title to the land in dispute was granted and conveyed by the Virginia company to the Pennsylvania company, was an actual one, was really what it purported to be. If the conveyance by the Virginia company really and intentionally conferred its title on the Pennsylvania company, so that the latter company could legally assert its title against the parties in possession in a state court, no reason existed why the same cause of action might not be asserted in a Federal court; that, if the transaction were an actual one, and the conveyance one intended to vest an absolute title, unqualified by any trust, the jurisdiction of the circuit court validly attached has been frequently declared, even if the purpose was to make a case cognizable by the Federal court.

McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620 [7: 287], was a case where a citizen of Ohio, under the apprehension that his title to lands in that state could not be maintained in the state court, and being indebted to a citizen of Alabama, offered to sell and convey to him the land in payment of the debt, stating in the letter by which the offer was made that the title would 348] most *probably be maintained in the courts of the United States, but would fail in the courts of the state. The Alabama citizen accepted the conveyance, and afterwards gave to a third party his bond to make a quitclaim title to the land, on condition of receiving $1,000. The circuit court of the United States for the district of Ohio, in which the grantee filed, as a citizen of Alabama, a bill in equity, held that, upon the above state of facts, the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. But this court held otherwise and reversed the judgment. Chief Justice Marshall, for the court, said:

"It has not been alleged and certainly cannot be alleged, that a citizen of one state, having title to lands in another, is disabled from suing for those lands in the courts of the United States by the fact that he derives his title from a citizen of the state in which the lands lie. Consequently, the single inquiry must be whether the conveyance from McArthur to McDonald was real or fictitious.

. . . This testimony, which is all that was laid before the court, shows, we think, a sale and conveyance to the plaintiff, which was binding on both parties. . . . McArthur's title was extinguished, and the consideration was received. The motives which induced him to make the contract, whether justifiable or censurable, can have no influence on its validity. They were such as had sufficient influence with himself, and he had a right to act upon them. A court cannot enter into them when deciding on its jurisdiction. The conveyance appears to be a real transaction, and the real as well as nominal parties to the suit are citizens of different states. The only part of the testimony which can inspire doubt respecting its being an absolute sale is the admission that the plaintiff gave his bond to a third party for a quitclaim title to the land, on paying him $1,100. We are not informed who this third party was, nor do we suppose it to be material. The title of McArthur was vested in the plaintiff and did not pass out of him by this bond. A suspicion may exist that it was for McArthur. The court cannot act upon this suspicion. But suppose the fact to be avowed, what influence could it have upon the jurisdiction of the court? It would convert the conveyance, which on its face 349] pears to be absolute, into a *mortgage. But this would not affect the question. In a contest between the mortgagor and mortgagee, being citizens of different states, it cannot be doubted that an ejectment or a bill to foreclose may be brought by the mortgagee, residing in a different state, in a court of the United States. Why, then, may he not sustain a suit in the same court against any other person being a citizen of the same state with the mortgagor? We can perceive no reason why he should not. The case depends, we think, on the question whether the transaction between McArthur and McDonald was real or fictitious; and we perceive no reason to doubt its reality, whether the deed be considered as absolute or as a mortgage.

In Smith v. Kernochen, 48 U. S. 7 How. 198 [12: 666], where a mortgagee, a citizen of Alabama, assigned the mortgage to a citizen of New York, both parties concurring in the motive to have the question involved passed upon by a Federal court, it was held that "the motive imputed could not affect the validity of the conveyance." This was so held in McDonald v. Smalley, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620 [7: 287]. The suit would be free from objection in the state courts; and the only ground upon which it can be made effectual here is that the transaction between the company and plaintiff was fictitious and not real, and the suit still, in contemplation of law, between the original parties to the mortgage. The question, therefore, is one of proper parties to give jurisdiction to the Federal courts, not of title in the plaintiff. That would be a question on the merits, to decide which the jurisdiction must first be admitted. The true and only ground of objection in all these cases is, that the assignor, or the grantor, as the case may be, is the real party in the suit, and the plaintiff on the record but nominal and colorable, his name being used merely for the purpose of jurisdiction."

So in Burney v. Baltimore, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 280 [18: 835], the court said: "If the conveyance by the Ridgeleys of the district to Samuel C. Ridgeley, of Maryland, had really transferred the interest of the former to the latter, although made for the avowed purpose of enabling the court to entertain jurisdiction of the case, it would have accomplished that purpose." McDonald v. Smalley*, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 620 [350 7: 287], and several cases since have well established this rule."

If, then, anything can be regarded as settled, it is that the motive or purpose of securing a right of action in a Federal court by a conveyance or assignment will not defeat the jurisdiction, if the conveyance or assignment be real, and not fictitious.

It therefore follows in the present case that the concession in the agreed statement of facts, that the purpose was to give jurisdiction to the circuit court, will not defeat that jurisdiction unless it appears that the conveyance was not real but fictitious. This presents a question of fact. Stated in direct terms, the question is this, given a Pennsylvania corporation, indisputably composed of citizens of that state, and a conveyance in fee simple to such company of a tract of land, situated in the state of Virginia, by a corporation of that state, the land being in possession of citizens of the latter state, was this apparent jurisdiction defeated by the admitted facts? It has been established by the cases cited that the mere purpose or intention to put the claim into an owner who would be entitled to go into a Federal court would not be objectionable if the conveyance were an actual one, and where the interest asserted belonged wholly to the plaintiff.

Hence, the only matter now to determine is, What was the character of the conveyance in the present case? It was, in form, a deed of bargain and sale purporting to convey a fee simple. It is admitted in the agreed statement of facts that "said conveyance passed to said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company all the right, title, and interest of said Virginia Coal & Iron Company in and to said land, and that since said conveyance said Virginia Coal & Iron Company has had no interest in said land, and has not and never has had any interest in that suit, and that it owns none of the stock of said Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, and has no interest therein whatsoever."

It is contended, in the opinion of the majority, that "it appears, in view of what the agreed statement of facts contains, as well as what it omits to disclose, that the conveyance 351 *was without any valuable consideration, and that, as soon as this litigation is concluded, the Pennsylvania corporation, if it succeeded in obtaining judgment against the defendants, can be required by the stockholders of the Virginia corporation, being also stockholders of the Pennsylvania corporation, to reconvey the land in controversy to the Virginia corporation."

This contention, and the fate of the case turns upon it, can be readily met. It assumes two facts, neither of which are found in the record, and both of which, if found, would be immaterial. First, it is said that the conveyance was without any valuable consideration. But it is distinctly admitted that the Virginia company "executed and delivered a deed of bargain and sale to the Lehigh Mining & Manufacturing Company, by which it conveyed all its right, title, and interest in the land in controversy in fee simple." It is not found that no consideration was given, and in the absence of such a finding the presumption would be that a deed of conveyance under seal, and granting an estate in fee simple, implies a consideration. But it is unnecessary to consider this, because it is wholly immaterial whether the grantee paid a consideration or not. The deed, even if it were a deed of gift, was executed and delivered, and an executed gift is irrevocable. Nor does it concern the defendants whether the grant by deed was or was not for a valuable consideration.

The very question came up in the case of De Laveaga v. Williams, 5 Sawy. 573, in the circuit court of the district of California, and where it was urged that no consideration was ever paid, and that the deed was executed to enable the suit to be brought in the circuit court of the United States. But the court said, by Mr. Justice Field: "There is no doubt that the sole object of the deed to the complainant was to give jurisdiction, and that the grantor has borne and still bears the expenses of the suit, but neither of these facts renders the deed inoperative to transfer the title. The defendants are not in a position to question the right of the grantor to give away the property, if he chooses so to do. And the court will not, at the suggestion of a stranger to the title, inquire into the motives which induced the grantor 352 to *part with his interest. It is sufficient that the instrument executed is valid in law, and that the grantee is of the class entitled under the laws of Congress to proceed in the Federal courts for the protection of his rights. It is only when the conveyance is executed to give the court jurisdiction, and is accompanied with an agreement to retransfer the property at the request of the grantor upon the termination of the litigation, that the proceeding will be treated as a fraud upon the court. Here there was no such agreement, and it will be optional with the complainant to retransfer or retain the property. He is by the deed the absolute owner of the interest conveyed, and can only be deprived of it by his own will, and upon such considerations as he may choose to exact."

The only operation that could be given to the absence of proof of an actual consideration would be to create a suspicion of a secret trust. But this is negated in the present case by the admission that a deed in fee simple was executed and delivered, and that by it the entire title, interest, and right of the grantor company passed to the Pennsylvania corporation, and that "since said conveyance said Virginia Coal & Iron Company has had no interest in said land, and has not and never has had any interest in this suit."

It is admitted, in the opinion of the majority, that "the legal title to the lands in controversy is in the Pennsylvania corporation, and that there was no formal agreement or understanding upon its part that the title shall ever be reconveyed to the Virginia corporation." But it is said that "there exists what should be deemed an equivalent to such an agreement, namely, the right and power of those who are stockholders of each corporation to compel the one holding the legal title to convey, without a valuable consideration, that title to the other corporation." This seems to me to be a strained conjecture. Stock in a corporation is continually changing hands, and to suppose that, at the end of a pending litigation, the holders will be the identical persons who held it at the beginning is too uncertain and fanciful to form a basis for a judicial action. As was well said by Mr. Justice Grier, in Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 57 U. S. 16 How. [353] 327, 328 [14: 959]: "The necessities and conveniences of trade and business require that such numerous associates and stockholders should act by representation, and have the faculty of contracting, suing, and being sued in a factitious or collective name. . . . It is not reasonable that representatives of numerous unknown and ever-changing associates should be permitted to allege the different citizenship of one or more of these stockholders," in order to defeat the jurisdiction of Federal courts.

Some expressions used in the opinion of the court below, and likewise in the majority opinion, seem to imply that the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 470), has operated to change the law in respect to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States. I do not so understand the purpose of that enactment. I have supposed that it only operates as a rule of practice. As the law previously stood, if the face of the record disclosed a suit between citizens of different states, and thus within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, it was necessary to traverse the averment of citizenship by a plea in abatement, and if the defendant went to trial on a plea to the merits he could not afterwards question the truth of such averment. Smith v. Kernochen, 48 U. S. 7 How. 198 [12:666]; Barney v. Baltimore, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 280 [18:825].

But since the passage of the act of March 3, 1875, "it is competent for the court at any time, during the trial of the case, without plea and without motion, to stop all further proceedings and dismiss the suit the moment a fraud on its jurisdiction was discovered." Hartog v. Memory, 116 U. S. 588 [29:725].

It is not perceived that the legal rights of owners of property are in any wise affected by this law, and it is still true, as was said in Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550 [29:729], that "the order of the circuit court dismissing the cause for want of jurisdiction is reviewable by this court on writ of error by the express words of the act. In making such an order, therefore, the circuit court exercises a legal and not a personal discretion, which must be exerted in view of the facts sufficiently proven, and controlled by fixed rules of law. It might happen that the judge, on the trial or 354] hearing of a cause, would receive *impressions amounting to a moral certainty that it does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy within the jurisdiction of the court. But upon such a personal conviction, however strong, we would not be at liberty to act, unless the facts on which the persuasion is based, when made distinctly to appear on the record, create a legal certainty of the conclusion based on them. Nothing less than this is meant by the statute when it provides that the failure of its jurisdiction, on this account, shall appear to the satisfaction of the court."

As, then, the plaintiff company is conceded to be a duly organized and existing body corporate of the state of Pennsylvania; as the land in dispute is within the jurisdiction of the court, and the defendants in possession thereof are citizens of the state of Virginia; and as it is conceded that, by a deed of conveyance in fee simple, the Virginia company passed all its right, title, and interest in said land, and has since had "no interest in said land or in the suit,"—I think the jurisdiction of the circuit court ought not to be defeated by the conjecture that the persons owning the stock of the corporation when the deed of conveyance was made might continue to own it years afterwards when the suit should terminate, and might choose, as such owners, to cause another transfer and conveyance of the land to be made. Such conjectures are very far from furnishing for judicial action that "legal certainty" which in Barry v. Edmunds is said to be the proper basis upon which to deprive parties of their right of access to the national tribunals.

If we are permitted to enter into the realm of supposition, it is easy to suggest that the present stockholders, so far as they are citizens of Virginia, might dispose of their stock in good faith and absolutely to citizens of Pennsylvania. Then, upon another action brought in the same court, the same pleas being interposed, it would be competent, according to the views which prevail in the present case, to meet the pleas by a replication averring that the individual stockholders are citizens of Pennsylvania, and thus the jurisdiction would be sustained. What, in such a case, would have become of the long-settled *rule that the [355 status, as to citizenship, of the individual stockholders is not a matter of allegation and proof? Has the court retraced its steps, and can state corporations be turned out of the Federal courts on a plea that one or more of the stockholders is a citizen of the same state in which the litigation is pending?

Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Brown concur in this dissent.

GEORGE PIERCE and JOHN PIERCE, Plffs.
in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 355-357.)

Compelling election of count of indictment—admission of testimony—confession.

1. Where two counts of an indictment for murder differ only in stating the manner in which the murder was committed, it is in the discretion of the court whether the prosecution shall be compelled to elect upon which count to proceed.
2. Testimony which did not prejudice the party excepting, but, if material, was in his favor, is not ground of error.
3. The mere presence of officers is not an influence to exclude a confession; it is not inadmissible because the party is in custody, if not extorted by inducements or threats.

[No. 648.]

Submitted November 19, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas to review a judgment convicting George Pierce and John Pierce of murder. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

The plaintiffs in error were indicted for the murder on January 15, 1895, in the Cherokee Nation, in the Indian country, of one William Vandever, a white man and not an Indian. There were two counts in the indictment. The first charged the murder to have been committed with a gun, and the second charged it to have been committed "with a certain blunt instrument." The jury found both defendants guilty of murder as charged in the first count, and they were accordingly both sentenced to death.

Submitted on the record by plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Brown* delivered the [356 opinion of the court:

This case was submitted upon the brief of the attorney general, and upon the material parts of the record. Defendants did not appear at the hearing.

1. The first error assigned is to the refusal of the court to compel the government to elect upon which count of the indictment it would proceed. The two counts differ from each other only in stating the manner in which the murder was committed. Testimony was introduced upon the trial tending to show that deceased had been shot in the forehead, and also hit on the head with a hammer. The question whether the prosecution should be compelled to elect was a matter purely within the discretion of the court. Pointer v. United States, 151 U. S. 396 [38: 208].

2. As no exceptions were taken to the charge of the court, and but one to the admission of testimony, the bill of exceptions, which was very voluminous, was not printed in full; but the charge of the court and the testimony of the defendants were printed, as well as an abstract of the testimony of a single witness, Andrew Brown, who testified that on Monday evening, January 19, he saw the two defendants with another man close to his place; that they were traveling with a mule team and a covered wagon, with a gray mare and colt following; that before daylight next morning he saw the same outfit, except there was no third man with defendants; that he went for his nearest neighbor, a Mr. West, and with him searched the place where the defendants had camped, finding blood all around; that Mr. West took up a blanket, and something like a pint of blood ran out of it; he just dropped it and said: "Brown, what kind of blood is that?" The answer to this was objected to, and the objection overruled, and an exception taken. The witness answered: "I don't know what kind of blood it is; it is blood." He says: "Maybe they have killed one of my hogs." I says: "We will see." This testimony clearly did not tend to prejudice the defendants, and, if it were material at all, bore rather in their favor than against them.

357] *3. The admission of certain statements made by the defendants while they were under arrest and handcuffed was also objected to. No exception was taken to the admission of this testimony, and the court properly held that the mere presence of officers is not an influence. Confessions are not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the parties are in custody, provided that such confessions are not extorted by inducements or threats. Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 583 [28: 262, 266]; Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 55 [39: 343, 345]. The so-called confessions show merely that the defendants acted in a somewhat suspicious manner when first arrested, saying, "If we killed him, you prove it; . . . that is for us to know, and you to find out,"—and that they refused to tell their names. There was clearly no objection to this testimony.

No exception was taken to the charge, and after a careful reading of it, we see nothing of which the defendants were justly entitled to complain.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

EDWARD B. BARTLETT ET AL., Plffs.
in Err.,
v.

WILLIAM LOCKWOOD ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 357-369.)

Review of state decision—Federal question.

1. This court has not jurisdiction to review upon writ of error the decision of a state court upon a question of fact.
2. The decision of a state court that the collector of a port had the right to send rags to the proper warehouse for disinfection, being in favor of, and not against, the validity of the authority set up and claimed under the laws of the United States by the plaintiff in error, presents no Federal question.

[No. 95.]

Argued December 3, 4, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York to review a judgment of that court in favor of the plaintiffs, Wm. Lockwood et al., against defendants, Edward B. Bartlett et al., for a conspiracy to have certain cargoes of rags belonging to the plaintiffs condemned as unclean and infectious property. On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.
See same case below, 130 N. Y. 340.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a motion to dismiss a writ of error sued out by the firm of E. B. Bartlett & Co., defendants in the court below, to review a judgment obtained against them in the supreme court of New York by the firm of Lockwood & McClintock, for a conspiracy to have certain cargoes of rags belonging to the plaintiffs condemned as unclean and infectious property. With the firm of E. B. Bartlett & Co. was also impleaded as defendant Dr. William M. Smith, sued as an individual, but alleged to be at the time of the transaction health officer of the port of New York.

The complaint alleged in substance that in May, 1885, plaintiffs imported by ship Vigilant from Japan, and by barque Battaglia from Leghorn, about 3,000 bales of rags, of which plaintiffs were entitled to the possession and control; that the defendant Smith, the health officer of the port, with intent to injure plaintiffs, conspired with the firm of Bartlett & Co. to have such rags condemned as unclean and infectious property, and to require them to be disinfected under a process used by Bartlett & Co. so that they would be entitled to charge plaintiffs therefor, and to hold such rags until such charges were paid; that Smith, under color of his office, wrongfully and unlawfully caused such rags to be taken from the vessels,

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; and Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

and transferred to the place of business of said Bartlett & Co. for the purpose of having the same disinfected, although he, as well as Bartlett & Co., knew that the rags were clean and free from any infectious matter, were not dangerous to health, and did not require to be disinfected; that by reason of such wrongful conspiracy and acts the rags were taken by Bartlett & Co. and kept by them from June 5 to October 1, during which time they were partially subjected to a pretended process of disinfection, which was ineffectual and worthless for any real purpose of disinfection, and which greatly damaged and injured the rags, but which process was fraudulently and collusively approved of by said Smith, with intent to give Bartlett & Co. the monopoly of the disinfection of *rags, so that they might be able to extort from plaintiffs and others large sums of money for such so-called disinfection; that plaintiffs protested against such conduct, demanded possession of their rags, which defendants refused to deliver until the charges for the transfer and disinfection were paid,—by reason of which acts plaintiffs suffered large damages.

The answer of defendants, Bartlett & Co., denied the conspiracy charged in the complaint; admitted defendant Smith to be the health officer, but denied "that he had full charge and control over vessels and cargoes coming into the port, except as authorized by the statutes of the state of New York and the regulations of the United States and the port of New York."

The action was tried in the supreme court before a jury, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiffs as against the defendant firm of Bartlett & Co. for $8,000, the jury disagreeing as to the defendant Smith. Judgment having been entered upon this verdict, defendants appealed to the general term, which, upon a hearing before three judges, directed that, upon plaintiffs' stipulating to reduce the original judgment in the sum of $1,675.16, the judgment as to the residue be affirmed. The stipulation was given, and the judgment reduced accordingly. Defendants appealed from this judgment to the court of appeals, which ordered that the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted unless plaintiff stipulated to reduce the recovery of damages to $3,182.52. 130 N. Y. 340. The case being remitted to the supreme court, and the plaintiffs having given the stipulation required by the judgment of the court of appeals, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs for $3,914.05, to review which judgment defendants sued out this writ of error.

Mr. Henry W. Goodrich for plaintiffs in error:

The case involves "an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against its validity. . . . Such a decision was necessary to the judgment."

The question was raised by the issues in the pleadings, by the motions to dismiss on the opening of the plaintiffs' counsel, by the motion to dismiss at the close of the plaintiffs' case, and by the motion to dismiss at the close of the defendants' case at the trial court. The appeal taken from the judgment entered at the trial court raised the question of the authority of the Treasury Department, and the decision of the court of appeals discussed this question and held adversely to the power of the Treasury Department.

The court of appeals held that the plaintiffs in error had the right to hold the goods for lighterage and storage charges under the authority exercised by the Treasury Department and the collector, but they had no right to hold the goods under such authority for disinfection charges. The latter holding was error.

Private bonded warehouses are public storehouses, and collectors are authorized to retain, as part of their emoluments, sums received for the deposit of importations in such bonded warehouses under the same provisions applicable to public storehouses.

United States v. Macdonald, 2 Cliff. 271; Clark v. Peaslee, 1 Cliff. 545

The Federal question presented is this: Has the Treasury Department the right, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4792, to order the disinfection of the rags in question? and, second, whether specific designation of the place and manner of such disinfection is required to be given by the health officer of the port.

The court held as follows:

"The collector, under his authority, in view of the regulation for disinfection of the rags on the two vessels adopted by the health officer, was justified in directing, as he did, the sending of the rags to these places, and the expenses of such transfer were presumptively a lien upon the property to which they related. No specific order or direction of the health officer is essential for that purpose; it is sufficient that it was done pursuant to regulations within his power, made by him."

Thus, it will be seen that the question is squarely presented as to whether the collector had the right to order the disinfection, the court of appeals having held that the collector was justified in sending the goods for disinfection, and that the charges incurred therefor were correct charges and a lien upon the goods, but that he could not order the disinfection without the specific direction of the health officer, and hence that the charges for disinfection were unlawful.

Messrs. Charles W. Bangs and Francis Lynde Stetson, for defendants in error:

If, irrespective of the insufficiency of the assignment of errors filed upon the allowance of the writ of error, the determination of this court as to its jurisdiction to review the final judgment of the state court is dependent upon the issues and questions raised by the pleadings in the action, then this court clearly has no jurisdiction to re-examine such judgment.

Orary v. Devlin, reported only in U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 23 L. ed. 510, cited in Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 670 (38: 310).

The decision of the highest court of the state was not against any title, right, privilege, or immunity set up or claimed, or against any authority, or the validity of any authority, exercised under the United States.

Lockwood v. Bartlett, 130 N. Y. 340.

The decision therefore of the court of appeals, the highest court of the state in which a decision could be had, was not against the validity of any law or of any authority exercised by the collector pursuant to any law of the United States, but was in support of such authority; and distinctly on the ground that, as a matter of fact the health officer had not given any specific directions or orders for the disinfection of the rags by Bartlett & Co.

This court will not review or re-examine the judgment or decision of the state court upon questions of fact, which were exclusively within its jurisdiction,—either as to what the health officer of the port actually did in regard to the disinfection of the rags in question, or as to his power and authority in the premises, he being exclusively a state officer.

Dover v. Richards, 151 U. S. 659 (38: 306); Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 327 (1: 622); Hyde v. Booraem, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 169 (10: 925); United States v. King, 48 U. S. 7 How. 833 (12: 934); Parks v. Turner, 53 U. S. 12 How. 39 (13: 883); Arthurs v. Hart, 58 U. S. 17 How. 6 (15: 30); Jeffries v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 305 (28: 156); Campau v. Lewis, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 106 (18: 211); Hall v. Jordan, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 393 (21: 72); Merced Min. Co. v. Boggs, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 304 (18: 245); Carpenter v. Williams, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 785 (19: 827); Crary v. Deelin, reported only in U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 23 L. ed. 510; Republican Bridge Co. v. Kansas P. R. Co. 92 U. S. 315 (23: 515); Martin v. Marks, 97 U. S. 345 (24: 940); Kenny v. Effinger, 115 U. S. 577 (29: 498); Quimby v. Boyd, 128 U. S. 488 (32: 502).

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

There is certainly nothing in the pleadings in this case to indicate a Federal question. It is 361] simply an action of *conspiracy to injure the plaintiffs, and it does not appear from the complaint that the validity of any statute of the United States, or of any authority exercised under the United States, was drawn in question. The answer of the principal defendants, Bartlett & Co., sets up no claim of privilege or immunity under any statute of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder. Indeed, there is nothing anywhere in the record to indicate that any Federal statute or authority was specially set up or claimed in the state court.

Error, however, is assigned to the action of the court in holding that, under the statutes of the United States, neither the Treasury Department nor the collector had a right to order the disinfection of the plaintiffs' rags, and also in holding that the rags were not disinfected under the order of such department or the collector of customs.

The real question is whether the acts of which plaintiffs complain were done in pursuance of Federal or state authority, or were the unauthorized acts of the defendants themselves. While, under its power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, the authority of Congress to establish quarantine regulations, and to protect the country as respects its commerce from contagious and infectious diseases, has never in recent years been questioned, such power has been allowed to remain in abeyance; and Congress, doubtless in view of the different requirements of different climates and localities and of the difficulty of framing a general law upon the subject, has elected to permit the several states to regulate the matter of protecting the public health as to themselves seemed best. Their power to do this was recognized by this court in Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455 [30: 237]. Congress has also confirmed such power by requiring (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4792) that "the quarantines and other restraints established by the health laws of any state, respecting any vessels arriving in or bound to any port or district thereof, shall be duly observed by the officers of the customs revenue, . . . and that all such officers of the United States shall faithfully aid in the execution of such quarantines and health laws, according to their respective powers and within their respective precincts,*and as they [362 shall be directed, from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Upon the trial it was shown that the Vigilant arrived at the New York quarantine May 30, 1885, with 2,920 bales of rags belonging to the plaintiffs. The health officer passed her at quarantine, and gave her a permission to proceed, which stated as follows with respect to the cargo: "Cargo general (rags excepted). The vessel has permission to proceed." There was some dispute as to whether the words "rags excepted" were a limitation upon the permission of the vessel to proceed or a qualification of the words "general cargo." The testimony of the health officer indicated that it meant that the vessel was to be allowed to proceed to her dock and discharge her cargo other than rags. Both parties evidently acted upon the theory that these words did not require an unloading of the rags at quarantine, as the vessel was allowed to proceed and did proceed to her dock, and on June 1 a permit was granted by the proper health officer of the city of New York "to land and store said rags, provided the same be not broken from the bulk in the bales they are now in." Thereupon plaintiffs went to the customhouse to enter the goods, but the collector declined to receive the entry, and plaintiffs went with their counsel to Washington to lay the matter before the Secretary of the Treasury.

At this time the subject, so far as it came within the jurisdiction of the Federal authorities, was regulated by two circulars issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, the first of which bore date of November 15, 1884, and prohibited "the unloading in the United States of old rags shipped from and after the 20th instant from foreign ports or countries now or hereafter known to be infected with contagious or epidemic diseases;" and further provided that "no old rags shall be landed at any port of the United States except upon a certificate of the United States consular officer at the port of departure that such rags were not gathered or baled at, or shipped from, any infected place or any region contiguous thereto." The second circular, dated December 22, 1884, modified previous circulars, and directed that "no old rags, *except those afloat [363 on or before January 1, 1885, on vessels bound directly to the United States, shall be landed in the United States from any vessel, nor come into the United States by land from any foreign country, except upon disinfection, at the expense of the importers, as provided in this circular, or as may hereafter be provided." Certain processes of disinfection were specified in this circular, and other directions given for landing and storing rags for the purpose of disinfection.

A letter bearing date January 12, 1885, addressed to the collector of customs at New York, in reference to the landing and storage of rags to be disinfected, approved of the selection of the Baltic stores in Brooklyn, which belonged to the defendants, Bartlett & Co., as a proper place for that purpose, and directed that "where rags requiring disinfection form part of a cargo, they will be placed on lighters as fast as discharged, and the lighter loads will be taken to the place above designated." It appeared from this letter that Mr. Bartlett, one of the defendants, had written a letter to the department, touching the selection of a warehouse for the storage and disinfection of old rags; that the matter had been referred to the health officers of New York and Brooklyn, both of whom agreed as to the propriety of designating the Baltic stores for that purpose. Two days after this letter was written, and on January 14, the collector of the port made a general order that "on the entry of old rags shipped on and after the 1st instant, and which have not been disinfected prior to importation, the permit to land will have written on the face thereof directions to the inspector to send the rags to the Baltic stores in Brooklyn, by bonded lighters, for disinfection;" and further providing that, upon evidence that the rags had been satisfactorily disinfected, an order for their delivery would be made.

These were the regulations in force at the time plaintiffs made their visit to Washington. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon examining the law upon the subject, became satisfied that there was no statute which gave him any authority except in aid of the health [364] officers of the ports (U. S. Rev. *Stat. § 4792), and in accordance with such conclusion he telegraphed the collector of customs on June 5, that "as to rags per Vigilant, from Japan, which importers claimed were mostly on board prior to January 1st, you are directed to submit all to health officer Smith, and to be governed by him in the matter." On June 6 the collector wrote to the health officer notifying him of the receipt of this telegram, and asking to be advised whether, in his judgment, as health officer of the port, the rags might, with safety to the public health, be allowed to be landed, and, without disinfection, to go into consumption. In reply to this, the health officer wrote upon the same day detailing the result of many medical conferences and sanitary investigations, and stating that he did not claim that it was necessary for the protection of the public health that all rags should be disinfected, although it was "impossible to determine what may and what may not be admitted with absolute assurance of safety," and concluding that it seemed advisable that for the present the rule for the disinfection of rags should be general, and that the rags on the Vigilant should not be an exception to the rule.

He did not, however, give any positive directions that the rags should be disinfected, and testified upon the stand that he gave no order that these rags should be disinfected, either at Bartlett's store or elsewhere.

Before, however, the Secretary of the Treasury had acted in the matter, and before his telegram to the collector of June 5 had been sent, a general order was issued by the collector on June 3, directing the inspector on the Vigilant to allow to be landed and sent "to the public store No. —, E. B. Bartlett's, South, all merchandise for which no permit or order shall have been received by him contrary to this direction," with certain exceptions, that did not include rags, in the body of the paper, although the words, "Rags, A. W. H.," were written across the face of it. On June 9 the collector made a further order that "the inspector in charge of the ship Vigilant from Hiogo, Japan, under general order made June 3, 1885, will allow to be landed and will send on bonded lighters to Baltic stores (E. B. Bartlett & Co.'s, South) for *disinfection, [365] all rags for which no permit shall have been received, and will make returns thereof, as of an order or permit."

On the following day, June 10, the Secretary of the Treasury, pursuant to his conclusion that there was no statute which gave him any authority in respect to the landing and disinfecting of imported rags, except in aid of the health officer, issued a circular or order to all collectors of customs in the following terms: "Whereas it has been conclusively shown to the department that, under existing laws, no general regulation can be legally framed whereby the disinfection of old rags can be accomplished in foreign ports to the satisfaction of the several health authorities, Therefore it is ordered—

"1. That all circulars of this department concerning the disinfection of imported old rags are hereby revoked, and that all old rags hereafter imported from foreign countries shall only be admitted for entry at the customhouse upon the production of permits from the health officers at the ports of importation, duly authorizing the landing of the same.

"2. Vessels carrying old rags, arriving at any United States quarantine, will be detained by the quarantine officers, and held subject to the order of the proper health authorities at the port of destination."

On the same day Dr. Smith, the health officer of New York, gave a certificate that the rags per ship Vigilant from Hiogo, Japan, "to be disinfected, are not from a cholera-infected port."

The rags were accordingly, and in pursuance of the collector's instructions of June 9, taken to the Baltic stores and there disinfected by the defendants, who paid the lighter's charges, made out a bill for these as well as for disinfecting and storage, amounting to $4,904.90, for which they claimed a lien upon the property.

The case of the Battaglia did not differ materially from that of the Vigilant. The barque arrived and was entered at the customhouse on June 6, 1885, with 150 bales of rags belonging to the plaintiffs. On June 9 a general order was made, allowing the discharge of the cargo, but "omitting rags." *On June 11 the [366] Secretary of the Treasury wrote to the collector at New York, stating that the consignees desired to be covered by the circular of June 10, which placed the control of the disinfection with the health officer, and that the department had no objection to this. On June 13 the collector inclosed a copy of this letter to the health officer, inquiring of him whether he would designate the place and process appropriate. From a letter written by the collector to the Secretary of the Treasury June 19, 1885, it would appear that the Brooklyn commissioner of health refused to allow the unloading of the rags in Brooklyn unless they were approved by the health officer, and that he therefore ordered, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2880, the unloading of the rags and their transfer by bonded lighter to Robbin's Reef, for disinfection, provided the health officials of New York city would permit such transfer from the Battaglia to the bonded lighter. On June 17 the health officer certified that the rags were "to be disinfected at Robbin's Reef if health commissioner of Brooklyn will not give permit for Baltic stores." The charge for the lighterage of these rags and for their disinfection and storage amounted to $409.25, for which amount defendants claimed a lien upon them.

As we have observed already, there is nothing in the record from which a Federal question can be raised in this case. If we look beyond the record, to the opinions of the court, we find that the general term held—

1. That the Revised Statutes did not authorize the collector to take possession of these rags as unclaimed goods and store them in a private bonded warehouse, such as the Baltic stores.

2. That the acts of the collector could not be justified by §§ 4792 and 4793, requiring him to aid in executing the health laws of the state.

3. That the health officer did not directly order the seizure of these rags, their conveyance to the Baltic stores in the one case and to Robbin's Reef in the other, and their disinfection by the disinfecting company, the defendants.

4. That the collector, having no power to 367] send any but *unclaimed goods to the public stores, could not refuse a permit for these goods to land, and cause them to be sent to the public stores to be disinfected at the expense of the owner, and if he did so, he, as well as all other persons who detained the goods because of nonpayment of these unauthorized charges, became liable in damages for such unauthorized detention.

5. That the act of the collector, being without authority, could confer no authority upon defendants to hold the goods until the charges incurred because of the unauthorized acts of the collector were paid.

Had the matter rested here it might perhaps have been claimed that the state court had ruled adversely to an authority exercised under the United States, but on appeal to the court of appeals the judgment of the general term was varied to the extent of holding that the defendants were liable only for detaining the goods until the charges for disinfection were paid. That court held in substance:

1. That the direction of the collector that the rags be sent to the Baltic stores and Robbin's Reef was pursuant to the requirement that they should be disinfected, and pursuant to the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in aid of the health officer in the execution of his official power.

2. That the work of disinfection was not conducted under the supervision or control of the health officer, nor pursuant to his employment of the defendants, and that the health officer had testified that he never gave any order for the disinfection of the rags, and that the defendants assumed to do this work without any direction of the health officer, and without approval by him of the efficiency of the work or the charges resulting from it.

3. That this objection was not applicable to the charges for lighterage and storage, and that the collector was justified in directing, as he did, the sending of the rags to these places, and the expense of such transfer was a lien upon the property.

4. That the charges for lighterage paid by the defendants, according to the custom in such cases, and for the storage for *the [368 time the rags properly remained with them, were a lien upon the property.

5. That, so far as defendants required payment for the further claim for disinfection as a condition of the delivery, they were chargeable with duress of property, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover this amount from them.

The result, then, of this summary of the case, is briefly this:

The defendants claimed as a Federal question that they had set up as a defense to this action an authority exercised under the United States, viz., an authority given by the collector of customs to disinfect these rags.

In relation to this, the general term held that the Revised Statutes gave no authority to the collector to take possession of these goods and retain possession of them and that his seizure of the goods, and causing them to be sent to the Baltic stores, was an unauthorized act, and if he caused them to be disinfected, he became liable in damages.

The court of appeals, however, held that the direction of the collector that the rags should be sent to the places where they were taken was pursuant to the requirement that they should be disinfected, and in aid of the health officer in the execution of his official power, by the observance of the regulations made by him; that the collector gave no order for their disinfection; that the health officer gave no such order; and that the defendants assumed to disinfect them without authority, and hence their charges therefor were illegal; but that, as the collector had properly sent them the goods for such action as the health authorities might see fit to take, the plaintiffs became liable for storage and lighterage.

It follows, then, that as the court of appeals ruled, as matter of fact, that the collector never ordered the rags to be disinfected (a ruling which is not reviewable here, Dover v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658 [38: 305]; Re Buchanan, 158 U. S. 31 [39: 884]; Israel v. Arthur, 152 U. S. 355 [38: 474]), and, as a matter of law, that he had the right to send them to the proper warehouse for disinfection, it appears that the ruling was in favor of, and not against, the validity of the authority set up and claimed 369]under *the laws of the United States. We may add in this connection that, as it clearly appears that the collector had no authority to order the goods to be disinfected, we think the court of appeals was correct in holding that his somewhat ambiguous order for June 9, directing that the goods should be sent to the Baltic stores for disinfection, should be considered as an order to send the goods for disinfection in case such disinfection were ordered by the health officer. The disinfection, if ordered at all, was ordered by the health officer, and the charges for this are all for which the defendants were held liable. Whether such order was ever given by the health officer was a question solely within the jurisdiction of the state court.

The writ of error must therefore be dismissed.

SARAH VAN WAGENEN ET AL., Appts.,

v.

RUFUS K. SEWALL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 369-373.)

Certificate of jurisdiction.

The absence of a certificate of the question of jurisdiction is fatal to an appeal to this court from a United States district court where the only question of jurisdiction was raised by a demurrer which was in substance only a general demurrer to the bill for want of equity.

[No. 140.]

Argued and Submitted December 20, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida sustaining a demurrer to a petition for a review and reversal of certain proceedings and of a decree rendered in another case ordering a survey of a grant. Dismissed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a petition by Sarah Van Wagenen and others for the review and reversal of certain proceedings in the case of John M. Hanson 370] v. The United States, and of a decree *rendered therein, ordering a survey of the Hanson or Miles grant, made by the surveyor general upon the petition of one Greeley, assignee in bankruptcy of Hanson, which said survey had been approved by a decree of the district court of April 13, 1889.

The petition set forth that the petitioners were the owners in fee of an undivided one-third interest in this grant, which contained 16,000 or more acres, situate in the county of Dade, which undivided interest originally belonged to one Hedrick, one of the original petitioners in the case of Hanson v. United States; and that petitioners were also the owners in fee of the whole grant by purchase from the state of Florida; that such grant was originally made by the Spanish government to one Samuel Miles on July 19, 1813, was surveyed and set off to him in 1815, and in 1840 was confirmed to Hanson, Segui, and Hedrick; that upon appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the title of the claimants and the decree of the court below were affirmed (41 U. S. 16 Pet. 196 [10: 935]); but that the Supreme Court set aside the survey as irregular, and ordered the surveyor general of the territory to make a new survey, and remanded the case to the superior court of East Florida for that purpose; that in accordance with such mandate and decree of the Supreme Court a new survey was made, returned to the land office of the territory, and the grant then platted from said survey; that such survey was subsequently confirmed and approved of by the said superior court, whose decree in that regard has never been reversed, appealed from, or set aside, but still remains in force; and that, by such action and decree, that court exhausted all its jurisdiction under the acts of Congress, and could neither do nor perform any other matter or thing relative thereto.

The petitioners further averred that, in 1885, one Greeley, claiming to be assignee in bankruptcy of Hanson, and one Agatha O'Brien, claiming to be the administratrix of Bernardo Segui, also claiming an undivided one-third interest in the grant, did by petition in the said cause of Hanson v. United States, to the district court for the northern district of Florida, allege, as well as in the petition of Rufus K. Sewall, *who was made a party thereto, [371] that said grant had never been surveyed, nor had any survey ever been confirmed or approved, as directed by the Supreme Court and the superior court of the territory; and did pray that the survey might be had in accordance with the decree of such courts; and that, in pursuance of such petition, the district court, in 1885, ordered the then surveyor general to make such survey, which was in fact made, returned to the court in accordance with this order, and in 1889 was confirmed—all without notice to the petitioners—and as they averred, beyond the jurisdiction and power of the court; that the same was invalid, by reason of the fact that the court had no jurisdiction in the premises, having exhausted all jurisdiction and powers it possessed under its previous decree confirming the survey made in 1851; that the allegations contained in the petition of Greeley were untrue in averring that no survey had been made; that neither the representatives of Segui, nor Greeley, as assignee of Hanson, had any right in the grant; that the new survey was unjust to the petitioners, in that it greatly changed the lines of the original survey, and reduced largely the area of the grant, and in other respects affected the just rights of the petitioners.

Wherefore petitioners prayed that all of such proceedings for the new survey be vacated and

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; and Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

set aside as absolutely null and void, and for further relief, etc.

On January 6, 1892, Sewall appeared by his solicitors, and demurred to the petition upon two grounds: First, that the record and proceedings attached to and made a part of the petition showed that a proper and final decree had been made in the cause, adjudicating fully all the issues made therein; and, second, that the court had no power or jurisdiction to grant the petitioners the relief prayed for therein.

This demurrer having been sustained by the court, the petitioner Sarah Van Wagenen prayed for a rehearing upon the ground that the final decree made in 1851 fully and finally disposed of the cause, and exhausted the jurisdiction of the court, etc.; and that the court had no power, by proceedings taken in 1885, to order a resurvey.

372] *This petition for a rehearing having been denied, petitioner appealed to this court.

Mr. H. H. Buckman for appellants.

Mr. Rufus K. Sewall, appellee, for himself.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

As this appeal was taken long after the act of March 3, 1891, establishing the court of appeals, went into effect, it should have been taken to the court of appeals of the fifth circuit, unless the case be one within the 5th section of the act, wherein the jurisdiction of the court is in issue. In such cases, however "the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision." There is an entire absence of such certificate in this case,—an absence which was held to be fatal to the appeal in Maynard v. Hecht, 151 U. S. 324 [38: 179]; Moran v. Hagerman, 151 U. S. 329 [38: 181]; Colvin v. Jacksonville, 157 U. S. 368 [39: 736]; and Davis & R. Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Barber, 157 U. S. 673 [39: 853]. It is true that in Re Lehigh Min. & Mfg. Co. 156 U. S. 322 [39: 438], we held that the certificate was not necessary, inasmuch as it appeared in the decree that the question involved was only a question of jurisdiction, and the judgment not only recited that the court considered it had no jurisdiction of the case, and therefore dismissed it for want of jurisdiction, but the district judge certified in the bill of exceptions that it was "held that the court did not have jurisdiction of the suit, and ordered the same to be dismissed," and, in the order allowing the writ of error, certified in effect that it was allowed "upon the question of jurisdiction." So, also, in Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 168 [39: 660], where the court below, granting the appeal, said, "this appeal is granted solely upon the question of jurisdiction," and made further provisions for determining what part of the record should be certified to this court 373] under the *appeal, we held this to be a sufficient certificate of a question of jurisdiction under the act.

In this case, however, the only question of jurisdiction is raised by the demurrer of Sewall to the petition, which is upon two grounds: First, that the proper and final decree had been made adjudicating all the issues in the cause; and second, that the court had no power or jurisdiction to grant the petitioners relief. This, however, is in substance only a general demurrer to the bill for the want of equity.

In the petition of Sarah Van Wagenen for a rehearing it is alleged that a final decree was rendered in 1851 fully and finally disposing of the cause, which exhausted all the jurisdiction of the court, and that it was beyond its power and jurisdiction to vacate the survey ordered by such decree by the subsequent proceedings taken in 1885. It is very doubtful whether the question thus raised by her of the authority to vacate and set aside a previous decree of the court did not involve a power to exercise a jurisdiction already vested rather than a question of jurisdiction itself, within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1891. Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 170, 180 [37: 1041, 1043].

In any event, however, we cannot be required to search the record to ascertain whether the petition was dismissed for the want of equity, or for some other reason. Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 168, 177 [39: 660, 663]. Indeed, it appears to have been the very object of the 5th section of the act of 1891 to have the question of jurisdiction plainly and distinctly certified to us, or at least to have it appear so clearly in the decree of the court below that no other question was involved, that no further examination of the record would be necessary.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

*UNION MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ELIZABETH KIRCHOFF.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 374-378.)

Final decree.

A decree which remands a case to the court below for further judicial proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the appellate court is not final for the purpose of a writ of error to this court.

[No. 132.]

Argued December 19, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Illinois to review a decree of that court affirming the decree of the Appellate Court of that State which reversed a decree of the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the opinion of the Appellate Court, in a suit brought by Elizabeth Kirchoff against the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company, to enforce specific performance of an agreement to convey land. Dismissed.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; and Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

See same case below, 128 Ill. 199, 33 Ill. App. 607, 133 Ill. 368.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a bill in equity originally filed by Elizabeth Kirchoff, June 12, 1882, in the circuit court of Cook county, Illinois, against the appellant, to enforce the specific performance of a certain agreement for the conveyance to her of two lots of land in the city of Chicago. The prayer of the bill was subsequently amended by the addition of a clause praying that the plaintiff might be allowed to redeem the premises according to the terms of said agreement.

The controversy between these parties has been the constant subject of litigation since July, 1878, and in one form or another has been twice to the appellate court of Illinois, and three times to the supreme court of the state. The facts are somewhat complicated, but so far as necessary to the disposition of this case may be summarized as follows:

On May 8, 1871, Julius Kirchoff, being engaged in the distillery business in Chicago, borrowed $60,000 of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company, and to secure the payment thereof, executed, together with his wife Elizabeth and her mother Angela Diversey, a joint judgment note for $60,000 and a trust deed covering certain real estate in Chicago belonging to Kirchoff and his wife, and certain other property, including a farm in Cook county, owned by Mrs. Diversey. The money received from the loan was put in the bank to the credit of the firm of Kirchoff Bros. & Co., which soon after failed.

375] *In 1876, default having been made in the payment of interest and taxes, judgment was taken against Mrs. Diversey on the note, after certain unsuccessful negotiations towards funding the indebtedness into a new loan at a lower rate of interest, and on July 11, 1878, proceedings were commenced in the circuit court of the United States to foreclose the trust deed. The bill in addition sought to cure a misdescription of the property belonging to Mrs. Diversey, who filed an answer denying the right of the company to cure the misdescription, and averring that the notes and mortgage were procured from her by misrepresentation.

From this time the relation of the parties seems to have remained unchanged until June, 1879, when an agreement was reached by which the company released to Mrs. Diversey its claim upon 40 acres of the land belonging to her, and she executed to it a warranty deed for the remainder of the premises. About the same time, Mrs. Kirchoff and her husband executed a quitclaim deed of all the property belonging to them and included in the mortgage. The deed from Mrs. Diversey was immediately placed on record, but the deed from the Kirchoffs was withheld by the agent and attorney of the insurance company.

It was claimed by Mrs. Kirchoff that, during the negotiations which culminated in the execution of the above deeds, it was agreed that the insurance company should reconvey to her two lots included in her deed, one of which was then occupied as a homestead, the other cornering upon it but facing the other way; that the price at which the reconveyance should take place was their valuation at a previous appraisement made by one Rees, viz., $7,500 and $2,500 respectively, and that Mrs. Kirchoff was to execute in payment therefor her notes for $10,000, extending over a period of ten years, bearing interest at 6 per cent, and secured by a mortgage upon the two lots. It seems there were certain intervening claims on one of the lots, growing out of a sheriff's deed, executed pursuant to a sale on a judgment against Mrs. Kirchoff, rendered subsequently to the original trust deed but prior to the deed from Kirchoff and wife to the company, *which rendered [376] necessary a further prosecution of the foreclosure proceedings, in order that the company might obtain a good title to the premises, so as to convey a clear title to Mrs. Kirchoff and take from her a mortgage which would be a first lien thereon. It is claimed that this matter was explained to Mr. Kirchoff, her husband and agent, and he was assured that the prosecution of the foreclosure proceedings would not in any manner affect the agreement which had been made, but that, as soon as the company got a deed from the master in chancery, it would carry out its part of the contract by conveying to Mrs. Kirchoff the premises in question, and would then take the mortgage from her. She alleged that, relying upon this agreement, no defense was made to the foreclosure proceedings by her, and the same were prosecuted to a decree, and the master's deed issued thereon to the insurance company January 21, 1882. The object of the bill in this case was to insist upon this right of redemption in accordance with its terms.

The insurance company, on the other hand, contended that an inspection of the record showed that no such agreement was ever concluded, and that the state court was bound by the decree of the Federal court foreclosing the mortgage, and had no jurisdiction to review it. It was not disputed that propositions similar to the so-called agreement were discussed between the Kirchoffs and the agents of the insurance company, or that assurances were given by the latter of the probable willingness of the insurance company to sell the land on the terms named; but it is claimed that when the insurance company was advised of the proposition, it was instantly and unequivocally declined, and this action of the company communicated to Mrs. Kirchoff in time to prevent any injury to her from the quitclaim deed. That, after having been thus fully advised, she elected to deliver the deed, and in that manner get the benefit of the release from her indebtedness.

A demurrer was filed to the bill, which was overruled, when defendant answered, denying the agreement for redemption set forth in the bill, and also setting up the statute of frauds as a defense. The case coming on for a hearing upon pleadings*and proofs, the bill [377] was dismissed for want of equity. An appeal was taken to the state supreme court, which was dismissed upon the ground that the case should have gone to the appellate court. 128 Ill. 199. Whereupon the complainant sued out a writ of error from the appellate court of the first district of Illinois to the circuit court of Cook county, and upon a hearing in the appellate court the decree of the circuit court was reversed, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the opinion of the appellate court. 33 Ill. App. 607. This opinion was not sent up with the record in this case. From the decree of the appellate court, the insurance company prosecuted an appeal to the supreme court of the state, which affirmed the decree of the appellate court. 133 Ill. 368. To reverse that decision, this writ of error was sued out.

Messrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Frank L. Wean, and J. H. Drummond for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. George R. Daley, William S. Harbert, and Ira W. Buell for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

From the briefs of counsel and the reports of the case in the Illinois reports, we are informed that, upon the affirmance by the supreme court of the decree of the appellate court, the case was remanded to the circuit court of Cook county, where an accounting was taken and a decree entered in accordance with the opinion of the appellate court. From that decree the company is said to have appealed to the appellate court of the first district, which affirmed the decree of the circuit court. 51 Ill. App. 67. Whereupon the insurance company again appealed to the supreme court of the state, which again affirmed the decision of the appellate court. 149 Ill. 536. But as the writ of error from this court was not taken to reverse that decree, but to reverse [378] the first decree *of the supreme court, affirming the decree of the appellate court, we are concerned only with the questions arising upon that decree, and more particularly with its finality. It will be observed that it simply affirms the decree of the appellate court, but upon reference to that decree, we find that it reverses the decree of the circuit court of Cook county, "with directions to that court to enter an order and decree in conformity with the opinion filed herein." As this opinion was not sent up with the record, we have no means of knowing judicially what it was, though we are informed by the briefs of counsel that an accounting was ordered and taken in the circuit court.

Obviously the decree, to review which this writ of error was sued out, was not a final decree. The finality of decrees is a subject which has been so much discussed in the decisions of this court that it is useless to do more than to cite the cases of Lodge v. Twell, 135 U. S. 232 [34: 153], and McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 146 U. S. 536 [36: 1079], wherein most of the prior cases are reviewed.

This case is not one for nice distinctions, since the rule is well-nigh universal that, if the case be remanded by the appellate court to the court below for further judicial proceedings, in conformity with the opinion of the appellate court, the decree is not final. Especially is this the case when the opinion to which the new decree is required to conform does not appear. Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank (Brown v. Baxter) 146 U. S. 619 [36: 1106]; Houston v. Moore, 16 U. S. 3 Wheat. 433 [4: 428]; Bostwick v. Brinkerhoff, 106 U. S. 3 [27: 73]; Johnson v. Keith, 117 U. S. 199 [29: 888]; Rice v. Sanger, 144 U. S. 197 [36: 403]; Meagher v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 145 U. S. 608 [36: 834]; Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245 [37: 438]; Werner v. Charleston, 151 U. S. 360 [38: 192].

The writ of error is therefore dismissed.

*WILLIAM WALLACE KIRBY ET AL., Appts.,

v.
MARIA E. TALLMADGE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 379-389.)

Notice of title—joint occupation.

1. Where land is occupied by two persons, as, for instance, by husband and wife, and there is a recorded title in one of them, such joint occupation is not notice of an unrecorded title in the other.
2. But where the land is used for the purpose of a home, and is jointly occupied by husband and wife, neither of whom have title by record, such joint occupation is notice of the wife's title to a purchaser from a third person holding a record title.

[No. 96.]

Argued December 5, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia affirming the decree of the court below in favor of Maria E. Tallmadge, plaintiff, against Wm. Wallace Kirby et al., setting aside a deed and a deed of trust as fraudulent and void and as a cloud upon her title. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a bill in equity filed by Maria E. Tallmadge against the appellants to set aside and remove, as a cloud upon her title, a deed made by the appellants, Richard H. Miller, Elizabeth Houchens, and Ella A. Goudy, claiming to be heirs at law of one John L. Miller, deceased, dated August 30, 1888, and purporting to convey to the appellant Kirby the property therein described. The bill further prayed for the cancellation of a trust deed executed by the appellant Kirby and his wife to the defendants Willoughby and Williamson, and for an injunction against all the NOTE.—As to conveyances between husband and wife upheld in equity, see note to Bank of United States v. Lee, 10: 81.

What necessary to constitute adverse possession; requisites of,—see note to Ricard v. Williams, 5: 333.

As to mortgagor's possession, not adverse, see note to Higginson v. Mein, 2: 664.

As to the occupancy necessary to constitute adverse possession, see note to Ewing v. Burnet, 9: 624.

defendants except Kirby, restraining them from negotiating certain notes given by Kirby for the purchase of said lots, etc.

The facts disclosed by the testimony show that, in 1882, Mrs. Tallmadge, the appellee, purchased of one Bates, for a home, lots Nos. 77 and 78, in square 239, in the city of Washington, with the improvements thereon, for the sum of $10,000, $5,000 of which were paid in cash, the residue to be paid in five instal-380]ments of $1,000 *each. Instead of taking the title to the property in herself, she furnished the money to John L. Miller, a friend of the family, who paid the $5,000 cash with the money thus furnished, and at her request took the title in his own name, and executed notes for the deferred payments, which he secured by a deed of trust upon the property. Subsequently, and in June, 1883, Miller also purchased with the funds of Mrs. Tallmadge the adjoining lot No. 76, taking title in his own name, and executing a deed of trust for the deferred payments, amounting to $1,266.

Mrs. Tallmadge took immediate possession of the premises, and has occupied them as her own from that day to the time the bill was filed, paying taxes, improvements, and interest on encumbrances, reducing the principal $2,266, and holding open and notorious possession under her claim of title.

Mr. Miller, who claimed no title or right to the premises in himself, on December 27, 1883, by a deed signed by himself and wife, conveyed the legal title to Mrs. Tallmadge, but this deed, through inadvertence or otherwise, was not recorded until October 4, 1888. Mr. Miller died in February, 1888, and by his will, which was dated December 1, 1880, devised his estate to his widow.

On June 16, 1888, defendants Miller, Houchens, and Goudy, collateral heirs of John L. Miller, who had made a contract with the defendants Willoughby and Williamson to give them one quarter of whatever they could get for them out of the estate of Miller, filed a bill in the supreme court of the district against the widow and executor of Miller, the holders of the notes given by him, and the trustees in one of the deeds of trust, praying for a partition or sale of the property, the admeasurement of the widow's dower, and for a charge upon the personal estate of Miller for the unpaid purchase money of the property.

To this bill the widow of John L. Miller made answer that her husband never had any interest in the property in question; that the title was taken in his name for Mrs. Tallmadge; and that long before his death he had by deed duly conveyed it to her, and that neither she 381]nor his estate had or had ever *had any interest in the property. In August, 1888, the pendency of this suit coming to the knowledge of Mrs. Tallmadge, she sent the original deed from Miller to her, then unrecorded, by Mr. Tallmadge to Willoughby and Williamson, solicitors for Miller's heirs, who examined and made minutes from it.

On August 30, 1888, Houchens, Goudy, and Miller, who had filed the bill for partition, executed a deed conveying the property to the appellant Kirby, subject to the dower rights of Mrs. Miller, for a consideration of $12,000, $3,000 of which were said to have been paid in cash and $9,000 by notes secured by a mortgage or trust deed upon the property to Willoughby and Williamson as trustees. Kirby thereupon claimed the property as an innocent purchaser without notice of the prior deed. He at once gave notice to Mr. Tallmadge that he would demand rent for the property at the rate of $1,000 per annum.

On receipt of this notice Mrs. Tallmadge filed this bill to cancel and set aside the deed and deed of trust. Answers were filed by the defendants and testimony taken by the plaintiff tending to show the facts alleged in her bill. Neither of the appellants took proof, nor did they or either of them offer themselves as witnesses, but stood upon their answers.

Upon final hearing, the court below, in special term, rendered a decree in accordance with the prayer of the bill, setting aside the deed and deed of trust as fraudulent and void, from which decree defendants appealed to the general term, which affirmed the decree of the court below, and further directed that Miller, on the demand of Kirby, return to him the $3,000 which Kirby claimed to have paid and which Miller admitted to have received.

From this decree defendants appealed to this court.

Messrs. W. Willoughby, John T. Morgan, and L. Cabell Williamson, for appellants:

No inference is to be deduced from possession when it is consistent with the possessory title on record. To have it received as equivalent to actual notice it must appear affirmatively to have been open, visible, exclusive, and unambiguous, such as is not liable to be misunderstood or misconstrued.

Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 43; Dey v. Dunham, 2 Johns. Ch. 182; 4 Kent, Com. 8th ed. 179; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 398.

It must be such a notice as, with attending circumstances, will affect the subsequent purchaser with actual fraud. A notice enough merely to put the party on inquiry is not sufficient to break in upon the registry act.

2 Sugden, Vendors, 987; Spofford v. Hobbs, 29 Me. 148, 48 Am. Dec. 521; Sibley v. Leffingwell, 8 Allen, 584; Howes v. Wiswell, 8 Me. 94; Dooley v. Wolcott, 4 Allen, 406.

The mere occupation is not sufficient notice, but only that it may be taken in connection with other direct evidence that the purchaser had actual notice.

Pomroy v. Stevens, 11 Met. 247; Mara v. Pierce, 9 Gray, 306; McMechan v. Griffing, 3 Pick. 149, 15 Am. Dec. 198; Beatie v. Butler, 21 Mo. 313, 64 Am. Dec. 234.

But in this case the complainant did not visibly occupy the premises. The occupation was by her husband. So it would appear to the public, and so in fact it was. All the cases hold that occupation by some other person than the one holding the unrecorded deed is no notice of title of such holder.

Harris v. Arnold, 1 R. I. 125; Rogers v. Jones, 8 N. H. 264; Beatie v. Butler, supra; Pomroy v. Stevens, 11 Met. 244; LeNeve v. LeNeve, 2 Lead. Eq. Cas. 122; Thompson v. Rose, 8 Cow. 266; Nelson v. Henry, 2 Mackey, 259, 10 Watts, 13-28; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 555; Farnsworth v. Childs, 4 Mass. 640, 3 Am. Dec. 249; Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 486; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 365; Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504 (27: 1012); Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417 (35: 1063).

Mr. John C. Fay, for appellee:

Where the defense in such a case as this is that the defendant is an innocent purchaser without notice, "the answer must state that the defendant's vendor was seised in fee and was in possession at the time of his purchase. And this must not only be averred in the answer but the answer setting it up is no evidence against the plaintiff, who is not bound to contradict or rebut it." It must be established affirmatively by the defendant independently of his oath.

Boone v. Chiles, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 211, 212 (9: 400, 401).

Open, notorious, adverse possession under claim of title was notice.

Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. Jr. 120; Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. Jr. 253; Gouverneur v. Lynch, 2 Paige, 300; Grimstone v. Carter, 3 Paige, 436, 24 Am. Dec. 230; Brown v. Anderson, 1 T. B. Mon. 201; Buck v. Holloway, 2 J. J. Marsh. 180; Landes v. Brant, 51 U. S. 10 How. 375, 376 (13: 461); Lea v. Polk County Copper Co. 62 U. S. 21 How. 493 (16: 203); Hughes v. United States, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 236 (18: 305).

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

The controversy in this case arises from the fact that the deed from John L. Miller to Mrs. Tallmadge, which was given December 27, 1883, was not put upon record until October 4, 1888. In the meantime, and in February, 1888, Miller, in whose name the property had been taken for the benefit of Mrs. Tallmadge, died; and on August 30, 1888, Houchens, Goudy, and Richard Henry Miller, collateral heirs of John L. Miller, executed a deed of the property, subject to the dower rights of Miller's widow, to defendant Kirby for an expressed consideration of $12,000, of which $3,000 are said to have been paid down in cash, and $9,000 in notes payable to Willoughby and Williamson. Kirby now claims to be an innocent purchaser of the property, without notice of the prior deed from John L. Miller to Mrs. Tallmadge.

There are several circumstances in this case which tend to arouse a suspicion that Kirby's purchase of the property was not made in good faith. Within three months after the probate of the will of John L. Miller, his collateral heirs, Houchens, Goudy, and Richard H. Miller, who had made a contract with Willoughby and Williamson to give them one quarter of whatever they could get for them out of the estate of Miller, filed a bill for the partition of real estate and to set off the widow's dower. His widow, Lola, answered, admitted that her husband did not purchase the lands described in the bill, and alleged that he had conveyed them away in his lifetime.

Mrs. Tallmadge, hearing of this suit, instead of appearing formally therein, submitted her deed from Miller to the solicitors for the complainants in the partition suit, who did not amend their bill or make her a party, but apparently allowed the suit to drop, inasmuch as the complainants, being heirs of John L. Miller, took only his actual interest in the land, of which, owing to his deed to Mrs. Tallmadge in his lifetime, nothing remained at his death. Shortly thereafter, the *complainants [383 in that suit, who must have been well aware that they had no title to the property, executed a deed to Kirby of all their interest in the land for a consideration of $12,000, subject to the dower right of Mrs. Miller, the debts of John L. Miller, and so much of the notes of $5,000 as were unpaid after applying his personal estate. Kirby alleges in his answer that he examined the premises twice and approached the house, but never seems to have entered it, and apparently took up with the first proposition made to him to buy it, without any of the bargaining that usually precedes the consummation of a sale of property of that value. While he avers in his answer, and Miller admits, the payment of $3,000 in cash, defendants introduced no testimony whatever in support of their case, but relied solely upon their answers. As they had it in their power to explain the suspicious circumstances connected with the transaction, we regard their failure to do so as a proper subject of comment. "All evidence," said Lord Mansfield in Blatch v. Archer, Cowp. 63, 65, "is to be weighed according to the proof which it was in the power of one side to have produced and in the power of the other side to have contradicted." It would certainly have been much more satisfactory if the defendants, who must have been acquainted with all the facts and circumstances attending this somewhat singular transaction, had gone upon the stand and given their version of the facts. McDonough v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 92; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 316, 52 Am. Dec. 711. It is said by Mr. Starkie, in his work on Evidence (vol. 1, p. 54): "The conduct of the party in omitting to produce that evidence in elucidation of the subject-matter in dispute, which is within his power and which rests peculiarly within his own knowledge, frequently affords occasion for presumptions against him, since it raises strong suspicion that such evidence, if adduced, would operate to his prejudice."

160 U. S.

But the decisive answer to the ease of bona fide purchase made by the defendant Kirby is that Mrs. Tallmadge had, ever since the original purchase of the land by Miller in 1882, been in the open, notorious, and continued possession of the property, occupying it as a home. The law is perfectly well *settled, both [384 in England and in this country, except, perhaps, in some of the New England states, that such possession, under apparent claim of ownership, is notice to purchasers of whatever interest the person actually in possession has in the fee, whether such interest be legal or equitable in its nature, and of all facts which the proposed purchaser might have learned by due inquiry. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 614; Wade, Notice, § 273. The same principle was adopted by this court in Landes v. Brant, 51 U. S. 10 How. 348, 375 [13: 449, 461], in which it was held that "open and notorious occupation and adverse holding by the first purchaser, when the second deed is taken, is in itself sufficient to warrant a jury or court in finding that the purchaser had evidence before him of a character to put him on inquiry as to what title the possession was held under; and that he, the subsequent purchaser, was bound by that title, aside from all other evidence of such possession and holding." The principle has been steadily adhered to in subsequent decisions. Lea v. Polk County Copper Co. 62 U. S. 21 How. 493, 498 [16: 203, 205]; Hughes v. United States, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 232, 236 [18: 303, 304]; Noyes v. Hall, 97 U. S. 34 [24: 909]; McLean v. Clapp, 141 U. S. 429, 436 [35: 804, 807]; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417 [35: 1063].

Defendants' reply to this proposition is that the occupancy in this case, being that of a husband and wife, is by law referable to the husband alone as the head of the family; that the purchaser was not bound by any notice except such as arose from the possession of the husband, and that, as he had no title to the property, Kirby was not bound to ascertain whether other members of the family had title or not. There are undoubtedly cases holding that occupation by some other person than the one holding the unrecorded deed is no notice of title in such third person, and that the apparent possession of premises by the head of a family is no notice of a title in a mere boarder, lodger, or subordinate member of such family, or of a secret agreement between the head of a family and another person. As was said by this court in Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504 [27: 1012]: "Where possession is relied upon as giving constructive notice it must be open and unambiguous, and not liable to be misunderstood." [385] stood or misconstrued. *It must be sufficiently distinct and unequivocal, so as to put the purchaser on his guard." In this case one James Townsend bought and took possession of a public house in Salt Lake City, and lived in it with his lawful wife and a plural or polygamous wife, the latter, who was the appellant, taking an active part in conducting the business of the hotel. He subsequently ceased to maintain relations with the appellant as his polygamous wife, but, being desirous of having the benefit of her services, both concealed this fact. He made a secret agreement with her that if she would thus remain she should have a half interest in the property. He afterwards acquired his legal title to the property without a disclosure of the secret agreement. His interest therein having subsequently passed into the hands of innocent third parties for value, without notice of appellant's claim under the secret agreement, it was held that the joint occupation of the premises by herself and Townsend, under the circumstances, was not a constructive notice of her claim, and that she had no rights in the premises as against a bona fide purchaser without notice. There were evidently two substantial reasons why appellant's possession was not notice of her rights. First, James Townsend took the legal title to himself in 1873 and held it until 1878, when the purchase was made; and, second, his agreement with the appellant was not one with his lawful, but his polygamous, wife, and was also a secret one. The case is obviously not one of a joint occupation by a husband and his lawful wife, neither of them having any title thereto.

In the case of Thomas v. Kennedy, 24 Iowa, 397, 95-Am. Dec. 740, it was held that, where real estate is ostensibly as much in the possession of the husband as the wife, there is no such actual possession by the wife as will impart notice of an equitable interest possessed by her in the land, to a purchaser at execution sale under a judgment against her husband, in whom the legal title apparently was at the time of the rendition of the judgment. This case is also a mere application of the rule that if there be any title to the land in one who is in possession of it, the possession will be referred to that title, or, as *said in 2 Pomeroy's [386] Equity Jurisprudence, § 616: "Where a title under which the occupant holds has been put upon record, and his possession is consistent with what thus appears of record, it shall not be a constructive notice of any additional or different title or interest to a purchaser who has relied upon the record, but has had no actual notice beyond what is thereby disclosed." That the court did not intend to hold that a joint occupation by a husband and wife is in no case notice of more than the occupation of the husband is evident from the subsequent case of Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. King, 58 Iowa, 598, in which the court said: "It cannot, we think, be doubted that possession of real property by a husband and wife together will impart notice of the wife's equities as against all persons other than those claiming under the husband, their possession being regarded as joint by reason of the family relation." In this case the occupation was by a husband and wife, and it was held that such possession was notice of a title in the wife to a life estate in the property as against the holder of a mortgage given by a son, who was a member of the family as a boarder, lodging a part of the time in his mother's house and a part of the time elsewhere,—the legal title being in the son.

In the case of Lindley v. Martindale, 78 Iowa, 379, the title to the lands was in a son of the plaintiff, who resided on a portion of them, while plaintiff and her husband resided on another portion. The lands had for a long time been cared for either by the husband or the son, and it was held that one who, upon being told that the title was in the son, took a mortgage from him to secure a loan, which was used for the most part to pay off prior encumbrances placed on the land by the son, was not charged with the alleged equities of plaintiff by reason of her claimed possession of the land, the court holding that her possession was not such as the law requires to impart notice. The case is not entirely reconcilable with the last.

In Harris v. McIntyre, 118 Ill. 275, a widow furnished her bachelor brother money with which to buy a farm for their joint use, the title to be taken to each in proportion to the *sums advanced by them, respectively. [387] He, however, took a conveyance of the entire estate to himself and they both moved upon the place, he managing the land and she attending to the household duties. The deed was recorded, and he borrowed money, mortgaged the land to secure the loan, and appeared to the world as the owner for a period of over ten years, during which time the sister took no steps to have her equitable rights enforced or asserted. It was held that her possession, under such circumstances, was not such as would charge a subsequent purchaser from her brother with notice of her equitable rights. Here, too, the record title was strictly consistent with the possession.

In Rankin v. Coar, 46 N. J. Eq. 566, a widow who occupied part of a house in which she was entitled to dower, while her son, the sole heir at law, occupied the rest of the house, released her dower therein to her son by deed duly recorded. It was held that her continued occupation thereafter would not give notice to one who took a mortgage from the son, of a title in her to a part of the house occupied by her, acquired by an unrecorded deed to her from her son contemporaneous with her release of dower. "Possession," said the court, "to give notice or to make inquiry a duty, must be open, notorious, and unequivocal. There must be such an occupation of the premises as a man of ordinary prudence, treating for the acquisition of some interest therein, would observe, and, observing, would perceive to be inconsistent with the right of him with whom he was treating, and so be led to inquiry."

So in Atwood v. Bearss, 47 Mich. 72, the title to property upon the record appeared to be in the wife. Her husband's previous occupation had been under her ownership and in right of the marital relation, and nothing had transpired to suggest that she had made the property over to him. She had, however, given him a deed, which was not put upon record. It was held that his continuance in possession was no notice of this deed, since it was obviously consistent with the previous title in herself.

Indeed, there can be no doubt whatever of the 388 proposition *that, where the land is occupied by two persons,—as, for instance, by husband and wife,—and there is a recorded title in one of them, such joint occupation is not notice of an unrecorded title in the other. In such case the purchaser, finding title in one, would be thrown off his guard with respect to the title of the other. The rule is universal that if the possession be consistent with the record title, it is no notice of an unrecorded title. But, where the land is used for the purpose of a home, and is jointly occupied by husband and wife, neither of whom has title by record, we think that in view of the frequency with which homestead property is taken in the name of the wife, the proposed purchaser is bound to make some inquiry as to their title.

The case of Phelan v. Brady, 119 N. Y. 587, is an instance of this. In this case a suit was brought to foreclose a mortgage upon certain premises given by one Murphy, who held an apparently perfect record title to the property. It appeared, however, that before the execution of the mortgage Murphy had conveyed the premises to one Margaret Brady, who was in possession and with her husband occupied two rooms in the building on the premises. She also kept a liquor store in a part thereof. The other rooms she leased to various tenants, claiming to be the owner, and collecting the rents. Her deed was not recorded until after the giving of the mortgage. It was held that her actual possession under 160 U. S.

her deed, although unrecorded and its existence unknown to plaintiff, was sufficient notice to him of her rights to defeat any claim under the mortgage. This case goes much farther than is necessary to justify the court in holding that Mrs. Tallmadge's possession was notice in the case under consideration, as the actual occupation of the wife was only of two rooms in a tenement house containing forty-three apartments.

If there be any force at all in the general rule that the possession of another than the grantor puts the purchaser upon inquiry as to the nature of such possession, it applies with peculiar cogency to a case like the present, where the slightest inquiry, either of the husband or wife, would have revealed the actual facts. Instead of making such inquiry, Kirby turns *his back upon every source of informa- [389] tion, does not even enter the house, makes no examination as to whether the property was in litigation, and buys it of collateral heirs of Miller, subject to his widow's dower if he had had the title, to an unpaid mortgage, and to the chances of the property being required for the payment of Miller's debts. It is clear that a purchase made under such circumstances does not clothe the vendee with the rights of a bona fide purchaser without notice.

We see no reason for impeaching the original purchase of the land by Mrs. Tallmadge. Her account of the transaction is supported by the testimony of all the witnesses, as well as by the receipts and other documentary evidence. Her failure to cause the deed to be recorded is not an unusual piece of carelessness, nor is it an infrequent cause of litigation. Under the circumstances of the case, it raises no presumption of fraud. What motives she may have had for taking the title to the property in the name of Mr. Miller is entirely immaterial to the present controversy, although it appears from her testimony that she was possessed of money in her own right, and took this method of investing it.

The decree of the court below is therefore affirmed.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,

v.
STATE OF IOWA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 389-394.)

Immunity of citizens—state law—denial of jury trial.

1. It is not a right, privilege, or immunity of a citizen of the United States to have a controversy in the state court prosecuted or determined by one form of action instead of by another.
2. Provided the form sanctioned by the state law gives notice and affords an opportunity to be heard, the mere question of whether it is by a motion or ordinary action in no way renders the proceeding not due process of law.
3. For a state court to refuse a jury trial is not a denial of a right protected by the United States

NOTE.—As to what is "due process of law," see note to Pearson v. Yewdall, 24: 436.

Constitution, even though it may have been clearly erroneous to construe the laws of the state as justifying the refusal.

[No. 128.]

Submitted December 18, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa to review a judgment of that court directing the operation by the Iowa Central Railway Company of a railroad and that a mandatory injunction issue. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 71 Iowa, 410, 60 Am. Rep. 806.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

In 1880 the Central Iowa Railway Company, which had become the owner, through foreclosure proceedings, of the railroad of the Central Railway Company of Iowa, leased to the Burlington, Cedar Rapids, & Northern Company about 11 miles of said road, which lay between Manly Junction and Northwood, the northern terminus of the Central company's road. The Burlington company took exclusive possession of the leased premises. In 1881 the citizens of Northwood made application to the state railroad commissioners for an order requiring the Central Iowa Railway Company to operate such leased portion of its road, and after due notice a hearing was had before the commissioners, and, in 1883, the order prayed for was granted. As the company failed to obey, an action was brought, pursuant to Iowa Laws 1884, chap. 133, to compel compliance with the order of the commissioners. The state district court rendered a decree against the railroad company, and on appeal after a hearing and overruling of a motion for rehearing, the supreme court of the state, in October, 1887, entered a decree ordering, adjudging, and decreeing that the Central Iowa Railway Company operate such leased portions of its line, and enjoining the Burlington company from interference therewith. The opinion of the supreme court is reported in 71 Iowa, 410, 60 Am. Rep. 806.

During the pendency of this litigation, however, foreclosure proceedings were instituted in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Iowa against the Central Iowa Railway Company, and, while the cause was pending in the supreme court of Iowa, on the appeal of the company a receiver of its property was appointed. A decree of foreclosure was entered and in September, 1887, the road was sold. Subsequently, the purchaser [391] assigned his purchase to the Iowa Railway Company, a corporation of Iowa, which company thereafter made conveyance to plaintiff in error herein, an Illinois corporation, and the receiver surrendered possession to it on May 30, 1889.

In August, 1889, the attorney general of the state of Iowa filed a petition in the supreme court of the state, in the name of the state as plaintiff, against the Iowa Central Railway Company, alleging the entry of the decree of October, 1887, above referred to; that thereafter the Iowa Railway Company had become the successor, assignee, and grantee of the Central Iowa Railway Company, and was operating and running its line contrary to the terms and provisions of the decree and in violation thereof. A mandatory injunction was prayed to compel the defendant to obey the command and order contained in said decree.

A copy of said petition, with notice of an intention to apply for an order to show cause why the order and decree referred to should not be obeyed, was served upon the railway company. That company filed its answer and amendments thereto, which, in substance, set forth that it was not a party to the suit in which the decree was rendered; that the Central Iowa Railway Company at the time of the entering of the decree was dead, to all intents and purposes, by reason of the fact that a receiver had theretofore been appointed, and the road of the company sold under foreclosure; that defendant was not the successor, assignee, or grantee of said Central Iowa Railway Company and had not been adjudged so to be; that no demand had been made upon it to perform the decree, and that a mandatory writ ought not to be issued until it had an opportunity of testing in a regular manner the right of the state to require the performance of the decree in question. The defendant also filed a demand for a jury trial. Thereupon a motion was made on behalf of the state to enter the order prayed for in the petition, upon the ground that the defendant in its answer had not shown cause why such order should not be made, and for the further reason that from the record and pleadings in the proceeding it appeared that the plaintiff was entitled to such order. Plaintiff's motion for judgment [392] was granted, and on October 26, 1891, an entry was made in the cause in the words and figures following: "In this cause the court, being fully advised in the premises, file their written decision and find that plaintiff is entitled to an order for the operation of the road by defendant as prayed for, and that a writ issue accordingly. It is further considered by the court that the defendant pay the costs of this court, taxed at $22.75, and that execution issue therefor."

The cause was then brought to this court by writ of error.

Mr. Anthony C. Daly for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Milton Remley, Attorney General of Iowa, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The contention of the plaintiff in error is that the proceeding instituted against it in the supreme court of Iowa was an action for mandamus, and that no such action could lawfully be brought to compel it to operate the leased portion of its road until its legal duty to do so had been previously determined by the verdict of a jury. There was no assertion that the court below had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Nowhere in the answer or in the amendments to the answer filed on behalf of the company was it claimed that the proceeding was violative of the Constitution of the United States, or assailed any right, title, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed under that Constitution. Indeed, there was no mention of any right thereunder until the filing of a brief for defendant entitled "Defendant's Resistance and Objection to Plaintiff's Motion to Enter Order Prayed for in the Petition," in the 9th paragraph whereof it was claimed that it would be a violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States to grant the order prayed for upon the motion in question. It is apparent that this defense merely asserted that 393] the rights of the corporation as a *citizen of the United States would be impaired by enforcing the claim urged against it on the motion, instead of by another and less summary form of action. But it is clear that the 14th Amendment in no way undertakes to control the power of a state to determine by what process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations be enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for these purposes gives reasonable notice and affords fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided. This being the case, it was obviously not a right, privilege, or immunity of a citizen of the United States to have a controversy in the state court prosecuted or determined by one form of action instead of by another. It is also equally evident, provided the form sanctioned by the state law gives notice and affords an opportunity to be heard, that the mere question of whether it was by a motion or ordinary action in no way rendered the proceeding not due process of law within the constitutional meaning of those words. Whether the court of last resort of the state of Iowa properly construed its own Constitution and laws in determining that the summary process under those laws was applicable to the matter which it adjudged, was purely the decision of a question of state law, binding upon this court. Mere irregularities in the procedure, if any, were matters solely for the consideration of the judicial tribunal within the state empowered by the laws of the state to review and correct errors committed by its courts. Such errors affect merely matters of state law and practice in no way depending upon the Constitution of the United States or upon any act of Congress. Ludeling v. Chaffe, 143 U. S. 301, 305 [36:313, 314].

As said by this court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, in Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 468 [35:225, 227]: "Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice is due process, and when secured by the law of the state the constitutional requirement is satisfied." There was a "regular course of administration" in the case at bar, as that term was employed in the case cited.

It is manifest that it was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution that this 394] court should sit in review, as an *appellate court, of such a question as that presented by the record in the case at bar, viz., whether or not the highest court of a state erred in holding that it could rightfully determine from the statements in the pleadings filed by both parties to a controversy pending before it, that the averments of an answer set forth no defense to the claim of the plaintiff.

It was not a denial of a right protected by the Constitution of the United States to refuse a jury trial, even though it were clearly erroneous to construe the laws of the state as justifying the refusal. Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 394 [31:454]; Ex parte Spies, 123 U. S. 131, 166 [31:80, 86].

Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

WILLIAM P. SPALDING, Plff. in Err.,
v.
WILLIAM CHANDLER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 394-407.)

Indian reservation—power of President—act of 1852—right of pre-emption.

1. Public land accepted as an Indian reservation by both parties to an Indian treaty providing therefor is exempted from pre-emption as effectually as though it was specifically designated as a reservation by boundaries in the treaty itself.
2. The authority to set aside land for public uses, conferred upon the President by the act of March 1, 1847, does not empower him to interfere with an Indian reservation existing by force of a treaty.
3. The act of 1852, granting to the state of Michigan the right of locating a canal through an Indian reservation, extinguished so much of it as was granted to the state for that purpose, leaving the remaining portions of it to continue to exist, so as to prevent any pre-emption claim thereto.
4. Upon the extinguishment of an Indian title to a reservation during the operation of the act of September 4, 1841, the land was, by the 10th section of that act, not subject to pre-emption.

[No. 86.]

Argued December 2, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court of the County of Chippewa in said State in favor of defendant in a suit in equity brought by Wm. P. Spalding, plaintiff, against Wm. Chandler, defendant, to establish a trust in plaintiff's favor in certain lands which had been patented by the United States to defendant, and to have defendant ordered to execute a conveyance of the legal title. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John C. Donnelly and A. C. Raymond for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John H. Goff for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error by a bill in equity filed in the circuit court of the county of Chippewa, state of Michigan, sought *to have a trust [395] declared in his favor in certain lands at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, at one time a part of what was known as the "Indian Reserve," which land had been patented by the United States to the defendant, and to have the de-

NOTE.—As to Indians and Indian tribes, their status and rights; jurisdiction and control over them,—see note to Worcester v. Georgia, 8:483.

As to pre-emption rights, see note to United States v. Fitzgerald, 10:785.

defendant ordered to execute a conveyance of the legal title.

The facts in the case, as developed upon the trial, were as follows: On June 26, 1820 (7 Stat. at L. 206), the Chippewa tribe of Indians ceded to the United States 16 square miles of land. The tract ceded commenced at the Sault and extended 2 miles up and the same distance down the river with a depth of 4 miles, including a portage, the site of the village of Sault Ste. Marie, and the old French fort. Schoolcraft, American Lakes, 140. One of the objects of the expedition which effected the signing of the treaty was to prepare the way for an American garrison at the Sault. Schoolcraft, American Lakes, 135. At the time of the signing of the treaty there were about forty lodges of Chippewa Indians, containing a population of about two hundred souls, resident at the Sault, who subsisted wholly upon the whitefish which were very abundant at the foot of the falls near by the village. Schoolcraft, American Lakes, 133. The village settlement of the whites consisted of about fifteen or twenty buildings. Schoolcraft, American Lakes, 132. By the third article of the treaty it was provided that "the United States will secure to the Indians a perpetual right of fishing at the falls of St. Mary's and also a place of encampment upon the tract hereby ceded, convenient to the fishing ground, which place shall not interfere with the defenses of any military work which may be erected, nor with any private rights." The military post of Fort Brady was established on a part of the tract within a few years following the execution of the treaty.

On March 24, 1836 (7 Stat. at L. 491), the Ottawa and Chippewa Nations ceded to the United States a large tract of territory, including in its general limits the 16 square miles above mentioned. By article 3 of this treaty the right of fishing and encampment was preserved to the Indians in the following words: "It is understood that the reservation for 396a place of fishing and encampment, made under the treaty of St. Mary's, of the 16th of June, 1820, remains unaffected by this treaty." In 1845, under the directions of the surveyor general for the Northwest Territory, a survey was made at Sault Ste. Marie, and upon the map of said survey was noted the territory occupied by the military, as shown by the stockade or high posts around such occupation, and also the ground then in the occupation of the Indians under the treaty of 1820, and each of said reservations was respectively noted upon the map as the "Military Reserve" and the "Indian Reserve." At the time of the making of the survey of 1845 there was no occupation of the Indian reserve other than by Indians, and a raceway bounded the reserve on the south.

By an act approved March 1, 1847 (9 Stat. at L. 146), Congress established the Lake Superior land district in Michigan, embracing therein, among other land, the territory ceded by the Chippewas under the treaty of 1820, and provision was made for a geological survey and examination of the lands therein. It was provided in the closing sentence of § 2 that all nonmineral lands within said district should "be sold in the same manner as other lands under the laws now in force for the sale of the public lands, excepting and reserving from such sales section 16 in each township for the use of schools and such reservations as the President shall deem necessary for public uses."

On April 3, 1847, pursuant to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, based upon a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, acting on the suggestion of the fifth auditor of the Treasury, the President ordered that certain described lands in the northern peninsula of Michigan, or so much thereof as might be found necessary, should be reserved for public uses, and in said described land was included the north fractional half of fractional township 47 north, of range 1 east, which embraced the Indian reserve in question, as also the site of Fort Brady.

On August 25, 1847, as the result of a report of Brigadier General Brady, commanding the fourth military department, the acting Secretary of War made application to the Commissioner *of the General Land Office "to 397 cause to be reserved from sale the sections colored in red on the enclosed plat, embracing sections 4, 5, and 6 of township 47, range 1 east, and an additional tract adjoining the last-named section on the west not designated by number on the plat." On August 27, 1847, the Commissioner wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury, calling his attention to the fact that sections 4, 5, and 6 of township 47 north, range 1 east, had been reserved for public uses by the President on April 3, 1847, and requested that the Secretary make application "to the President for an order for the reservation of fractional sections 1 and 2, township 47 north, range 1 west, under the same act, for the use of Fort Brady." On August 30, 1847, this communication was transmitted to the President by the Secretary of the Treasury, together with a diagram exhibiting the location of the lands, and the President was asked to give his sanction to the proposed reservation. The request was complied with. Sections 1 and 2, township 47 north, range 1 west, lay to the westward of the Indian reserve, and the military post as then occupied was east of the Indian encampment.

The report of General Brady above referred to accompanied a plat prepared under his direction by Lieutenant Westcott, commandant at Fort Brady, of land which had been surveyed for military purposes. General Brady stated in his report:

"In making this reserve, I kept in view the probability that some day the government might build there a permanent work.

"As you have in your letter of instructions to me on this subject desired me to give my views in relation to that post, I shall merely observe that I believe that the best interests of the government and that of the community at large would be benefited by the government not offering for sale any of the lots fronting on the line of the canal from the reserve to the head of the rapids, believing, as I most assuredly do, that the day is not far distant when a canal will be made there, if not by the general government, by Michigan and the adjoining states. The quantity of the land that

It will require to receive the rocks and other 398] materials that will be taken out of a ship canal there no one can know, and until the canal is made those lots had better remain with the present owner. Should they go into the hands of individuals before the canal is completed, great would be the expense to get back the land necessary for the completion of this important work."

The village of Sault Ste. Marie was incorporated by the legislature of Michigan in 1849 (Mich. Laws 1849, pp. 336, 337), and included within its boundaries the military reserve of Fort Brady and the Indian reserve.

This act of incorporation was repealed in 1851, but while in force, to wit, on September 26, 1850, an act was approved (9 Stat. at L. 469) which provided for the examination and settlement of claims for land at the Sault Ste. Marie, in Michigan. By § 2 of the act, the Commissioner of the General Land Office was authorized to cause the register and receiver of the land office at Sault Ste. Marie to be furnished with a map, on a large scale, of the lines of the public surveys at the Sault Ste. Marie. And it was further provided in said section that "it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to direct the proper military officer, on the application of the register and receiver, to designate or cause to be designated upon the map aforesaid the position and the extent of lots necessary for military purposes, as also the position and the extent of any other lot or lots which may be required for other public purposes, and also the position and the extent of the Indian agency tract and of the Indian reserve." Specific directions with regard to the survey and map in question were also given in the 7th section of the act.

On February 15, 1853, the Commissioner of the General Land Office acknowledged receipt of a communication from the register and receiver at Sault Ste. Marie, of date 24th of September, 1852, wherein it had been suggested that a modification be made of the western boundary of the military reservation, so as to obviate a conflict with town and town lot claims; and the Commissioner advised the register and receiver that the Secretary of War had approved of the Westcott survey as the true limits of the military reservation. In their report of April 4, 1853, on the settlement of land 399] claims at Sault Ste. Marie, the register and receiver, under the head of "Reservations," say: "In accordance with the 2d section of said act (September 26, 1850) and the instructions, the military reservation of Fort Brady, according to 'Westcott's survey,' so called, the Indian reserve, the Indian agency reserve, and the Ste. Marie's canal reservation, of 400 feet in width, as located by Capt. Canfield on the 14th of October, 1852, acting under authority from the governor of Michigan, have been designated on the plat of the public survey of said village accompanying our abstracts, and our adjudications have been confined strictly to claims outside of said reservation, and in no instance have we confirmed claims, or any portion of the same, within said reservations."

The survey under the act of 1850 is known as the Whelpley survey. As the map of survey indicates, the limits of the military reserve shown by the survey embraced simply the land

required for the then use and occupation of the fort, and not the land reserved in 1847 by the orders of the President. The military reserve noted on the Whelpley map lay outside of and to the east of the Indian reserve. Pending the settlement of the claims of settlers on the lands of Sault Ste. Marie, under this act of 1850, an act of Congress was approved August 26, 1852 (10 Stat. at L. 35), granting to the state of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public lands for the construction of a ship canal around the falls of St. Mary. The work of constructing this canal was begun in 1852, and it was completed in the year 1855, and, as authorized and constructed, extended entirely across the Indian reserve as delineated on the 1845 and Whelpley maps of surveys, cutting the reservation into three parts, two of which lay north of the canal and one south of the canal.

In 1855 the Chippewa Indians released to the United States (11 Stat. at L. 631) the privileges retained by them under the treaty of 1820. The language employed was: "The said Chippewa Indians surrender to the United States the right of fishing at the falls of Sault Ste. Marie, and of encampment convenient to the fishing grounds, secured to them by the treaty of June 16, 1820."

*On September 10, 1859, one Byron D. 400] Adsitt built a small house on one of the tracts north of the canal, went into possession of the same, fenced a portion of the land, and planted a small garden. A month thereafter he paid $45.63 to the register of the land office at Marquette, Michigan, and entered for pre-emption "the lot designated on the maps of the United States survey in the land office at Marquette, Michigan, as 'Indian reserve' (subject to all the provisions, requirements, and conditions of the act of Congress entitled 'An Act Granting to the State of Michigan the Right of Way and a Donation of Public Land for the Construction of a Ship Canal around the Falls of St. Mary's in Said State'), in section 6, township 47 north of range 1 east." The described land was said to contain 36.50 acres of land, be the same more or less. The papers in the case were forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, who replied on April 9, 1860, that the claim was canceled because the land claimed was not subject to pre-emption, and the register was directed to note the cancellation on his books and plats, and to notify Adsitt to make application for a refunding of his payment. The Commissioner called the attention of the register to a previous letter of June 9, 1853, by which two claims were canceled because within the "reservation for Fort Brady," as made by the President's order of September 2, 1847, heretofore referred to.

The evidence introduced at the trial was to the effect that this tract called the "Indian reserve" was occupied by the Indians to the knowledge of witnesses from 1845 to 1885, the Indians living at first in wigwams and latterly in log houses, and about the time of Adsitt's attempted pre-emption the Indians had at least a half dozen houses on the reserve north of the canal, those located there being employed at fishing in the rapids or in carrying people over the rapids, and selling their catch of fish to the post, villagers, and those passing through the canal in boats. They were not known to raise any crops from the land. The ground was rocky, and not suitable for agricultural purposes.

On August 7, 1860, Adsitt, for the expressed 401] consideration *of $1, conveyed by quit-claim deed all his right and title in the lands in question to plaintiff in error. Spalding, however, testified that the actual consideration paid by him was not less than $100. He did not occupy the property.

On May 17, 1881, the defendant located what was known as Porterfield scrip on the particular tract in the reserve upon which Adsitt had erected the house. Upon learning of the application for a patent, complainant recorded the deed from Adsitt, and mailed a written protest against the issuance of a patent to the land department at Washington. The Commissioner of the General Land Office replied to Spalding, by letter of date January 18, 1882, informing him that Adsitt's entry had been canceled April 9, 1860, and directed him to apply for a refunding of the purchase money, inclosing blanks therefor. On December 15, 1883, a patent for the land (9.10½ acres) was issued to defendant in error. Between the fall of 1887 and the spring of 1888 a canal was dug to furnish power, and an electric-light plant was constructed upon the tract. The aggregate cost of the plant, with the machinery therein, was in the neighborhood of $50,000. Spalding knew of the improvements as they progressed, but took no steps to assert his alleged rights until the filing of the bill in this action, November, 1888. The testimony for the defense tended to show that the land was of no value except for the purpose of water power.

Upon the hearing of the cause in the Chippewa circuit court, a decree was entered for the defendant and on appeal the judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. The cause was then brought into this court by writ of error.

While we are strongly inclined to the opinion that the circumstances of this case are not such as should call into active exercise the powers of a court of equity on behalf of the complainant, even though his grantor, upon his attempted entry of the Indian reserve, was entitled to a patent upon the certificate issued to him by the receiver of the land office at Marquette, we have concluded to dis- 402] pose of the case on the ground *upon which the supreme court of the state based their affirmance of the judgment of the trial court, to wit, that the land sought to be pre-empted was land which had been an Indian reservation, the Indian title to which had been extinguished while the pre-emption act of September 4, 1841 (5 Stat. at L. 453), was in force. By the 10th section of that act it was provided that no "Indian reservation to which the title has been or may be extinguished by the United States at any time during the operation of this act . . . shall be liable to entry under and by virtue of the provisions of this act."

The reasons for the exemption from pre-emption of land which had been used as an Indian reservation are clearly set forth in the opinion of this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Miller, announced in Root v. Shields, Woolw. 340. He said (p. 362):

"Whenever a town springs up upon the public lands, adjoining lands appreciate in value. The reasons are obvious, and the fact is well known. So, too, when a railroad is built through a section of country, the same result follows. So, too, in respect of lands which have been reserved for the use of an Indian tribe, when the Indian title is extinguished the same may be said. While such lands are held as a reserve, population flows up to their boundaries and is there stayed; it of course constantly grows more and more dense, so that when the reserve is vacated the lands have increased in value, and are always eagerly sought after. The other classes of land mentioned in the exception, as, for instance, those on which are situated any known salines or mines, have some intrinsic value above others. Now, all these classes of lands are excepted from the operation of the act, and for the one common and obvious reason, that, being of special value, the government desires to retain the advantage of their appreciation, and is unwilling that any individual, because of a priority of settlement, which certainly can be of but brief duration, should, to the exclusion of others equally meritorious, reap benefits which he did not sow."

It has been settled by repeated adjudications of this court that the fee of the lands in this country in the original occupation of the Indian tribes was from the time of the formation *of this government vested in the United 403 States. The Indian title as against the United States was merely a title and right to the perpetual occupancy of the land with the privilege of using it in such mode as they saw fit, until such right of occupation had been surrendered to the government. When Indian reservations were created, either by treaty or executive order, the Indians held the land by the same character of title, to wit, the right to possess and occupy the lands for the uses and purposes designated.

By the treaty of June 16, 1820, the Indians ceded to the United States a tract of land lying between the Big Rock and Little Rapid in the river St. Mary's, and running back from the river so as to include 16 square miles of land, but by the 3d article of the treaty it was provided that the "United States will secure to the Indians a perpetual right of fishing at the falls of St. Mary's, and also a place of encampment upon the tract hereby ceded, convenient to the fishing grounds, which place shall not interfere with the defenses of any military work which may be erected, nor with any private rights." It is not necessary to determine how the reservation of the particular tract subsequently known as the "Indian Reserve" came to be made. It is clearly inferable from the evidence contained in the record that at the time of the making of the treaty of June 16, 1820, the Chippewa tribe of Indians were in the actual occupation and use of this Indian reserve as an encampment for the pursuit of fishing. This view is confirmed by the provisions of the 2d article of the treaty of August 2, 1855 (11 Stat. at L. 631), by which treaty, in the 1st article thereof, "the Indians surrendered to the United States the right of fishing at the falls of St. Mary's, and of encampment convenient to the fishing grounds, secured to them by the treaty of June 16, 1820." By said 2d article it was provided that "the United States will appoint a commissioner, who shall, within six months after the ratification of this treaty, personally visit and examine the said fishery and place of encampment, and determine the value of the interest of the Indians therein as the same originally existed."

But whether the Indians simply continued to 404] encamp where they had been accustomed to prior to the making of the treaty of 1820, whether a selection of the tract afterwards known as the Indian reserve was made by the Indians subsequent to the making of the treaty and acquiesced in by the United States government, or whether the selection was made by the government and acquiesced in by the Indians,—is immaterial. The clear duty rested upon the government to see that a tract was reserved for the purposes designated in the treaty. United States v. Carpenter, 111 U. S. 347, 349 [28: 451, 452]. If a survey was necessary for that purpose, it was the duty of the government to cause such survey to be made (United States v. Carpenter, supra); and it appears from the evidence that in 1845, in a survey made by the authority of the government, the exterior boundaries of the Indian reservation were delineated upon the map of the survey then made, and such boundaries were subsequently adopted in the survey under the act of 1850. The fact, therefore, is undisputed that the 39 acre tract attempted to be pre-empted by Adsett was accepted by both parties to the treaty of 1820 as a place of encampment, in conformity to the treaty of 1820, convenient to the fishing grounds, and a place which did not interfere with the defenses of any military work then or thereafter contemplated to be erected, or with any private rights. If the reservation was free from objection by the government, it was as effectual as though the particular tract to be used was specifically designated by boundaries in the treaty itself. The reservation thus created stood precisely in the same category as other Indian reservations, whether established for general or limited uses, and whether made by the direct authority of Congress in the ratification of a treaty, or indirectly through the medium of a duly authorized executive officer.

It is fairly to be implied from the language employed in the 3d article of the treaty of 1820, that an encampment location retained, selected, or assigned, as the case might be, reserved for the use specified in the treaty of 1820, should not thereafter be appropriated by the government for other uses than the defenses of any military work. Private rights could not, without the authority of Congress, be ac- 405] quired in the tract during the occupancy of the reservation under the treaty, for the lands in question lost their character as public lands in being set apart or occupied under the treaty, and became exempt from sale and pre-emption. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Roberts, 152 U. S. 114, 116, 118 [38: 377, 379, 380].

On the trial below there was no attempt to prove that Congress ever made provision for the erection of military works which rendered necessary an intrusion upon the fishing encampment. The land actually appropriated for the then use of Fort Brady was located considerably to the east of the Indian reserve, and private settlements were made upon the intervening lands. The general grant of authority conferred upon the President by the act of March 1, 1847 (9 Stat. at L. 147), to set apart such portion of lands within the land district then created as were necessary for public uses, cannot be considered as empowering him to interfere with reservations existing by force of a treaty. The land was appropriated in a sense which exempted it from a reservation made in such general terms,—at least so long as the Indian right of user remained unextinguished.

In the absence of express authority to set apart for public uses lands already reserved and appropriated for a particular use, we cannot infer an intention in the grant of power contained in the act of 1847 to authorize interference with the Indian reservation, particularly when such appropriation, as the record shows, was not made for then existing public necessities, but, as the letter of General Brady set out in the statement of facts shows, was merely a provision contemplated for the possibilities of the future, both with reference to a canal and the enlargement of military works, neither of which projects had then been sanctioned by Congress. The purposes of the treaty could not be defeated by the action of executive officers of the government. United States v. Carpenter, 111 U. S. 347 [28: 451]. As a matter of fact, therefore, the Indian reserve continued to exist and to be used for the purposes for which it came into existence, long after the President's orders of 1847. As stated, the reserve was not extinguished or the rights of the Indians to the use of the tract destroyed or curtailed by those orders, *and if the res- 406] ervation for public uses and for the purposes of Fort Brady, made by the President's orders, was valid, the operation of those orders, so far as the Indian reserve was concerned, was clearly postponed until after the extinguishment of the reserve either by a voluntary cession to the government, a cessation or abandonment of the use, or the arbitrary exercise by Congress of its power to appropriate the same. The existence of the reserve, however, was expressly recognized by Congress in the act of September 25, 1850, authorizing the ascertainment and settlement of claims to lands at Sault Ste. Marie. The map of the survey ordered to be made by the village was required to have noted upon it the boundaries, not only of the military reserve, but of the Indian reserve. We conclude, therefore, that, until the treaty of August 2, 1855, this Indian reservation was not extinguished. It is true that the act of August 26, 1852 (10 Stat. at L. 35), which granted to the state of Michigan the right of locating a canal through the public lands, known as the military reservation at the falls at St. Mary's river in said state, authorized by such description the location of the canal mainly across and through the Indian reserve. It seems probable that the bill in question was drafted after consultation and with the approval of the War Department, the officials of which department had in 1847 sought the reservation by the President of lands at Sault Ste. Marie, in the belief that a canal was not a far-distant possibility, and the designation of the land in question as the military reservation may properly be ascribed to that source. There is nowhere contained in the act, however, an allusion to the treaty of 1820, or an express declaration of an intention to interfere with the Indian reserve or the rights of the Indians in any portion of the reserve. And the express recognition by Congress of the existence of the reserve, contained in the act of 1850, under which proceedings were being had at the time of the passage of the act of 1852, for a survey of the village and a map of the same, with the notation thereon of the various reservations, forbids the assumption that Congress no longer regarded the Indian reserve as in existence. Whatever the reason, however, 407] er, for *the omission to make mention of the Indian reserve, the power existed in Congress to invade the sanctity of the reservation and disregard the guarantee contained in the treaty of 1820, even against the consent of the Indians, party to that treaty; and as the requirement of the grant necessarily demanded the possession of the portion of the reserve through which the canal was to pass, the effect of that act was to extinguish so much of the Indian reserve as was embraced in the grant to the state for canal purposes. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Roberts, 152 U. S. 116, 117 [38: 379].

As to the remaining portions of the reserve, however, the use and the right of use by the Indians continued, and, until they surrendered that right by the treaty of 1855, the reserve continued to exist. If the reservations made by the orders of 1847 were not then operative, it is clear that upon the extinguishment of the Indian title to possess and occupy the reserve the land stood simply in the category of lands included within an Indian reservation, the title to which had been extinguished by the United States during the operation of the act of September 4, 1841, and, consequently, by the 10th section of that act (5 Stat. at L. 456) the land was not subject to pre-emption. It follows that the attempted pre-emption by Adsitt in 1859 was illegal, the Commissioner of the General Land Office properly ordered the cancelation of the entry certificate, the plaintiff in error acquired no right to the land in question by the quitclaim deed of Adsitt, and hence his bill was properly dismissed. The judgment of the supreme court of the state of Michigan is therefore affirmed.

408] SAM HICKORY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 408-425.)

Assignments of error—concealment of flight of accused—erroneous charge—presumption of guilt—testimony of accused.

1. Assignments of error which do not state the precise language used by the court, yet indicate the subject-matter in the charge to which the exceptions relate with sufficient clearness to enable this court, from a mere inspection of the charge, to ascertain the particular matter referred to,—are sufficient.

2. Acts of concealment and the flight of an accused are competent evidence as tending to establish guilt, yet they are not alone conclusive, nor do they create a legal presumption of guilt.
3. A charge which magnifies and distorts the proving power of the facts on the subject of concealment, and makes the weight of the evidence depend on the manner in which it was done, and, with the context of the charge, practically instructs that the facts were, under both divine and human law, conclusive proof of guilt,—is erroneous.
4. An instruction which is tantamount to saying to the jury that flight creates a legal presumption of guilt, so strong and so conclusive that it is their duty to act on it as an axiomatic truth, is erroneous, although qualified by words that there may be exceptions to the rule.
5. An instruction to the jury as to the testimony on his own behalf of the accused on trial for murder, which substantially says to them: The circumstances as to the killing and concealment cannot be bribed, but the defendant can be; therefore you must consider that these circumstances outweigh his testimony,—is erroneous.

[No. 491.]

Submitted March 5, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas to review a judgment convicting Sam Hickory of murder. Reversed with directions for a new trial.

No counsel for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

Sam Downing, alias Sam Hickory, and Thomas Shade, were indicted in October, 1891, for the murder in the Indian territory of a white man by the name of Joseph Wilson. Downing, who was at the time of the alleged killing nineteen years old, was tried and convicted, and the case was brought by error here. The verdict and judgment were reversed and the case was remanded for a new trial. Hickory v. United States, 151 U. S. 303 [38: 170]. On the trial, the defendant was again found guilty of murder, and the case for the second time comes here by error. The assignments of error are twelve in number, and all relate to errors alleged to have been committed by the trial court in the charge given to the jury. The charge covers twenty pages of the printed record. To correctly understand the merits of the various assignments of error it is necessary to briefly refer to the testimony, which is stated in a condensed form in the bill of exceptions.

The testimony for the prosecution tended to show that Wilson, the deceased, was a deputy marshal and had a warrant for the arrest of the accused upon the charge of taking whiskey into the Indian country. With this warrant he started to a house where he expected to find Hickory, being *accompanied by John

Carey. Wilson and Carey proceeded together until just before reaching this house. Carey then informed Wilson that he would go no further with him, as he did not wish to be known in the neighborhood in connection with the arrest. It was then arranged between them that Carey should remain in the woods while Wilson should continue on to the house and make the arrest. Wilson had with him "a large white handle pistol," and told Carey that if he found the accused he would fire off his pistol after arresting him, in which case Carey would meet him, "close to Brown's on the prairie." Wilson then proceeded on his way, and Carey remained in the woods awaiting the signal agreed upon. In about half an hour Carey heard the firing of "a gun," then "two guns" went off together, then there were several shots "which sounded as if they were fired by one man, and as if he was taking his time to fire." Carey waited for Wilson until sundown, and as he did not then come he (Carey) went to the house of Squirrel Carey and "told him about hearing the shooting and that Wilson was to fire his pistol, but he did not say how many times." The government also introduced proof showing that some days afterwards the body of Wilson was found in a gulch or ravine, and there was a gunshot wound straight through the body; that the skull was fractured, and that there was a contused wound or bruise at the base of the brain. The person of the deceased had not been rifled, and on it were found his watch and papers, among the latter the warrant for the arrest of Hickory.

Further testimony was introduced tending to show that an examination of the house where Wilson had gone to arrest the accused disclosed spots of blood on the porch, in the house, on the door, and in the yard at several places, and on a wagon standing in the yard, and that efforts had been made to conceal these spots of blood. There was also testimony showing bullet marks in the house; that "certainly one and probably two shots were fired from a southeasterly direction where the marshal likely was at the commencement of the shooting, towards the front door, one striking a corner 411] *post and the other the wall near the door. Two shots had been fired from the inside of the house through the front door, as shown by the holes. One shot had been fired from the large front room, glancing the middle door shutter, which was open, and going into the wall of the rear room, and another had gone into the wall of said rear room opposite the center of the middle door."

Testimony was further offered tending to show that Wilson's horse was found dead some distance from the house, and the witnesses could not tell whether "its throat had been cut or eaten by wild animals, as they had been working on it." It was also shown that when Wilson went to the house he had a pistol, a bridle, and a saddle, on which a coat was strapped, and these things were not found. The government then further introduced testimony tending to show that the accused had told three or more witnesses "that he shot the deceased, and hit him the first shot, but did not kill him, and that Tom Shade, who was there with defendant, knocked the deceased in the head with an axe; that after the killing an attempt had been made to destroy the blood spots in the house and yard." It further introduced testimony tending to show that after the killing the accused was "scouting," that is, avoiding arrest." Upon this proof the case for the prosecution was rested. The accused, after introducing testimony tending to rebut the alleged confession by showing that he was not in the place named at the time it was stated the confession had been made, then testified in his own behalf, admitting the killing of Wilson, and giving substantially the following account of the occurrence: He was in the yard hitching up a team of horses for the purpose of hauling a load of posts, when Wilson came into the yard and asked him his name, which he gave him, and thereupon Wilson put him under arrest and read the warrant to him; that he replied, "All right," and unharnessed the horses and turned them loose; that Wilson asked him whether he was going to ride one of the horses, and he replied, "No," that they did not belong to him; that thereupon Wilson asked him who was the owner of the horses, and he said the owner was not there, *but lived in the [412 neighborhood. Wilson told him to take one of the horses and they would ride to the owner's house, and if he would not consent to Hickory riding away on it, it could be returned. He again said all right, and put the bridle on the horse, Wilson telling him to hurry up and get his saddle; that he started to go into the house after his saddle, and when he was about three steps from the porch he heard the fire of a gun, and turning around saw Wilson with a revolver in his hand and smoke coming from it; that he did not run after the first shot, but walked on towards the house, when a second shot was fired just as he was about to enter the front door; that he went into the house and shut the front door, intending to go out through a side-room door and run off. When he had gotten about as far as the middle door of the side room he discovered Wilson coming in through the outside door of the side room with his pistol raised at him (indicating the pointing of a pistol); that he then ran to the east side of the front room, got his gun, and went to the front door. The marshal then appeared at the middle door of the side room, exposing himself just enough to shoot, which he did; and that he (the accused) returned the fire, which was followed by further firing between them. The marshal then disappeared from the door and went into the yard and fell down close by the wagon. He (the accused) ran off and remained half an hour, and on coming back found the marshal dead; he became frightened and did not know what to do, and, indeed, did not know all that he did do; he put the body of the marshal on the wagon, and hauled it about a mile and a half from the house, and then threw it out at the head of the gulch. When he returned after doing this he found the marshal's horse wounded in the knee. He took off the saddle, and bridle and hid them, and also the coat which was tied to the saddle and the marshal's pistol and belt. The accused also introduced a witness to the killing, a woman by the name of Ollie Williams, his mistress. She testified to the marshal's coming up to the place where the accused was standing in the yard with the wagon and horses; to the accused starting towards the house. She said that the marshal, who 413] was right *by a tree, then shot at him; that she did not see how the marshal held his pistol the first time he shot; that the accused was going into the door when the two shots were fired; that the marshal came around the outside room door with a pistol in his hand, and told her to get out of the way; that she went a quarter of a mile off, and had nothing to do with the moving of the body of the deceased. The accused, moreover, introduced the testimony of a physician who had examined the body of the deceased, and who contradicted the statement that there was a fracture in the skull of the deceased, and said there were two scalp wounds, one on the top of the head and the other in the back; "they had the appearance of some blunt substance striking the head, or the head striking the substance."

The opinion formed by us as to three of the assignments of error will render an examination of the others unnecessary. The three which we will consider are as follows:

"4th. Because the court in commenting on the inculpatory testimony as to the acts of the defendant with reference to the body of the deceased, the alleged killing of the horse, in reference to what is charitable or brutal conduct, gives undue prominence to the inculpatory facts, without summing up all the testimony as well for as against the defendant in reference to this branch of the case."

"7th. Because the court, a second time in the charge in going over the alleged conduct of the defendant subsequent to the killing, and his conduct in flight, gives undue prominence to the inculpatory facts, and gives them in a way that has the effect of an argument against the defendant, and is not a proper, full summing up of the facts upon this branch of the case."

"11th. Because the court bears upon and gives undue prominence to the flight of defendant, and treats it absolutely as true that defendant concealed the blood, killed the horse, and destroyed the evidence of the alleged killing."

It is contended by the defendant in error that of these assignments the fourth and seventh are not sufficiently specific to merit consideration, 414] because they do not point out the *exact words in the charge of the court complained of. The assignments are in exactly the same language as were the exceptions taken during the trial and which the record declares "the defendant presented at the time." Whilst it is true that the assignments do not in terms state the precise language used by the court, they yet indicate the subject-matter in the charge to which the exceptions relate with sufficient clearness to enable us from a mere inspection of the charge to ascertain the particular matter referred to. In considering when this case was previously before us, a similar objection to the adequacy of an exception, we said: "The rule in relation to exceptions to instructions is that the matter excepted to shall be so brought to the attention of the court, before the retirement of the jury, as to enable the judge to correct error, if there be any, in his instructions to them; and this is also requisite in order that the appellate tribunal may pass upon the precise question raised, without being compelled to read the record to ascertain it." It is here unquestionable on the very face of the bill of exceptions that the objections were reserved before the retirement of the jury, and that the trial court was fully aware of their import and had the opportunity to make such corrections, if any, as its judgment may have deemed necessary to prevent the charge from being misunderstood by the jury. This is made clear, not only by the language of the bill of exceptions, but also by the charge itself, which contains a statement by the court, entirely inconsistent with a possibility of there having been any surprise or misconception. The court said:

"There is a little bit of history on that, and I apprehend the gentlemen won't take any exception to reading from this book (the Bible). There are a great many exceptions filed here to almost everything said by the court, but I hope they won't take any exception to this."

The first comments of the court upon the facts in reference to concealment (covered by the fourth assignment), and its instruction as to the weight to be given the proof of the subject of the flight of the accused (covered by the eleventh assignment), are so connected in the charge as to cause the examination *of the one to 415 necessarily involve the other. We shall therefore examine at the same time the errors complained of in these two assignments.

First. Errors complained of in the fourth and eleventh assignments.

The language of the charge to which these assignments relate immediately follows the reference made by the court to the number of exceptions reserved, and is in these words:

"And there is another fact that is so common that I have but to remind you of it, because that which makes up your common knowledge you can use in the investigation of these cases, and it is this: There is no man who has arrived at the years of discretion who has not been so created that he has that in his mind and heart which makes him conscious of an act that is innocent upon his part, and his conduct when connected with an act of that character will be entirely different from the conduct of a man who is conscious of wrong and guilt. In the one case he has nothing to conceal; in the one case his interest and self-protection, his self-security, prompts him to seek investigation, to see to it that it is investigated as soon as possible. This is no new principle. I say it is as old as the days of the first murder. There is a little bit of history on that, and I apprehend the gentlemen won't take any exception to reading from this book. There are a great many exceptions filed here to almost everything said by the court, but I hope they won't take any exception to this. There is a little bit of history illustrative of the conduct of men:

"And Cain talked with Abel, his brother; and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and slew him.

"And the Lord said unto Cain, Where is Abel, thy brother? And he said, I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?"

"And He said, What hast thou done? The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me from the ground."

"Am I my brother's keeper From that day to the time when Professor Webster murdered his associate and concealed his remains, this concealment of the evidence of crime has been regarded by the law as a proper fact to be 416] taken into consideration *as evidence of guilt, as going to show guilt, as going to show that he who does an act is consciously guilty, has conscious knowledge that he is doing wrong, and he therefore undertakes to cover up his crime.

"Now, there may be exceptions to the general rule. General as it is, it may have its exceptions, but the question for you to pass upon is whether or not, in the first place, there were acts upon the part of this defendant, either while acting alone or in concert with others assisting him, that looked towards concealing this act of the killing of Wilson; what these acts were; if they were cruel, if they were unnatural, if they were barbarous, if they were brutal, you still have a right, and it is your duty, to take them into consideration. If they were of that character you are to bring to bear your observation in life that men who are conscious of innocence do not usually characterize their conduct after a killing by that sort of acts. You are to see what the acts were. You are to take into account the concealment of this body, the concealment of this horse, the killing of the horse, and the concealing of everything that pertained to that man, the effort to wipe out the blood stains left there where they might be evidences of killing, where they might be discovered afterwards as evidences of the killing. All these things are facts that you must take into account; and not only that, but the law recognizes another proposition as true, and it is that 'the wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the innocent are as bold as a lion.' That is a self-evident proposition that has been recognized so often by mankind that we can take it as an axiom and apply it in this case. Therefore the law says that if after a man kills another that he undertakes to fly, if he becomes a fugitive from justice, either by hiding in the jurisdiction, watching out to keep out of the way of the officers, or of going into the Osage country out of the jurisdiction, that you have a right to take that fact into consideration, because it is a fact that does not usually characterize an innocent act."

It is undoubted that acts of concealment by an accused are competent to go to the jury as tending to establish guilt, yet they are not to be 417] considered as alone conclusive, or *as creating a legal presumption of guilt; they are mere circumstances to be considered and weighed, in connection with other proof with that caution and circumspection which their inconclusiveness, when standing alone, requires. The rule on the subject has had nowhere a clearer and more concise expression than that given by Chief Justice Shaw in the Webster Case, to which the trial court adverted. Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711. The learned Chief Justice said: "To the same head may be referred all attempts on the part of the accused to suppress evidence, to suggest false and deceptive explanations, and to cast suspicion without just cause on other persons; all or any of which tend somewhat to prove consciousness of guilt, and when proved exert an influence against the accused. The consideration is not to be pressed too urgently; because an innocent man, when placed by circumstances in a condition of suspicion and danger, may resort to deception in the hope of avoiding the force of such proofs. Such was the case, often mentioned in the books and cited here yesterday, of a man convicted of the murder of his niece, who had suddenly disappeared under circumstances which created a strong suspicion that she was murdered. He attempted to impose on the court by presenting another girl as his niece. The deception was discovered and naturally operated against him, though the actual appearance of the niece alive afterwards proved conclusively that he was not guilty of the murder."

In Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 593, considering an objection that the court erred in admitting evidence of an attempt to escape from the sheriff, the court said:

"There are so many reasons for such conduct, consistent with innocence, that it scarcely comes up to the standard of evidence tending to establish guilt, but this and similar evidence has been allowed upon the theory that the jury will give it such weight as it deserves, depending upon surrounding circumstances. It was not error to admit it." People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 17 Am. Rep. 401; People v. Forsyth, 65 Cal. 102; State v. Gee, 85 Mo. 647; State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542; Swan v. People*, 98 [418 Ill. 610; Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467, 472; Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357.

The cases which illustrate the rule in various phases are too numerous to review. They are collected in the text-books, and will be found in Whart. Crim. Ev. (9th ed.) chap. 14, § 750, note. The modern English law on the subject is referred to in Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, p. 79, citing the opinion of Mr. Baron Gurney in Reg. v. Belaney, which is thus recapitulated:

"By the common law, flight was considered so strong a presumption of guilt that in cases of treason and felony it carried the forfeiture of the party's goods, whether he were found guilty or acquitted; and the officer always, until the abolition of the practice by statute, called upon the jury, after verdict of acquittal, to state whether the party had fled on account of the charge. These several acts in all their modifications are indications of fear; but it would be harsh and unreasonable invariably to interpret them as indications of guilty consciousness, and greater weight has sometimes been attached to them than they have fairly warranted. Doubtless the manly carriage of integrity always commands the respect of mankind, and all tribunals do homage to the great principle from which consistency springs; but it does not follow, because the moral courage and consistency which generally accompany the consciousness of uprightness raise a presumption of innocence, that the converse is always true. Men are differ-ently constituted as respects both animal and moral courage, and fear may spring from causes very different from that of conscious guilt, and every man is therefore entitled to a candid construction of his words and actions, particularly if placed in circumstances of great and unexpected difficulty."

And the same author at p. 80 quotes the observation of Mr. Justice Abhott on a trial for murder, where evidence was given proving flight: "A person however conscious of innocence might not have courage to stand a trial, but might, although innocent, think it necessary to consult his safety by flight. It may be," added the learned judge, "a conscious anticipation of punishment for guilt, as the guilty 419} will always anticipate the *consequences, but at the same time it may possibly be, according to the frame of mind, merely an inclination to consult his safety by flight rather than stand his trial on a charge so heinous and scandalous as this."

So, again, at p. 88, the same writer says: "So also is the concealment of death by the destruction or attempted destruction of human remains (a presumption of guilt), but in this case the presumption of criminality results from the act of concealment rather than from the nature of the means employed, however revolting, which must be regarded only as incidental to the fact of concealment, and not as aggravating the character and tendency of the act itself. Where a prisoner tried for murder admitted that he had cut off the head and legs from the trunk of a female, and concealed the remains in several places, but alleged that her death had taken place by accident while she was in his company, and that in the alarm of the moment, and to prevent suspicion, he had determined to conceal the death, Lord Chief Justice Tindal told the jury that the concealment of death under such circumstances had always been considered to be a point of the greatest suspicion, but that this evidence must be received with a certain degree of modification, and especially in a case where the feelings might be excited by the singular means of concealment adopted by the prisoner; that this point of evidence was therefore for the consideration of the jury, and it was for them to show how far it was proof of the prisoner's guilt; but the mere general fact of concealment, added the learned judge, is to be considered, and not the circumstances under which it took place."

The text-writers generally state the principle in accordance with the foregoing.

"Few things," says Best on Presumption, p. 323, "distinguish an enlightened systems of judicature from a rude and barbarous one more than the way in which they deal with evidence. The former weighs testimony, while the latter, conscious, perhaps, of its inability to do so, or careless of the consequences of error, at times rejects whole portions en masse, and at others converts pieces of evidence 420] into rules of *law by investing with conclusive effect some whose probative force has been found to be, in general, considerable. If any proof of this were wanting it would be amply supplied by the history of our law with reference to the species of evidence under consideration. Our ancestors, observing that guilty persons usually fled from justice, adopted the hasty conclusion that it was only the guilty who did so, according to the maxim Faletur facinus qui fugit 'judicium, so that under the old law a man who fled to avoid being tried for felony forfeited all his goods even though he were acquitted; and the jury were always charged to inquire, not only whether the prisoner were guilty of the offense, but also whether he fled for it, and, if so, what goods and chattels he had. This practice was not formally abolished until the Stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. chap. 28, § 5. In modern times more correct views have prevailed, and the evasion of or flight from justice seems now nearly reduced to its true place in the administration of the criminal law, namely, that of a circumstance, a fact which it is always of importance to take into consideration, and combined with others may afford strong evidence of guilt, but which, like any other piece of presumptive evidence, it is equally absurd and dangerous to invest with infallibility." And this is quoted with approval in Burrill on Circumstantial Evidence, p. 473. See also Roscoe's Criminal Evidence (8th Am. ed.) p. 30. Mr. Wharton, in his Criminal Evidence, after referring in a note to the American authorities, states the rule in accordance with the foregoing, and concludes: "The question, it cannot be too often repeated, is simply one of inductive probable reasoning from certain established facts. All the courts can do when such inference is invoked is to say that escape, disguise, and similar acts afford, in connection with other proof, the basis from which guilt may be inferred, but this should be qualified by a general statement of the countervailing conditions, incidental to a comprehensive view of the question."

In a footnote at p. 645 this author collects several marked and peculiar instances where a person had fled who was undoubtedly innocent. One of these instances is this: "Dr. [421 Thomas Fuller gives the following quaint excuse for running away from London when charged with treason: And if any tax me, as Laban taxed Jacob, 'Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly without taking solemn leave?' I say with Jacob to Laban, 'Because I was afraid.' And that plain-dealing patriarch, who could not be accused for purloining a shoe latchet of other men's goods, confessed himself guilty of that awful felony that he 'stole away' for his own safety, seeing truth may sometimes seek corners, not as fearing her cause, but as suspecting her judge."

Thompson on Trials, tit. 6, chap. 69, § 2543, makes this statement: "It is often inaccurately said that the flight of the accused creates a presumption of his guilt, and this presumption is sometimes inadvertently dealt with as though it were a presumption of law. But it belongs to that class of presumptions which are generally classified as presumptions of fact. If it were a presumption of law, the jury would be bound to draw it in every case of flight, and the court might so instruct them; whereas it is merely a circumstance tending to increase the probability of the defendant being the guilty person, which on sound principle is to be weighed by the jury like any other evidentiary circumstance."

Measuring the correctness of the charge by these principles and authorities, it is at once demonstrated to have been plainly erroneous. It magnified and distorted the proving power of the facts on the subject of the concealment; it made the weight of the evidence depend not so much on the concealment itself as on the manner in which it was done. Considering the entire context of the charge, it practically instructed that the facts were, under both divine and human law, conclusive proof of guilt. The statement that no one who was conscious of innocence would resort to concealment was substantially an instruction that all men who did so were necessarily guilty, thus ignoring the fundamental truth, evolved from the experience of mankind, that the innocent do often conceal through fear or other emotion. The legal influence which this language must have exerted on the jury was increased by the 422] subsequent instruction that it was as *old as the first murder for the conduct of an innocent person to be different from that of a guilty one. Putting this language in connection with the epithets applied to the acts of concealment and the vituperation which the charge contains, it is justly to be deduced that its effect was to instruct that the defendant was a murderer, and therefore the only province of the jury was to return a verdict of guilty. It is true that a subsequent portion of the charge refers to the evidence on the subject of concealment as "proper to be taken into consideration, as evidence of guilt," as going to show guilt. But these qualified remarks did not recall the undue weight which the previous language had affixed to the facts to be considered by the jury. The instruction as to the probative weight which the jury should attach to the fact of flight was equally erroneous. It was as follows: "And not only this, but the law recognizes another proposition as true, and it is that 'the wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the innocent are as bold as a lion.' That is a self-evident proposition that has been recognized so often by mankind that we can take it as an axiom and apply it to this case." This instruction was tantamount to saying to the jury that flight created a legal presumption of guilt, so strong and so conclusive that it was the duty of the jury to act on it as an axiomatic truth. On this subject also, it is true, the charge thus given was apparently afterwards qualified by the statement that the jury had a right to take the fact of flight into consideration, but these words did not correct the illegal charge already given. Indeed, taking the instruction that flight created a legal presumption of guilt with the qualifying words subsequently used, they were both equivalent to saying to the jury that they were, in considering the facts, to give them the weight which, as a matter of law, the court declared they were entitled to have, that is, as creating a legal presumption so well settled as to amount virtually to a conclusive proof of guilt. In Starr v. United States, 153 U. S. 626 [38: 845], in considering the power of a Federal court to comment in charging a jury on the evidence, we quoted with approval the language of the supreme court of Pennsylvania (Burke v. Maxwell, 81 Pa. 139, 153), saying: [423 "When there is sufficient evidence upon a given point to go to a jury, it is the duty of the judge to submit it calmly and impartially. And if the expression of an opinion upon such evidence becomes a matter of duty under the circumstances of the particular case, great care should be exercised that such expression should be so given as not to mislead, and especially that it should not be one-sided." The charge given in this case violates every rule thus announced. It was neither calm nor was it impartial. It put every deduction which could be drawn against the accused from the proof of concealment and flight, and omitted or obscured the converse aspect. In so doing it deprived the jury of the light requisite to safely use these facts as means to the ascertainment of truth. Nor can it be considered that the language subsequently used corrected the error. "Now," says the charge, "there may be exceptions to the general rule. General as it is, it may have its exceptions." But none of the exceptions thus referred to were called to the attention of the jury. Indeed, taking the language of the charge which follows the foregoing words, it must have conveyed, by the strongest possible intimation, the impression to the jury that the case before them was controlled by the general rule previously stated to them by the court, although other cases might be an exception to such rule. For these reasons the judgment must be reversed. In this state of the case it would ordinarily be unnecessary to consider the other assignments. As, however, the case is before us for the second time, and must be remanded for a new trial, the ends of justice will best be subserved by passing on the remaining assignment, that is to say, the eleventh assignment. The portion of the charge to which this assignment is addressed is as follows:

160 U. S.

"And then, again, there stands before you a witness who was there, a positive witness, who saw this killing. That witness is the defendant. Bear in mind when you are passing upon this case that the other witness to it cannot appear before you, he cannot speak to you, except as he speaks by his body as it was found, having been denied even the right of decent burial, by the dead body of his horse, by the concealed weapons *and the concealed [424 saddle, by the blood stains that were obliterated. He stands before you, although he is in his grave, speaking by the aid of the power and the might of these circumstances in this case. You are to see whether they harmonize with this statement of this transaction as given by the defendant, bearing in mind that he stands before you as an interested witness, while these circumstances are of a character that they cannot be bribed, that cannot be dragged into perjury, they cannot be seduced by bribery into perjury, but they stand as bloody, naked facts before you, speaking for Joseph Wilson and justice, in opposition to and confronting this defendant, who stands before you as an interested party; the party who has in this case the largest interests a man can have in any case upon earth. While you are not to disbelieve his evidence because of that alone, if you are to do justice, if you are,

In the language of counsel, not to be cruel to the country, and to the people of the country who are entitled to legal protection, you are to weigh these facts and see whether they harmonize with his statement when viewed by the light of your intelligence, and when this case is illuminated by such facts, whether it is in harmony with the statements of this interested witness or in contradiction of them."

It is apparent that this part of the charge is replete with the errors which we have already found to exist in the matter which we have already considered. But the instruction contains an additional error of so grave a nature that we call attention to it in order to prevent its recurrence. The manner of contrasting the testimony of the accused with the circumstances connected with the concealment was clearly illegal. The language in which this was done is: "Bearing in mind that he stands before you as an interested witness, while these circumstances are of a character that they cannot be bribed, that cannot be dragged into perjury, they cannot be seduced by bribery into perjury, but they stand as bloody, naked facts before you, speaking for Joseph Wilson and justice, in opposition to and confronting this defendant, who stands before you as an interested party; the party who has in this case the largest interest a man can have in any case [425] upon earth." This contrast thus made could have conveyed but one meaning to the jury; that is, a warning that the testimony of the accused was to be considered by them as of little or no weight because he could be bribed, he could be dragged or seduced into perjury. Such denunciation of the testimony of an accused is without legal warrant. Allison v. United States, [160 U. S. 203, ante, 395]. Indeed, this instruction, besides giving rise to this error, was also, if possible, more markedly wrong from the implications which it conveyed to the jury. It substantially said to them: The circumstances as to the killing and concealment cannot be bribed, but the defendant can be; therefore you must consider that these circumstances outweigh his testimony, and it is hence your duty to convict him. In Starr v. United States, 153 U. S. 626 [38: 845], speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, this court called attention to the fact that there were limitations on the power of a Federal court, in commenting on the facts of a case, when instructing a jury, limitations inherent in and implied from the very nature of the judicial office. In Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 168 [25: 251], speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Waite, this court also said on the same subject: "Every appeal by the court to the passions or prejudices of the jury should be promptly rebuked, and . . . it is the imperative duty of the reviewing court to take care that wrong is not done in this way." Admonished by the duty resting on us in this regard, we feel obliged to say that the charge which we have considered crosses the line which separates the impartial exercise of the judicial function from the region of partisanship where reason is disturbed, passions excited, and prejudices are necessarily called into play.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded with directions to grant a new trial.

JABEZ H. GILL, Appt., [426

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 428-438.)

Use of patent right—estoppel—use by government.

1. An employee who devises an improved method of doing his work, using the property or labor of his employer to put his invention into practical form, and assents to the use of such improvements by his employer, cannot, on taking out a patent upon such invention, recover a royalty or other compensation for such use.
2. A person looking on and assenting to that which he has power to prevent is precluded ever afterwards from maintaining an action for damages.
3. If the inventions of a patentee be made in the course of his employment by the government, and he knowingly assents to the use of such inventions by it, he cannot claim compensation therefor, especially if his machines have been made at the expense of the government, although the inventions were conceived out of the hours of labor.

[No. 85.]

Argued November 21, 22, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing a suit brought by Jabez H. Gill to recover from the United States a certain sum of money upon an implied contract for the use of certain machines covered by letters patent issued to said Gill. Affirmed. See same case below 25 Ct. Cl. 415.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a suit by Gill to recover of the United States the sum of $94,693.04 upon an implied contract for the use of certain machines covered by letters patent issued to the claimant.

The petition alleged in substance that from March, 1864, to March, 1881, the claimant was employed as machinist, foreman, and draftsman at the Frankford Arsenal, in the state of Pennsylvania, and since March, 1881, as master armorer at such arsenal, receiving during the term of his employment a per diem compensation for his services. His engagement required him to perform manual labor and to exercise his mechanical skill in the service of the government, but did not require the exercise of his inventive genius in such service, or secure to the government the right to use any of his inventions without compensation.

That at sundry times from 1869 to 1882, six patents were granted to him for a cartridge-loading machine, a weighing machine, a gauging machine, a cartridge anvil, a heading machine, and a priming tool for reloading; that at different times he assigned to individuals or corporations all these inventions, but reserved to the government the right to use them.

The petition further alleged that the reasonable value of such use by the government amounted to the sum of $94,693.04, no [427 part of which had ever been paid; that no action upon the claim had been had in any department of the government beyond repeated acknowledge, by the Ordnance Department, of claimant's right to compensation for the use of the inventions.

The government made a general denial of the allegations of the petition, and submitted the case to the court of claims, which made a finding of facts, the material portions of which are printed in the margin,† and entered a judgment dismissing *the claim upon the ground that where an employee of the government takes advantage of his connection with it to introduce an unpatented device into the public service, giving no intimation at the time that he regards it as property or that he intends to protect it by letters patent, but allows the government to test the invention at its own exclusive cost and risk, by constructing machinery and bringing it into practical use before he applies for a patent, the law will not imply a contract; and that a contract will not be implied in favor of an employee who has thus placed a patented device in the public service, as to the machines constructed and used after his patent has been obtained.

*From this decree the claimant appealed to this court. [429]

Mr. Halbert E. Paine for appellant.

Mr. J. M. Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

This case raises the question, which has been several times presented to this court, whether an employee paid by salary or wages, who devises an improved method of doing his work, using the property or labor of his em-

† (1) During the period of time within which the claimant invented the devices hereafter mentioned he was in the defendants' employment, and received wages or a salary for his services. The terms of his employment required him to exercise his mechanical skill in the service of the defendants, but did not require the exercise of his inventive genius in such service, or secure to the defendants the right to use any inventions of the claimant without compensation therefor.

Letters patent of the United States were granted to the claimant, while in the service of the defendants, as follows: No. 97,904, dated December 14, 1869, for a cartridge-loading machine; No. 185,858, dated January 2, 1877, for a cartridge-weighing machine; No. 208,903, dated October 15, 1878, for a cartridge-gauging machine; No. 220,472, dated October 14, 1879, for a cartridge avil; No. 241,962, dated May 24, 1881, for a cartridge-heading machine; No. 257,860, dated May 16, 1882, for a priming tool for reloading.

(2) The manner in which the invention above referred to originated and came into the use of the government was as follows:

In 1867 the claimant, being a machinist or skilled mechanic in the Frankford Arsenal, and getting as compensation $4 a day, came to General Benét, the commanding officer, and suggested that an improvement could be made in the method of loading cartridges, and exhibited to the commanding officer, then or subsequently, his device for an improvement which is now embodied in patent No. 97,904.

General Benét, after due examination and consideration, authorized the construction of such a machine. The machine was built at a cost of $500 by the United States according to the design of the claimant. On its completion it proved to be thoroughly satisfactory to the commanding officer, who authorized the construction of a second machine. The construction of both took place under the immediate supervision of the claimant, and such supervision was a part of his ordinary duty and employment. Subsequently successive commanding officers ordered from time to time six other machines to be constructed, which in like manner were built under the immediate supervision of the claimant, and all of these eight machines were completed prior to the claimant filing his application for a patent.

After his patent had been issued a ninth machine was also ordered, and in like manner constructed under the immediate supervision of the claimant. These machines have been used by the government at the Frankford Arsenal in the manufacture of cartridges, and continue in use to the present time.

(3) At no time did the claimant ever bring his invention before a commanding officer or other agent of the government as a subject of purchase and sale; nor did he ever raise an objection to the use of the invention as set forth in the preceding finding; nor did he ever enter into an express agreement, written or oral, whereby a license was granted or intended to be granted to the government to operate and use the machine described in the preceding finding, or whereby the claimant waived or intended to waive his legal or equitable right, if any, to compensation; nor did any commanding officer ever undertake or assume to incur a legal or pecuniary obligation on the part of the government for the use of the invention or the right to manufacture thereunder.

The claimant was not employed to make inventions, or assigned to that duty, and his invention, until it was reduced to paper in the form of an intelligible drawing, was made out of the hours of labor at the arsenal and during the time which was properly his own; and the thought and time which he devoted to it were voluntarily given, as a good and earnest servant of the government, intent on rendering more effective the work and machinery of the arsenal with which he was connected; and the work of so devising a machine was not an obligation imposed upon him by the authorities of the arsenal.

(4) The other inventions of the claimant, set forth in the patents enumerated in finding 1., except that of the heading machine, which was fabricated and used by the defendants under the supervision of the claimant, were also brought to the attention of the various commanding officers by suggestions from the claimant for making the means and appliances at the arsenal more efficient than they were; and in like manner the cost of preparing patterns for the iron and steel castings, and preparing working drawings and of constructing working machines was borne exclusively by the government; but the claimant did not use any property of the defendants, or the services of any employee of the defendants, in making or developing or perfecting the inventions themselves. In each case one or more machines or articles of manufacture embodying the invention had been constructed and was in operation or use in the arsenal with the claimant's knowledge and assent before he filed an application for a patent.

(5) In 1867, when the claimant made his first invention described in the patents hereinbefore enumerated, he was a machinist rated as a skilled laborer in the Frankford Arsenal, but acting and doing the duty of a master armorer, on wages of $14 a day. From time to time his wages were advanced until they became, in 1881, $6 a day, and he was in 1881 appointed master armorer, the duties of which are a general supervision of the shops. This increase of pay and advancement of position came through and by authority of the commanding officers of the arsenal, and the consideration or reason therefor was that the claimant was a faithful, intelligent, and capable employee, whose services were of great value to the government.

It was never stipulated by any commanding officer, or understood or agreed to by the claimant, that the advance of wages was to be a consideration for the use of his inventions, though the practical ability of the claimant as an inventor, and the value of his inventions to the government, did operate upon the minds of the officers in estimating the claimant's services and ordering his advancement.

(6) The claimant has sold the right to use his inventions, reserving the right to the government as set forth in finding VII., to various persons for sums amounting in the aggregate to $5,380. But the use of the inventions by private manufacturers is not nearly so large as the use by the government, the inventions being specially adapted to military purposes and appliances.

ployer to put his invention into practical form, and assenting to the use of such improvements by his employer, may, by taking out a patent 430] *upon such invention, recover a royalty or other compensation for such use. In a series of cases, to which fuller reference will be made hereafter, we have held that this could not be done.

The principle is really an application or outgrowth of the law of estoppel in pais, by which a person looking on and assenting to that which he has power to prevent is held to be precluded ever afterwards from maintaining an action for damages. A familiar instance is that of one who stands by while a sale is being made of property in which he has an interest, and makes no claim thereto, in which case he is held to be estopped from setting up such claim. The same principle is applied to an inventor who makes his discovery public, looks on, and permits others to use it without objection or assertion of a claim for a royalty. In such case he is held to abandon his inchoate right to the exclusive use of his invention, to which a patent would have entitled him had it been applied for before such use. As was said by Mr. Justice Story in Pennock v. Dialogue, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 1, 16 [7: 327, 332]: "This inchoate right, thus once gone, cannot afterwards be resumed at his pleasure; for, where gifts are once made to the public in this way they become absolute." "It is possible," said the trial court, in charging the jury, "that the inventor may not have intended to give the benefit of his discovery to the public, and may have supposed that, by giving permission to a particular individual to construct for others the thing patented, he could not be presumed to have done so. But it is not a question of intention which is involved in the principle we have laid down, but of legal inference, resulting from the conduct of the inventor, and affecting the interests of the public. It is for the jury to say whether the evidence brought this case within the principle which has been stated." This language was quoted with approval in Grant v. Raymond, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 218 [8:376]. So also, in Shaw v. Cooper, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 292, 323 [8: 689, 700], it was held directly that "whatever may be the intention of the inventor, if he suffers his invention to go into public use, through any means whatsoever, without the immediate assertion of his right, he is not entitled to a patent."

431] *The application of this principle to a single individual whom the patentee has permitted to make use of his invention without claiming compensation therefor first arose in McClurg v. Kingsland, 42 U. S. 1 How. 202 [11: 102]. In this case the patentee, Harley, was employed by the defendants at their foundry upon weekly wages. While so employed, he invented the patented improvements, making experiments in the defendants' foundry, and wholly at their expense. The result proving useful, his wages were increased. He continued in their employment, during all of which time he made rollers for them, spoke about procuring a patent, and finally made an application, which was granted. He assigned the patent to the plaintiffs, after the defendants had declined his proposition that they should take out a patent and purchase his right. He made no demand upon them for compensation for using his improvement, and gave them no notice not to use it, until a misunderstanding had arisen, when he left their employment, and made an agreement with plaintiffs to assign his right to them. The defendants continuing to make the rollers on his plan, the action was brought by the plaintiffs, without any previous notice by them. It was held that the facts above stated justified the presumption of a license to use the invention, and that the charge of the court, that the defendants might continue to use it without liability to the plaintiffs, was correct.

In the case of Solomons v. United States, 137 U. S. 342 [34: 667], one Clark, who was in the employ of the government as chief of the bureau of engraving and printing, conceived the idea of a self-canceling stamp, and prepared a die or plate therefor, making use of the services of the employees of the bureau and the property of the government. While his application for a patent was pending, he assigned his rights to the appellant, Solomons, in payment of an account between them. On taking out the patent, the appellant notified the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he was the owner of the patent, and demanded compensation for the use of the stamp on whiskey barrels. It further appeared that Mr. Clark, as chief of the bureau, had been assigned the duty of devising a stamp for this purpose, and it was not understood or intimated that the *stamp which he was to devise [432] should be patented or become his personal property. Indeed, before the final adoption of the stamp, he said that the design was his own, but he should make no charge to the government therefor, as he was employed on a salary by the government, and had used its machinery and other property in the perfection of the stamp. It was held that, having been employed and paid to devise a new stamp, the invention, when accomplished, became the property of the government, and that the patentee had practically sold in advance whatever he might be able to accomplish in that direction.

A similar case was that of Lane & B. Co. v. Locke, 150 U. S. 193 [37: 1049], in which an engineer and draftsman, at a fixed salary, in the employ of the defendants, and using their tools and patterns, invented a stop valve, which the firm used with his knowledge in certain elevators constructed until its dissolution, and after that a corporation organized by the firm used it in the same way and with the like knowledge. It was held that the patentee, having made no claim for remuneration for the use of the patent, saying that he did not desire to disturb his friendly relations with the firm, might be presumed to have recognized an obligation to permit them to use the invention.

In McAlee v. United States, 150 U. S. 424 [37: 1130], there was an express license by an employee in the Treasury Department to such department and its bureaus, of a right to make and use machines containing the improvements of the patentee to the end of the patented term, and it was held that this agreement could not be varied by parol evidence that it was to terminate upon the discharge of the patentee from the employment of the government.

In Keyes v. Eureka Consol. Min. Co. 158 U. S. 150 [39: 929], a person in the employ of a smelting company invented a new method of withdrawing molten metal from a furnace, took out a patent for it, and permitted his employer to use it without charge so long as he remained in its employ, which was about ten years. It was held that there was at least an implied license to use the improvement without 433 payment of royalties during *the continuance of his employment, and also a license to use the invention upon the same terms and royalties fixed for other parties, from the time the patentee left the defendant's employment.

An attempt is made to differentiate the case under consideration from those above cited in the fact, stated in the third finding, that the invention in this case, until it was reduced to paper in the form of an intelligible drawing, was made out of the hours of labor at the arsenal, and during the time which properly belonged to the patentee, and that, by finding four, "the claimant did not use any property of the defendants or the services of any of the employees of the defendants in making or developing or perfecting the inventions themselves." This, however, must be taken in connection with the further finding that "the cost of preparing patterns for the iron and steel castings, and of preparing working drawings, and of constructing working machines, was borne exclusively by the government," and that in each case, one or more machines or articles of manufacture embodying the invention had been constructed and was in operation or use in the arsenal with the claimant's knowledge and consent before he filed an application for a patent. The inference to be deduced from the findings is, in substance, that, while the claimant used neither the property of the government nor the services of its employees in conceiving, developing, or perfecting the inventions themselves, the cost of preparing the patterns and working drawings of the machines, as well as the cost of constructing the machines themselves that were made in putting the inventions into practical use, was borne by the government, the work being also done under the immediate supervision of the claimant.

There is an assumption by the claimant in this connection that, if he did not make use of the time or property of the government in conceiving and developing his ideas, the fact is an important one as distinguishing this case from those above cited. In view of the finding that he did make use of the property and labor of the government in preparing patterns and working drawings and constructing his working machines, 434 *the distinction is a very narrow one,—too narrow, we think, to create a difference in principle, or to prevent the application of the rule announced in those cases. In Solomons v. United States, 137 U. S. 342 [34 667], the finding was that, while employed as chief of the bureau of engraving and printing, Clark conceived the idea of a self-canceling stamp, and under his direction the employees of that bureau, using government property, prepared a die or plate, and put into being the conception of Mr. Clark.

In every case, the idea conceived is the invention. Sometimes, as in the case of McClurg v. Kingsland, 42 U. S. 1 How. 202 [11: 102], a series of experiments is necessary to develop and perfect the invention. At other times, as in the case under consideration, and apparently in the Solomons' Case, the invention may be reduced to paper in the form of an intelligible drawing, when nothing more is necessary than the preparing of patterns and working drawings, and the embodiment of the original idea in a machine constructed accordingly. Now, whether the property of the government and the services of its employees be used in the experiments necessary to develop the invention, or in the preparation of patterns and working drawings and the construction of the completed machines, is of no importance. We do not care, in this connection, to dwell upon the niceties of the several definitions of the word "develop" as applied to an invention. The material fact is that, in both this and the Solomons' Case, the patentee made use of the labor and property of the government in putting his invention into the form of an operative machine, and whether such employment was in the preliminary stage of elaborating and experimenting upon the original idea, putting that idea into definite shape by patterns or working drawings, or finally embodying it in a completed machine, is of no consequence. In neither case did the patentee risk anything but the loss of his personal exertions in conceiving the invention. In both cases, there was a question whether machines made after his idea would be successful or not, and if such machines had proved to be impracticable, the loss would have fallen upon the government.

In this connection, too, it should be borne in mind that the *fact upon which so much 435 stress has been laid by both sides, that the patentee made use of the property and labor of the government in putting his conceptions into practical shape, is important only as furnishing an item of evidence tending to show that the patentee consented to and encouraged the government in making use of his devices. The ultimate fact to be proved is the estoppel, arising from the consent given by the patentee to the use of his inventions by the government without demand for compensation. The most conclusive evidence of such consent is an express agreement or license, such as appeared in McAlee v. United States, 150 U. S. 424 [37: 1130]; but it may also be shown by parol testimony, or by conduct on the part of the patentee proving acquiescence on his part in the use of his invention. The fact that he made use of the time and tools of his employer, put at his service for the purpose, raises either an inference that the work was done for the benefit of such employer, or an implication of bad faith on the patentee's part in claiming the fruits of labor which technically he had no right to enlist in his service.

There is no doubt whatever of the proposition laid down in Solomons' Case, that the mere fact that a person is in the employ of the government does not preclude him from making improvements in the machines with which he is connected, and obtaining patents therefor as his individual property, and that in such case the government would have no more right to seize upon and appropriate such property than any other proprietor would have. On the other hand, it is equally clear that, if the patentee be employed to invent or devise such improvements, his patents obtained therefor belong to his employer, since in making such improvements he is merely doing what he was hired to do. Indeed, the Solomons Case might have been decided wholly upon that ground, irrespective of the question of estoppel, since the finding was that Clark had been assigned the duty of devising a stamp, and it was understood by everybody that the scheme would proceed upon the assumption that the best stamp which he could devise would be adopted and made a part of the revised scheme. In these consultations it was understood that he [436] was acting in *his official capacity as chief of the bureau of engraving and printing, but it was not understood or intimated that the stamp he was to devise would be patented or become his personal property. In fact, he was employed and paid to do the very thing which he did, viz., to devise an improved stamp; and, having been employed for that purpose, the fruits of his inventive skill belonged as much to his employer as would the fruits of his mechanical skill. So, if the inventions of a patentee be made in the course of his employment, and he knowingly assents to the use of such inventions by his employer, he cannot claim compensation therefor,—especially if his experiments have been conducted or his machines have been made at the expense of such employer.

The following remarks of the court in Solomons v. United States, 137 U. S. 346 [34: 669], are pertinent in this connection: "So, also, when one is in the employ of another in a certain line of work, and devises an improved method or instrument for doing that work, and uses the property of his employer and the services of other employees to develop and put in practical form his invention, and expressly assents to the use by his employer of such invention, a jury, or a court trying the facts, is warranted in finding that he has so far recognized the obligations of service flowing from his employment, and the benefits resulting from the use of the property and the assistance of the coemployees of his employer, as to have given to such employer an irrevocable license to use such invention."

The acquiescence of the claimant in this case in the use of his invention by the government is fully shown by the fact that he was in its employ; that the adoption of his inventions by the commanding officer was procured at his suggestion; that the patterns and working drawings were prepared at the cost of the government; that the machines embodying his inventions were also built at the expense of the government; that he never brought his inventions before any agent of the government as the subject of purchase and sale; that he raised no objection to the use of his inventions by the government; and that the commanding officer never undertook to incur a legal or pecuniary obligation on the part of *the gov- [437] ernment for the use of the inventions or the right to manufacture thereunder. It further appeared that from time to time his wages were advanced from $4 to $6 a day, and while it was never stipulated by the commanding officer or understood by the claimant, that the advance of wages was a consideration for the use of the inventions, the practical ability of the claimant as an inventor, and the value of his inventions to the government, did operate on the minds of the officers in estimating the claimant's services and ordering his advancement.

Clearly, a patentee has no right, either in law or morals, to persuade or encourage officers of the government to adopt his inventions, and look on while they are being made use of year after year without objection or claim for compensation, and then to set up a large demand upon the ground that the government had impliedly promised to pay for their use. A patentee is bound to deal fairly with the government, and if he has a claim against it, to make such claim known openly and frankly, and not endeavor silently to raise up a demand in his favor by entrapping its officers to make use of his inventions. While no criticism is made of the claimant, who was a simple mechanic, and, as found by the court of claims, "a faithful, intelligent, and capable employee, whose services were of great value to the government," and whose conduct was "fair, honest, and irreproachable," and while the government appears to have profited largely by his inventive skill, we are of opinion, for the reasons above stated, that the appeal in his behalf should be addressed to the generosity of the legislative, rather than to the justice of the judicial, department.

It may be added, in this connection, that the inventions which the claimant suggested to the commanding officer to adopt were mere undeveloped conceptions of his own that had never been embodied in a machine; that it was uncertain at this time whether he could or would obtain patents for them. If he did not obtain patents, their use was open to anybody. Under such circumstances, it is impossible to say that an officer of the government, conceiving that he had full authority *to [438] make use of them, agreed by their adoption to pay for the value of the use of such machines under patents that might be applied for and granted in the future.

We are clearly of opinion that the case is covered by our former decisions, and that the judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MALOLA POOL, Administratrix of JOSEPH S. POOL, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 438-451.)

Contributory negligence.

Where a car repairer went under a car which was standing on the track with a train in front of it, with the certainty that a caboose was to be attached to the rear, without putting out a flag or other signal warning of his being under the car, in order to protect himself, and as the caboose backed slowly down it was both heard and seen by him in ample time to enable him to get from under the car, he was guilty of negligence which precludes recovery for his death, although reliance was placed by him on the warning which he expected would be given by another car repairer, who remained on the side of the track.

[No. 21.]

Argued January 15, 16, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah to review a judgment of that court affirming a judgment of the trial court of the state, in favor of the plaintiff, Malola Pool, administratrix of Joseph S. Pool, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company, defendant, for damages for the death of the plaintiff's intestate caused by the negligence of defendant. Reversed with directions for a new trial.

See same case below, 7 Utah, 303.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff's intestate on entering the service of the Southern Pacific Company assumed as one of the incidents of his employment the risk of being injured by the negligence of Kilpatrick; that is to say, Pool and Kilpatrick were fellow servants as the term is used in law.

A workman assumes all the obvious risks incident to his employment, among which are the risks which he incurs by reason of the negligence of the men with whom he works.

Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478 (27: 1003); Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377 (28: 787); Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375 (33: 656); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 384 (37: 772, 780); Conway v. Belfast & N. C. R. Co. 11 Ir. Rep. C. L. 345, 351; Wilson v. Merry, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 326, 345; Northern P. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349 (38: 1009); Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. 149, 5 Best & S. 736, Aff'g 5 Best & S. 570, 580; Campbell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 2 Atl. Rep. 489; Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339; Waller v. South Eastern R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 102; Lovell v. Howell, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 161; Hall v. John- son, 3 Hurlst. & C. 589; Charles v. Taylor, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 492.

When the two servants are servants of the same master, and where the service of each will bring them so far to work in the same place and at the same time that the negligence of one in what he is doing, as part of the work which he is bound to do, may injure the other while doing the work which he is bound to do, the master is not liable to the one servant for the negligence of the other.

Priestly v. Fowler, 3 Mees. & W. 1; Barton-shill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. 266; Tunney v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 291; Hutchinson v. York, N. & B. R. Co. 5 Exch. 343; Searle v. Lindsay, 11 C. B. N. S. 429; Feltham v. England, 7 Best & S. 676; Allen v. New Gas Co. L. R. 1 Exch. Div. 251; Loregrove v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. 16 C. B. N. S. 669; Howells v. Landore Steel Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 62; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Hyde, 5 U. S. App. 443, 56 Fed. Rep. 188; Wolcott v. Studebaker, 34 Fed. Rep. 8; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Andrews, 50 Fed. Rep. 728, 27 Ohio L. J. 396; Van Wickle v. Manhattan R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 278; Easton v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 893; Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 837.

The following are cases in the state courts in which car repairers have been held to be co-servants with engineers, brakemen, and switchmen. Their main facts are, in every instance, similar to the present case.

Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171; Unfried v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 260, 269; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cumpston, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 25; Corcoran v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 673; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harrington, 62 Tex. 597; Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. 10 Allen, 233, 87 Am. Dec. 635; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murphy, 53 Ill. 336, 5 Am. Rep. 43; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 162; Kirk v. Atlanta & C. A. L. R. Co. 94 N. C. 625, 55 Am. Rep. 621; Ritt v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 289.

The only inference to be drawn from the evidence is that the accident was caused by the negligence of Rice, another car repairer, and not by the negligence of Kilpatrick. Pool and Rice, being car repairers, were of course fellow servants.

The plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence.

O'Rourke v. Union P. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 189; Southern Pac. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 156 (38: 391, 396).

Messrs. Samuel Shellabarger and Jeremiah M. Wilson, for defendant in error:

The effect of the general verdict in the case is conclusive, under the state of proofs shown by this record, to the effect that the defendant below was guilty of negligence, and that the deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Powers, 149 U. S. 43-45 (37: 642, 643); Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657 (21: 745); Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554

NOTE.—As to freedom of plaintiff from contributory negligence, necessary to entitle him to recover.—see notes to Stokes v. Saltonstall, 10: 115.

160 U. S.

As to responsibility of master to servant for carelessness and competency of co-servants,—see note to Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 27: 605.

485

(34: 235); Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469 (35: 214).

The decision of the question of negligence ought not to be withheld from the jury unless the evidence, after giving the plaintiff the benefit of every inference to be fairly drawn from it, so conclusively shows contributory negligence that the court would be compelled in the exercise of sound judicial discretion to set aside any verdict rendered or returned in his favor.

Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. 128 U. S. 91 (32: 339); Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 423; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

The question of fellow service is one for the jury.

Cooley v. O'Connor, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 400 (20: 449); Wiggins v. Burkham, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 129, 133 (19: 885, 886); Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 122 (29: 821); Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. 128 U. S. 96 (32: 342.)

It is only where there is no dispute about the facts that enter into the question that the court is justified in deciding the question without the finding of the jury.

Toland v. Sprague, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 336 (9: 1107); Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Morgenstern, 106 Ill. 216; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 108 Ill. 576; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 127 Ill. 637-642; Haas v. Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. 88 Pa. 269; Mullan v. Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. 78 Pa. 25, 21 Am. Rep. 2.

Kilpatrick, the negligent employee of the company, was not a fellow servant with the deceased, Pool.

Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213 (25: 612); Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder ("Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels") 152 U. S. 684, 688, 689 (38: 597, 600, 601); Corcoran v. Holbrook, 59 N. Y. 517, 17 Am. Rep. 369; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575; Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 649 (29: 757, 759); Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 388 (28: 792); Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 208 (32: 109); Van Avery v. Union P. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 41; Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 840.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The action was brought below to recover damages from the defendant (plaintiff in error here) upon the ground that he had negligently, on September 12, 1888, caused an injury which resulted in the death of Pool, the plaintiff's intestate. The cause was tried by a jury. At the close of the evidence for the plaintiff, defendant moved for a nonsuit on the grounds, (1) that no negligence had been shown on its part; (2) that the evidence established contributory [439] negligence on the part *of the deceased. These motions were overruled, and exceptions reserved. The defendant thereupon rested. Exceptions were also taken to the action of the court as to the following: (a) to an instruction of the court that if the jury found that Pool, the deceased, was a car repairer and in a different line of service from that of the negligent servant (if any such there was), and Pool's death was caused thereby, then defendant was liable; (b) to an instruction that the trainmen or yardmen of the defendant company were not fellow servants of the deceased, who was a car repairer; (c) to the action of the court in submitting to the jury for their determination as a fact, whether Pool, the deceased, was a fellow servant with the switchman, Kilpatrick, by whose negligence it was claimed the injury resulted; and (d) to an instruction that, in ascertaining the quantum of damages, the jury should consider the number of the family left by the deceased, and the ages of his children.

Before the case went to the jury the defendant renewed its request for a peremptory instruction in its favor, which, being refused, exception was taken. The court, in its general charge to the jury, gave as the law of the case what is usually denominated the "departmental theory" of the law of fellow servant, that is to say, it substantially instructed that the criterion by which they were to determine whether the relation of fellow servant existed, was by ascertaining whether the servants were employed in the same department of service, and if not so employed, they were not fellow servants. Two questions were submitted by the court to the jury to be answered by them. They were: First, "What of the employees of the defendant, if any, were negligent in the discharge of their duty, and by which the deceased was injured?" Second, "Did the deceased use such care and precaution to avoid the injury as a prudent man in the exercise of due diligence should have used?" The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, answering the first question, "Kilpatrick," and the second, "Yes." After a denial of a motion for new trial, an appeal was taken to the supreme court of the territory, in which court the judgment was affirmed. The grounds upon *which this affirmance was based were [440] that there had been no negligence on the part of the deceased, and that the switchman Kilpatrick was not a fellow servant with the car repairer, because they were employed in different departments of service. One of the judges dissented on the ground that the deceased had been guilty of contributory negligence. 7 Utah, 303. The case was then brought by error here.

The questions which the record presents are: First, Was the accident which caused the death of Pool the result of his own negligence, hence giving rise to no cause of action on behalf of his representatives? Second, And if the accident was occasioned by the negligence of Kilpatrick, the switchman, can the representatives of the deceased recover damages resulting from such fact? or, to put the proposition in another form, Were Pool and Kilpatrick fellow servants? We will primarily consider the first of the foregoing inquiries, because it is manifest if the injury was brought about by the negligence of Pool, the question of fellow servant becomes wholly immaterial.

Was the accident caused by the negligence of Pool?

To answer this question involves an analysis of the evidence (which the record fully sets out), not for the purpose of weighing the testimony or of ascertaining the preponderating balance thereof, but in order to arrive at the undoubted proof, from which the legal consequence, negligence, results. There can be no doubt where evidence is conflicting that it is the province of the jury to determine, from such evidence, the proof which constitutes negligence. There is also no doubt where the facts are undisputed or clearly preponderant that the question of negligence is one of law. Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262 [38:434]. The rule is thus announced in that case (p. 283 [443]): "Upon the question of negligence . . . the court may withdraw a case from the jury altogether, and direct a verdict for the plaintiff or the defendant, as the one or the other may be proper, where the evidence is undisputed, or is of such conclusive character that the court, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, would be compelled to set aside a verdict 441] returned in opposition to it. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse*, 139 U. S. 469, 472 [35:213, 215], and authorities there cited; Elliott v. Chicago. M. & St. P. R. Co. 150 U. S. 245 [37:1068]; Anderson County Comrs. v. Beal, 118 U. S. 227, 241 [28:966, 971]."

The undisputed facts which the record here shows are as follows: Pool, the deceased, at the time he received the injury, was in the employ of the company as a car repairer, and had been so employed in its shops at Ogden City, Utah, for three or more years prior to his death. His duty was not only to do repair work on cars which were brought into the shop for that purpose, but also on cars outside of the shops and standing on the railway track. On the day the accident occurred, about half an hour before the usual hour for quitting their work, Pool and another car repairer, named Fowers, were ordered by the foreman of the car shops to repair the last car of a train of eighteen or twenty cars due to leave in a short time for the west. The train was standing on one of the six or seven tracks composing a railway yard, and on these various tracks there was a frequent moving to and fro of trains and a constant switching of cars backward and forward.

The work to be done consisted in attaching what was called a carrying strap (made of iron and used to hold up what was known as a Miller hook) underneath the platform, about level with the main front of the car, in advance of and outside the wheels. In addition to this work, which Pool and Fowers were sent to do, Rice, who was also a car repairer working in the shop, but doing a higher grade of work, was sent from the shop to "adjust the air on the train." These three employees found that in order to do the work of repairing the strap, required the moving of the car a short distance from the others in the train, and this was accordingly done by the three, Pool, Fowers, and Rice. The work "on the air," which Rice was to do, could not be executed until the repairs to be made by Pool and Fowers had been completed and the car had been recoupled to the train. The end of the car which required repair faced north towards the train from which it had just been detached, and Pool and Fowers went under the car in order to do the work assigned 442] them, Pool on the west and *Fowers on the east side of the track. Rice waited in the neighborhood of the car on the east side thereof, so that when they had finished their work the car might be recoupled, thus enabling him to do the duty assigned him of "adjusting the air." The two men in going under the car placed no flag or other signal to warn of their presence there, and thereby protect themselves from the peril to which they were necessarily subjected. Their reason for not taking this precaution is stated in the testimony of Fowers:

"Q. Mr. Fowers, couldn't you and Mr. Pool have put up a red flag out there that would have notified,—put up a red flag or some other flag that would have notified the engineer of danger?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Why didn't you put up a flag?

"A. Because it was too big a work.

"Q. Because it was too much work?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You thought it would take only a few minutes before you got through?

"A. Yes, sir. We also knew that we had a man stationed there to watch for us, and considered ourselves safe.

"Q. Who was the man you had stationed there to watch for you?

"A. Mr. Rice,—Mr. George Rice.

"Q. And you considered you were all right with Mr. Rice to watch for you?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Who was Mr. Rice?

"A. He was a car laborer from the shop.

"Q. Was he one of your car repairers?

"A. Yes, sir."

Shortly after the men went under the car a switch engine with a caboose and car moved from a track called the "caboose track" towards a switch connecting with the track on which the car was being repaired, and backed down for the purpose of coupling the caboose to the south end of this car, such end being the opposite one to that which was being repaired.

*The two men under the car could not [443 be seen by the engineer or by those on the backwardly moving caboose. As the engine and caboose came back slowly toward the car, both the men under it heard the noise caused by its movement. However, owing to a curve in the track, Fowers, who was on the east side of the car, could not see the engine and caboose approaching, but, hearing them, spoke to Pool, and said, "I believe they are coming in here." Pool, who was on the west side, leaned back and saw the switch engine and caboose coming down upon them. As he did so, a switchman by the name of Taylor, who was on the west side, was visible to and in hailing distance of Pool. The movement of Pool is thus related by Fowers: "From his position he could lean back this way and could see the cars, see the engine and caboose coming from the south to couple on. He says, 'Yes, they are coming in here.'" Thereupon Pool made a movement to get from under the car, but did not entirely do so. Fowers jumped out on the east side. As he did so he spoke to Rice, who was standing near at hand, and told him to stop the switch engine from backing, and to say that men were under the car repairing, and not to strike or couple to it, as it could not go out until repairs were finished. Rice walked on the south end of the car, and as the caboose slowly backed down, called out, when it was about 20 or 30 feet away, to Kilpatrick, a switchman, who was standing on the west side of the caboose, not to make the coupling as men were at work under the car. The caboose continued to slowly back towards the car, and when it arrived within about 6 feet stopped for a brief moment. Kilpatrick, on its so stopping, at once gave the signal to the engineer to back down, which signal was obeyed, the caboose striking the car with considerable force. In the meanwhile, either on the going forward of Rice or on the stoppage of the caboose, Fowers returned quickly to his work, as did also Pool. As the former stepped under the car, being uneasy lest the caboose should couple, he looked out and caught sight of a portion of Kilpatrick's body, and saw his arm wave the signal to back down. He cried out to Pool and threw himself from under the car and was thus saved. 444] Pool was not so alert, and *was caught between the car on which he was working and the one in front thereof, receiving a mortal injury. Whilst it is certain that Rice gave a warning call to Kilpatrick, and told him that the men were under the car, and not to couple the caboose to it, there is no evidence whatever that Kilpatrick heard and understood the purport of what Rice said to him when he called to him; there is no proof that he conveyed any signal to Rice which could have produced upon Rice's mind, or upon the mind of any one, the impression that he understood that the men were under the car. There is no proof that Kilpatrick, after the warning given by Rice, transmitted any signal to the engineer to stop the train, and therefore there is no proof that the stop which the caboose made in its backward movement was the result of any communication, by signal or otherwise, between Kilpatrick and the engineer, nor, indeed, is there any proof that the stop was the result of anything but the caution of the engineer in backing down, under the impression that he had backed far enough to make the coupling which it was his purpose to make.

These being the undisputed facts, there can be no doubt that the fatal injury which Pool received was the result of his own inexcusable negligence. He went under the car which was standing on the track with a train in front of it, and with a certainty that a caboose was to be attached to the rear, without putting out a flag or other signal warning of his being under the car in order to protect himself from the peril which was obvious and of which he must have been aware, having been for a period of three years engaged in doing work of a like nature. This original act of negligence was continued by his subsequent conduct. As the caboose backed slowly down it was both heard and seen by him in ample time to have enabled him to get from under the car. There was also abundant opportunity for him to step out and give warning to the engineer in charge of the switch engine, and to Taylor the switchman, who was on the west side of the moving car, thus insuring absolute safety. He did neither. Nor can these acts of negligence be legally excused by conceding that Pool's conduct, whether of commission or of omission, was caused by *the [445] reliance placed by him on the warning which he expected would be given by Rice, the car repairer, who remained on the side of the track. Either Rice was the agent of Pool or of the corporation. If he was the agent of the former, of course Pool cannot recover for an injury suffered by him in consequence of the negligence of his own agent. If Rice, in giving the warning, was the servant of the corporation, his negligence gave rise to no cause of action on behalf of Pool, since in any and every view of the law of fellow servants, Rice and Pool were such servants. The negligence of Pool, established by the undisputed testimony, was not denied by the court below, but was treated as immaterial, in consequence of what the court considered to be proof of neglect on the part of Kilpatrick, the switchman. Such neglect on his part was treated as having been the proximate, and therefore sole, legal cause of the accident. This conclusion is thus stated in the opinion of the supreme court of the territory:

"Nor can there be any question made but that Kilpatrick heard the signal from Rice to stop the engine, and that he acted upon such signal and did stop the engine about 6 feet from the car in question, under which the deceased was working at the time. The signal was understood by the switchman Kilpatrick, and obeyed by him. The verbal communication to Kilpatrick to stop the engine was a notice and warning as certain, positive, and safe as if there had been a red flag signal used in such case. In any event Kilpatrick received it, understood it, and replied to it, and complied with it at the time, and he would have done no more had there been a red flag signal placed by the car."

We have already said that the record, which contains all the testimony, disclosed no proof whatever either that Kilpatrick understood the call of Rice, that he gave any indication to Rice of his so understanding, or that, in consequence of Rice's warning, he signaled the stoppage of the engine, or that he did any of the things which the court below concluded the undisputed proof established that he did do. The case then, on this question, resolves itself to this, that we find no proof whatever of facts which the court below considered *to be [446] undisputedly established. The only testimony which refers to what took place at the time the warning was given by Rice is that of Rice and Fowers, Kilpatrick not having been examined. The following excerpts from the testimony of Rice contain every word said by him which can in any way throw light on the subject:

"Q. What, if any, conversation did you have with Mr. Kilpatrick ?

"A. I had no conversation with Mr. Taylor, if that is his name; I do not know him. There were two switchmen; I didn't know the names. I had no conversation with Mr. Taylor. I had no conversation any further than to tell Mr. Kilpatrick not to come up to touch the cars, there were men working under the car.

"Q. How far was he from you at that time?

"A. Well, it was 20 or 30 feet at the time I told him this.

"Q. Where was he at that time?

"A. He was on the west of the caboose.

"Q. Now, then, you told him that; what did you see, if anything, him do?

"A. Well, I saw him do nothing more until the engine and caboose stopped within 6 feet of this freight car that they were working on, when it stopped still; the next signal was Mr. Kilpatrick gave a motion.

"Q. What was that?

"For it to come back, and it came back with great force; and at that time I heard Mr. Fowers holler 'Pull up!' I run back to where Mr. Fowers was. He was at the other end of the car where he was at work previous to my going up and notifying him not to come down, and I saw Mr. Pool in between the cars, and we yelled for help. . . .

"Q. How long after you told Mr. Kilpatrick that there were men under the cars was it that you saw Mr. Kilpatrick go and make the signal?

"A. How?

"Q. How long after you told Mr. Kilpatrick that there were men under the car?

447] *A. How long after that? Oh, it was very short.

"Q. And then what, if anything, did the engineer on the car, on the engine that he was working, do in response to that signal? What did the engineer do with his engine in response to that?

"A. Why, he backed up.

"Q. How did he back up?

"A. He came back with great force to this car."

This testimony, it is apparent, does not even tend to show that the switchman Kilpatrick understood the warning given by Rice, or that he acted upon it by transmitting a signal to the engineer to stop the train, and then signaled to continue. The mere presence of Rice, if, owing to the noise of the moving train or from other reasons, his warning either did not reach or was misunderstood by Kilpatrick, was not sufficient to convey the fact that men were working under the car, and therefore it should not be coupled. Rice was an air adjuster. His work could not be done without the coupling of the car. His mere presence, therefore, if his voice was not heard and his words understood, would have naturally suggested that he desired the coupling to be done in order that his work might be accomplished. Nor can it be considered, without any evidence tending to that end, that Kilpatrick understood the warning, knew the men were under the car, signaled to stop the backward movement of the caboose, and then suddenly, without any change in the situation, gave the signal to back up. Such conduct on his part would have been murder, and is certainly not to be presumed without proof, on bare suspicion. The testimony of Fowers, full excerpts therefrom being in the margin, whilst more contradictory than that of Rice, likewise fails to show that Kilpatrick actually understood Rice or acted on the warning by him given.

448] An examination of this testimony *at once demonstrates that the only matter therein which seemingly tends to show that Kilpatrick understood Rice is the statement of Fowers, that he heard Kilpatrick make some reply, although the witness could not give the nature of the reply.† But the question is, not whether Kilpatrick heard the voice of Rice, but whether he understood his meaning; therefore the mere fact that the witness testifies some

†"Mr. Rice was standing outside of the car, and I says to him, says I, 'You go and stop him, and don't let him hit this car at all,' and told him that it could not get out on the train until it was repaired. Of course, they could not make up the train until that car was repaired, and, says I, 'Don't let them hit the car at all, and we will have it done in five minutes.' Says he, 'All right,' and stepped down to the other end of the car, and I saw him signal for the engineer to stop, making the regular signal with his arms to them coming up.

"Q. What, if anything, did he say at that time?

"A. He didn't say anything at that time—he stood and signaled. I was standing right at the end of the car, still looking down, and saw Mr. Pool leaning back over the rail this way—about in that position—looking back at the engine coming. They come up very slow within about 6 feet of the car that he was working under, and then came to a stop. I heard Mr. Rice tell somebody not to hit the car; that they were working there. As soon as I heard him say that I just went right to work, and jumped right under the car again with Mr. Pool, and he turned his attention right to the work, and we went to work again. I felt a little uneasy myself, thinking they might try to couple the caboose on to the car that we were working under. They can do that very easily sometimes, you know, without moving it. So I leaned over the rail—I was kind of on my knees—and I turned my head, and leaned over the rail to the east, and looked right out, and there I saw one of the yardmen giving a signal to back up. I could see the motion of his arms and part of his body, and says I, 'Look out, Joe, they are right on us!' and threw myself head first out over the rail."

On cross-examination he said:

"Q. Did you advise those switchmen to notify the engineer you were in there?

"A. No, sir; I told Mr. Rice to tell the switchman that we were in there repairing a car.

"Q. And you relied on the switchman to attend to notifying the engineer? You expected him to notify the engineer?

A. Yes, sir.

"Q. To protect you both—Mr. Pool was in the same condition or position, did he expect that, too?

A. Sir?

"Q. Mr. Pool and yourself both relied on the switchman to notify the engineer, and you thought the switchman would attend to it?

A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That he would notify them, could the engineer see you from where he was, out on the engine? Could he see you were in there with the caboose and car between you?

A. No, sir."

After stating the presence of Rice beside the car, he was asked:

"Q. And you requested him to notify the engineer?

"A. Yes, sir. Understand, of course, that they could not use the air on that train until we had done these repairs, because they could not make the coupling with the rest; they were waiting for these repairs.

"Q. Sir?

A. They were waiting for these repairs.

"Q. While he was standing there you just requested him to notify the engineer not to back back?

A. Not the engineer, but the switchman.

"Q. Not the engineer, but the switchman, not to back back the engine?

A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You don't know whether he notified them or not.

A. I heard him tell them not to hit the car, and that was satisfactory to me.

"Q. You supposed it would not be struck?

A. I supposed it would not be struck; yes, sir.

"Q. Did you see the switchman yourself?

A. I saw one of them—a part of one of them—I could see his arm and part of his body.

449] reply was made, without giving the *reply, in no way shows that Rice's warning was comprehended. Indeed, the entire context of the testimony shows that Fowers himself was uncertain whether the warning given by Rice was received and understood by Kilpatrick,

"Q. Well, was it the switchman that Mr. Rice spoke to that beckoned the engine to back back?

"A. Yes, sir; I heard Mr. Rice talking to that switchman, and I supposed it was that switchman.

"Q. Well, what switchman was that; who was it?

"A. I think it was Ben. Kilpatrick; I would not be positive which one it was.

"Q. But do you think it was Ben. Kilpatrick who signaled the engineer to back back?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And struck this car?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And he did that after he had been warned by Mr. Rice?

"A. Well, I suppose—

"Q. Well, after you heard Mr. Rice tell him?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He done that after he had been told by Mr. Rice not to hit the car?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Who then signaled the engineer not to back back?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. It was the switchman?

"A. It was the switchman; yes, sir. . . .

"Q. I think you got back under the car, as I understand you, and commenced to fix this bolt?

"A. Not until they come to a stop.

"Q. Not until they come to a stop?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Well, after they came to a stop did you know that there was any signal, and who was it made the signal to back back farther?

"A. At the time that I saw the signal I was under the car, but leaning out over the rail, and I saw the signal for the back up; that was after they had stopped, and after I had got under the car again, and at that time I leaned over and saw, I think it was Kilpatrick, giving the signal to back up.

"Q. You saw Kilpatrick give a signal to back up, and immediately after that signal they backed up and you sprung out?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And that is the time that Pool was caught?

"A. Yes, sir.

On his redirect examination he said:

"Q. Where were you when you saw Rice communicate, do you know, to Kilpatrick?

"A. I was standing at the north end of this car.

"Q. Standing there?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where was Kilpatrick; on which side of the train?

"A. He was right in front of the caboose, I think.

"Q. Where was that caboose from where you were?

"A. Well it might have been 20 feet at that time.

"Q. I understand you to say it was about 20 feet to where Kilpatrick was?

"A. Yes, sir; when Mr. Rice spoke to him.

"Q. Did you see Kilpatrick when he spoke to him?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Well, did he hear him? Are you able to say that he heard him?

"A. Well, I heard Mr. Kilpatrick make some reply, but I don't know what it was.

"Q. He replied, did he, when Rice spoke?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. This was the time the engine was standing still?

"A. No, sir; she was moving then, and came up within about 6 feet and then stopped. She was stopped at the time—

"Q. I know; but after Rice spoke to Kilpatrick the engineer stopped the engine.

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was that in response to the signal from Kilpatrick?

"A. Yes, sir; it must have been.

"Q. What did Kilpatrick (of course meaning Rice) say when he communicated to Kilpatrick; did he refer to your being under the car?

"A. I would not be right positive as to that. He told him not to hit the car, and I think he said we were working there."

for when asked, in the first instance, whether Kilpatrick in giving the signal to back did so after he had been warned by Rice, answered, "Well, I suppose"—a mere conjecture; and again, when asked if the engineer had stopped the engine in consequence of a *signal [450 from Kilpatrick, his reply was, "Yes, sir: it must have been,"—a mere opinion. On cross examination, in answering a question asking, "Who then signaled the engineer not to back back?" Fowers answered, "Yes, sir." But the whole context of his testimony shows that the word "not" in the question was misunderstood by the witness, for he was testifying solely as to the signal given to back after he (the witness) was under the car. Indeed, this is the only signal which he, Fowers, testifies he saw given by Kilpatrick. To construe this question and answer as relating to a presumed signal not to back given by Kilpatrick to the engineer in consequence of Rice's warning, would contradict the whole of Fowers' testimony, since it clearly shows that no such signal was seen by him, and that the only signal which he noticed was the one given to make the coupling which led to the death of Pool.

*Finding no proof whatever that the [451 switchman actually understood the warning given by Rice and acted upon it, there is nothing in the record to support the conclusion below that, as the warning was actually given and understood, Pool was thereby relieved from the legal consequence of his negligence in having gone under the car without placing the usual and customary signal, of having remained there in the presence of an impending danger, and, when there was ample opportunity to avoid it, of having failed himself to give a warning as the car moved down, which the proof shows he could have done, thus rendering his position absolutely safe.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded with directions to grant a new trial.

W. B. ELDRIDGE, Appt., [452

v.

PETER J. TREZEVANT ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 452-469.)

When servitude attaches to lands—equal protection of the law—due process of law.

1. Where by the state law lands bordering upon a navigable river are subject to a servitude in favor of the public, whereby such portions thereof as are necessary for the purpose of making levees may be taken without compensation, such servitude attaches to lands whose titles are derived from the United States.
2. The subject-matter of such rights and regulations falls within the control of the states; and the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution are satisfied if, in cases like the present one, the state law, with its

NOTE.—As to navigable waters; what are in United States; streams and inland waters as highways,—see note to United States v. The Montello, 22: 391.

As to what is due "process of law," see note to Pearson v. Yewdall, 24: 436.

benefits and its obligations, is impartially administered.

- B. A citizen of another state, who, as respects his property in a state, has received the same measure of right as that awarded to its citizens, has not been deprived of his property without due process of law, or been denied the equal protection of the laws.

[No. 62.]

Submitted October 17, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Louisiana dismissing a suit in equity brought by William B. Eldridge against Henry B. Richardson, chief of the board of engineers of the state of Louisiana, and Peter J. Trezevant, to enjoin them from the construction of a certain public levee through lands belonging to complainant. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

William B. Eldridge, a citizen of the state of Mississippi, filed in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Louisiana a bill of complaint against Henry B. Richardson, chief of the board of engineers of the state of Louisiana, and Peter J. Trezevant, citizens of Louisiana, whereby he sought to have the defendants enjoined from the construction of a certain public levee through a plantation belonging to the complainant and situated in Carroll township, state of Louisiana.

An answer was filed admitting that the state board of engineers had projected and laid out a public levee through the complainant's plantation, and that a contract to construct said levee had been awarded to Peter J. Trezevant, but claiming that such proceedings were in pursuance of an act of the general assembly of the state of Louisiana, approved February 14, 1879, and were therefore lawful.

The case was heard upon the issues presented by the bill and answer, supplemented 453] with an admission that none of the acts complained of in the bill were wanton, malicious, or arbitrary.

On June 20, 1891, a decree was rendered adjudging the sufficiency of the answer and dismissing the bill, from which decree an appeal was taken to this court.

Mr. Wade R. Young, for appellant:

By article 156 of the Constitution of Louisiana adopted July 23, 1879, private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid.

Ruch v. New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 275.

This right of appropriation, which is recognized in the provisions of the Code, is and was coexistent with the right of expropriation as provided for in La. Rev. Civ. Code, arts. 2626 et seq. and La. Rev. Stat. 1479 et seq. All of those provisions pre-existed the Constitution, with the 155th and 156th articles of which the right of appropriation is said to conflict. This, of itself, leads to the supposition of their entire compatibility. But the two principles are of well-recognized and ancient origin,—one being an exercise of the police power, any loss sustained thereby entitling the injured party to no recompense, the same being damnum absque injuria; the other being the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the damages entailed being compensable.

Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494; Chaffe v. Trezevant, 38 La. Ann. 746.

In determining whether the laws of a state are in conflict with the prohibitions of the Federal Constitution, this court must decide for itself; and if the decision requires a construction of state Constitutions and laws, it is not necessarily governed by previous decisions of the state courts.

Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 665 (29: 770).

The prohibition of the state Constitution is apparently plain and free from ambiguity, and although articles 213 et seq. provide for a levee system in the state, no exception to the prohibition is to be found in the Constitution itself. This exception is to be found in article 665 of the Civil Code: "Servitudes imposed for the public or common utility relate to the space which is to be left for the public use by the adjacent proprietors on the shores of navigable rivers, and for the making and repairing of levees, roads, and other public or common works. All that relates to this kind of servitudes is determined by laws or particular regulations." This statute is held to control the prohibition of the Constitution because it pre-existed, and to authorize the taking, damages, and destruction of private property for the making and repairing of levees, roads, and other public or common works, without compensation, in the exercise of the police power of the state.

Article 258 of the Constitution provides that all laws in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution and not inconsistent therewith shall continue as if the said Constitution had not been adopted.

The prohibition against the taking of private property for public use is to be found in the Federal Constitution, and in the Constitutions of most, if not all, of the states, and has received a uniform interpretation, which has become a part of the jurisprudence of the country.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 166 (20: 557).

The state court seems to have appreciated this difficulty, and to have disposed of it by justifying the taking as an exercise of the police power, entirely compatible with the right of expropriation and provided for by the statute for the making and repairing of levees, roads, and other public or common works.

It becomes necessary, then, or interesting, to inquire into the origin and history of the servitude. The article was taken from articles 649 and 650 of the Code Napolcon: "Servitudes established by law have for object the public or communal utility, or the utility of private persons. Those established for the public or communal utility have for object the towpaths along the navigable or floatable rivers, the construction or repairing of roads, and other public or communal works."

The laws which formerly regulated this servitude have been long repealed, as the necessity therefor ceased to exist, and nothing remains of the legislation except the principle embodied in the article of the Code.

The Acts of 1829, § 5 (La. Rev. Stat. 1856, p. 481), provided: "Throughout all that portion of the state watered by the Mississippi and the bayous running to and from the same, which are settled, where levees are necessary to confine the waters and to protect the inhabitants against inundation, the said levees shall be made by the riparian proprietors in the proportions and at the time hereinafter prescribed."

This had been the law and public policy of the territory before its purchase, and up to that time, and was the condition of the ancient grants.

Cash v. Whitworth, 13 La. Ann. 402, 71 Am. Dec. 515.

The Constitution of 1812 imposed no restriction on the right of the legislature to take private property for public use without compensation, and in that respect its will was sovereign.

As the state progressed in population, wealth, and intelligence, the system was found to be unequal and oppressive, or inadequate to the needs of the public, and it was enacted as early as 1829 (La. Rev. Stat. 1856, p. 501) that "the police juries of the parishes of Concordia and Ouachita (then embracing all that part of the state between the Ouachita and Mississippi rivers) shall have plenary and unlimited power to make such enactments with regard to roads and levees within their respective limits as may be deemed necessary and proper by those bodies, including the power to authorize the assessment and collection of taxes which they may deem necessary on the private land claims within any levee district established by them, to cover the expenses of leveeing any public land included in such district, or other necessary work or expenses authorized by any ordinance of said juries respectively.

"Sec. 219. If, in the exercise of the powers granted by the foregoing section, the police juries of the parishes of Concordia or Ouachita find it necessary to stop the natural drain of one or more tracts of land, in order to protect several other tracts or a considerable district of country, they shall have power to do so. If any individual, the natural drainage of whose land shall have been so authorized to be stopped, should deem himself damaged thereby, he may, at the same or at the next regular meeting of the said police jury, claim indemnity therefor."

The principle of indemnity for damages so inflicted was thus early recognized by the legislature.

In the Constitution of 1845, art. 109, the people first adopted in their organic law the provision that "vested rights should not be divested unless for purposes of public utility and for adequate compensation previously made." In 1848 the legislature enacted (La. Rev. Stat. 1856, p. 496): "Whenever it shall be necessary to make a new levee in the parish of Tensas, and the persons on whose lands the same may be laid off shall feel themselves aggrieved or injured thereby, the police jury shall appoint a jury of five disinterested freeholders of a different levee ward, who shall examine on oath and report to the police jury the amount of damage that may be done the complainants, and the benefit also that may arise from the construction of the levee, and if it appear that the amount of damage is greater than the benefit accruing, the difference shall be paid out of the levee fund within a reasonable time after the report of the jury; and any person refusing to act as one of the jurymen in this section shall be fined $50." Inge v. Tensas Police Jury, 14 La. Ann. 117.

This enactment was a legislative recognition of the right to compensation to the full extent, and an abandonment of the principle of servitude.

The Constitution of 1852, art. 105, contained the same provision that "vested rights should not be divested unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation previously made."

In Zenor v. Concordia, 7 La. Ann. 150, and Dubose v. Levee Comrs. 11 La. Ann. 165, the court adhered to the doctrine of servitude, and in the latter case held that, although the property was considerably impaired in value, the law concerning the expropriation of private property for public use did not apply to such lands upon the banks of navigable rivers as may be found necessary for levee purposes. In neither case was any allusion made to the constitutional provision against the divestiture of vested rights without compensation. In the case of Mithoff v. Carrollton, 12 La. Ann. 185, the court seems for the first time to have recognized the constitutional provision, and, by a divided court with a strong dissenting opinion, without abandoning the doctrine of servitude, distinguished, and held that the soil alone owed the servitude, and that when it became necessary to construct a levee on ground on which buildings had been erected, and the buildings had been demolished for that purpose, the owners were entitled to be compensated for their value. Cash v. Whitworth, 13 La. Ann. 401, 71 Am. Dec. 515; Inge v. Tensas Police Jury, 14 La. Ann. 117.

The former laws were all repealed after the late war, and a new and different system adopted, by which the state undertook the duty of making and repairing levees. Jefferson Police Jury v. Tardos, 22 La. Ann. 58; Surgi v. Matthews, 24 La. Ann. 613. The Constitution of 1868, art. 110, contained the same provision that "vested rights should not be divested, unless for purposes of public utility and for adequate compensation made."

The case of Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494, arose and was decided under that Constitution, and the court held that private property could be taken for public use, in the exercise of the general police powers of the state, without making compensation therefor. In 1879 the people adopted a new Constitution, and in that appears for the first time the provision in the words of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and of so many of the states, that "private property shall not be taken (nor damaged) for public purposes (use) without just (and adequate) compensation (first paid)."

This provision had at that time been construed by this court and by the courts of many of the states, and it had come to be understood that the exercise of the police power, as distinguished from the right of eminent domain, was a matter of public law, rather than a matter of legislative or judicial discretion. The Constitution of Mississippi contained the provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation being first made. In the case of Penrice v. Wallis, 37 Miss. 172, the same argument was used, that the levee commissioners could take private property for the purpose of making public levees, without compensation. The court said: "In cases of public emergencies, such as the calamities of fire, flood, war, pestilence, and famine, private property may be taken and applied to public use without just compensation being made therefor, upon the principle of imperative necessity for the public protection; but in order to justify such appropriation, the necessity must be apparently present, and the apprehended danger must be so imminent and impending as not to admit of the delay incident to legal proceedings for the condemnation of the property."

It would naturally appear that the framers of the Louisiana Constitution of 1879, in adopting the provision in words which had received a settled construction, adopted the existing interpretation, rather than one founded on a principle of the Spanish and French laws, which had been in part abandoned for the parish of Concordia as early as 1829, and altogether abandoned for the parish of Tensas in 1848, and which is in conflict with the spirit of our institutions.

The court can take judicial notice of the fact that the public levees of the state, on the shores of the Mississippi river, are now a part of a system of public works undertaken by the United States for the improvement of the navigation of the river, and incidentally, in co-operation with the state, for the protection of the country from overflow, by confining the waters of the river, and that such levees, whether made by the United States or by the state, are parts of one and the same system, and are planned and executed for both purposes.

In Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 166 (20: 557), it was alleged that the title came to the plaintiff burdened with an easement in favor of improving the navigation of the Fox river, which authorized the injuries complained of, and of which, therefore, he could not complain. This court said: "We do not think it necessary to consume time in proving that when the United States sells land by treaty or otherwise, and parts with the fee by patent without reservations, it retains no right to take that land for public use without just compensation, nor does it confer such a right on the state within which it lies. The plaintiff owns the lands in fee through titles derived by patent from the United States without reservations. Whatever may have been the conditions of the ancient grants, no such condition attaches to his ownership; and the lands, although bordering on a navigable stream, are as much within the protection of the constitutional principle awarding compensation as other private property."

The doctrine was stated by this court in the case of Parker v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661 (34: 819): "The courts of the United States will construe the grants of the general government without reference to the rules of construction adopted by the states for their grants; but whatever incidents or rights attach to the ownership of property conveyed by the government will be determined by the states, subject to the condition that their rules do not impair the efficacy of the grants, or the use and enjoyment of the property by the grantee."

In the case of Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494, the state supreme court holdly stated that private property may be taken for public use, in the exercise of the general police powers, without making compensation therefor, and that the article of the Code rested upon that foundation.

The judges of the United States circuit court, in Hollingsworth v. Tensas, 4 Woods, 280, considered that the exercise of the police powers of the state and the right of eminent domain were questions of general jurisprudence, and not of local law, and held that, according to the principles of general jurisprudence, private property could not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation, either by authority of the police power of the state or under the right of eminent domain.

If any doubt could ever have existed that the distinction between the police power and the right of eminent domain is a question of general jurisprudence, and not of local law, such doubt has been solved by the prohibition of the 14th Amendment, that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law. As said by this court in Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 166 (20: 557), the just principles of the common law on this subject have been placed beyond the power of the states to change or control them. What is due process of law is not a question of local or state law, but a question of Federal law, and the customs of the French and Spanish colonists, and the law and policy of the territory and state before the adoption of the amendment, are not pertinent to the discussion.

Perhaps no definition is more often quoted than that given by Webster in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518 (4: 629): "By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial." The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not therefore to be considered the law of the land.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 353.

The words "due process of law," as used in the Federal Constitution, do not mean the law and jurisprudence of the state by which the wrong is worked.

In Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 235 (4: 559), this court said: "As to the words from Magna Charta, incorporated in the Constitution of Maryland, after volumes spoken and written with a view to their exposition, the good sense of mankind has at length settled down to this: that they were intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice."

When the government through its established agencies interferes with the title to one's property, or with his independent enjoyment of it, and its action is called in question as not in accordance with the law of the land, we are to test its validity by those principles of civil liberty and constitutional protection which have become established in our system of laws.

In judicial proceedings the law of the land requires a hearing before condemnation, and judgment before dispossession.

Due process of law in each particular case means such an exertion of power of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 356.

It was in recognition of this principle that, in Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 9 (28: 889), this court said: "And by providing for an assessment of full compensation to the owners of lands flowed it avoids the difficulty which arose in the case of Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 166 (20: 557)."

It has never been doubted that the taking of private property from one person for the private use and benefit of another person would be a taking without due process of law.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 357.

And it has never been doubted that the taking of private property for public use without compensation, except in the exercise of police power, would be a deprivation of property without due process of law.

Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254 (35: 1004).

To determine under what circumstances property can be taken in the exercise of the police power, as distinguished from the right of eminent domain, this court does not look to the jurisprudence of the state, but to the settled maxims of law.

The maxim Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas is that which lies at the foundation of the power, and it is distinct from the right of eminent domain.

These police powers rest upon the maxim Salus populi est suprema lex. This power to restrain a private injurious use of property is very different from the right of eminent domain.

Dill. Mun. Corp. ¶93.

There are cases where it becomes necessary for the public authorities to interfere with the control by individuals of their property and even to destroy it. A strong instance of this description is where it becomes necessary to take, use, or destroy the private property of individuals to prevent the spreading of a fire, the ravages of a pestilence, the advance of a hostile army, or other great public calamity.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 594.

The cases in which private property can be taken, used, or destroyed in the exercise of the police power are well defined, and the authorities are all agreed that there must be an imperative necessity.

Penrice v. Wallis, 37 Miss. 172.

This court cannot so interpret the prohibition of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States that what would be confiscation in the state of Mississippi can become, under the same condition of things, due process of law in the state of Louisiana.

Nor can it be said that it is competent for the state, by its legislature or by its courts to decide that such imperative necessity exists as to justify the taking, damage, and destruction of private property for public use without compensation, in the exercise of the police power.

If such be the law of Louisiana, that the lands of plaintiff, being adjacent to the Mississippi river, are subject to a servitude or easement in the exercise of which the state can take, damage, and destroy his property for the purpose of making and repairing levees, roads, and other public or common works, without compensation, such a law is repugnant to and in conflict with the prohibitions of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, unless it be plead and shown that there exists such imperative necessity as to justify the exercise of the police power of the state.

If, on the other hand, the general provision, embodied in article 156 of the state Constitution, and in article 497 of the Civil Code, provides a suitable remedy by trial in the regular course of justice, to recover compensation for the injury to plaintiff's property, the compensation should have been first paid, and the defendants were proceeding to take, damage, and destroy the property of the plaintiff in violation of the Constitution and laws of the state.

In either case the plaintiff had a plain right to the equitable remedy by injunction, and the more so because he would have had no remedy at all against the state for the torts of its officers and agents.

Messrs. M. J. Cunningham, Attorney General of Louisiana, and T. M. Miller, for appellees:

The state of Louisiana claims the right to build levees across riparian lands without compensating the owners for the lands so taken.

To the attempt to exercise this right the plaintiff in the present case objected on the ground that it involved the taking of his property without compensation, and was therefore in conflict with the cited provisions, both of the Federal and of the state Constitutions, relative to the taking of private property for public purposes.

In answer to this contention the state, in substance, asserts that two fallacies underlie plaintiff's position, viz.: First, in his assumption that the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, forbidding the states to take private property without due process of law, is the same in purpose and effect as the constitutional provision in the 5th Amendment, which forbids the taking of private property for public purposes without compensation to the owner. Second, in his assumption that the building by the state of levees over riparian lands involves any taking of property at the time of the building.

It is not denied by appellant's counsel that before the state of Louisiana was admitted into the Union the law and public policy there subjected riparian lands to a public servitude for the making and repairing of levees, nor is it denied that the principle of servitude continued to exist up to the date of the adoption of the Louisiana Constitution of 1879.

How and when this servitude disappeared is not made plain, but it is argued that because in one local act provision was made for compensation (in presumably exceptional circumstances) the entire principle was abandoned. And the argument is also advanced, in the face of the decisions in Zenor v. Concordia, 7 La. Ann. 150, and Dubose v. Levee Comrs., 11 La. Ann. 165, that because article 109 of the Constitution of 1845 and article 105 of the Constitution of 1852 declared that vested rights should not be divested unless for purposes of public utility and for adequate compensation, the law of servitude became extinguished for repugnancy, as if the exercise of an undisputed and unqualified sovereign right, reserved always, could divest a vested right.

The decisions in Mithoff v. Carrollton, 12 La. Ann. 185; Cash v. Whitworth, 13 La. Ann. 401, 71 Am. Dec. 515; and Inge v. Tensas Police Jury, 14 La. Ann. 117,—affirm and reaffirm the existence of this servitude for levees as the condition upon which lands bordering streams and subject to inundation are held in Louisiana, and as an incident of such ownership.

The case of Dubose v. Levee Comrs., supra, which settled that the law concerning the expropriation of private property for public use did not apply to such lands upon the banks of navigable rivers as might be found necessary for levee purposes, and that there was no arbitrary limit fixed by law as the maximum distance at which a levee might be placed back of a caving bank, was expressly approved in Mithoff v. Carrollton, supra.

In Cash v. Whitworth, supra, the court merely decided that it would be a perversion of the principle of riparian servitude to require the owner of land on a bayou to surrender his land to a levee not intended to prevent inundation, but for the reclamation of swamp land at a distance.

Inge v. Tensas Police Jury, 14 La. Ann. 117, involved the construction of a local statute, and is not in point here.

Counsel next insists that the principle of servitude was abandoned by the repeal of the ante bellum laws regulating it, and cites Jefferson Police Jury v. Tardos, 22 La. Ann. 58, and Surgi v. Matthews, 24 La. Ann. 613.

Both cases were actions against riparian proprietors to recover the cost of constructing levees ordered by the parochial authorities. The question of servitude was not raised in either.

Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494, maintains that rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power of the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient; places levee building along the Mississippi river in the alluvial regions of Louisiana within the police powers of the state, where a controlling public necessity demands interference or destruction, as within the principle which justifies the taking or destroying of private property to prevent the spreading of a fire, the ravages of a pestilence, the advance of a hostile army, or any other great public calamity. Necessitas publica major est quam privata.

The opinion then declares that "the laws passed for such purposes, though they may disturb the enjoyment of individual rights, are not unconstitutional, though no compensation is made."

It is shown that in the early days of the state the levees were made and kept in repair at the joint expense of the front proprietors. The law and clauses in the original grant burdened those who were contiguous on the river with the construction and repair of the roads, ditches, bridges, and the levee, reference being made to Martin's History; Dumont; Garry's History, vol. ii, p. 2; Ordinance of O'Reilly (Spanish Governor), Feb. 18, 1770, and other authorities.

So far as the question of infringement of the state Constitution is concerned, the decision of the state supreme court is binding.

It may be said, further, that where given legislation is assailed, as here, upon the ground that no just compensation is provided for a taking, by the state, the 14th Amendment has no sort of application, for in stretching the 5th Amendment so as to touch acts of state legislatures, the clause in relation to compensation was omitted.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97 (24:616).

The servitude for the making and repairing of levees rests upon all lands adjacent to the Mississippi river, in Louisiana, and its exercise by the state is referable to the police power, and not the right of eminent domain, and any injury done the owner is damnum absque injuria.

Ruch v. New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 275.

Domat says: "The banks of rivers, highways, etc., are things public, the use of which is common to all particular persons. But it is the sovereign that regulates them."

The text of the French Code is: "A servitude established for the public benefit or that of the commune has for its object footways by the side of the navigable rivers, . . . the construction or repairs of roads and other public works, or those relating to the commune,"

Code Napoleon, arts. 650, 556.

And Justinian is referred to as saying: "The banks belonged to the proprietor of the adjacent soil; but the use of them, for the purposes of navigation and otherwise, was open to all. The proprietors, therefore, could alone reap the profits of the soil; but if they attempted to exercise their rights so as to hinder the public use of the bank, they would be restrained by the interdict of the pretor." Lib. II., tit. I., p. 159. To Cicero is ascribed the expression that "the public use of the banks of a river is part of the law of nations."

The Revised Civil Code of Louisiana provides that "servitudes imposed for the public or common utility relate to the space which is left for the public use by the adjacent proprietors on the shores of navigable rivers, and for making and repairing levees, roads, and other public or common works." La. Rev. Civ. Code 665. This has confessedly been the law in Louisiana from the earliest times, and that provision, in substance, is found in all her codifications of the civil law.

Pearl v. Meeker, 45 La. Ann. 421.

However broad and emphatic may be the same provision in our existing Constitution, it had not either the intention or effect to repeal article 665 of the Civil Code, or to bring within its grasp the lawful appropriation of property for levee purposes. On the contrary, the Constitution itself charges the general assembly with the "duty of maintaining a levee system."

The 14th Amendment simply forbids the states to "deprive any person of property without due process of law." It does not undertake to prescribe in what due process of law shall consist. It merely requires some process which shall be equal and impartial to all, and shall operate in the same general manner upon the rights of all. Any process that complies with these requirements satisfies the 14th Amendment. Provided the process which governs the transfer or divestiture of property is regular, uniform, and impartial in its operation, the other conditions, as to compensation, etc., are left to the states to determine.

The requirement of due process of law is a different matter from the regulation of the taking of private property for public purposes, under the police power inherent in every government. But the 14th Amendment deals solely with the question of due process of law.

The proper location of the levees is necessarily committed to the discretion of the engineers. And as they are very often called upon to act in great haste, it was necessary that they should act both in a judicial capacity and as their own executive. The system is on the whole fair and impartial and has worked satisfactorily for nearly a century. The contention that the plaintiff's rights under the 14th Amendment have been violated is then, we submit, ill founded.

Considering the necessity of every alluvial land owner to protect his land and home against the floods, is it not perfectly certain that if the state did not undertake the protection he would protect himself as best he might or abandon the country? Is it not certain that, if able and allowed to build his own levees, he would go far enough back from the caving banks to assure permanency? And would he not employ engineers, expert in business, just as the state does? Why, then does counsel talk about confiscation of private property?

It is denied that this court has ever given an utterance that would sanction the idea that such an exercise of a state's reserved police power, as here shown, is forbidden by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97 (24: 616); Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27 (28: 923).

The entry upon the land and surveying the route is "such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case," and it is immaterial that the statute fails to provide a remedy against the wanton, unjust, and arbitrary exercise of the power, since the principles of the civil law, prevailing in the state of Louisiana, are themselves to be taken as if incorporated into the statute, and they open the courts against such abuses.

Tiedeman, Lim. Police Powers, § 124.

The constitutionality of legislation providing for the compulsory drainage of swamp lands has generally been sustained as a reasonable exercise of the police power of the state, even on the general ground that the state may impose upon the owner the duty of draining his low lands, in consideration of the consequent increase in the value of his lands.

Tiedeman, Lim. Police Powers, § 124.

If the state in the exercise of her police powers in the interest of public safety may impose a duty on a landed proprietor, it is hard to conceive why she may not assume the duty herself, subject to his right to prevent a wanton and unnecessary invasion of his property rights.

The levee laws in Louisiana, without which no part of complainant's property would have value or be habitable, are not an unrighteous exercise of police power from the standpoint of a most jealous scrutiny, so there is no call for an "overstrict construction."

People v. Jackson & M. Pl. Road Co. 9 Mich. 285; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 166 (20: 557); Tiedeman, Lim. Police Powers, § 3; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 732.

It is in the power of the state to require local improvements to be made which are essential to the health and prosperity of any community within its borders. To this end it may provide for the construction of canals for draining marshy and malarious districts and of levees to prevent inundations.

Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701 (28: 569).

In Louisiana these riparian rights have always been held subject to the incidents and rights reserved by the state to prevent inundation.

Eminent domain is said to be "an incident of sovereignty, and requires no constitutional recognition."

Mills, Eminent Domain, § 1; Prentice, Police Powers, 54; Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. 80, 22 Am. Rep. 738; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438.

So far as the circumstances of complainant's title having come from the general government is concerned, that cannot exempt him from the burden common to those in his situation. He has the use and enjoyment of his property just as all others similarly placed have theirs, and which is just as complete as the nature of the case will permit.

Whatever incidents or rights attach to the ownership of property conveyed by the government will be determined by the states.

Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661 (34: 819); Hart v. Orleans Levee Comrs. 54 Fed. Rep. 559.

Land within a state belonging to the United States, and not devoted to public purposes, is treated as the land of a private proprietor, and may be taken for public use by the state in the same way as other lands.

United States v. Railroad Bridge Co. 6 McLean, 517; Randolph, Eminent Domain, 35, and cases cited.

Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court:

By an act of the general assembly of the state of Louisiana, approved February 14, 1879, there was created a board of state engineers, whose duty it was to make a survey of the watercourses, public works, and levees of the state. They were to report to the governor of the state the improvements which they should deem necessary and the construction of such levees as were of prime importance to the state at large and were beyond the means of the parochial authorities. They were also, in said report, to furnish estimates and specifications of work necessary to be done. It was thereupon made the duty of the governor to advertise for proposals to make such improvements and construct such levees as were recommended, and to award the contracts to the lowest responsible bidder, under proper and sufficient bonds for the faithful performance of their contracts; and upon completion of said works it was made the duty of the board of engineers to examine and measure the work and to certify to its correctness; and, upon approval by the governor, the auditor of public accounts of the state was to draw his warrant therefor, payable out of the general engineer fund or such fund as should be provided by law.

In the exercise of the powers thus conferred, the board of engineers reported to the governor that it was necessary to construct a levee across complainant's plantation; that such levee was of prime importance to the state at large; would have to be of large size; that the river front was a dangerous and constantly caving bank, and that necessarily the levee had to be located some distance from the river; 462] and they *furnished estimates and specifications of the work necessary to be done. Subsequently, after advertising for proposals, the governor awarded the contract for constructing the levee proposed to the defendant, Peter J. Trezevant, as the lowest responsible bidder, who was, at the time of filing the bill, proceeding with the work.

The plaintiff expressly admits in his bill that, although the Constitution of the state of Louisiana contains a provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged without adequate and just compensation being first paid, the laws of the state, as interpreted by the supreme court of the state, provide no remedy for cases of proceedings under the levee laws, and that the supreme court of the state has decided that such taking, damage, and destruction of property for the purpose of building a public levee is an exercise of the police power of the state, and damnum absque injuria because the state has a right of servitude or easement over the lands on the shores of navigable rivers for the making and repairing of levees, roads, and other public works. But he contends that, as he cannot sue the state for compensation, and as an action at law, if such would lie, would not furnish that just and adequate compensation first paid contemplated by the provision of the state Constitution, he has a right, as a citizen of another state, to invoke, in the circuit court of the United States, the protection of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws.

The concession distinctly made by the complainant, in his bill, that the state courts refuse to recognize that owners of lands abutting on the Mississippi river and the bayous running to and from the same, where levees are necessary to confine the waters and protect the inhabitants against inundation, are entitled, when a public levee is located upon such lands, to invoke the application of that provision of the state Constitution which provides that "private property shall not be taken nor damaged for public use without just and adequate *compensation first paid," and repeated 463 in the brief filed on his behalf in this court, relieves us from an extended examination of the origin and history of the state enactments, constitutional and legislative, and of the decisions of the state courts on this subject.

It is important, however, to observe the ground upon which the state legislature and judicial authorities base their action. That ground is found in the doctrine existing in the territory of Louisiana before its purchase by the United States and continuing to this time, that lands abutting on the rivers and bayous are subject to a servitude in favor of the public, whereby such portions thereof as are necessary for the purpose of making and repairing public levees may be taken, in pursuance of law, without compensation. This doctrine is said to have been derived from the Code Napoleon, whose 649th and 650th articles were as follows:

"Servitudes established by law have for object the public or commercial utility, or the utility of private persons. Those established for the public or commercial utility have for object the towpaths along the navigable or floatable rivers, the construction or repairing of roads and other public or commercial works. All that concerns this kind of servitude is determined by laws or particular regulations."

But whether the servitude in question was derived from French or Spanish sources, or from local and natural causes, we need not inquire, because it is explicitly asserted in La. Civ. Code, art. 661, in the following terms:

"Servitudes imposed for the public or common utility relate to the space which is to be left for public use by the adjacent proprietors, on the shores of navigable rivers, and for the making and repairing of levees, roads, and other public or common *works. All 464 that relates to this kind of servitude is determined by laws of particular regulations."

In the case of Zenor v. Concordia, 7 La. Ann. 150, where the legislature had enacted that the police jury of a parish exposed to inundation should have plenary power to locate and construct levees, and where such police jury, in pursuance of these powers, had placed and built a levee on the lands of the complainant, greatly to his detriment, it was held that the enactment was valid, and that no liability for damages was caused by a bona fide proceeding under it. The court said:

"In this state, so much exposed to ruinous inundations, the public have the undoubted right, on the shores of the Mississippi river, to the use of the space of ground necessary for the making and repairing of the public levees and roads. La. Civ. Code, art. 661. It was the condition of the ancient grants of land on the Mississippi river, and sufficient depth was always given to each tract, to prevent the exercise of the public rights from proving ruinous to the individual. Speculations and other motives have, in later times, caused the division and sale of some tracts, and encroachments on others, with large fronts and little depth, in opposition to the general policy of the country. Thus in the present case, the plaintiff has scarcely any depth, with a large front, in a deep bend, with a curving bank. The policy of the country and the laws of the land, made for the general safety, cannot yield to cases of individual hardship. Those who purchase and own the front on the Mississippi river gain all that is made by alluvion, and lose all that is carried away by abrasion. And those who choose to purchase tracts with little depth, in caving bends, expose themselves, knowingly, to total loss, and must suffer the consequences when they occur. They suffer damnum absque injuria.

In Dubose v. Levee Comrs. 11 La. Ann. 165, the plaintiff sued for damages occasioned to his land by the acts of the commissioners in changing the line of the public levee, but the court, citing the provisions of La. Civ. Code, art. 661, held that "the law concerning the expropriation of private property for public use does not apply to such lands upon the banks [465] *of navigable rivers as may be found necessary for levee purposes. The quantity of land to be taken for such purposes presents a question of policy or administration to be decided by the local authorities, whose decision should not be revised by this tribunal, except for the most cogent reasons, and where there has been manifest oppression or injustice."

In the case of Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494, the supreme court again held that an owner of land abutting on the Mississippi river could not recover for damages inflicted upon his property by the state board of engineers and contractors in locating and constructing a public levee, but put the immunity of the state mainly upon the proposition that such public works are done in the exercise of the police power, and did not advert to the doctrine of servitude, upon which the previous decision had placed such immunity.

But we do not understand that the supreme court of the state intended thereby to repudiate the doctrine of a servitude, explicitly declared in the Code, and recognized through a long period by many decisions. If, to approve the judgment in that case, it were necessary to hold that the state and its agents can take private property wherever situated, and apply it to any public purpose, and escape from the duty of compensation by terming such action an exercise of the police power, it is difficult to see how such a conclusion could be reached by the courts of a state in whose Constitution is to be found a provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just and adequate compensation first made. But, as we have said, it is not necessary to so read the decision in question, nor to consider whether, even in such a case, a remedy could be found in any provision of the Federal Constitution.

This, we think, clearly appears by the later case of Ruch v. New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 275, where the supreme court reviewed the law and the cases, and again put the immunity of the city from liability for damages occasioned to the front of plaintiff's property by a public work upon the long established doctrine of servitude, and declared that "the riparian owner enjoys his property sub modo, i. e., subject to *the right of the public to reserve space [466 enough for levees, public roads, and the like. Over this space the front proprietor never acquires complete dominion. It never passes free of this reservation by a deed to a purchaser."

With the admission that, under the state Constitution and laws as construed by the highest court of the state, the plaintiff below was not entitled to the remedies he sought, we are requested to hold that he can obtain relief by invoking in a circuit court of the United States, the protection of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The first contention of the plaintiff in error is that, as it is admitted that he owns the land in fee through title derived by patent from the United States, without reservation, whatever may have been the conditions of the ancient grants, no such condition attaches to his ownership, and the lands, although bordering on a navigable stream, are as much within the protection of the constitutional principle awarding compensation as other property. In other words, the claim is that the servitude under which are held lands whose titles are derived by grant from Spain or France, or from the state, does not attach to lands whose titles are derived from the United States.

Previous decisions of this court furnish a ready answer to this contention.

In Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324 [24; 224], where the dispute was as to the nature of the title as to the river front, and as to new ground formed by filling in upon the bed of the river, and where some conflict was shown to exist between the common law rules as to such ownership and those asserted by the state of Iowa in her legislation and the decisions of her courts, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, said:

"It is generally conceded that the riparian title attaches to subsequent accretions to the land effected by the gradual and imperceptible operation of natural causes. But whether it attaches to land reclaimed by artificial means from the bed of the river, or to sudden accretions produced by unusual *floods, is a question [467 which each state decides for itself. . . . The confusion of navigable with tide water, found in the monuments of the common law, long prevailed in this country, notwithstanding the broad differences existing between the extent and topography of the British island and that of the American continent. It had the influence for two generations of excluding the admiralty jurisdiction from our great rivers and inland seas, and under the like influence, it laid the foundation in many states of doctrines with regard to the ownership of the soil in navigable waters above tide water at variance with sound principles of public policy.

Whether, as rules of property, it would now be safe to change these doctrines where they have been applied, as before remarked, is for the several states themselves to determine. If they choose to resign to the riparian proprietor rights which properly belong to them in the sovereign capacity, it is not for others to raise objections."

In Pucker v. Bird, 137 U. S. 662 [34: 819], where a similar question arose, and where it was claimed that the fact that the title was derived by a grant from the United States afforded a reason for decision, Mr. Justice Field stated the question as follows:

"The courts of the United States will construe the grants of the general government without reference to the rules of construction adopted by the states for their grants; but whatever incidents or rights attach to the ownership of property conveyed by the government will be determined by the states, subject to the condition that their rules do not impair the efficacy of the grants or the use and enjoyment of the property by the grantee. As an incident of such ownership the right of the riparian owner, where the waters are above the influence of the tide, will be limited according to the law of the state, either to low or high water mark, or will extend to the middle of the stream."

The language of Barney v. Keokuk, supra, was cited with approval, and the conclusion reached was that the law of the state, as construed by its supreme court, was decisive of the controversy.

468] *The question was again presented in Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 372 [35: 430], and, after a review of the cases, Mr. Justice Bradley stated the conclusion as follows:

"We do not think it necessary to discuss this point further. In our judgment the grants of the government for lands bounded on streams and other waters, without any reservation or restriction of terms, are to be construed, as to their effect, according to the law of the state in which the lands lie."

In Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1 [38: 331], this court had to deal with a conflict as to the title in certain lands below high-water mark in the Columbia river, in the state of Oregon, between parties claiming respectively under the United States and under the state of Oregon. The entire subject was thoroughly examined, involving a review of all the cases, both state and Federal, and one of the conclusions reached was thus stated by Mr. Justice Gray:

"Grants by Congress of portions of the public lands within a territory to settlers thereon, though bordering on or bounded by navigable waters, convey, of their own force, no title or right below high-water mark, and do not impair the title and dominion of the future state when created, but leave the question of the use of the shores by the owners of uplands to the sovereign control of each state, subject only to the rights vested by the Constitution in the United States."

These decisions not only dispose of the proposition that lands situated within a state, but whose title is derived from the United States, are entitled to be exempted from local regulations admitted to be applicable to lands held by grant from the state, but also of the other proposition, that the provisions of the 14th Amendment extend to and override public rights, existing in the form of servitudes or easements, held by the courts of a state to be valid under the Constitution and laws of such state.

The subject-matter of such rights and regulations falls within the control of the states, and the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States are satisfied if, in cases like the present one, the state law, with its benefits and its obligations, is impartially administered. Walker v. Sauvinet*, 92 U. S. 90 [23: 678]; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97 [24: 616]; Bowman v. Lewis ("Missouri v. Lewis") 101 U. S. 22 [25: 989]; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 314 [36: 986].

The plaintiff in error is, indeed, not a citizen of Louisiana, but he concedes that, as respects his property in that state, he has received the same measure of right as that awarded to its citizens, and we are unable to see, in the light of the Federal Constitution, that he has been deprived of his property without due process of law, or been denied the equal protection of the laws.

The decree of the court below is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer dissented.

DENNIS DAVIS, Plff. in Err.,

v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 469-493.)

Defense of insanity—reasonable doubt—burden of proof.

1. On a trial for murder, where the defense is insanity, it is not the duty of the jury to convict if the evidence on that subject is equally balanced; but if on all the evidence there is reasonable doubt of his sanity, the accused is entitled to an acquittal.
2. The legal presumption of sanity does not absolutely control the jury until it is overthrown or impaired by evidence sufficient to establish the fact of insanity beyond a reasonable doubt.
3. Where evidence is given on a trial for murder of the insanity of the accused, the burden of proving his sanity beyond a reasonable doubt is on the prosecution.
4. If the whole evidence, including that supplied by the presumption of sanity, does not exclude beyond reasonable doubt the hypothesis of insanity, of which some proof is adduced, the accused is entitled to an acquittal.

[No. 593.]

Submitted October 30, 1895. Decided December 16, 1895.

NOTE.—As to evidence of insanity; opinions as to sanity,—see note to Dexter v. Hall, 21: 73.
As to insanity in avoidance of deeds, see note to Harding v. Handy, 6: 429.

As to power of attorney, revoked by insanity of principal, see note to Hunt v. Rousmanier, 5: 589.

As to insanity; evidence; committee; delusions; dealings with insane; imbecility; when equity will interfere; inquisition; contracts of lunatics; conveyances from parent to child, or between relatives, when set aside,—see note to Hoffman v. Overbey, 34: 754

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas to review a judgment convicting Dennis Davis of the crime of murder. Reversed with directions for a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

No counsel appeared for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. M. Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error:

There is much conflict of authority on the proposition as to whether the judge should charge the jury that they must acquit if the whole evidence raises a reasonable doubt in their minds as to whether the defendant is sane or not.

The doctrine in England is well settled that the burden is on the defendant to establish his insanity to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury.

Russell, Crimes, 9th ed. 525; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 7th ed. 975; Foster, Crown Law, 225.

In McNaughten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200, the question of insanity as a defense in criminal cases having been made the subject of debate in the House of Lords, the opinion of the judges on the law governing such cases was taken, and on the point here involved the answer was that "the jurors ought to be told that every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction."

The law so declared has been acquiesced in in England. In this country there are two lines of authorities. The following hold the doctrine that the burden of proof is on the defendant to establish insanity to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury, some of the cases using the language that it must be established by a preponderance of the evidence. These authorities will all be cited together as adverse to the contention that only a reasonable doubt must be raised.

Rice, Crim. Ev. vol. 3, §§ 398, 399; Whart. Homicide, § 663; Whart. Crim. Ev. § 340; Whart. Crim. Law, 7th ed. § 54; Greenleaf, Ev. vol. 2, § 373, vol. 3, § 5; Boswell v. State, 63 Ala. 307, 35 Am. Rep. 20; Parsons v. State, 81 Ala. 577, 60 Am. Rep. 193; Gunter v. State, 83 Ala. 96; Maxwell v. State, 89 Ala. 150; Coates v. State, 50 Ark. 330; Bolling v. State, 54 Ark. 588; People v. McDonnell, 47 Cal. 134; People v. Bauden, 90 Cal. 195; People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 238; People v. Bemmerly, 98 Cal. 299; Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 450, 455; State v. Bruce, 48 Iowa, 533, 30 Am. Rep. 403; State v. Trout, 74 Iowa, 545; Kriel v. Com. 5 Bush, 362; Moore v. Com. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 738; State v. Coleman, 27 La. Ann. 691; State v. Burns, 25 La. Ann. 302; State v. De Rancé, 34 La. Ann. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 426; State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; Com. v. Eddy, 7 Gray, 583; State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430; State v. McCoy, 34 Mo. 534, 86 Am. Dec. 121; State v. Redemeier, 71 Mo. 173, 36 Am. Rep. 462; State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300; State v. Schaefer, 116 Mo. 96; State v. Lewis, 20 Nev. 333; State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 196; State v. Starling, 6 Jones L. 366; State v. Vahn, 82 N. C. 631; State v. Davis, 109 N. C. 780; Loeffner v. State, 10 Ohio St. 598; Bond v. State, 23 Ohio St. 349; Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. 266; Ortwein v. Com. 76 Pa. 414, 18 Am.

Rep. 420; Pannell v. Com. 86 Pa. 260; Com. v. Gerade, 145 Pa. 289; State v. Bundy, 24 S. C. 439, 58 Am. Rep. 263; State v. Alexander, 30 S. C. 74; Webb v. State, 9 Tex. App. 490; Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 638; People v. Dillon, 8 Utah, 92; Baccigalupo v. Com. 33 Gratt. 807, 36 Am. Rep. 795; State v. Strauder, 11 W. Va. 747, 27 Am. Rep. 606.

The following hold that if the evidence raises a reasonable doubt of sanity the jury must acquit:

Thompson, Trials, § 2524; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. §§ 669, 673; Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. Rep. 161; United States v. Ridgeway, 31 Fed. Rep. 149; United States v. Faulkner, 35 Fed. Rep. 730; United States v. McClure, 7 Law Rep. 439; United States v. Lancaster, 7 Biss. 440; State v. Johnson, 40 Conn. 136; Hodge v. State, 26 Fla. 11; Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 385, 83 Am. Dec. 231; Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 353; Durn v. People, 109 Ill. 635; Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382; Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492; Gueting v. State, 66 Ind. 94; Grubb v. State, 117 Ind. 277; Pike v. State, 121 Ind. 433; State v. Jones, 64 Iowa, 349; State v. Crawford, 11 Kan. 32; State v. Mahn, 25 Kan. 186; State v. Nixon, 32 Kan. 205; Smith v. Com. 1 Duv. 224; People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 162; Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633; Cunningham v. State, 56 Miss. 269, 21 Am. Rep. 360; Wright v. People, 4 Neb. 407; State v. Bartlett, 43 N. H. 224, 80 Am. Dec. 154; State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Rep. 242; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533; Faulkner v. Territory (N. M.) 30 Pac. 905; Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 162; O'Connell v. People, 87 N. Y. 377, 41 Am. Rep. 379; Walker v. People, 88 N. Y. 81; Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 348; Revoir v. State, 82 Wis. 295; State v. Reidell (Del.) 14 Atl. 550.

Thus it appears that the preponderance of authority is against the contention that it is only necessary to raise a reasonable doubt.

It is urged by those authorities holding the contrary doctrine that every element necessary for conviction must be established beyond a reasonable doubt; that while there is a presumption of sanity, this only goes to the extent of relieving the state of the burden of proving sanity, and without any proof on the subject the presumption is conclusive, but that when proof is introduced, inasmuch as malice and will could not exist in the mind of a person insane, evidence establishing a reasonable doubt as to the sanity of the defendant in effect establishes a reasonable doubt as to whether there were malice and the operation of the will.

Nowhere has this doctrine been stated with more force than by Chief Justice Nicholson in Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 366-374.

The reasoning upon which the opposite conclusion is based is that sanity is the normal condition and that there is a presumption that every person is sane, and this presumption stands until it is overthrown, and that evidence which merely raises a reasonable doubt of sanity does not overthrow this presumption.

There is a difference, growing out of the well-established rules of law based on public policy, between the doubt of guilt and the doubt of insanity. Malice is presumed from certain facts, and persons are held responsible for the consequences of their acts upon the principle of presumption. These presumptions are fixed rules established by public policy and not by the reasoning upon each particular case. The rule, which has been enforced, that drunkenness is not an excuse for crime, grows out of public policy. Fixed rules of law, established by public policy like this, are not to be subjected to the refinements of reasoning growing out of the facts of particular cases.

It has been said that statistics show that the majority of the persons acquitted on the ground of insanity were not insane, and this even in England, where the strongest rule against the defendant prevails. The probability of a jury finding an insane man guilty, under the rule that insanity must be established to their reasonable satisfaction, is very slight as compared with the evil that results to society from the application of the doctrine that a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant is sane or insane must be followed by acquittal.

It is urged with great force of logic, which overlooks public policy and applies to the question of insanity the same reasoning which has been accepted in establishing the doctrine of reasonable doubt in respect of the affirmative facts necessary to be proven by the state to establish crime, that sanity when put in issue by any evidence must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. It is submitted that a substantial ground for differentiation exists. This has been presented by Attorney General Heiskell in Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 348, as follows:

That doubt of insanity and doubt of guilt do not stand on the same footing. Rules of law are not matters of simple logical consistency. Policy influences them. Every man is presumed to know the law, to contemplate the consequences of his acts; malice is presumed from the use of a deadly weapon or from the fact of killing; not because courts suppose these things are universally true in fact, but that policy demands their adoption. Policy, not logic, is the foundation of the rule as to drunkenness, that it shall not excuse crime. The legal reason for it is logically nonsense; practically, wise. The same policy demands that we shall adhere to the English rule as to proof of insanity, not make a new one, as the courts of other states have done.

The defendant cannot be sent to an insane asylum on a doubt as to his insanity. He must therefore, in all doubtful cases, be turned loose upon the country.

The question is one that has not been passed upon by this court. The nisi prius Federal courts have held to the doctrine of reasonable doubt.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Dennis Davis was indicted for the crime of having on the 18th day of September, 1894, at the Creek Nation, in the Indian territory, within the western district of Arkansas, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, killed and murdered one Sol Blackwell.

He was found guilty of the charge in the indictment. A motion for a new trial having been overruled and the court having adjudged that the accused was guilty of the crime of *murder, as charged, he was sentenced [475 to suffer the penalty of death by hanging.

At the trial below the government introduced evidence which, if alone considered, made it the duty of the jury to return a verdict of guilty of the crime charged.

But there was evidence tending to show that at the time of the killing the accused, by reason of unsoundness or weakness of mind, was not criminally responsible for his acts. In addition to the evidence of a practising physician of many years standing, and who, for the time, was physician at the jail in which the accused was confined previous to his trial, "other witnesses," the bill of exceptions states, "testified that they had been intimately acquainted with the defendant for a number of years, lived near him, and had been frequently with him, knew his mental condition, and that he was weak-minded, and regarded by his neighbors and people as being what they called half crazy. Other witnesses who had known the defendant from ten to twenty years, witnesses who had worked with him and had been thrown in constant contact with him, said he had always been called half-crazy, weak-minded, and in the opinion of the witnesses defendant was not of sound mind."

The issue, therefore, was as to the responsibility of the accused for the killing alleged and clearly proved.

In its elaborate charge the court instructed the jury as to the rules by which they were to be guided in determining whether the accused took the life of the deceased feloniously, wilfully, and with malice aforethought. "Where," the court said, "a man has been shot to death, where the facts, as claimed by the government here, show a lying in wait, show previous preparation, show the selection of a deadly weapon, and show concealment to get an opportunity to do the act,—where that state of case exists, if there is a mental condition of the kind that renders a man accountable, why, there is crime, and that crime is murder."

Referring to the evidence adduced to show that the accused was incompetent in law to commit crime, the court observed: "Now, when a man premeditates a wicked design that *produces death, and executes that design, [476 if he is a sane being,—if he is what the law calls a sane man, not that he may be partially insane, not that he may be eccentric, and not that he may be unable to control his will power if he is in a passion or rage because of some real or imaginary grievance he may have received,—I say, if you find him in that condition and you find these other things attending the act, you would necessarily find the existence of the attributes of the crime of murder known as 'wilfulness' and malice aforethought." But, the court said, the law "presumes every man is sane, and the burden of showing it is not true is upon the party who asserts it. The responsibility of overturning that presumption, that the law recognizes as one that is universal, is with the party who sets it up as a defense. The government is not required to show it. The law presumes that we are all sane; therefore the government does not have to furnish any evidence to show that this defendant is sane. It comes in here with the fact established in legal contemplation until it is overthrown. The government takes and keeps that attitude until the evidence brought in the case overthrows this presumption of sanity. Now, let us see what the nature of this defense is. The defendant interposes the plea of insanity, and he says by this plea that he did the killing, but the act is not one for which he can be held responsible; in other words, that the act was and is excusable in the law because he was insane at the time of its commission. Now, I say to you in this connection, and it is a fact admitted in argument by the counsel, that under the evidence there is nothing that justifies the act of the killing; nor was it such an act that the law upholds it or mitigates it, or reduces it to a grade lower than murder. If it was committed by the defendant while he was actually insane it is excusable."

Again: "Now, I will undertake or endeavor to tell you, and I bespeak your most earnest attention especially upon this proposition of 'insanity.' The term 'insanity,' as used in this defense, means such a perverted and deranged condition of the mental and moral faculties as to render a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or unconscious at the [477]* time of the nature of the act he is committing; or where, though conscious of the nature of the act and able to distinguish between right and wrong and know that the act is wrong, yet his will, by which I mean the governing power of his mind, has been, otherwise than voluntarily, so completely destroyed that his actions are not subject to it, but are beyond his control. Such insanity, if proved to your reasonable satisfaction to have existed at the time of the commission of the act,—that is the test, at the time of its commission,—is in the law an excuse for it, however brutal or atrocious it may have been. For a person to be excused from criminal responsibility it is not necessary that he be a raving maniac, but ordinarily it requires something more than mere eccentricity of a natural character. Such insanity does not excuse."

Later in the charge the court recurred to the defense of insanity and said: "Now, as I have already told you, the law presumes every person who has reached the years of discretion to be of sane mind, and this presumption continues until the contrary is shown. So that when, as in this case, insanity is interposed as a defense, the fact of the existence of such insanity at the time of the commission of the offense charged must be established by the evidence to the reasonable satisfaction of a jury, and the burden of proof of the insanity rests with the defendant. Although you may believe and find from the evidence that the defendant did commit the act charged against him, yet, if you further find that at the time he did so he was in such an insane condition of mind that he did not and could not understand and comprehend the nature of the act; or that, thus knowing and understanding it, he was so far deprived of his will, not by his own passion conceived for the purpose of spurring him on to commit the violence, not by his own passion of mind engendered by some real or fancied grievance, but that he was so far deprived of his will by disease or other cause over which he had no control, as to render him unable to control his actions,—then such killing was not a malicious killing, and you will acquit him of the crime charged against him."

In concluding its charge the court thus summarized the *principles by which the [478 jury were to be guided in their deliberations:

"Now, gentlemen, the propositions are few in this case. First, inquire whether there was a killing; then whether the act of killing was done by the defendant, and what was his condition of mind under the law at that time, as I have given it to you. See what his mental condition was at that time under the law as I have given it to you, and if he is to be held responsible for his actions. If so, you are then to take a step further and see whether these attributes of the crime of murder existed as I have defined them to you; that is, that the killing was done wilfully and with malice aforethought.

"Gentlemen, I have given you the law in the case, and you are to take it as the law and by this law and the testimony you are to make up your verdict. You are to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of this defendant before you convict. When you start into a trial of a case, as I have already told you, you start in with the presumption of sanity. Then comes in the responsibility resting upon the defendant to show his condition; to show his irresponsibility under the law. He is required to show that to your reasonable satisfaction,—I say, to your reasonable satisfaction,—that it is a state of case where he is excusable for the act."

These extracts from the charge of the court present this important question: If it appears that the deceased was killed by the accused under circumstances which—nothing else appearing—made a case of murder, can the jury properly return a verdict of guilty of the offense charged if upon the whole evidence, from whatever side it comes, they have a reasonable doubt whether, at the time of killing, the accused was mentally competent to distinguish between right and wrong or to understand the nature of the act he was committing? If this question be answered in the negative the judgment must be reversed; for the court below instructed the jury that the defense of insanity could not avail the accused unless it appeared affirmatively, to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury, that he was not criminally responsible for his acts. The fact of killing being clearly proved, the legal presumption, *based upon the common experience of [479 mankind, that every man is sane, was sufficient, the court, in effect, said, to authorize a verdict of guilty, although the jury might entertain a reasonable doubt, upon the evidence, whether the accused, by reason of his mental condition, was criminally responsible for the killing in question. In other words, if the evidence was in equilibrio as to the accused being sane, that is, capable of comprehending the nature and effect of his acts, he was to be treated just as he would be if there were no defense of insanity or if there were an entire absence of proof that he was insane.

This exposition of criminal law is not without support by adjudications in England and in this country. In Reg. v. Stokes, 3 Car. & K.

185, 188, a case of murder, Baron Rolfe said: "If the prisoner seeks to excuse himself upon the plea of insanity, it is for him to make it clear that he was insane at the time of committing the offense charged. The onus rests on him, and the jury must be satisfied that he actually was insane. If the matter is left in doubt, it will be their duty to convict him; for every man must be presumed to be responsible for his acts until the contrary is clearly shown." The same judge, in Reg. v. Layton, 4 Cox, C. C. 149, 155, which was also a case of murder and the defense insanity, after observing that in cases of that description it was a cardinal rule "that the burden of proving innocence rested on the party accused," said that the question for the jury was, "not whether the person was of sound mind, but whether he had made out to their satisfaction that he was not of sound mind."

But the most deliberate and careful statement of the doctrine in the English courts is to be found in McNaughton's Case, 10 Clark & F. 199, 203, 210, decided in 1843. The accused having been found not guilty, on the ground of insanity, his trial became the subject of discussion in the House of Lords, and much was said about insane delusions and partial insanity as giving or not giving immunity for acts which, being committed by sane persons, were punishable criminally. The judges were summoned to give their opinion 480 on that question, *although there was no case pending before the House. Hansard, Parl. Deb. vol. 67, 3d series, 713-743. Among the questions propounded to the judges were these: "What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury when a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusions respecting one or more particular subjects or persons is charged with the commission of a crime (murder, for example), and insanity is set up as a defense? In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury, as to the person's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?" Mr. Justice Maule delivered a separate opinion in which he expressed great difficulty in answering the questions put to the judges, because they did not appear to arise out of, and were not propounded with reference to, a particular case, or for a particular purpose, which might explain or limit the generality of these terms, and also, because he had heard no argument, at the bar or elsewhere, on the subject referred to in the questions. He expressed fear that any answers made would embarrass the administration of justice in criminal cases. He, nevertheless, said that "to render a person irresponsible for crime on account of unsoundness of mind, the unsoundness should, according to law as it has long been understood and held, be such as rendered him incapable of knowing right from wrong;" and that the judge, in the particular case on trial, should employ such terms in his instructions as, in his discretion, would be proper to assist the jury in coming to a right conclusion as to the guilt of the accused. Lord Chief Justice Tindal, speaking for himself and the other judges, said, in response to the questions propounded, that the jurors ought to be told in all cases where insanity is set up as a defense that "every man is presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that to establish a defense on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong."

*In Com. v. Rogers (1844) 7 Met. 500, 504, [481 506, 41 Am. Dec. 458, it was said by Chief Justice Shaw, in his charge to the jury, that "the ordinary presumption is that a person is of sound mind, until the contrary appears; and in order to shield one from criminal responsibility, the presumption must be rebutted by proof of the contrary, satisfactory to the jury. Such proof may arise, either out of the evidence offered by the prosecutor to establish the case against the accused, or from distinct evidence offered on his part. In either case it must be sufficient to establish the fact of insanity; otherwise the presumption will stand." The jury, after being in consultation for several hours, came into court and asked whether they must be satisfied beyond a doubt of the insanity of the prisoner to entitle him to an acquittal. The court responded that if the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the insanity of the prisoner the jury would be authorized to find him insane. A verdict was returned of not guilty, by reason of insanity. In Com. v. York (1845) 9 Met. 93, 116, 43 Am. Dec. 373, the charge was murder, and the defense provocation or mutual combat, making the offense, at most, only manslaughter. The court held that the guilt of malicious homicide was established beyond reasonable doubt, by proof, beyond reasonable doubt, of the fact of voluntary killing, without excuse or justification apparent upon the evidence introduced in behalf of the prosecution; that, in such case, the proof must preponderate in favor of the fact of sudden and mutual combat, in order to justify a finding in favor of the prisoner in respect to the fact, it not being sufficient to raise a doubt, even though it be a reasonable doubt, of the fact of extenuation. In that case Mr. Justice Wilde dissented in an able opinion, holding that "the burden of proof, in every criminal case, is on the commonwealth to prove all the material allegations in the indictment; and if, on the whole evidence, the jury have a reasonable doubt whether the defendant is guilty of the crime charged, they are bound to acquit him." p. 134. In Com. v. Eddy (1856) 7 Gray, 584, in which the crime charged was murder and the defense insanity, Mr. Justice Metcalf, speaking for himself and Justices Bigelow *and Merrick, [482 said: "The burden is on the commonwealth to prove all that is necessary to constitute the crime of murder. And as that crime can be committed only by a reasonable being,—a person of sane mind,—the burden is on the commonwealth to prove that the defendant was of sane mind when he committed the act of killing. But it is a presumption of law that all men are of sane mind; and that presumption sustains the burden of proof, unless it is rebutted and overcome by satisfactory evidence to the contrary. In order to overcome this presumption of law and shield the defendant from legal responsibility, the burden is on him to prove, to the satisfaction of the jury, by a preponderance of the whole evidence in the case, that, at the time of committing the homicide, he was not of sane mind.'

It would seem that later cases in Massachusetts do not go to the extent indicated by the above cases. In Com. v. Heath, 11 Gray, 304, which was tried before Justices Dewey, Metcalf, and Thomas, the charge was murder, and one question was whether the defendants were of sufficient intelligence to be responsible for a homicide. Upon this point, and as to the burden of proof, the court said: "The law presumes men and women of the age of the prisoners to be sane, to be responsible agents. Where, therefore, a homicide is proved to have been committed in such way and under such circumstances as, when done by a person of sane mind, would constitute murder, the presumption of law, as of common sense and general experience, supplies that link. It presumes men to be sane till the contrary be shown. The presumption of law stands till it is met and overcome by the evidence in the case. This evidence may come, of course, as well from the witnesses for the government as the witnesses for the defense; and when the evidence is all in, the jury must be satisfied, in order to convict the prisoner, not only of the doing of the acts which constitute murder, but that they proceeded from a responsible agent, one capable of committing the offense. This is the rule to be applied to a case where the defense is idiocy, an original defect and want of capacity. Whether the rule is modified where the defense relied upon is insanity, [483]disease *of the mind, or delusion, it is not necessary now to inquire." In respect to that case we observe that, upon principle, the rule as to the burden of proof in criminal cases cannot be materially different, where the defense is insanity, disease of the mind or delusion, from the rule obtaining when the defense is an original defect and want of capacity. In Com. v. Pomeroy, 117 Mass. 143 (reported in Whart. Hom. (2d ed.) Appendix), which was tried in 1874 before Mr. Justice Gray (then chief justice of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts) and Mr. Justice Morton (afterwards chief justice of the same court), it was contended by the prosecution that the question of sanity, raised by the defendant, was to be determined by the preponderance of proof; that the commonwealth was not bound to prove the sanity of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. But the court said: "The burden is upon the government to prove everything essential beyond reasonable doubt; and that burden, so far as the matter of sanity is concerned, is ordinarily satisfactorily sustained by the presumption that every person of sufficient age is of sound mind and understands the nature of his acts. But when the circumstances are all in, on the one side and on the other; on the one side going to show a want of adequate capacity, on the other side going to show usual intelligence,—when the whole is in, the burden rests where it was in the beginning, upon the government to prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt."

In State v. Spencer (1846) 21 N. J. L. 196, 202, 212, which was a case of murder tried before Chief Justice Hornblower, it was said that "when the evidence of sanity on the one side and of insanity on the other leaves the scale in equal balance or so nearly poised that the jury have a reasonable doubt of his sanity, then a man is to be considered sane and responsible for what he does;" and that the "proof of insanity at the time of committing the act ought to be as clear and satisfactory, in order to acquit him on the ground of insanity, as the proof of committing the act ought to be, in order to find a sane man guilty." Again, in the same case: "If, in your opinion, it is clearly proved that the prisoner at the bar, at the time of the homicide, was unconscious that what he did was wrong,*and that he [484] ought not to do it, you must acquit him on the ground of insanity; but if in your opinion this is not clearly established beyond a reasonable doubt, then you must find him guilty of the act, and proceed to investigate the nature of the homicide." There are other cases to the same general effect, some of them holding that the presumption of sanity will prevail, and that the jury may properly convict, unless the defense of insanity is established beyond a reasonable doubt; others, that it is the duty of the jury to convict unless it appears by a preponderance of evidence that the accused was insane when the killing occurred.

We are unable to assent to the doctrine that in a prosecution for murder, the defense being insanity, and the fact of the killing with a deadly weapon being clearly established, it is the duty of the jury to convict where the evidence is equally balanced on the issue as to the sanity of the accused at the time of the killing. On the contrary, he is entitled to an acquittal of the specific crime charged if upon all the evidence there is reasonable doubt whether he was capable in law of committing crime.

No one, we assume, would wish either the courts or juries when trying a case of murder to disregard the humane principle, existing at common law and recognized in all the cases tending to support the charge of the court below, that "to make a complete crime cognizable by human laws, there must be both a will and an act;" and "as a vicious will without a vicious act is no civil crime, so, on the other hand, an unwarrantable act without a vicious will is no crime at all. So that to constitute a crime against human laws, there must be, first, a vicious will; and, secondly, an unlawful act consequent upon such vicious will." 4 Bl. Com. 21. All this is implied in the accepted definition of murder; for it is of the very essence of that heinous crime that it be committed by a person of "sound memory and discretion," and with "malice aforethought," either express or implied. 4 Bl. Com. 195; 3 Co. Inst. 47; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 476. Such was the view of the court below which took care in its charge to say that the crime of murder could only be committed by a sane being, *although it instructed the jury that a [485] reasonable doubt as to the sanity of the accused would not alone protect him against a verdict of guilty.

One who takes human life cannot be said to be actuated by malice aforethought, or to have deliberately intended to take life, or to have "a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart," or a heart "regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief," unless at the time he had sufficient mind to comprehend the criminality or the right and wrong of such an act. Although the killing of one human being by another human being with a deadly weapon is presumed to be malicious until the contrary appears, yet, "in order to constitute a crime, a person must have intelligence and capacity enough to have a criminal intent and purpose; and if his reason and mental powers are either so deficient that he has no will, no conscience or controlling mental power, or if, through the overwhelming violence of mental disease, his intellectual power is for the time obliterated, he is not a responsible moral agent and is not punishable for criminal acts." Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 501, 41 Am. Dec. 458. Neither in the adjudged cases nor in the elementary treatises upon criminal law is there to be found any dissent from these general propositions. All admit that the crime of murder necessarily involves the possession by the accused of such mental capacity as will render him criminally responsible for his acts.

Upon whom, then, must rest the burden of proving that the accused, whose life it is sought to take under the forms of law, belongs to a class capable of committing crime? On principle, it must rest upon those who affirm that he has committed the crime for which he is indicted. That burden is not fully discharged, nor is there any legal right to take the life of the accused, until guilt is made to appear from all the evidence in the case. The plea of not guilty is unlike a special plea in a civil action, which, admitting the case averred, seeks to establish substantive grounds of defense by a preponderance of evidence. It is not in confession and avoidance, for it is a plea that controverts the existence of every fact essential to constitute the crime charged. Upon that plea 486] the accused *may stand, shielded by the presumption of his innocence, until it appears that he is guilty; and his guilt cannot in the very nature of things be regarded as proved, if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt from all the evidence whether he was legally capable of committing crime.

This view is not at all inconsistent with the presumption which the law, justified by the general experience of mankind as well as by considerations of public safety, indulges in favor of sanity. If that presumption were not indulged the government would always be under the necessity of adducing affirmative evidence of the sanity of an accused. But a requirement of that character would seriously delay and embarrass the enforcement of the laws against crime, and in most cases be unnecessary. Consequently the law presumes that every one charged with crime is sane, and thus supplies in the first instance the required proof of capacity to commit crime. It authorizes the jury to assume at the outset that the accused is criminally responsible for his acts. But that is not a conclusive presumption, which the law upon grounds of public policy forbids to be overthrown or impaired by opposing proof. It is a disputable or, as it is often designated, a rebuttable presumption resulting from the connection ordinarily existing between certain facts—such connection not being "so intimate, nor so nearly universal, as to render it expedient that it should be absolutely and imperatively presumed to exist in every case, all evidence to the contrary being rejected; but yet it is so general, and so nearly universal, that the law itself, without the aid of a jury, infers the one fact from the proved existence of the other, in the absence of all opposing evidence." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 38. It is therefore a presumption that is liable to be overcome or to be so far impaired in a particular case that it cannot be safely or properly made the basis of action in that case, especially if the inquiry involves human life. In a certain sense it may be true that where the defense is insanity, and where the case made by the prosecution discloses nothing whatever in excuse or extenuation of the crime charged, the accused is bound to produce some evidence that will impair or weaken the force of the legal presumption *in favor of sanity. But [487 to hold that such presumption must absolutely control the jury until it is overthrown or impaired by evidence sufficient to establish the fact of insanity beyond all reasonable doubt or to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury, is in effect to require him to establish his innocence, by proving that he is not guilty of the crime charged.

In considering the distinction between the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, the court, in Coffin v. United States, upon full consideration, said: "The presumption of innocence is a conclusion drawn by the law in favor of the citizen, by virtue whereof, when brought to trial upon a criminal charge, he must be acquitted, unless he is proven to be guilty. In other words, this presumption is an instrument of proof created by the law in favor of one accused, whereby his innocence is established until sufficient evidence is introduced to overcome the proof which the law has created. This presumption on the one hand, supplemented by any other evidence he may adduce, and the evidence against him on the other, constitute the elements from which the legal conclusion of his guilt or innocence is to be drawn." Reasonable doubt, it was also said, was "the result of the proof, not the proof itself; whereas the presumption of innocence is one of the instruments of proof, going to bring about the proof, from which reasonable doubt arises; thus one is a cause, the other an effect. To say that the one is the equivalent of the other is therefore to say that legal evidence can be excluded from the jury, and that such exclusion may be cured by instructing them correctly in regard to the method by which they are required to reach their conclusions upon the proof actually before them." Coffin v. United States, 156 U. S. 432, 459, 460 [39: 481, 493].

Strictly speaking, the burden of proof, as those words are understood in criminal law, is never upon the accused to establish his innocence or to disprove the facts necessary to establish the crime for which he is indicted. It is on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial and applies to every element necessary to constitute the crime. Giving to the prosecution, where the defense is insanity, the *benefit in the way of proof of the [488 presumption in favor of sanity, the vital question from the time a plea of not guilty is entered until the return of the verdict is whether, upon all the evidence, by whatever side adduced, guilt is established beyond reasonable doubt. If the whole evidence, including that supplied by the presumption of sanity, does not include beyond reasonable doubt the hypothesis of insanity, of which some proof is adduced, the accused is entitled to an acquittal of the specific offense charged. His guilt cannot be said to have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt—his will and his acts cannot be held to have joined in perpetrating the murder charged—if the jury, upon all the evidence, have a reasonable doubt whether he was legally capable of committing crime, or (which is the same thing) whether he wilfully, deliberately, unlawfully, and of malice aforethought took the life of the deceased. As the crime of murder involves sufficient capacity to distinguish between right and wrong, the legal interpretation of every verdict of guilty as charged is that the jury believed from all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused was guilty, and was therefore responsible, criminally, for his acts. How, then, upon principle or consistently with humanity can a verdict of guilty be properly returned if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt as to the existence of a fact which is essential to guilt, namely, the capacity in law of the accused to commit that crime?

The views we have expressed are supported by many adjudications that are entitled to high respect. If such were not the fact, we might have felt obliged to accept the general doctrine announced in some of the above cases; for it is desirable that there be uniformity of rule in the administration of the criminal law in governments whose Constitutions equally recognize the fundamental principles that are deemed essential for the protection of life and liberty.

In People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 58, 69 Am. Dec. 642, a case of murder, the jury were instructed that if any reasonable doubt existed as to the proof of the deed itself the prisoner should be acquitted, "but as sanity is the natural state, there is no presumption of insanity, and the defense must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt." This instruction was held to be erroneous by the unanimous judgment of the court of appeals of New York, of which, at the time, Judges Denio, Johnson, Comstock, and Selden were members. The judges who delivered opinions concurred in the view that, while there was no presumption of insanity, and while the law presumes a sufficient understanding and will to do the act, the fact of the killing by the accused being established by proof, the burden was upon the prosecution to show from all the evidence the existence of the requisites or elements constituting the crime, one of which was the sanity of the prisoner. In that case Mr. Justice Brown said: "If there be a doubt about the act of killing, all will concede that the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of it; and if there be any doubt about the will, the faculty of the prisoner to discern between right and wrong, why should he be deprived of the benefit of it, when both the act and the will are necessary to make out the crime?" And, "if he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt in regard to the malicious intent, shall he not be entitled to the same benefit upon the question of his sanity, his understanding? For, if he was without reason and understanding at the time, the act was not his, and he is no more responsible for it than he would be for the act of another man." pp. 67, 68. So in Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 159, 162, Chief Justice Church, speaking for the court, after observing that crimes can only be committed by human beings in a condition to be responsible for their acts, and that the burden of overthrowing the presumption of sanity and of showing insanity is upon the person who alleges it, says: "If evidence is given tending to establish insanity, then the general question is presented to the court and jury whether the crime, if committed, was committed by a person responsible for his acts, and upon this question the presumption of sanity and the evidence are all to be considered, and the prosecutor holds the affirmative, and if a reasonable doubt exists as to whether the prisoner is sane or not, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and to an acquittal." To the same effect are O'Connell v. People, 87 N. Y. 377, 380, 41 Am. Rep. 379, and Walker v. People, 88 N. Y. 81, 88.

*In Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 352, 358, reaf. [490] firming the rule announced in the previous case of Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 385, 392, 83 Am. Dec. 231, the court, speaking by Chief Justice Breese, said: "Sanity is an ingredient in crime as essential as the overt act, and if sanity is wanting there can be no crime, and if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt on the question of insanity, the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. We wish to be understood as saying, as in that case, that the burden of proof is on the prosecution to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, whatever the defense may be. If insanity is relied on and evidence given tending to establish that unfortunate condition of mind, and a reasonable well founded doubt is thereby raised of the sanity of the accused, every principle of justice and humanity demands that the accused shall have the benefit of the doubt."

The same principle is recognized in New Hampshire. Bellows, J., speaking for the court, after observing that a plea of not guilty, in a criminal cause, puts in issue all the allegations of the indictment, said: "A system of rules, therefore, by which the burden is shifted upon the accused of showing any of the substantial allegations in the indictment to be untrue, or, in other words, to prove a negative, is purely artificial and formal, and utterly at war with the humane principle which in favorem vitæ, requires the guilt of the prisoner to be established beyond reasonable doubt." Again, in the same case, after saying that to justify a conviction all the elements of the crime charged must be shown to exist and to a moral certainty, including the facts of a sound memory, an unlawful killing, and malice, he proceeded: "As to the first, the natural presumption of sanity is prima facie proof of a sound memory, and that must stand unless there is other evidence tending to prove the contrary; and then, whether it come from the one side or the other, in weighing it the de-defendant is entitled to the benefit of all reasonable doubt, just the same as upon the point of an unlawful killing or malice. Indeed, the want of sound memory repels the proof of malice in the same way as proof that the killing was accidental, in self-defense or in heat of blood; and there can be no solid distinction 491] founded upon the *fact that the law presumes the existence of a sound memory. So the law infers malice from the killing when that is shown, and nothing else; but in both cases the inference is one of fact, and it is for the jury to say whether, on all the evidence before them, the malice or the sanity is proved or not. Indeed, we regard these inferences of fact as not designed to interfere in any way with the obligation of the prosecutor to remove all reasonable doubt of guilt; but are applied as the suggestions of experience, and with a view to the convenience and expedition of trials, leaving the evidence, when adduced, to be weighed without regard to the fact whether it come from the one side or the other . . . The criminal intent must be proved as much as the overt act, and without a sound mind such intent could not exist; and the burden of proof must always remain with the prosecutor to prove both the act and criminal intent." State v. Burtlett, 43 N. H. 224, 231, 80 Am. Dec. 154.

So, in People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 22, 97 Am. Dec. 162, the court, speaking by Chief Justice Cooley, after observing that the prosecution may rest upon the presumption of sanity until that presumption is overthrown by the defendant's evidence, said: "Nevertheless, it is a part of the case for the government; the fact which it supports must necessarily be established before any conviction can be had; and when the jury come to consider the whole case upon the evidence delivered to them, they must do so upon the basis that on each and every portion of it they are to be reasonably satisfied before they are at liberty to find the defendant guilty."

In Cunningham v. State, 56 Miss. 269, 21 Am. Rep. 360, the question was carefully examined and the rule was stated by Chalmers, J., to be that whenever the condition of the prisoner's mind is put in issue by such facts proved on either side as create a reasonable doubt of his sanity, it devolves upon the state to remove it and to establish the sanity of the prisoner to the satisfaction of the jury beyond all reasonable doubt arising out of all the evidence in the case.

In Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 348, 371, Chief Justice Nicholson, delivering the unanimous opinion of the supreme court of Tennessee, thus stated its view of the question: "When the proof 492] *of insanity makes an equipoise, the presumption of sanity is neutralized—it is overturned, it ceases to weigh, and the jury are in reasonable doubt. How, then, can a presumption, which has been neutralized by countervailing proof, be resorted to to turn the scale? The absurdity to which this doctrine leads will be more obvious by supposing that the jury should return a special verdict. It would be as follows. 'We find the defendant guilty of the killing charged, but the proof leaves our mind in doubt whether he was of such soundness of memory and discretion as to have done the killing wilfully, deliberately, maliciously, and premeditatedly.' Upon such a verdict no judge could pronounce the judgment of death upon the defendant." So, in Plake v. State, 121 Ind. 433, 435, Judge Elliott, speaking for the supreme court of Indiana, said: "If the evidence is of such a character as to create a reasonable doubt whether the accused was of unsound mind at the time the crime was committed, he is entitled to a verdict of acquittal. Polk v. State, 19 Ind. 170, 81 Am. Dec. 382; Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492; McDougal v. State, 88 Ind. 24." To the same effect are many other American cases cited in the argument. The principle is accurately stated by Mr. Justice Cox of the supreme court of the District of Columbia as follows: "The crime, then, involves three elements, viz., the killing, malice, and a responsible mind in the murderer. But after all the evidence is in, if the jury, while bearing in mind both these presumptions that I have mentioned, —i. e., that the defendant is innocent until he is proved guilty, and that he is and was sane, unless evidence to the contrary appears, —and considering the whole evidence in the case, still entertain what is called a reasonable doubt, on any ground (either as to the killing or the responsible condition of mind), whether he is guilty of the crime of murder, as it has been explained and defined, then the rule is that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of that doubt and to an acquittal." Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. Rep. 161, 163.

160 U. S.

It seems to us that undue stress is placed in some of the cases upon the fact that in prosecutions for murder the defense of insanity is frequently resorted to and is sustained by the *evidence of ingenious experts whose the-493ories are difficult to bend and overcome. Thus, it is said, crimes of the most atrocious character often go unpunished, and the public safety is thereby endangered. But the possibility of such results must always attend any system devised to ascertain and punish crime, and ought not to induce the courts to depart from principles fundamental in criminal law, and the recognition and enforcement of which are demanded by every consideration of humanity and justice. No man should be deprived of his life under the forms of law unless the jurors who try him are able, upon their consciences, to say that the evidence before them, by whomsoever adduced, is sufficient to show beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the crime charged.

For the reasons stated, and without alluding to other matters in respect to which error is assigned, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to grant a new trial, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

UNITED STATES, Piff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM P. SAYWARD and GEORGE A. MEIGS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 493-498.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court.

Where the United States are plaintiffs in an action, the circuit court has jurisdiction without regard to the value of the matter in dispute.

[No. 75.]

Submitted November 19, 1895. Decided December 23, 1895.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington to review the judgment of that court dismissing, for want of jurisdiction, an action brought by the United States against Wm. P. Sayward et al. to recover damages for the unlawful conversion of timber taken from the public lands Reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Holmes Conrad, Solicitor General, for plaintiff in error.

No counsel for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

494] *This action was brought by the United States against the defendants in error in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Washington, northern division, to recover the sum of $1,470 as damages alleged to have been sustained by the government in consequence of the unlawful conversion by the defendants of timber made from fir trees on certain unoccupied lands of the United States.

One of the defendants demurred upon the ground that, as the matter in dispute did not exceed the sum or value of $2,000, the court was without jurisdiction.

The demurrer was sustained and the cause was dismissed, the circuit court holding, upon the authority of United States v. Huffman, 35 Fed. Rep. 81, 83, that the acts of Congress defining the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States deprived those courts of jurisdiction in civil suits where the amount involved was less than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, even in cases in which the United States were plaintiffs or petitioners.

In accordance with the 5th section of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), the court below certified the above question of jurisdiction as the only question to be determined upon the present writ of error.

By the judiciary act of 1789 it was provided that "the circuit courts shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners; or an alien is a party; or the suit is between a citizen of the state where the suit is brought and a citizen of another state." 1 Stat. at L. 78, chap. 20, § 11.

The Revised Statutes, which went into effect in 1873, specified the suits and proceedings of which the circuit courts of the United States should have original jurisdiction, and among them were many in which the government would ordinarily be the plaintiff,—namely: suits in equity where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeded the sum or value of $500, and the United States were petitioners; suits at common law *where the [495] United States or any officer thereof, suing under the authority of an act of Congress, were plaintiffs; suits at law or in equity arising under an act providing for revenue from imports or tonnage, except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and seizures on land or on waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and except suits for penalties and forfeitures; suits arising under a law providing internal revenue, and of all causes arising under the postal laws; suits and proceedings for the enforcement of penalties provided by laws regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels; proceedings for the condemnation of property taken as a prize, in pursuance of § 5308, tit. Insurrection; suits arising under the laws relating to the slave trade; and suits by the assignee of a debenture for drawback of duties, issued under a law for the collection of duties against the person to whom such debenture was originally granted, or against any indorser thereof, to recover the amount of such debenture, § 629.

In reference to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States, as defined by the Revised Statutes, it is only necessary to say that as to actions or suits in which ordinarily the United States would be petitioners or plaintiffs, such jurisdiction was not made to depend upon the amount in dispute. § 563.

The 1st section of the act of March 3, 1875, determining the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and regulating the removal of causes from state courts, provided that "the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, or in which the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different states, or a controversy between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states, or a controversy between citizens of a state *and foreign [496] states, citizens, or subjects; and shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except as otherwise provided by law, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district

NOTE.—As to amount necessary to give jurisdiction in circuit court cases prior to act of 1875; amount necessary since act of 1875; amount in dispute,—see note to Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 87: 256.

As to jurisdiction of United States courts over common-law offenses, see note to United States v. Coolidge, 4: 124.

courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable therein." 18 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 137, § 1.

The 1st section of the judiciary act of 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373), corrected by the act of 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866), amends the 1st section of the act of 1875, and provides that "the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; or in which controversy the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners; or in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different states, in which the matter of dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid; or a controversy between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states; or a controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid; and shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except as otherwise provided by law, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable by them."

It cannot be doubted that the judiciary act of 1789 made the value of the matter in dispute jurisdictional, even in suits of a civil nature brought by the United States in the circuit courts of the United States. But under the Revised Statutes the amount in dispute was not made jurisdictional in civil actions or proceedings instituted by the United States, except that in suits in equity the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, must have exceeded the sum of $500; and no restriction as 497] to amount was imposed in respect of suits at common law where the United States were plaintiffs.

Then came the act of 1875, which prescribed the limit of $500, exclusive of costs, for all civil suits, at common law or in equity, of the several classes therein specified, including suits in which the United States were plaintiffs or petitioners. It is to be observed that the section of that act which defines the original jurisdiction of the circuit courts places the jurisdictional amount in advance of the enumeration, in the same section, of the different cases of which those courts could take cognizance, and there is no repetition, in that section, of such amount. In each of those cases the amount named was jurisdictional, under the act of 1875.

In the particulars last mentioned, the act of 1887 as corrected in 1888 is unlike any previous statute. The jurisdictional amount, prescribed by the 1st section of that act, is fixed at $2,000, and that amount is afterwards, in the same section, twice referred to by the words "the sum or value aforesaid." If Congress intended that the circuit court should not have original cognizance of any case mentioned in the 1st section of the act of 1887, unless the value of the matter in dispute exceeded $2,000, it would not have taken pains to refer to the value of the matter in dispute in immediate connection with particular cases, and made no such distinct reference in connection with other cases placed within the original cognizance of the circuit court. It is clear that a circuit court cannot, under that statute, take original cognizance of a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, or of a controversy between citizens of different states, or of a controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, unless the sum in dispute, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds $2,000, because in immediate connection with the enumeration of each of such cases will be found expressed a limitation of that character in respect of the sum or value necessary to give jurisdiction. But that cannot be said of the reference in the statute to a controversy in which the United States are plaintiffs or *petitioners, or to [498] one between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states. The clause referring to cases or controversies of the two kinds last mentioned was placed between clauses that specifically refer to the value of the matter in dispute; so that it may be reasonably inferred that Congress intended that a circuit court should take cognizance of a controversy in which the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or of a controversy between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states, without regard to the amount involved.

This interpretation of the statute is made quite clear if the 1st section is subdivided as was the section of the Revised Statutes defining the original jurisdiction of the circuit court. With a slight transposition or change of words, having due regard to substance, the 1st section of the act of 1888, if subdivided, would read as follows:

The circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity,—First, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and the suit is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; second, of any controversy in which the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners; third, of any controversy between citizens of different states in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid; fourth, of any controversy between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states; fifth, of any controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid.

The United States being plaintiffs in this action, the circuit court had jurisdiction without regard to the value of the matter in dispute.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion. Reversed.

499] THOMAS C. CHAPPELL, Plff. in Err.,
v.
 UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 499-514.)

Certiorari for diminution of record—when denied—certificate of jurisdiction—power to dispose of entire case—act of 1888 constitutional—condemnation of land—amendment of proceedings—action at law—second jury.

1. A motion for a writ of certiorari for diminution of the record will not be granted if not made at the first term, as required by rule 14, and no satisfactory cause is shown for the delay.
2. Such a motion to supply an omission in the record to state that on a certain day a petition for the allowance of a writ of error from the circuit court was filed in the district court will be denied, where the papers on the motion do not show that a writ of error was then allowed or sued out, and plaintiff in error afterwards obtained the allowance of a writ of error from the circuit court, which he abandoned, and instead thereof applied for and obtained the present writ of error from this court.
3. An order overruling a demurrer to a petition and directing a jury to be impaneled is not a final judgment upon which a writ of error will lie.
4. Where there is no formal certificate to this court of the question of the jurisdiction of the district court, and the allowance of the writ of error is general, the petition for the writ, asking for a review of all the rulings, judgments, and orders of the court upon that question raised in the exceptions, pleas, and demurrers and other papers on file, without indicating any specific question of jurisdiction, is not such a sufficient statement of the question as will supply the want of a formal certificate under the judiciary act of 1891, chap. 517, § 5, cl. 1.
5. Where this court has acquired jurisdiction on the ground that the constitutionality of a law of the United States is drawn in question, it has the power to dispose of the entire case, including all questions, either of jurisdiction or of merits.
6. The act of Congress of August 1, 1888, authorizing the condemnation of land for the purpose of a lighthouse, is constitutional.
7. Where a proceeding for the condemnation of NOTE.—As to certiorari in the United States courts,—see note to Clark v. Hackett, 17: 69.

As to eminent domain; damages to easements, noise, smoke, etc., owners of lots abutting on streets; damages to access, light, and air; vibration; depreciation in value; use of street; telegraph poles; what constitutes taking; consequential injury,—see note to Osborne v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37: 156.

As to payment for private property taken for public use; 5th Amendment to Constitution applies only to Federal government, and not to states,—see note to Withers v. Buckley, 15: 816.

As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; and Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

land for the use of the United States for lighthouse purposes under the act of Congress was commenced in the name of the Secretary of the Treasury, it may be amended so as to make the United States the formal as well as the real petitioner.

8. Such proceeding instituted and concluded in a court of the United States is, in substance and effect, an action at law.
9. Where the owner of land has had the benefit of a trial by an ordinary jury, on the question of damages on the condemnation of lands, in the United States district court, he is not entitled to a second trial by jury except at the discretion of that court, or upon a reversal of its judgment for error in law.

[No. 91.]

Submitted December 3, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland to review a judgment of that court confirming an inquisition and award of damages on the condemnation of land for public uses, owned by Thomas C. Chappell. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a petition, filed March 21, 1890, in the district court of the United States for the district of Maryland, for the condemnation, under the act of Congress of August 1, 1888, chap. 728,† of a perpetual easement in a strip of fast land *on Hawkins' Point in Anne [500] Arundel county in the state of Maryland,—described by metes and bounds and courses and distances, and as owned by Thomas C. Chappell,—for the purpose of transmitting rays of light, without obstruction, both by day and by night, between two beacon lights, known as Hawkins' Point Light and Leading Point Light, theretofore constructed and put in operation by the United States as range lights of the Brewerton Channel of the Patapsco river in the state of Maryland.

The petition was in the name of "William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury of the

†An Act to Authorize Condemnation of Land for Sites of Public Buildings and for Other Purposes.

Sec. 1. In every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer of the government has been, or hereafter shall be, authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building, or for other public uses, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation under judicial process, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or advantageous to the government to do so; and the United States circuit or district courts of the district wherein such real estate is located shall have jurisdiction of proceedings for such condemnation; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States, upon every application of the Secretary of the Treasury under this act, or such other officer, to cause proceedings to be commenced for condemnation within thirty days from the receipt of the application at the Department of Justice.

Sec. 2. The practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceeding, in causes arising under the provisions of this act, shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the state within which such circuit or district courts are held, any rule of the court to the contrary notwithstanding. 25 Stat. at L. 357.

United States and ex officio president of the lighthouse board of the United States;" and alleged that under the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4658, the lighthouse board is required to perform all administrative duties relating to the construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of lighthouses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, and seamarks and their appendages; that Congress appropriates annually a sum of money for repairs and incidental expenses of lighthouses, which is available to pay for the easement aforesaid; and that in the opinion of the petitioner it was necessary and advantageous to the United States to acquire this easement by condemnation under judicial proceedings. The petition was signed by the United States District Attorney, "who *appears for the Secretary of the Treasury, the petitioner, by direction of the Attorney General of the United States."

Upon the filing of the petition, the court made an order that a copy be served on Chappell on or before March 24, 1890, and that he show cause on or before April 10, 1890, why the prayer of the petition should not be granted.

On April 9, 1890, Chappell, "saving and reserving all advantages and exceptions whatsoever, prays leave to except to the order" aforesaid; and demurred to the petition, and for cause of demurrer assigned "that there is no authority of law for this proceeding; and also that it is not shown that the Congress of the United States has appropriated or will appropriate more than $5,000 to pay for said easement, and that said easement is of a value greatly exceeding $5,000, and whether Congress annually or has ever appropriated a sum of money for repairs and incidental expenses of the lighthouse, sufficient to pay for said easement, which is applicable therefor; and also that there is no party plaintiff made in said declaration and petition; and also that the laws of the state of Maryland require said proceeding, if the right to any such has accrued, to be conducted in the circuit court for the county where said land is situated, and by the laws of the United States the said laws of the state form the rule of decision in the courts of the United States in this matter; and also that the United States of America has passed no general law or special law authorizing the petitioner or the Attorney General of the said United States, nor any other person whatsoever, to institute this proceeding, and said proceeding is instituted ultra vires, and the said United States cannot be made a party to said suit except by the direction and with the consent of the lawmaking power, and said power has neither directed the same nor consented thereto."

On May 12, 1890, after argument on the demurrer, the court, by an order reciting that it appeared that the Secretary of the Treasury, and ex officio president of the lighthouse board of the United States, had been authorized to acquire this easement for the use of the board, 502] and was of opinion that *it was necessary and advantageous to the United States to acquire this easement by condemnation under judicial proceedings, and had made application to the Attorney General to cause such proceedings to be commenced, overruled the demurrer; and, being of opinion that condemnation of this easement ought to be had by the United States, and that the question of the damages which Chappell would sustain thereby ought to be submitted to a jury, ordered "that, upon a day to be fixed by this court, upon notice to said parties, a jury of this court be impaneled, who shall be duly sworn to justly and impartially value and assess the damages which the said Chappell, as the owner of said land, will sustain by the acquisition by the United States of the easement aforesaid, and that the said jury be impaneled from twenty jurors regularly drawn to serve in this court, from whom each party may strike four jurors, or, if either party refuse to so strike, the court shall strike for him, and the remaining twelve jurors shall be the said jury of inquest to assess said damages. And the said proceeding shall be in such form as that the United States of America and the said Thomas C. Chappell shall be the parties thereto."

On October 28, 1890, in accordance with this order, a jury was duly impaneled in the cause, and was sworn "to truly and impartially value and assess the damages for the condemnation of the said easement over the land at Hawkins' Point, in said petition mentioned, and a true inquisition make according to the evidence;" and upon a trial before the court, and after hearing evidence on behalf of the United States, and on behalf of Chappell, and the charge of the court, returned, on November 3, 1890, an "inquisition and award," signed and sealed by the twelve jurors, assessing to Chappell damages in the sum of $3,500 for the enjoyment by the United States in perpetuity of the easement aforesaid.

On November 10, 1890, Chappell filed a plea "that the court here ought not to take cognizance of or sustain the action aforesaid, because he says that the cause of action aforesaid, if any accrued to the said plaintiff, accrued to him at Annapolis, within the jurisdiction of the circuit court for *Anne [503 Arundel county, state of Maryland, and not within the jurisdiction of this court."

On November 17, 1890, Chappell filed the following exceptions to the inquisition:

"1st. That the statute under which this proceeding is sought to be maintained is unconstitutional, and this court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of this suit.

"2d. That the lawmaking power of the United States has not authorized any officer to make said United States a party to this suit or proceeding, and this court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this suit, there being a want of power to condemn this property described in this inquisition.

"3d. That the laws of the United States have not been complied with.

"4th. That the damages allowed are inadequate."

On December 18, 1890, the district court overruled these exceptions and confirmed the inquisition and award.

On December 27, 1890, Chappell prayed for, and on February 24, 1891, was allowed, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 633, a writ of error from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland; but never gave bond to prosecute that writ of error.

On December 15, 1891, Chappell presented to the district judge a petition for a writ of error, under the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 517, § 5, in which he mentions all the previous proceedings in the case (above stated) and, "in order that said rulings, judgments, and orders may be reviewed and re-examined by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the question of jurisdiction raised in said exceptions, pleas, and demurrers, and the other papers on file in this cause, and either reversed or affirmed, now prays for the allowance of a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States and such other process as may cause said rulings, orders, and judgments to be corrected, instead of to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland."

A writ of error was thereupon "allowed," in the usual and general form, by the district judge, and was entered in this court February 27, 1892.

504] On December 2, 1895, the day before the case was called for argument in this court, the plaintiff in error moved for a writ of certiorari suggesting a diminution of the record in omitting to state that on July 15, 1890, he filed in the district court a petition for the allowance of a writ of error from the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. Thomas C. Chappell, for plaintiff in error in person:

This court will review all the questions in the case. "In cases taken direct to the supreme court, where a constitutional question is raised, the supreme court reviews all the questions in the cases, not merely the constitutional question."

2 Foster, Fed. Pr. § 472; Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S. 651 (35: 1146); Horner v. United States, 143 U. S. 570 (36: 266); Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367 (23: 449); Pollard v. Hagan, 44 U. S. 3 How. 223 (11: 571).

On appeal from the action of commissioners or special jury, the party is entitled to a trial de novo by a common-law jury before the appellate tribunal.

Stewart v. Baltimore, 7 Md. 500; Cruger v. Hudson River R. Co. 12 N. Y. 197.

The plaintiff in error, being entitled to a trial by a common-law jury under article 7 of the Constitution of the United States, has not been afforded that right because he was not brought into the lower court according to the course of the common law.

2 Abbott, U. S. Pr. § 191, p. 29; 2 Md. Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 25, § 129.

Where there are several assignments of error, some of which involve the jurisdiction of the court below, and others do not, the circuit court of appeals may take jurisdiction by writ of error or appeal of the whole case.

McLish v. Ruff, 141 U. S. 661 (35: 893).

Mr. J. M. Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error:

The United States may acquire, through its right of eminent domain, property for public purposes, such as arsenals and lighthouses, without choosing to exclude the jurisdiction of the state within the territory.

Pollard v. Hagan, 44 U. S. 3 How. 223 (11: 571).

The United States have the right to condemn private lands lying within a state for the purpose of carrying out any express right conferred by the Constitution, with or without the consent of the state.

Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 153 U. S. 525 (38: 808).

There is no certificate from the judge of any character certifying any question of jurisdiction to this court. This is fatal to the maintenance of the writ of error.

Maynard v. Hecht, 151 U. S. 324, 328 (38: 180, 181).

The writ of error should be dismissed because the record shows there is no controversy now existing.

Cheong Ah Moy v. United States, 113 U. S. 216 (28: 983); San Mateo County v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 U. S. 138 (29: 590); Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. 547, 558 (33: 1016, 1020); Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 141 U. S. 696 (35: 906); California v. San Pablo & T. R. Co. 149 U. S. 308 (37: 747).

Appearance by a defendant, and answering or participating in the suit in a state in which he does not reside, and in which he had not been served with process, waive nonservice of process.

Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 98 (34: 608); Henderson v. Carbondale Coal & C. Co. 140 U. S. 25 (35: 332); St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McBride, 141 U. S. 127 (35: 660).

The United States may acquire and hold real property in any state whenever such property is needed for the use of the government; and when the property cannot be acquired by voluntary agreement with the owners it may be taken against their will by the United States in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, upon making just compensation, with or without a concurrent act of the state in which the land is situated.

Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 117 U. S. 151, 154 (29: 845, 846); Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 153 U. S. 525, 529 (38: 808, 810).

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion for a writ of certiorari for diminution of the record, in not stating that on July 15, 1890, the plaintiff in error filed a petition for the allowance of a writ of error from the circuit court of the United States to the district court in which the proceedings were pending, must be denied, for several reasons: First, the motion was not made at the first term, as required by rule 14 of this court, and no satisfactory cause is shown for the delay; second, the copy of docket entries, submitted with the motion, while it shows that a petition for a writ of error was filed on that day, does not show that a writ of error was then allowed or sued out; and the plaintiff in error afterwards obtained the allowance of a writ of error from the circuit court to the district court, which he abandoned, and, *instead thereof, applied for 507 and obtained the present writ of error from this court; third, the order overruling the demurrer to the petition, and directing a jury to be impaneled, was not a final judgment, upon which a writ of error would lie. Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 147 U. S. 337 [37: 194].

The writ of error now before us was sued out from this court to the district court of the United States for the district of Maryland, under the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, chap. 517, § 5, which provides that "appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district courts or from the existing circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court in the following [among other] cases:"

First, "In any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue; in such cases the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision."

Fifth, "In any case in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States . . . is drawn in question." 26 Stat. at L. 827, 828.

In order to bring a case within the first class, not only must it appear of record that a question of jurisdiction was involved in the decision below, but that question, and that alone, must be certified to this court. If both a question of jurisdiction and other questions were before the court below, and a writ of error is allowed in the usual and general form to review its judgment, without certifying or specifying the question of jurisdiction, this court cannot take jurisdiction under this clause of the statute. Maynard v. Hecht, 151 U. S. 324 [38: 179]; Moran v. Hagerman, 151 U. S. 329 [38: 181]; Colvin v. Jacksonville, 157 U. S. 368 [39: 736]; Davis & R. Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Barber, 157 U. S. 673 [39: 853]; The Bayonne, 159 U. S. 687 [40: 306]; Van Wagenen v. Sewall, 160 U. S. 369 [40: 460].

If, indeed, the writ of error is allowed upon the petition of the original plaintiff, asking for a review of a judgment dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction, and the only question tried and decided in the court below was a question of jurisdiction, that question is sufficiently certified to this court. Re Lehigh Min. & Mfg. Co. 156 U. S. 322 [39: 438]; Interior Const. & I. Co. v. Gibney, 160 U. S. 217 [40: 508] 401. And if an appeal from a *decree of the circuit court appointing a receiver is allowed by that court "solely upon the question of jurisdiction," and on a petition praying an appeal from the decree as "taking and exercising jurisdiction," the question of jurisdiction is sufficiently certified. Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 168 [39: 660].

But in the case just cited of Shields v. Coleman, the essential requisite of the appellate jurisdiction of this court in this class of cases was defined as follows: "It is not necessary that the word 'certify' be formally used. It is sufficient if there is a plain declaration that the single matter which is by the record sent up to this court for decision is a question of jurisdiction, and the precise question clearly, fully, and separately stated. No mere suggestion that the jurisdiction of the court was in issue will answer. This court will not of itself search, nor follow counsel in their search of, the record, to ascertain whether the judgment of the trial court did or did not turn on some question of jurisdiction. But the record must affirmatively show that the trial court sends up for consideration a single definite question of jurisdiction." 157 U. S. 176, 177 [39: 662, 663].

160 U. S.

The record in the present case falls far short of satisfying any such test. The defendant, among many other defenses, and in various forms, objected to the jurisdiction of the district court, because the act of Congress under which the proceedings were instituted was unconstitutional, because the proceedings were not according to the laws of the United States, and because they should have been had in a court of the state of Maryland; and the court, overruling or disregarding all the objections, whether to its jurisdiction over the case, or to the merits or the form of the proceedings, entered final judgment for the petitioners. There is no formal certificate of any question of jurisdiction; the allowance of the writ of error is general, and not expressly limited to such a question; and the petition for the writ, after mentioning all the proceedings in detail, asks for a review of all the "rulings, judgments, and orders" of the court "upon the question of jurisdiction raised in said exceptions, pleas, and demurrers, and the other papers on file in this cause," without defining or indicating any specific question of jurisdiction. [509] Here, certainly, is no such clear, full, and separate statement of a definite question of jurisdiction as will supply the want of a formal certificate under the first clause of the statute.

But no question of jurisdiction having been separately certified or specified, and the writ of error having been allowed without restriction or qualification, this court, under the other clause of the statute, above cited, has appellate jurisdiction of this case as one in which the constitutionality of a law of the United States was drawn in question; and, having acquired jurisdiction under this clause, has the power to dispose, not merely of the constitutional question, but of the entire case, including all questions, whether of jurisdiction or of merits. Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S. 651 [35: 1146]; Horner v. United States (No. 2) 143 U. S. 570, 577 [36: 266, 269]; United States v. Jahn, 155 U. S. 109, 112, 113 [39: 87, 89].

In support of the position that the act of Congress was unconstitutional, reliance was placed on U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 17, which provides that Congress shall have exclusive power of legislation "over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings," and on the statute of Maryland, by which a method is provided for the condemnation, for the use and benefit of the United States, of lands wanted for the erection of lighthouses and other public buildings; and jurisdiction is ceded to the United States over such lands "as soon as the same shall be condemned" under this statute. Md. Stat. 1874, chap. 395, §§ 1-13; 2 Md. Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 96, §§ 5-17. It was argued that the act of Congress was unconstitutional, because it undertook to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the courts of the United States before purchase or condemnation of the lands in question.

But in the case at bar the question is not of jurisdiction for purposes of legislation, but of acquiring title by judicial proceedings. It is now well settled that whenever, in the execution of the powers granted to the United States by the *Constitution, lands in any state are needed by the United States for a fort, magazine, dockyard, lighthouse, customhouse, court-house, postoffice, or any other public purpose, and cannot be acquired by agreement with the owners, the Congress of the United States, exercising the right of eminent domain, and making just compensation to the owners, may authorize such lands to be taken, either by proceedings in the courts of the state with its consent, or by proceedings in the courts of the United States, with or without any consent or concurrent act of the state, as Congress may direct or permit. Harris v. Elliott, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 25 [9: 333]; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367 [23: 449]; United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513 [27: 1015]; Fort Leavenworth R. Co. v. Love, 114 U. S. 525, 531, 532 [29: 264, 266]; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 656 [34: 295, 301]; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312 [37: 463]; Luxton v. North River Bridge Co., 147 U. S. 337 [37: 194], and 153 U. S. 525 [38: 808]; Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 106 Mass. 356, 8 Am. Rep. 339; Re United States, 96 N. Y. 227.

Nor is it necessary that Congress should itself select the particular land to be taken. In Kohl v. United States, above cited, it was decided that an act of Congress, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire by purchase at private sale or by condemnation a site in the city of Cincinnati, "for the accommodation of the United States courts, customhouse, United States depository, postoffice, internal revenue and pension offices," was constitutional; and authorized the proceedings for condemnation to be had in the name of the United States in the circuit court of the United States under its general jurisdiction of actions at law in which the United States, or any officer thereof suing under the authority of an act of Congress, were plaintiffs.

By the Revised Statutes of the United States, the lighthouse board, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is entrusted with the discharge of all administrative duties relating to the construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of lighthouses, light vessels, beacons, buoys, seamarks and their appendages; and is authorized to purchase for the purpose, within appropriations made by § 511 Congress, *land which does not belong to the United States. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4658, 4660. And the act of August 1, 1888, chap. 728, under which this proceeding was instituted, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or advantageous to the United States, to acquire land for the purpose of a lighthouse by condemnation under judicial process in a court of the United States in the district in which the land is situated. 25 Stat. at L. 357. This act is a constitutional exercise of the power of Congress, according to the decisions of this court, above cited.

The statute of Maryland, above cited, provides that whenever the United States are desirous of procuring the title to any land within the state, "for the purpose of erecting thereon any lighthouse, beaconlight, range-light, lightkeeper's dwelling, forts magazines, arsenals, dockyards, buoys, public piers, or necessary public buildings, or improvements connected therewith," and cannot obtain the same by purchase, the United States, by any agent authorized under the hand and seal of any member of the President's Cabinet, may, by petition to the circuit court for the county where the land lies, have the land condemned for the use and benefit of the United States. That statute further provides that the petition shall state the bounds and quantity of the land, the purpose for which the United States desire to obtain title, and the names of the owners, and shall be verified by an affidavit of the agent of the United States; that, after notice to the owner, the court shall hear and determine upon the petition and any objections filed to the proposed condemnation, and, if it shall declare that the condemnation ought to be had, shall issue a warrant to the sheriff to summon twenty jurors, "and from them each party or his agent, or, if either be not present in person or by his agent, the sheriff for said party, may strike four jurors, and the remaining jurors shall act as the jury of inquest of damages;" that the sheriff, before the jury proceed to act, shall "administer to each of them an oath that he will justly and impartially value the damages which the owner will sustain by the use or permanent occupation of the land required by the United States;" that "the jury shall summon such *witnesses[512 as the parties may require," and examine them on oath in relation to the value of the land, and reduce the testimony to writing, and ascertain and determine the compensation which ought to be made by the United States to the party owning or being interested in the land to be condemned; and that the jury shall reduce their inquisition to writing, and sign and seal it, and it shall then be returned by the sheriff, together with the testimony, to the clerk of the circuit court for the county; that the inquisition shall be confirmed by the court, if no sufficient cause be shown by the fourth day of the ensuing term, and, when confirmed, shall be recorded; that, if the inquisition be set aside, the court may direct another inquisition in the manner before prescribed; that the inquisition shall describe the land condemned, and state the valuation thereof; and that such valuation, when paid or tendered to the owner, shall entitle the United States to the land, for the use and purposes set forth in the petition.

The only position, other than the denial of the constitutionality of the act of Congress, argued by the plaintiff in error in this court, was that by the statutes and decisions of Maryland the jury which returned the inquisition was but a body of assessors of damages, in the nature of a special jury of inquest, or board of commissioners, and that he was entitled to have the whole case tried anew by an ordinary jury. In support of this position were cited the following cases, decided under different statutes of Maryland: Tide Water Canal Co. v. Archer, 9 Gill & J. 479; Stewart v. Baltimore, 7 Md. 500; State v. Graves, 19 Md. 351. But, however that may be under the statutes of the state, it is not so under the act of Congress.

The direction, in the act of Congress, that the practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceeding, in cases arising under it, "shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the state," must, as was said by this court in an analogous case, following the decisions under the corresponding provision of U. S. Rev. 513] Stat. § 914, "give way whenever to adopt the state practice would be inconsistent with the terms, defeat the purpose, or impair the effect, of any legislation of Congress." Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 147 U. S. 337, 338 [37: 194].

This proceeding for the condemnation of an interest in land for the use and benefit of the United States for lighthouse purposes was instituted in the district court of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury, acting through the Attorney General of the United States, as authorized by the act of Congress. Having been commenced in the name of the Secretary of the Treasury, it was rightly ordered to be amended so as to make the United States the formal, as they were the real, petitioners. Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367 [23: 449]; United States v. Jahn, 155 U. S. 109, 111 [39: 87, 89]; United States v. Hopewell, 5 U. S. App. 137. The proceeding was conducted in substantial accordance with the provisions of the statute of Maryland upon the same subject, except so far as controlled by the act of Congress under which it was instituted, or by other laws of the United States.

The provision of the Maryland statute that a petition in the county court shall be verified by affidavit of the agent of the United States is inapplicable to a petition presented to a court of the United States by the officer designated in the act of Congress. And the provision requiring a sheriff's jury to reduce to writing, and to return to the clerk of the court, the testimony taken before them, has no application to a trial had and evidence taken before the court itself.

The proceeding instituted and concluded in a court of the United States was, in substance and effect, an action at law. Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 376 [23: 449, 452]; Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, 476 [34: 196, 199]. The general rule, as expressed in the Revised Statutes of the United States, is that the trial of issues of fact in actions at law, both in the district court and in the circuit court, "shall be by jury," by which is evidently meant a trial by an ordinary jury at the bar of the court. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 566, 648. Congress has not itself provided any peculiar mode of trial in proceedings for the condemnation of lands for public uses. The direction in the act of 1888, chap. 728, § 2, that such proceedings shall conform, "as near as may be," to those "in the courts of record of the state," is not to be construed as creating an exception to the general rule of trial by an ordinary jury in a court of record, and as requiring, by way either of preliminary, or of substitute, a trial by a different jury, not in a court of record, nor in the presence of any judge. Such a construction would unnecessarily and unwisely encumber the administration of justice in the courts of the United States. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 160 U. S.

93 U. S. 291, 301 [23: 898, 901]; Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 209 [36: 942, 945]; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 206, 207 [37: 699, 703, 704]. This plaintiff in error had the benefit of a trial by an ordinary jury at the bar of the district court on the question of the damages sustained by him; and he was not entitled to a second trial by jury, except at the discretion of that court, or upon a reversal of its judgment for error in law.

To prevent any possible misconception, it is fit to observe that this case concerns only the taking by the United States, on making compensation to the owner, of an interest in fast land above high-water mark, and does not touch the question, argued but not decided in two recent cases, of the right of the United States to take, without compensation, for the purpose of a lighthouse, land under tide waters. Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593 [37: 862]; Chappell v. Waterworth, 155 U. S. 102 [39: 85].

Judgment affirmed.

JACKSONVILLE, MAYPORT, PABLO RAILWAY & NAVIGATION COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MARY J. HOOPER ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 514-530.)

Corporate seal—scroll, when sufficient seal—state law—question for court—authority of president of a company—statements by him—when company is bound by lease—power of railroad to lease a hotel—covenant to insure—impossibility of performance—damages on covenants to insure—consideration—instructions.

1. An averment that the parties, one of which was a railroad company, had set their hands and

NOTE.—As to parol contracts of officers and agents of corporations,—see notes to Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5: 100; and Bank of Metropolis v. Gutschlick, 10: 335.

When promissory notes executed by an officer bind the corporation; when the officer,—see note to Hitchcock v. Buchanan, 26: 1078.

As to power of corporations to mortgage, see note to Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Berry, 28: 837.

As to power to mortgage franchises, see note to Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 29: 121.

As to ultra vires; what contracts and acts are; in violation of statute or public policy; estoppel; ratification,—see note to Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 35: 55.

As to officers of corporations; fiduciary relations; dealings by them with the corporation or with its property,—see note to McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 36: 1079.

As to contracts; performance; when excused by nonperformance of other party or his prevention of performance,—see note to United States v. Peck, 26: 46.

Impossibility or prevention of performance of contract, when an excuse or reason for nonperformance; impossibility or prevention from act of God, act of party, or from other causes; contract impossible of performance; rights of parties.

Actual impossibility to perform, which arises from extraneous circumstances of inability merely seals to a lease the attesting clause of which alleged that the company had signed, sealed, and delivered, in the presence of two witnesses, who signed their names thereto, is, on demurrer, a sufficient averment that a seal attached on behalf of the company was its corporate seal.

2. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a scroll or rectangle containing the word "seal," opposite the signature of a corporation by its president, will be deemed to be the proper and common seal of the company.

3. That a public officer of a state does not use wax as a seal to an instrument, but simply a scroll on the paper, is sufficient to raise the presumption that such is the law or custom in the state, till the contrary is proved.

4. Whether an instrument is under seal or not is a question for the court upon inspection; whether a mark or character shall be held to be a seal depends upon the intention of the executant, as shown by the paper.

5. The authority of the president of a railroad company to execute a lease on behalf of the company is shown by his signing, sealing, and delivering it in the name of the company, and by its exercising control over the premises, renting a portion of them, and receiving rent and giving a receipt therefor under the seal of the company, opening an account thereof on its books, and making efforts to get the property insured in pursuance of the lease.

6. Statements by the president of a railroad company, if relevant to the controversy, are competent evidence to affect the company, although he be dead at the time of the trial. Error, if any, in receiving such statements, is rendered immaterial by the company's giving affirmative evidence in its own behalf to the same effect.

7. A company is bound by a lease signed for it by its president, although there is no proof that he was authorized to do so by a resolution of the board, where the company took possession of the premises, rented a portion thereof, and received and receipted for the rent.

8. To lease and maintain a hotel at the end of a railroad, on a barren beach, is not so plainly outside of the statutory powers of a railroad company to lease land not necessary for its use, and to erect and maintain buildings for the accommodation of its passengers, as to sustain the defense of ultra vires as against the other party to the lease.

9. The covenant to procure insurance, in such lease, is not so far outside of the company's powers as not to be enforceable.

10. Impossibility of performance arising subsequently to the making of a contract, even though it arises without any fault on the part of the covenantor, does not discharge him from his liability under the contract.

11. Damages for breach of a covenant in a lease to keep the premises insured in a certain sum are, if the property is worth that sum and is wholly destroyed by fire, the sum for which the property was agreed to be kept insured, and not merely the amount of the premiums which it would cost to procure the insurance.

12. The obligation of the lessors to rebuild and repair in case of fire, with the suspension of the rent so long as the premises remain uninhabitable, is sufficient consideration for the lessee's agreement to insure.

in the particular instance, does not amount to physical or moral impossibility,—as, the want of money to make a stipulated payment, etc., cannot excuse one from the legal obligation to perform the condition, or from liability in damages for nonperformance. James v. Morgan, 1 Lev. 111; Thornborow v. Whitacre, 2 Ld. Raym. 1164; Gilpins v. Cousequa, 1 Pet. C. C. 91; Mearon v. Pearson, 7 Hurlst. & N. 386.

But legal impossibility occasioned by the passage of a statute rendering the act illegal will, by the courts of this country, in furtherance of the local public policy, be deemed a sufficient excuse for nonperformance. Bailey v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180; 2 Schouler, Personal Property, § 287; Bennett's Benjamin, Sales, § 571; Campbell, Sales, 315; Newby v. Sharpe, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 39, 25 Eng. Rep. 99.

Performance physically impossible by the act of God. Barker v. Hodgson, 3 Maule & S. 267; Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 7 Q. B. 127; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Best & S. 826.

The seller is held to be relieved from his promise to deliver by the death of the horse sold, or the spoliation of specific growing crop from natural causes before the time of gathering it. Shep. Touch, 173; Howell v. Coupland, L. R. 9 Q. B. 462, L. R. 1 Q. B. 258, 16 Eng. Rep. 319.

Impossibility occasioned by human agency. Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 441; Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 106, 62 Am. Dec. 142.

Destruction by fire of an unfinished chattel which is being made to order does not exempt the buyer from obligation to deliver. Jones v. St. Johns College, Oxford, L. R. 6 Q. B. 115; School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371.

Defendants contracted to deliver to plaintiff at B certain logs then at specified places on the bank of the river S, plaintiff to pay $16 per 1,000 feet, when account of measurement was handed in. The logs were measured and paid for as agreed. Before the logs were rafted a portion were swept away by a sudden freshet in the river and were lost. In an action to recover the price paid for the logs thus lost,—Held, that the contract to deliver was absolute, and defendants were liable, although the loss occurred without negligence upon their part. Bigler v. Hall, 54 N. Y. 167.

While a destruction of the subject-matter of the contract without fault of plaintiffs relieves them from an action for damages for nonperformance, it cannot enable them to enforce a part performance. Kein v. Tupper, 52 N. Y. 550.

An accident is not an excuse for a failure to perform a contract, even if it prevent performance. If protection is sought from such a contingency, it must be specified in the contract. Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Roll. Mill Co. 60 N. Y. 487.

Contracts for personal services, whether of the contracting party or of a third person, requiring skill, and which can only be performed by the particular person named, are not in their nature of absolute obligation under all circumstances, but are subject to the implied condition that the person named shall be able to perform at the time specified, and if he dies, or without fault on the part of the covenantor becomes unable to perform, the obligation to perform is extinguished. Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7.

To excuse nonperformance of an express condition in a contract, it must appear that performance could not, by any means, have been accomplished. Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594.

Although a party to an absolute executory contract is not excused by inability to execute it, caused by unforeseen accident or misfortune, but must perform or pay damages unless he has protected himself by stipulations in the contract, there may be in the nature of the contract an implied condition by which he will be relieved from such unqualified obligation; and when in such case without his fault, performance is rendered impos-

13. Where the testimony is conflicting in relation to the value of the property, an instruction that, in coming to a conclusion, the jury should consider the testimony in the light of their own experience and knowledge, is not objectionable.

[No. 80.]

Submitted November 21, 1895. Decided January 13, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida to review a judgment for the plaintiffs, Mary J. Hooper et al., in an action against the Jacksonville, Mayport, Pablo Railway & Navigation Company, on the covenant in a lease to keep the buildings insured, which were destroyed by fire. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

In the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Florida, on the 4th day of December, 1889, Mary J. Hooper, Henry H. Hooper, her husband, and William F. Porter, for the use of said Mary J. Hooper, citizens of the state of Ohio, brought an action against the Jacksonville, Mayport, Pablo Railway & Navigation Company, a corporation of the state of Florida. The plaintiffs' amended declaration set up causes of action arising out of the covenants contained in a certain indenture of lease between the parties. This lease, dated July 10, 1888, purported to grant, for a term of two years, certain lots of land situated at a place called "Burnside," in Duval county, Florida, whereon was erected a hotel known as the "San Diego Hotel." In consideration of this grant the railroad company agreed to pay in monthly instalments a yearly rent of $800, and to keep the premises insured in the sum of $6,000.

*It was alleged that on November 28, [516] 1889, during said term, and while the railway company was in possession, the hotel and other buildings were wholly destroyed by fire; that the defendant had failed and neglected to have the same insured, and that there was an arrearage of rent due amounting to the sum of $106.67. For the amount of the loss occasioned by the absence of insurance and for the back rent the action was brought.

The defendant denied that the railway company had duly executed the instrument sued on; denied that Alexander Wallace, the president of the company, and who had executed the lease as such president, had any authority from the company so to do. The defendant also alleged that such a lease, even if formally executed, was ultra vires; also that the covenant to insure was an impossible covenant, as shown by ineffectual efforts to secure such insurance.

The case was tried in April, 1891, and resulted in a verdict and judgment against the defendant in the sum of $6,798.70. On errors assigned to certain rulings of the court and in the charge to the jury the case was brought to this court.

sible, it may be excused. Stewart v. Stone, 127 N. Y. 500, 14 L. R. A. 215.

Where performance of the agreement by the vendor is rendered impossible by a fire, defendants are not bound. Goldman v. Rosenberg, 116 N. Y. 79.

Where the performance of a contract depends upon the continued existence of a person or thing which is assumed as the basis of the agreement, the death of the person or the destruction of the thing terminates the obligation. Lorillard v. Clyde, 142 N. Y. 456.

Where a contract is made for the sale and delivery of specified articles of personal property, under such circumstances that the title does not vest in the vendee, if the property is destroyed by an accident, without the fault of the vendor, so that delivery becomes impossible, the latter is not liable to the vendee in damages for the nondelivery. Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415.

A contract to do a thing which both the promisor and promisee know to be physically impossible of performance imposes no obligation upon either party. Clifford v. Watts, L. R. 5 C. P. 588.

A contract to do a thing which is legally impossible is void. Harvy v. Gibbons, 2 Lev. 161; Faulkner v. Lowe, 2 Exch. 595; Stevens v. Coon, 1 Pinney, 356.

When a contract is made upon the supposition that a certain thing is in existence, and it turns out that the thing never was in existence, or had been destroyed at the time when the contract was made, the agreement is void as having been made under a mistake. Gibson v. Pelkie, 37 Mich. 380; Franklin v. Long, 7 Gill & J. 407; Strickland v. Turner, 7 Exch. 208.

Where a cargo of corn was sold while on its way by sea to London, and it turned out that prior to the sale the cargo had been destroyed, it was held that the contract of sale was invalid. Couturier v. Hastie, 5 H. L. Cas. 673.

So a covenantee was discharged from the performance of his covenant to dig a certain amount of potter's clay yearly, upon the discovery that at the time of making the covenant there was not so much as that amount of clay under the land. Clifford v. Watts, L. R. 5 C. P. 577; Scioto Fire Brick Co. v. Pond, 38 Ohio St. 65; Cook v. Andrews, 36 Ohio St. 178.

In an action by one railroad company against another for breach of contract to co-operate in securing such legislation as would result in an appropriation of public lands for the roads, it appearing that all available lands were exhausted, so that the effort would necessarily have been futile,—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 368.

One who agrees with a mortgagee to pay a mortgage on its assignment to him is released from his promise by a foreclosure and sale by the mortgagee. Union Sav. Inst. v. Hill, 139 Mass. 47.

If a married man promises to marry a single woman who does not know that he is already married, he is liable for a breach of his promise. Wild v. Harris, 7 C. B. 999; Millward v. Littlewood, 6 Exch. 775.

When the impossibility of performance is known to the promisor, but not known to the promisee, the former is liable in damages for a failure to perform.

If the possibility is known to the promisee, but not to the promisor, the former cannot sue the latter for a failure to perform. Leake, Contracts, 692.

If performance of a contract becomes wholly or in part impossible by reason of a change in the law, the contract is to that extent discharged. Atkinson v. Ritchie, 10 East, 534; Berwick v. Oswald, 3 El. & Bl. 665; Brown v. London, 9 C. B. N. S. 726, 13 C. B. N. S. 828; Jones v. Judd, 4 N. Y. 412; Brick Presbyterian Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 538; Exposito v. Bowden, 7 El. & Bl. 763, 783.

The outbreak of war dissolves a partnership previously existing between subjects of two hostile

Mr. J. C. Cooper, for plaintiff in error:

When the corporate seal is attached to an instrument, it is usual that the secretary or custodian of the seal says, in appropriate language, that he is the custodian of the seal and attests the execution of the paper, and attaches the corporate seal. None of this appears on this paper, but only the ordinary bracket or scrawl, which was, in fact and in law, nothing more than the private seal of Alexander Wallace, who signed the paper.

The demurrer to the declaration on this ground should have been sustained, and the case was tried in an erroneous form of action.

Bank of Metropolis v. Gutschlick, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 21, 29 (10: 336, 340); Mitchell v. St. Andrew's Bay Land Co. 4 Fla. 200, 203; Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193; White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381; Taft v. Brewster, 9 Johns. 334, 6 Am. Dec. 280.

The court below erred in admitting in evidence the alleged certified copy of the lease.

The instruments were not binding upon the defendant company, on the face of them.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 340, p. 324; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 617, p. 584; Koehler v. Black River Falls Iron Co. 67 U. S. 2 Black, 715, 718 (17: 340, 341).

The bill of exceptions nowhere shows a single word of proof that the directors or stockholders, acting at stockholders' meeting, or in any other corporate capacity, had ever authorized or recognized this paper.

Conro v. Port Henry Iron Co. 12 Barb. 27, 63; Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 98, 102.

This contract was ultra vires.

Pearce v. Madison & I. R. Co. 62 U. S. 21 How. 441 (16: 184); Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 82 (25: 950, 952).

The court erred in charging that the defendant was bound in any event to obtain insurance at any cost, or be liable for all damages plaintiff might sustain by loss of property by fire.

Every contract must be construed according to what the court finds was in the minds of the parties at the time they made the contract to carry out their obvious intent.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hoyt, 149 U. S. 1 (37: 625); Bliven v. New England Screw Co. 64 U. S. 23 How. 420 (16: 510); Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 588 (6: 167); 2 Parsons, Contracts, 656.

No company doing business in Florida would insure the property. Companies doing business in the United States and foreign companies had refused to even rate it for insurance, and it was in the prohibited list.

The defendant did make every reasonable effort to get insurance, and it was not possible countries. Griswold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. 57, 16 Johns. 438; Matthews v. McStea, 91 U. S. 7, 9 (23: 188, 189); The William Bagaley v. United States, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 377, 407 (18: 583, 589); Taylor v. Hutchison, 25 Gratt. 536, 18 Am. Rep. 699; Hubbard v. Matthews, 54 N. Y. 43, 48, 49, 13 Am. Rep. 562.

To discharge the contract the law must make performance impossible, not merely more expensive or burdensome. Baker v. Johnson, 42 N. Y. 126.

When the impossibility created by the law is only temporary the contract will be suspended, but will revive again when the impediment is removed. Hadley v. Clarke, 8 T. R. 259; Baylies v. Fettyplace, 7 Mass. 325; Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. C. C. 312; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co. 5 Johns. 299.

Where the condition is possible at the date of the instrument, and subsequently becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the obligee, the obligation and the condition both become void. Coke, Litt. 206a; Taylor v. Tainter, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 866, 369 (21: 287, 290); Brown v. Dillahunty, 4 Smedes & M. 713, 43 Am. Dec. 499; People v. Bartlett, 3 Hill, 570; Badlam v. Tucker, 1 Pick. 284; People v. Manning, 8 Cow. 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451; Blake v. Niles, 13 N. H. 456, 38 Am. Dec. 506; Scully v. Kirkpatrick, 79 Pa. 324, 331, 21 Am. Rep. 62; Marshall v. Craig, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 386, 390, 4 Am. Dec. 647; Hopkins v. Com. 18 Cent. L. J. 77; People v. Tubbs, 37 N. Y. 586; Belding v. State, 25 Ark. 315, 4 Am. Rep. 26, 99 Am. Dec. 214.

When a party has undertaken absolutely to do a thing, he is not excused from liability by the occurrence of events which render the performance of his promise impossible. Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 4 Q. B. 134; Eugster v. West, 35 La. Ann. 119, 48 Am. Rep. 232; Hills v. Sughrue, 15 Mees. & W. 253; This v. Byers, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 244; Thorn v. London, L. R. 9 Exch. 163.

Where one contracts to build a house on the land of another, and performance becomes impracticable either by reason of a latent defect in the soil, or the contract being to finish and deliver the house by a day named, by reason of the accidental destruction of the building shortly before that day, he is not excused from performance; and, performance not being excused, he cannot retain instalments paid on account. Tompkins v. Dudley, 25 N. Y. 272, 82 Am. Dec. 349; School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371; Stees v. Leonard, 20 Minn. 494; Trenton School Trustees v. Bennett, 27 N. J. L. 513; Ingle v. Jones, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 1 (17: 762).

Still less will unexpected difficulty or inconvenience short of impossibility serve as an excuse. Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 24, 29 (24: 645, 647); The Harriman v. United States ("The Harriman") 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 161 (19: 629); Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142; Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Roll. Mill Co. 60 N. Y. 487; Youqua v. Nixon, 1 Pet. C. C. 221; Dodge v. Van Lear, 5 Cranch C. C. 278; Eddy v. Clement, 38 Vt. 486; Bacon v. Cobb, 45 Ill. 47; Hand v. Baynes, 4 Whart. 204, 33 Am. Dec. 54; Wareham Bank v. Burt, 5 Allen, 113; Harrison v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Mo. 364; Adams v. Nichols, 19 Pick. 275, 81 Am. Dec. 137.

Contracts whose performance depends upon the continued existence of a specified thing are discharged by the destruction of the thing from no fault of either party. Price v. Pepper, 13 Bush, 42; School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371; Wells v. Calman, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65; Thomas v. Knowles, 128 Mass. 22; Lovering v. Buck Mountain Coal Co. 54 Pa. 291; Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527; Ellis v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. ("The Tornado") 108 U. S. 342 (27: 747); Bramby v. Smith, 3 Ala. 123. Contra, Niblo v. Binns, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 375; Whelan v. Ansonia Clock Co. 97 N. Y. 293; Cook v. McCabe, 53 Wis. 250, 40 Am. Rep. 765; Hollis v. Chapman, 26 Tex. 1; Lord v. Wheeler, 1 Gray, 282; Rawson v. Clark, 70 Ill. 656; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Best & S. 826.

The accidental destruction of a leasehold building, or the tenant's occupation being otherwise interrupted by inevitable accident, does not determine or suspend the obligation to pay rent. Leeds v. Cheetham, 1 Sim. 146; Lofft v. Dennis, 1 El. & El. 474; Gates v. Green, 4 Paige, 355, 27 Am. Dec. 68; Linn v. Ross, 10 Ohio, 412 36 Am. Dec. 95; Hallett v.

at the usual places in the city of Jacksonville, where every person would apply for such insurance, to obtain the same.

The plaintiff, Hooper, and his attorney, Challen, knew that this property was not insurable.

2 Parsons, Contracts, 656.

The impossibility of performance which will excuse a contracting party usually occurs in cases where at the time the contract was made there was no way of carrying it out. Such cases are divided into two classes: Impossibility on the face of the agreement, or known to both parties at the time, which avoids the contract because there is no real consideration; and, second, impossibility at the time of the contract not known to either party, which may avoid the contract on account of mistake. Still another cause of impossibility of performance, is where the impossibility is known to one party only; and where it is known only to the promisee it cannot be accepted with the expectation that it will be carried out, and therefore the promise is not binding.

Lawson, Contracts, §§ 214, 419; Leake, Contracts, § 692.

A promise is not enforceable where it is to do a thing so impossible that it can form no real consideration.

Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 29 (24: 647); Clifford v. Watts, L. R. 5 C. P. 588; Scioto Wythe, 3 Johns. 44, 3 Am. Dec. 457; Peterson v. Edmondson, 5 Harr. (Del.) 378; Niedelet v. Wales, 16 Mo. 214; Fowler v. Bott, 6 Mass. 63; Robinson v. L'Engle, 13 Fla. 482.

A contract whose performance depends upon the personal capacity of the parties is discharged by their death or incapacitating illness. Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 793; Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Eq. 269.

Where a contract creates between the parties merely a personal relation, the death of either dissolves it—as, for instance, a contract whereby a party agrees to receive and sell machines for the manufacturer. Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Rosenstall, 24 Fed. Rep. 583.

One who prevents the performance of a condition of a contract, or makes it impossible by his own act, cannot take advantage of the nonperformance. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. King, 10 Ind. App. 639.

One who is prevented from performing a contract with a city by the acts of its officers and agents in the line of their duty may abandon the contract and sue for damages. Mahon v. New York, 10 Misc. 664.

A breach of contract which will justify the party not in default in abandoning performance and suing for damages on account of a breach by the other need not be of such a character as to render the further execution of the contract by him impossible, but if the other party refuses to treat it as subsisting and binding upon him, or by his act and conduct shows that he has renounced it and no longer considers himself bound by it, there is in legal effect a prevention of performance by the other party. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 33.

Recovery cannot be had for breach of a contract for the charter of a steamer for a specified day at a designated price, half to be paid three days before the steamer sails, and the remainder on the day of sailing, unless the first payment is made or tendered at the specified time. Goff v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 9 Wash. 386.

A contractor to drill a well may stop work and Fire Brick Company v. Pond, 38 Ohio St. 65; Cook v. Andrews, 36 Ohio St. 178; Dubuque S. W. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co 66 Iowa, 366.

Defendant was not responsible, in any event, for the amount of the insurance, not having contracted as an insurer.

The charge of the court as to the damages therefore was erroneous.

Lancaster Mills v. Merchants' Cotton Press Co. 89 Tenn. 1.

The court authorized the jury to find the value of the property from their own experience, which was error.

Proffatt, Jury Trials, §§ 369, 371, 372; Benjamin v. Hillard, 64 U. S. 23 How. 149 (16: 518).

Mr. James R. Challen, for defendants in error:

Where the transaction is complete and nothing remains to be done by the party seeking relief, the plea of ultra vires is not available by the corporation in an action brought against it for not performing its side of the contract.

Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 64 (24: 649); Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621 (25: 188); Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 459 (20: 199); Smith v. Sheeley, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 358 (20: 430); York & M. L. R. Co. v. Winans, 58 U. S. 17 How. 30 (15: 27).

sue for breach of the contract, where the other party notifies him to stop as he does not want and will not pay for the completed work. Gabriel v. Akinsville Pressed Brick Co. 57 Mo. App. 520.

A contractor to drill an artesian well may recover for the work done, where by arrangement between the parties, upon his deeming it impossible to drive a pipe of a certain size deeper, the owner assumed the responsibility of driving such pipe, and its collapse renders further performance of the contract impossible. Charleston Ice Mfg. Co. v. Joyce, 25 U. S. App. 89, 63 Fed. Rep. 916.

One engaged as leader of an orchestra to consist of sixteen persons including the leader's brother cannot recover a sum deducted from the contract price on account of the brother's absence, where the latter voluntarily leaves his employ and the leader is prevented by the other party to the contract from securing another person in his place. Lajos v. Eden Musee Am. Co. 10 Misc. 148.

An employee who releases his employer from liability for injuries in consideration of permanent employment cannot recover for breach of such contract, where an appointment is given him to a position within the contract, and he refuses to accept it, although notice of such appointment is delayed one day. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cochran, 42 Neb. 531.

No tender need be made and kept good under a contract for the conveyance of land providing for delivery of a deed upon the payment of money, where it appears from the declaration of the other party to the contract that it would be a vain and idle ceremony to make the tender and demand the deed. Watson v. White, 152 Ill. 364.

A contractor may recover as upon a performance, where the other party has forbidden performance or interfered therewith to an extent amounting to refusal of performance. Haipin v. Manny, 57 Mo. App. 59.

A recovery upon a building contract is not prevented by failure to complete the building within the time specified, where the delay is caused by the owner. Murphy v. Strickley Simonds Co. 82 Hun, 158.

A corporation may do any legitimate act which secures, promotes, or insures its existence or its legitimate profits. If it has been executed, the corporation will not be heard to plead want of power.

Taylor v. Chichester & M. R. Co. L. R. 2 Exch. 356; Robins v. Embry, 1 Smedes & M. Ch. 268.

Corporate powers are derived from the legislature either by express grant in words or by necessary and reasonable implication.

State v. Florida C. R. Co. 15 Fla. 690; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71 (25: 950).

In all the cases holding ultra vires in a corporation where one side has enjoyed the usufruct of a contract admittedly ultra vires, the other side is not forbidden to recover its consideration or to be restored to its rights.

When the act is committed the corporation shall not be shielded from the consequences of it.

Bissell v. Michigan S. and N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 358; Field, Ultra Vires, 117, 129, 132, 133, 136; Silver Lake Bank v. North, 4 Johns. Ch. 370; Southern L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Lanier, 5 Fla. 110, 53 Am. Dec. 448; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Rodrigues, 47 Ill. 188, 95 Am. Dec. 484; Brown v. Winnisimmet Co. 11 Allen, 326.

A corporation may enter into contracts and engage in transactions which are incidental or auxiliary to its main business, or which may become necessary in the care and management of its property.

Straus v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Ohio. St. 59; Buffett v. Troy & B. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 168; Arnot v. Erie R. Co. 5 Hun, 608; Downing v. Mount Washington Road Co. 40 N. H. 230; City Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Carrugi, 41 Ga. 660.

General words used in a corporate contract, which admit a double construction, must be construed consistently with the charter.

Morris & E. R. Co. v. Sussex R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 542; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504.

Impossibility of performance is an impossible plea. As it is not against the nature of things that a hotel may be insured, there is nothing apparent of record to justify the plea.

Benj. Sales, Am. notes to §§ 530 to 609, p. 553.

The plea to be good must be a real impossibility, and not merely a very great inconvenience, hardship, or impracticability.

Oakley v. Morton, 11 N. Y. 25, 62 Am. Dec. 49; United States v. Smoot ("Smoot's Case") 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 36 (21: 107); Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 24 (24: 645).

An instrument purporting throughout the body thereof to be a mortgage of personal property by a corporation is the deed of the corporation although signed by the president only, with his own name and title, and sealed with his individual seal.

Sherman v. Fitch, 98 Mass. 59; Lay v. Austin, 25 Fla. 933; South Baptist Soc. v. Clapp, 18 Barb. 36; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 306 (3: 353).

Wherever a corporation is acting within the scope of the legitimate purposes of its institution, all parol contracts made by its authorized agents are express promises of the corporation; and all duties imposed on them by law, and all benefits conferred at their request, raise implied promises, for the enforcement of which an action may well lie.

Bank of England v. Moffat, 3 Bro. Ch. 262; Rex v. Bank of England, 2 Dougl. 524, and note; Gray v. Portland Bank, 3 Mass. 364, 3 Am. Dec. 156; Worcester Turnp. Corp. v. Willard, 5 Mass. 80, 4 Am. Dec. 39; Gilmore v. Pope, 5 Mass. 491; Andover & M. Turnp. Corp. v. Gould, 6 Mass. 40, 4 Am. Dec. 80; Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 67 (6: 553); Harper v. Charlesworth, 4 Barn. & C. 575; 1 Parsons, Contracts, 139.

In this country, the old rule as to seals has almost if not entirely disappeared.

Danforth v. Schoharie & D. Turnp. Co. 12 Johns. 227; Commercial Bank v. Kertright, 22 Wend. 348; American Ins. Co. v. Oakley, 9 Paige, 496, 38 Am. Dec. 561; Fourth School Dist. v. Wood, 13 Mass. 199; Proprietors of Canal Bridge v. Gordon, 1 Pick. 297, 11 Am. Dec. 170; Chestnut Hill Turnp. Co. v. Rutter, 4 Serg. & R. 16, 8 Am. Dec. 675; Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. 324; Legrand v. Hampden Sidney College, 5 Munf. 324; Elys-ville Mfg. Co. v. Okisko 5 Md. 153; Episcopal Charitable Soc. v. Episcopal Church, 1 Pick. 372; Hayward v. Pilgrim Soc. 21 Pick. 270; Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168.

If the body of the lease affirms it is sealed, that is proof of sealing.

2 Greenl. Ev. § 296.

When the lease contains a covenant on the part of the lessee to insure the demised premises, with a stipulation that he shall have the right to use the proceeds in rebuilding in the event of loss, the assignee of the reversion is entitled to its benefit, and the assignee of the term subject to its burden, although assigns are not named.

Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 340; Platt, Covenants, 3 Law Lib. 81; Thomas v. Von Kapff, 6 Gill & J. 372; Vernon v. Smith, 5 Barn. & Ald. 1; Norman v. Wells, 17 Wend. 136; Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276, 27 Am. Dec. 550; Taylor, Landlord & Tenant, 167.

The covenant to insure may run with the land if the money realized is to be expended in rebuilding or repair.

Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 341.

The opinions of experts, however intelligent and trustworthy, do not bind the conscience of the court.

The Iberia, 40 Fed. Rep. 893; Van Wycklen v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 424; Shelley v. Austin, 74 Tex. 608; Schmieder v. Barney, 113 U. S. 645 (28: 1120).

A corporate seal is only necessary to convey lands. This may be altered at pleasure.

McClellan, Dig. 228, § 3.

Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court:

The nineteen assignments of error may be classified as follows: Those which raise questions as to the sufficiency of the proof of the due execution by the defendant of the contract sued on; those which deny the competency of the railroad company to enter into such a contract; those which deal with the question whether the defendant was relieved from liability on its covenant to insure by reason of alleged impossibility to comply therewith; finally, those alleging error in the admission of evidence, and in certain portions of the charge,—particularly in respect to the measure 517] of damages. *We shall discuss these alleged errors in the order thus mentioned.

The declaration was in covenant, and contained, as an attached exhibit, what was alleged to be a certified copy of the contract sued on, the final clause whereof was as follows:

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals this day and year above written.

"Jacksonville, Mayport, Pablo Railway & Navigation Company, [Seal.]

"By Alex. Wallace, President.

"Wm. F. Porter, [Seal.]

"By H. H. Hooper, Jr., Att'y in fact.

"H. H. Hooper, [Seal.]

"Mary J. Hooper, [Seal.]"

The attesting clause was as follows:

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of us.

"H. H. Burkman,

"H. H. Bowne,

As to R. R. Co., H. H. Cooper, and W. F. Porter.

"John Mulholland,

"Sam'l E. Duffy,

As to Mary J. Hooper."

The defendant demurred on several grounds, one of which was as follows:

"That attached to the said declaration is a paper purporting to be the contract which is the basis of this suit, which paper is alleged to be a lease between the defendant company and the plaintiffs, and which paper is referred to in each and every count of said declaration, and asked and prayed and made a part of said declaration; that each and every count of said declares in covenant, and yet the same contains on the face thereof and the face of the paper made part thereof that the said cause of 518] action will not lie because the said *paper is not under seal; that there is no seal of the defendant company to said paper."

The theory of this demurrer appears to be that there should have been an averment on the face of the instrument that the seal attached, on behalf of the company, was its common or corporate seal. However, there was an averment that the parties had set their hands and seals to the paper, and the attesting clause alleged that the railroad company had signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of two witnesses, who signed their names thereto. On demurrer this was plainly sufficient.

But it is urged in the third and fourth assignments that it was error to permit to be put in evidence the certified copy of the lease, as likewise the duplicate lease, because they were not shown to be under the seal of the company, but appeared to be under the private seal of Alexander Wallace, the president of the company. But, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the scroll or rectangle containing the word "seal" will be deemed to be the proper and common seal of the company. A seal is not necessarily of any particular form or figure.

In Pillow v. Roberts, 54 U. S. 13 How. 472 [14: 228], this court, through Mr. Justice 160 U. S. U. S., Book 40. 33

Grier, when discussing an objection that an instrument read was improperly admitted in evidence because the seal of the circuit court authenticating the acknowledgment was an impression stamped on paper, and not "on wax, wafer, or any other adhesive or tenacious substance," said: "It is the seal which authenticates, and not the substance on which it is impressed; and where the court can recognize its identity, they should not be called upon to analyze the material which exhibits it. In Arkansas, the presence of wax is not necessary to give validity to a seal; and the fact that the public officer in Wisconsin had not thought proper to use it was sufficient to raise the presumption that such was the law or custom in Wisconsin, till the contrary was proved. It is time that such objections to the validity of seals should cease. The court did not err, therefore, in overruling the objections to the deed offered by the plaintiff." Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546 [27: 254], is to the same effect.

*Whether an instrument is under seal 519 or not is a question for the court upon inspection; whether a mark or character shall be held to be a seal depends upon the intention of the executant, as shown by the paper. Hacker's App. 121 Pa. 192, 1 L. R. A. 861; Pillow v. Roberts, supra.

The defendant did not produce the original in order that it might be compared in the particular objected to with the copy and duplicate offered. The defendant's attorney, Mr. Buckman, was called, and testified that he was one of the attesting witnesses to the instrument offered, and that he, as a notary public, took the acknowledgment thereto of Alexander Wallace, that he executed the same for and in behalf of the company, and that the said lease was the act and deed of the defendant company for the uses and purposes therein expressed.

Whether, therefore, the instrument put in evidence was merely a copy, in which event it would not be expected that a wax or stamped seal of the company would appear upon it, but merely a scroll, representing the original seal, or whether the so-called copy was really the original paper, as certified by one of defendant's witnesses, would not, in our opinion, be material. The presumption would be, if the paper were a copy, that the original was duly sealed, or, if it were the original, that the scroll was adopted and used by the company as its seal, for the purpose of executing the contract in question.

As respects those portions of the objections that raised the question as to the authority of the president to execute the contract in question, there was, besides the presumption that would arise out of the signing, sealing, and delivering of the instrument, evidence that the company exercised acts of ownership and control over the demised premises, took charge of them by their superintendent, took an inventory of the property, rented the hotel portion to a third party, received money rent therefor, gave a receipt therefor under the seal of the company, opened a hotel account on their cash book, which showed receipts for rent from the tenant and expenditures for moving the hotel and for making improvements therein, and *there was evidence adduced by 520 the defendant itself of efforts to get the property insured in pursuance of their contract.

An exception was taken by the defendant to the action of the court in permitting Mrs. Roberts, the company's tenant, to testify to statements made to her by Alexander Wallace, the president of the company, the ground of objection being that Wallace was dead at the time of the trial. Statements made by the president, if relevant to the controversy, would be competent to affect the company, even if he were dead at the time of the trial. In the present case, it was relevant to show that the witness, when about to rent the hotel, was told by the president to go to Mr. Warriner, the secretary of the company, to whom she paid one month's rent, and who gave her a receipt therefor, with the corporate seal attached. The witness was not a party to nor interested in the suit, nor was the president or his executor or administrator. The admissions made by the president, subsequently, in a casual conversation, as to his ineffectual efforts to get the hotel insured, could scarcely be regarded as relevant and competent to affect the company. But the error, if such it were, in permitting such statements to be received, was rendered immaterial by the action of the company, in adducing affirmative evidence, in its own behalf, to the very same effect, namely, the efforts made by the company and its officers to procure insurance.

Complaint is made of the action of the court in rejecting the offer of the defendant's by-laws for the purpose of showing want of authority to make the lease sued on without the consent of the stockholders or board of directors, and the accompanying offer of the minutes, which did not disclose that any such authority had been granted.

In considering what weight should be given to the error assigned to the rejection of the by-laws, we have a right to advert to the copy of them contained in the bill of exceptions. There we learn that the powers conferred upon the president were in the following terms:

"The president shall preside at all meetings of the board of directors and of the company (of which he shall be president), and shall have the general management and supervision of the [521] *operation of the lines of road of said company and the general business thereof; subject, however, at all times to the control of the board of directors. He shall, when so directed and empowered by the board of directors, execute and sign for and on behalf of said company all documents and writings authorized to be made and executed for and on its behalf. He shall draw and issue all warrants for the payment of moneys on the treasurer of said company when so ordered by the board, and sign the same. He shall make an annual report to said company of the condition thereof, with such suggestions and recommendations as he may deem proper, and to said board of directors whenever required by them; and shall do and perform such other duties as are consistent with said office, and others of a like nature pertaining thereto."

This by-law appears to describe the powers and duties usually possessed by presidents of railroad companies, and we are therefore relieved from considering what would have been the effect of an unusual restriction on the powers of such an officer, and whether those dealing with a railroad company would be obliged to take notice of such unusual restriction.

The question, therefore, we have to consider is whether the admission in evidence of the by-law would have affected the result reached by the court and jury in the case.

Assuming, for the present purpose of the discussion, that the subject-matter of the contract in question was within the legitimate scope of the company's powers, we think the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence disclose a case in which the company would be bound, notwithstanding there was no proof that the president was expressly authorized to make the contract by a previous resolution of the board. The evidence was undisputed that after the execution of the lease the company took possession of the demised premises, rented to a third party the hotel portion thereof, and received and receipted for rent of the hotel.

The case, in this particular, resembles and falls within the principle of Eureka Clothes Wringing Mach. Co. v. Bailey Washing & W. Mach. Co. 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 488 [20: 209], where the binding force of a contract was denied for alleged want of *authority of an [522] agent to make the same, and this court, through Mr. Justice Miller, held:

"We are satisfied that the agreements set up in the bill are the valid contracts of the defendant. Though the plaintiff was unable to produce any resolution or order in writing by the trustees or board of directors of the defendant corporation, and though the seal used was the private seal of one of its officers, instead of the corporate seal, neither of these is essential to the validity of the contract. We entertain no doubt that Rindge, the agent and one of the directors and treasurer of the Eureka company, was authorized to execute the agreement, and, if any doubt existed on that point the report and payment for five hundred machines, the first month's use of the patent under that agreement, would remove the doubt. If it did not, it would very clearly amount to a ratification."

In Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 83 [6: 559], it was held that where a cashier was appointed and permitted to act in his office, for a long time, under the sanction of the directors, it was not necessary that his official bond should be accepted as satisfactory by the directors according to the terms of the charter, in order to enable him to enter legally on the duties of his office or to make his sureties responsible for the nonperformance of their duties; that the charter and the by-laws are to be considered, in this respect, as directory to the board, and not as conditions precedent; and Mr. Justice Story, in discussing the subject, said: "A board may accept a contract, or approve a security, by a vote, or by a tacit and implied assent. The vote or assent may be more difficult of proof by parol evidence than if it were reduced to writing. But surely this is not a sufficient reason for declaring that the vote or assent is inoperative." See also Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 371, 381 [33: 157, 160].

As, then, the contract in question was, upon our present assumption, within the legitimate scope of the powers of the company, was executed by that officer of the company who by the by-laws was the proper agent to perform such function, and as the company went into possession of and received the rents and profits of 523] the hotel, we conclude that the *company was bound thereby, even if the minutes of the company fail to disclose authority expressly given to the president to execute the contract.

It is, however, further claimed that the contract sued on was not within the legitimate powers of the company.

This is not a case in which, either by its charter, or by some statute binding upon it, the company is forbidden to make such a contract. Indeed, the public laws of Florida, referring to the powers of railroad companies, provide that every such corporation shall be empowered "to purchase, hold, and use all such real estate and other property as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of its road and canal and the stations and other accommodations necessary to accomplish the objects of its incorporation, and to sell, lease, or buy any land or real estate not necessary for its use." McClellan's Fla. Dig. Laws, p. 276, § 10. They are likewise authorized "to erect and maintain all convenient buildings, wharves, docks, stations, fixtures, and machinery for the accommodation and use of their passengers and freight business."

Although the contract power of railroad companies is to be deemed restricted to the general purposes for which they are designed, yet there are many transactions which are incidental or auxiliary to its main business, or which may become useful in the care and management of the property which it is authorized to hold, and in the safety and comfort of the passengers whom it is its duty to transport.

Courts may be permitted, where there is no legislative prohibition shown, to put a favorable construction upon such exercise of power by a railroad company as is suitable to promote the success of the company, within its chartered powers, and to contribute to the comfort of those who travel thereon. To lease and maintain a summer hotel at the seaside terminus of a railroad might obviously increase the business of the company and the comfort of its passengers, and be within the provisions of the statute of Florida above cited, whereby a railroad company is authorized "to sell, lease, or buy any land or real estate not necessary for its use," and to "erect 524] and maintain all *convenient buildings . . . for the accommodation and use of their passengers."

Courts may well be astute in dealing with efforts of corporations to usurp powers not granted them, or to stretch their lawful franchises against the interests of the public. Nor would we be understood to hold that, in a clear case of the exercise of a power forbidden by its charter, or contrary to public policy, a railroad company would be estopped to decline to be bound by its own act, even when fulfilled by the other contracting party. Davis v. Old Colony R. Co. 131 Mass. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 221; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71 [25:

950]; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24 [35:55]. So, too, it must be regarded as well settled, on the soundest principles of public policy, that a contract by which a railroad company seeks to render itself incapable of performing its duties to the public, or attempts to absolve itself from its obligation without the consent of the state, is void, and cannot be rendered enforceable by the doctrines of estoppel. York & M. L. R. Co. v. Winans, 58 U. S. 17 How. 30 [15:27]; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. and Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman Palace Car Co. supra.

We do not seek to relax, but rather to affirm, the rule laid down by this court in Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman Palace Car Co., above cited, that "a contract of a corporation, which is ultra vires in the proper sense, that is to say, outside the object of its creation as defined in the law of its organization, and therefore beyond the powers conferred upon it by the legislature, is not voidable only, but wholly void, and of no legal effect. The objection to the contract is not merely that the corporation ought not to have made it, but that it could not make it. The contract cannot be ratified by either party, because it could not have been authorized by either. No performance on either side can give the unlawful contract any validity, or be the foundation of any right of action upon it." 139 U. S. 59, 60 [35:68, 69].

But we think the present case falls within the language of Lord Chancellor Selborne, in Attorney General v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 5 App. Cas. 478, where, while *declaring[525 his sense of the importance of the doctrine of ultra vires, he said: "This doctrine ought to be reasonably, and not unreasonably, understood and applied, and that whatever may fairly be regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, those things which the legislature has authorized, ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held, by judicial construction, to be ultra vires." In the application of the doctrine the court must be influenced somewhat by the special circumstances of the case. As was said by Romilly, M. R. in Lyde v. Eastern Bengal R. Co. 36 Beav. 10, where was in question the validity of a contract by a railway company to work a coal mine: "The answer to the question appears to me to depend upon the facts of each particular case. If, in truth, the real object of the colliery was to supply the railway with cheaper coals, it would be proper to allow the accidental additional profit of selling coal to others; but if the principal object of the colliery was to undertake the business of raising and selling coals, then it would be a perversion of the funds of the company, and a scheme which ought not to be permitted, however profitable it might appear to be. The prohibition or permission to carry on this trade would depend on the conclusions which the court drew from the evidence."

The principle upon which we may safely rule the present question is within the case of Brown v. Winnisimmet Co. 11 Allen, 326. There a contract made by the treasurer of a ferry company to lease one of the company's boats for a certain money consideration was alleged to be void for want of antecedent authority given by the company to the treasurer, and also because such a contract was not made in the legitimate exercise of the company's powers. On the first point it was ruled that, from evidence showing ratification by the company, it was proper for the jury to infer that the treasurer had been duly authorized to make the contract, and, disposing of the second question, the court, through Chief Justice Bigelow, said: "We know of no rule or principle by which an act creating a corporation for certain specific objects, or to carry on a particular trade or business, is to be strictly construed as prohibitory of all other dealings or 526] transactions *not coming within the exact scope of those designated. Undoubtedly the main business of a corporation is to be confined to that class of operations which properly appertain to the general purposes for which its charter was granted. But it may also enter into and engage in transactions which are incidental or auxiliary to its main business, or which may become necessary, expedient, or profitable in the care and management of the property which it is authorized to hold under the act by which it was created." See also Davis v. Old Colony R. Co. 131 Mass. 258, 272, 41 Am. Rep. 221.

The contract between the parties hereto was for leasing a hotel at the terminus of the railroad, situated at a beach, distant from any town. If not fairly within the authority granted by the statute of Florida "to erect and maintain all convenient buildings . . . for the accommodation and use of their passengers," it certainly cannot be said to have been forbidden by such laws. Nor can it be said to have been, in its nature, contrary to public policy.

To maintain cheap hotels or eating houses at stated points on a long line of railroad through a wilderness, as in the case of the Pacific railroads, or at the end of a railroad on a barren, unsettled beach, as in the present case, not for the purpose of making money out of such business, but to furnish reasonable and necessary accommodations to its passengers and employees, would not be so plainly an act outside of the powers of a railroad company as to compel a court to sustain the defense of ultra vires, as against the other party to such a contract.

But even if the railroad company might be answerable for the rent of the premises, it is contended that the covenant to procure insurance was so far outside of the company's powers as not to be enforceable.

No one could deny that it would not be competent for a railroad company, without the authority of the legislature, to carry on an insurance business. But this covenant to keep the premises insured is correlative to the obligation of the lessors to rebuild in case the hotel should be destroyed by fire, and to the provision that, in such an event, the rents should cease until the hotel should be put in habitable 527] condition and repair *by the lessors. Such mutual covenants are quite usual in leases of this kind, and are merely incidental to the principal purpose of the contract.

Suppose the contract proved and the defense of ultra vires deemed inadmissible, it is claimed by the railroad company that it is not liable in damages for its failure to procure the insurance, because it was unable to get the insurance; that its contract, in that particular, was impossible of performance.

There is such a defense known to the law as an impossibility of performance. Instances of such a defense are found in cases where the subject-matter of the contract had ceased to exist, as where there was a contract of sale of a cargo of grain supposed by the parties to be on its voyage to England, but which, having become heated on the voyage, had been unloaded and sold, and where it was held that the contract was void, inasmuch "as it plainly imputed that there was something which was to be sold and purchased at the time of the contract," whereas the object of the sale had ceased to exist. Couturier v. Hastie, 5 H. L. Cas. 673; Allen v. Hammond, 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 63 [9: 633].

So, also, where a person purchased an annuity which, at the time of the purchase, had ceased to exist owing to the death of the annuitant, it was held that he could recover the price which he had paid for it. Strickland v. Turner, 7 Exch. 208.

So, where there is obvious physical impossibility or legal impossibility which is apparent on the face of the contract, the latter is void.

But the present case does not fall within either of these classes, but is a case of impossibility of performance arising subsequently to the making of the contract.

Here, the general rule is that such impossibility, even though it arises without any fault on the part of the covenantor, does not discharge him from his liability under the contract. "The principle deducible from the authorities is that if what is agreed to be done is possible and lawful, it must be done. Difficulty or improbability of accomplishing the undertaking will not avail the defendant. It must be shown that the thing cannot by any means be effected. Nothing short of this *will 528 excuse performance. The answer to the objection of hardship in all such cases is that it might have been guarded against by a proper stipulation. It is the province of courts to enforce contracts,—not to make or modify them. When there is neither fraud, accident, nor mistake, the exercise of dispensing power is not a judicial function." The Harriman v. Emerick ("The Harriman") 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 172 [19: 633]. Impossible conditions cannot be performed; and if a person contracts to do what at the time is absolutely impossible, the contract will not bind him, because no man can be obliged to perform an impossibility; but where the contract is to do a thing which is possible in itself, the performance is not excused by the occurrence of an inevitable accident, or other contingency, although it was not foreseen by the party, nor was within his control." Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 29 [24: 646].

It appears that there was some evidence to the effect that, prior to the making of the lease, the owners of the hotel had some conversation with one or more insurance agents, who refused to insure the hotel building, and upon this evidence the defendants asked the court to charge the jury that if the plaintiffs knew that the property, at the time of the making of the contract, was not insurable, or, if knowing that they had tried to get insurance and failed, they did not so notify the defendants, then the plaintiffs acted in bad faith, and should not be permitted to recover. The court refused to so charge and very properly. The evidence disclosed by the record, even if believed by the jury, would not have justified a verdict that the plaintiffs acted in bad faith. It is not shown that they made any false representations on the subject, and the very fact that they demanded a covenant to procure insurance from the defendant put the latter on inquiry as to its ability to procure it.

Error is alleged in the refusal of the court to charge that "if the jury believed from the evidence that insurance on the property in question was sought to be obtained at the usual places where such insurance would be applied for, and such agencies applied to, representing the companies insuring property in all parts of the United States, refused to insure the property on the ground that such property [529] was not insurable and *insurance companies would not insure such classes of property, then the agreement to insure was impossible of performance, and plaintiffs could not recover."

We are not furnished in this record, by any bill of exceptions or by a certificate of the judge, with all the evidence on which this request to charge was based, but assuming that the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions was all that there was, it would have been error in the court to have given the instruction prayed for. That evidence is very far from disclosing the state of facts assumed in the request. Two or three insurance agents, resident in the city of Jacksonville, testified that on one or two occasions, whose dates they could not fix, there had been inquiries made by some one representing the defendant about insurance. Giving the utmost effect to the testimony, it altogether failed to show such a case of impossibility as would, under the authorities, have discharged the defendant from the obligations of his contract; and we think the court would not have erred in so charging the jury. However, the court left the question as one of fact to the jury, and we perceive no misdirection in his remarks.

It remains to consider the question of the measure of damages and some objections made to the charge of the court on that subject.

If the defendant subjected itself, by a valid contract, to keep the premises insured in the sum of $6,000 during the term of the lease, and without sufficient cause failed to do so, and if the hotel was worth the sum mentioned, and was wholly destroyed by fire, the extent of the defendant's liability would obviously be the amount of the plaintiff's damages, namely, $6,000.

It is argued that the defendant received no consideration for agreeing to insure the property; that it contracted to pay the costs of insurance as part of the rental, and the cost of the premium of insurance was the proper measure of recovery. The obligation of the lessors to rebuild and repair in case of fire, and the suspension of the rent so long as the premises remained uninhabitable, formed the consideration of the defendant's agreement to insure; [530] and we cannot accept the *proposition that the plaintiff's damages arising out of the breach of the contract are to be measured by what it would have cost the defendant to secure the stipulated insurance.
163 U. S.

Complaint is made of the observations made by the judge when instructing the jury as to the weight which they should give to the testimony in relation to the value of the property. The testimony was somewhat conflicting, and the remark chiefly criticised was to the effect that, in coming to a conclusion, the jury should consider the testimony in the light of their own experience and knowledge. We do not regard such a caution as objectionable.

In deciding upon disputes between litigant parties, where witnesses are naturally apt to state facts strongly in favor of their respective principals, the jury well may, and, in fact, must, use their own knowledge and experience in the ordinary affairs of life to enable them to see where is the truth. This is particularly true where, as in the present case, the conflict was in matter of opinion as to the value of a building no longer in existence.

The plaintiffs conceded that all the rent had been paid except $106.67, which in the declaration was demanded. The defendant gave no evidence on the subject, and in such a state of the record and of the evidence we think no error was committed by the court in charging the jury that they could find for the plaintiffs the amount of rent demanded, unless the defendant showed that it had been paid.

These views cover all the assignments of error which we deem worthy of notice, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

ELLA L. LAING, Plff. in Err., [531
v.

THOMAS G. RIGNEY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 531-545.)

Questions of law—law of the state—opinion of an expert witness—effect of appearance—due process of law.

1. Exceptions to alleged findings of facts, because unsupported by evidence, present questions of law reviewable in courts of error.
2. In the absence of any state statute or decision on the subject the final decree of the chancery court of New Jersey, based upon an original bill, the process under which was served upon the defendant within the state, and upon a supplemental bill, a copy of which, with a rule to plead, was served upon the defendant without the state, must be deemed to express the law of the state.
3. The opinion of an attorney as an expert witness that the chancellor of New Jersey erred in thinking that jurisdiction over the defendant personally was conferred by the service on him within the state of the subpoena under the original bill, and by the service on him without the state of a copy of the supplemental bill and of a rule to plead, is insufficient to show the law of the state as against the chancellor's judgment in the case that, under the laws and practice of the state, the defendant was in his court, subject to its jurisdiction and bound by its decrees.

NOTE.—As to effect of appearance to cure defects in service of process, its nonservice, and want of jurisdiction of subject-matter, see note to Knox v. Summers, 2: 510.

As to what is due process of law, see note to Pearson v. Yewdall, 24: 436.

4. Where the defendant, after the entry of a decree against him in a state court, appears in the court by counsel and procures a modification of the decree, he cannot successfully attack the decree collaterally in a court of different jurisdiction, but his remedy, if any, is by appeal.
5. Defendant's appearance by counsel, being not to object to the jurisdiction of the court, but to effect a change in the recitals of the decree on non-jurisdictional grounds, precludes him from contending that he has been deprived of his property without due process of law, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution.

[No. 79.]

*Argued and Submitted November 21, 1895.
Decided January 13, 1896.*

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York to review a judgment of that court entered in pursuance of a judgment of the Court of Appeals of that State affirming the judgment of the Special Term of the Supreme Court, dismissing the complaint in an action brought by Ella L. Laing, plaintiff, against Thomas G. Rigney, on a final decree of the New Jersey Court of Chancery, which awarded to the plaintiff certain costs, counsel fees, and alimony, as well as a decree of divorce. Reversed, and case remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 127 N. Y. 412.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

This was an action brought on August 4, 1887, in the supreme court of the state of New York against Thomas G. Rigney, on a final decree of the court of chancery of the state of New Jersey, whereby had been awarded to Ella L. Rigney, now Ella L. Laing, certain costs, counsel fees, and alimony, as well as a decree of divorce.

The action was tried at a special term of the supreme court, before a judge without a jury, and resulted in a judgment dismissing the complaint. An appeal was taken to the general term of the supreme court, and there the judgment of the special term was reversed. From the judgment of the general term an appeal was taken to the court of appeals of the state of New York, which court reversed the judgment of the general term, and affirmed that of the special term. 127 N. Y. 412. This decision of the court of appeals was duly remitted to the supreme court, and a judgment in accordance therewith was entered November 4, 1891, which, by a writ of error, has been brought to this court.

It appears that these parties were married in the state of New York on February 12, 1873, and continued to reside in that state until January, 1877, when they removed to the city of Elizabeth, in the state of New Jersey. They had two children, a girl and a boy, who were fourteen and eleven years old respectively at the time of the trial. In January, 1883, the defendant ceased to support his family, and subsequently abandoned his family.

On April 23, 1883, she, then being a resident of the state of New Jersey, filed a bill against the defendant in the court of chancery of that state wherein she alleged that the defendant, *whose legal residence was still in the [533] city of Elizabeth, had committed adultery with several persons on different occasions in the city of New York, and prayed for an absolute divorce and for alimony. On August 4, 1883, the defendant appeared in the suit, by his solicitors and counsel, and filed an answer denying the allegations of adultery in the bill.

On May 18, 1886, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill in the divorce suit, wherein she alleged that the defendant had committed adultery with a person named in the city of New York, at various times since the commencement of the suit, and prayed that she might have the same relief against the defendant "as she might have had if the facts stated and charged by way of supplement had been stated in the original bill," and that the marriage be dissolved and a suitable allowance made to her as alimony.

On April 29, 1887, an order was made by the chancellor of New Jersey reciting the appearance and answer of the defendant to the original bill, the filing of the supplemental bill, the issuing of a subpoena thereon, and that, the defendant residing out of the state of New Jersey, process could not be served upon him, and directing that the defendant appear and plead, demur, or answer, to the supplemental bill on or before May 18, 1887, or that in default thereof such decree be made against him as the chancellor should deem equitable and just, and further directing that a copy of the order, with a certified copy of the supplemental bill, should, within five days thereafter, be served upon the defendant personally, or, in default of such service, that notice of the order be published as therein directed. On May 4, 1887, a copy of this order and of the supplemental bill was served on the defendant personally in the city of New York.

On May 19, 1887, an order was made by the chancellor, reciting that due notice of the order of the court of April 29, directing the defendant to appear and answer the said bill on or before May 18, had been duly served, with a copy of the supplemental bill, "as in said order and by the rules of this court directed and prescribed," and that the defendant had not answered the same within the time limited by law *and said order, and re- [534] ferring the case to a special master to ascertain and report on evidence as to the truth of the allegation of the said bill and his opinion thereon.

On June 10, 1887, the special master reported to the court that all material facts charged in the bill and supplemental bill were true, and that a decree of divorce should be granted as prayed for.

On June 11, 1887, a final decree was rendered by the chancellor, confirming the report, granting a divorce, and awarding costs, counsel fees, and alimony. The decree found "that the said defendant has been guilty of the crime of adultery charged against him in the said bill of complaint and the supplemental bill thereto," and it was "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said complainant, Ella L. Rigney, and the said defendant, Thomas G. Rigney, be divorced from the bond of matrimony for the cause aforesaid, and the marriage between them is hereby dissolved accordingly, and the said parties are hereby freed and discharged from the obligations thereof." It was further adjudged and decreed that the custody of the children be awarded to the plaintiff, and that the defendant pay alimony pendente lite at the rate of $100 per month "from the filing of the bill up to the date of this order," and thereafter at the rate of $45 per week, together with the costs of the suit, and the sum of $150 for counsel fees.

It appears by the record that in January, 1888, shortly before the trial of the present case, which occurred in April, 1888, the defendant, by the solicitor who had appeared for him and filed his answer to the original bill in the divorce suit, applied for and obtained from the chancellor an amendment of the decree of June 11, 1887, by striking out from the recitals thereof the words "bill of complaint and the," and "thereto," so as to make the recital read, "and that the said defendant has been guilty of the crime of adultery charged against him in the supplemental bill." In other respects the amended decree was precisely the same as the original, and as amended was enrolled by the procurement and at the cost of the defendant.

535] *As already stated, on August 4, 1887, Mrs. Rigney brought this action in the supreme court of New York upon the final decree of the court of chancery of New Jersey to recover the amount awarded by the decree for alimony and costs, no part of which had been paid. The complaint, served December 3, 1887, set forth the proceedings and final decree of June 11, 1887, as they are above stated; and it further alleged that the defendant, accepting the force of the decree of the New Jersey court, had on September 18, 1887, married one Abbie Ahern. The complaint also alleged that on or about May 4, 1887, a copy of the said supplemental bill and a copy of the order for publication thereof were duly served upon the defendant, in the city of New York, by the delivery thereof to him personally.

The defendant, in his answer, admitted "the making of the order of May 2, 1887, and the service thereof and of the supplemental bill upon him," but alleged that as said service was made in the state of New York, and not in the state of New Jersey, the court of chancery of New Jersey, by such service, obtained no jurisdiction to make any personal decree against him on the supplemental bill. The terms of the answer, in this particular, were as follows:

"This defendant denies that said court of chancery of New Jersey ever obtained jurisdiction of the person of this defendant under said supplemental bill or had any power to enter a personal decree against him; and he denies that such decree, so far as it is a personal decree against this defendant, is of any validity or effect; but he admits that said decree was effectual to dissolve the marriage status existing between him and the plaintiff."

The answer admitted the truth of the allegations of the complaint that the defendant, acting on the assumption of the validity of the decree of divorce, had, on September 18, 1887, married another woman, and that said marriage had been solemnized in the state of New Jersey and also in the state of New York.

Mr. J. Hubley Ashton for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Hamilton Wallis for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court:

The Federal question presented by this record is whether the judgment of the New York courts, in dismissing plaintiff's complaint, which sought to enforce a final decree of the court of chancery of New Jersey, gave due effect to the provisions of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, which require that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state.

The record discloses, and it is conceded, that, upon its face, the decree of the court of chancery of New Jersey purports to be a final decree, granting the divorce, and adjudging the payment of the costs and alimony to recover which this suit was brought.

But the defendant seeks to avail himself of the well-settled doctrine that it is competent for a defendant when sued in the court of his domicile on a judgment obtained against him in another state, to show that the court of such other state had not jurisdiction to render the judgment against him. To sustain this position in this court the defendant relies upon the sixth finding of the trial court, which was as follows: "That the above-named defendant was never served with process in New Jersey under said supplemental bill, and never appeared therein or answered thereto, and the decree of the court of chancery of New Jersey, which was based entirely upon charges of adultery contained in said supplemental bill, did not, under the laws of that state, become binding upon said defendant personally."

It is undoubtedly true, as claimed by the defendant in error, *that if the judgment of [540] the court of chancery of New Jersey was not binding upon the defendant therein personally in that state, no such force could be given to it in the state of New York; and it is contended that, as by the sixth finding above recited, it is found that the decree was not binding personally on the defendant, under the laws of New Jersey, the court of appeals of the state of New York and this court must accept and cannot review such finding. And upon that finding the court of appeals said:

"The trial court found upon undisputed evidence that, under the laws of New Jersey and the practice of its court of chancery, jurisdiction to render a judgment for alimony and costs on the supplemental bill, enforceable in that state against the defendant, could not be acquired without service of a new subpoena in the state, or by his appearance in the action subsequent to the filing of the supplemental bill. . . . Service within the state was found to be, under the law and practice of the court of chancery of New Jersey, an indispensable prerequisite to the rendition of a personal judgment." Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 415, 416.

The plaintiff duly excepted to the findings and conclusions, and it is well settled that exceptions to alleged findings of facts, because unsupported by evidence, present questions of law reviewable in courts of error.

The only evidence adduced by the defendant to sustain his side of the issue as to the law of the state of New Jersey was the testimony of Daniel M. Dickenson, an attorney and counsellor at law of the supreme court of the state of New Jersey, and who had been employed for some years as chief clerk in the chancellor's office. This witness testified that, under the law and practice of New Jersey, a supplemental bill was, as to the matter not alleged in the original bill, an independent proceeding, and that, if there were no service of the subpoena issued under the supplementary bill and no appearance, the defendant would, as to the new matter contained in the supplementary bill, not be in court; but the same witness testified that there was no statute of New Jersey in terms requiring the issuing of a subpoena on any supplemental bill, nor [541] was he able to specify any New Jersey statute which, in his opinion, required such process to be issued on a supplemental bill in any suit in the court of chancery of that state, nor could he cite any judicial decision in that state holding such process to be necessary. He also testified that, "by the practice in New Jersey, if the decree contains the fact that he was served, prima facie he was; if it does not, why, then there is no decree binding him personally; but so long as the decree stands against him in our state, why, of course, it is a good decree." He also stated that the statute conferring jurisdiction upon the court of chancery is in the revision of the New Jersey laws under the head of "Chancery Acts."

The plaintiff put in evidence so much of the revision as related to the court of chancery and which discloses no provision whatever requiring a new subpoena to be issued on any supplementary bill filed in the court of chancery, but it does contain provisions whereby orders directing absent defendants, whether within or without the state, to respond to the bill, and, on proof of personal service of such order, the chancellor may proceed to take evidence to substantiate the bill, and to render such decree as the chancellor shall think equitable and just, and that any defendant upon whom such notice is served shall be bound by the decree in such cause as if he were served with process within the state. New Jersey Rev. Stat. 1877.

As the defendant's only expert witness testified that the rules and regulations of the chancery court were to be found in the statutes, it would seem at least questionable whether in his opinion upon the question as to how and when that court acquires jurisdiction over a defendant in an original or supplemental bill was competent evidence in the case. At all events, we do not read his testimony as alleging that where the court has already acquired jurisdiction over a defendant by personal service within the state, and then, after appearance by counsel, absents himself from the state, and when a supplemental bill is filed in the suit, service on him of a new subpoena within the state is an indispensable prerequisite to the rendition of a personal decree on such supplemental bill. *And when [542] asked directly by defendant's counsel whether such a decree would be effectual in New Jersey to bind the defendant personally, he answered: "I have never known any case decided in New Jersey upon that point."

In the absence of any statutory direction on the subject, and of any reported decision of the supreme court of that state, we are justified in finding the law to be as declared in the very case in hand, where the chancellor of the chancery court of New Jersey has entered a final decree based upon the original bill, the process under which it was served upon the defendant within the state, and upon a supplemental bill, a copy of which with a rule to plead was served upon the defendant without the state. So long as this decree stands it must be deemed to express the law of the state. If the defendant deemed himself aggrieved thereby, his remedy was by an appeal.

In Nash v. Williams, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 226 [22:254], where, in a circuit court of the United States, an attempt was made to destroy the effect of a judgment rendered by a county court by alleging error, this court said:

"The power to review and reverse the decision so made is clearly appellate in its character and can be exercised only by an appellate tribunal in a proceeding directly had for that purpose. It cannot and ought not to be done by another court, in another case, where the subject is presented incidentally, and a reversal sought in such collateral proceeding. The settled rule of law is that jurisdiction having attached in the original case, everything done within the power of that jurisdiction, when collaterally questioned, is to be held conclusive of the rights of the parties, unless impeached for fraud. Every intendment is made to support the proceeding. It is regarded as if it were regular and irreversible for error. In the absence of fraud no question can be collaterally entertained as to anything lying within the jurisdictional sphere of the original case. Infinite confusion and mischiefs would ensue if the rule were otherwise. These remarks apply to the order of sale here in question. The county court had the power to make it and did make it. It is presumed to have been properly made, and the question of its *propriety was not open to [543] examination upon the trial in the circuit court. These propositions are sustained by a long and unbroken line of adjudications in this court. The last one was the case of McNitt v. Turner, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 366 [21:348]."

The principle was very clearly expressed by Mr. Justice Baldwin in Voorhees v. Jackson, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 474 [9:500]:

"The line which separates error in judgment from the usurpation of power is very definite, and is precisely that which denotes the cases where a judgment or decree is reversible only by an appellate court, or may be declared a nullity collaterally, when it is offered in evidence in an action concerning the matter adjudicated or purporting to have been so.

In the one case it is a record importing absolute verity; in the other, mere waste paper. There can be no middle character assigned to judicial proceedings, which are irreversible for error. Such is their effect between the parties to the suit, and such are the immunities which the law affords to a plaintiff who has obtained even an erroneous judgment or execution."

This rule is recognized in the state of New York. In Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 542, 6 Am. Rep. 132, it was said:

"A judgment of a sister state cannot be impeached by showing irregularity in the forms of proceeding or a noncompliance with some law of the state where the judgment was rendered relating thereto, or that the decision was erroneous. Jurisdiction confers power to render the judgment, and it will be regarded as valid and binding until set aside in the court in which it was rendered."

Even if, therefore, it was the opinion of Mr. Dickenson, the defendant's expert witness, that the chancellor of New Jersey erred in thinking that jurisdiction over the defendant personally was conferred by the service on him, within the state, of the subpoena under the original bill, and by the service on him, without the state, of a copy of the supplemental bill and of a rule to plead, such opinion does not support the finding of the trial court that, under the laws of the state of New Jersey, the decrees sued on and offered in evidence was not binding upon the defendant personally. The opinion of the chancellor differed from that [544] of the witness, and, what is more *important, his judgment was that, under the laws and practice of the state of New Jersey, the defendant was in his court, subject to its jurisdiction and bound by its decree.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in error that even if the defendant could not have been personally bound by a decree based on the supplemental bill because a subpoena thereunder had not been served upon him within the state of New Jersey, yet that, as the defendant, after the entry of such a decree against him, appeared in the New Jersey court by counsel, and procured a modification of the decree, he thereby subjected himself to the decree as amended.

It is also claimed that, as he admits that he acquiesced in and ratified the decree, by accepting that portion thereof which relieved him from the contract of marriage, he cannot be heard to impeach the decree in dealing with the change thus caused in his marital relations by subjecting him to the payment of costs and alimony.

The fact that the defendant appeared and procured an amendment of the decree and its enrolment in its final form took place after the bringing of the present suit, and, to form the basis for the contention that he thereby subjected himself to the decree as amended, such fact ought, perhaps, to have been made to appear by an amended or supplemental petition. But as the amended decree was put in evidence by the defendant himself, and was treated by the New York courts as the final decree, whose effect they were considering, we shall regard the amended decree as the real ground of the plaintiff's action.

160 U. S.

As the appearance of the defendant was not for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, but was rather in the nature of an appeal to its jurisdiction, and as the objection successfully made to the decree as originally enrolled was restricted to one of its recitals and did not attack the decree in the respect that it adjudged that he should pay the costs and alimony, there is force in the view that he thereby waived any right to further object to the decree. At all events, he could not successfully attack the decree collaterally in a court of different jurisdiction, but his remedy, if any he had, would be by way of appeal.

*It is claimed by the defendant in error [545] that to hold him personally bound by the decree for the payment of money would, in the circumstances of the present case, deprive him of his property without due process of law. This claim is based upon the assumption that the defendant had no hearing or opportunity to be heard.

As this record discloses that the defendant was served with process under the original bill, and appeared by counsel, and made an answer, and was personally served with a copy of the supplemental bill and with an order to plead, and, after permitting himself to be defaulted, did appear by counsel and procure the vacation of the original decree and the enrolment of the decree amended in accordance with his own motion, it may fairly be said that he both had an opportunity to be heard, and was heard. His appearance by counsel under the supplementary proceedings was not to object to the jurisdiction of the court, but to effect a change in the recitals of the decree on nonjurisdictional grounds. As before stated, we do not deem it necessary to consider the attentions on behalf of the plaintiff in error that by such appearance the defendant estopped himself from alleging error in the decree when thus amended, but we think he certainly precluded himself from now contending that he had been deprived of his property within the meaning of the Federal Constitution.

As, then, the evidence of the defendant did not avail to show want of jurisdiction on the part of the chancery court of New Jersey to render the decree in question, and as it was admitted that the decree remained wholly unpaid, the plaintiff below was entitled to judgment.

The judgment of the supreme court is hereby reversed, and the case is remanded to the supreme court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

BENJAMIN H. JOHNSON, Appt., [546
v.

UNITED STATES and the UTE TRIBE OR NATION OF INDIANS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 546-553.)

Jurisdiction of court of claims—act of March 3, 1891—second clause of act.

1. The court of claims has no general jurisdiction over claims against the United States; it can take cognizance of only those matters which by the terms of some act of Congress are committed to it.

529

2. Under the 1st clause of the act of March 3, 1891, giving the court of claims jurisdiction of "claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed," if the property was not, when taken or destroyed, the property of a citizen, a claim therefor is clearly outside the statute, although the status of the claimant has since changed and he was a citizen at the passage of the act.
3. A claim which has never been filed in the Interior Department does not come within the category of claims provided for in the 2d clause of the said act.

[No. 325.]

Argued November 11, 1895. Decided January 13, 1896.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing for want of jurisdiction a claim of Benjamin H. Johnson against the United States et al., to recover for property taken from him by the Ute Indians. Affirmed. See same case below, 29 Ct. Cl. 1.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

On March 3, 1891, Congress passed an act (26 Stat. at L. 851) vesting certain jurisdiction in the court of claims, the material portion of which is found in the 1st section, and reads as follows:

"That in addition to the jurisdiction which now is, or may hereafter be, conferred upon the court of claims, said court shall have and possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into and finally adjudicate, in the manner provided in this act, all claims of the following classes, namely:

"First. All claims for property of citizens of the United States, taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any band, tribe, or nation in amity with the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for.

"Second. Such jurisdiction shall also extend to all cases which have been examined and allowed by the Interior Department, and also to such cases as were authorized to be examined under the act of Congress making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1885, and under subsequent acts, subject, however, to the limitations hereinafter provided."

547] *The act of March 3, 1885, referred to in this 2d clause, is found in 23 Stat. at L. 362, and following, and the clause providing for examination is on page 376, and is as follows:

"For the investigation of certain Indian depredation claims, $10,000; and in expending said sum the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a complete list of all claims heretofore filed in the Interior Department and which have been approved in whole or in part and now remain unpaid, and also all such claims as are pending but not yet examined, on behalf of citizens of the United States on account of depredations committed, chargeable against any tribe of Indians by reason of any treaty between such tribe and the United States, including the name and address of the claimants, the date of the alleged depredations, by what tribe committed, the date of examination and approval, with a reference to the date and clause of the treaty creating the obligation for payment, to be made and presented to Congress at its next regular session; and the Secretary is authorized and empowered, before making such report, to cause such additional investigation to be made and such further testimony to be taken as he may deem necessary to enable him to determine the kind and value of all property damaged or destroyed by reason of the depredations aforesaid, and by what tribe such depredations were committed; and his report shall include his determination upon each claim, together with the names and residences of witnesses and the testimony of each, and also what funds are now existing or to be derived by reason of treaty or other obligation, out of which the same should be paid."

The subsequent acts (24 Stat. at L. 44-464; 25 Stat. at L. 234-998; 26 Stat. at L. 356) simply make additional appropriations for the examination of the same claims.

On June 20, 1891, claimant filed his petition in the court of claims to recover for property taken from him on June 10, 1866, by the Ute Indians. Subsequently, and on November 17, 1893, he filed an amended petition containing these allegations:

*"Your petitioner, Benjamin H. Johnson, [548] a resident of Scipio, Millard county, in the territory of Utah, and a citizen of the United States, respectfully shows:

"That he was not a citizen of the United States on or about the 10th day of June, 1866, the date of the loss hereinafter described, not having taken out his final citizenship papers until 1873.

"That he moved to the United States in 1848, when he was thirteen years old, and has resided here ever since, and was a citizen of the United States at the date of the passage of the Indian depredation law of March 3, 1891. 26 Stat. at L. 851, chap. 538.

"That it is admitted in allowing claims for Indian depredations under the act of March 3, 1885 (1 Rev. Stat. Supp. (2d ed.) chap. 341, p. 913, note), it has been the practice of the Interior Department to interpret the words 'citizens of the United States,' therein used, as meaning only those who were citizens or had declared their intention to become citizens at the time the depredations were committed, and such citizenship was found when neither alleged nor testified to, where the contrary did not appear.

"That this claim was never presented to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs nor to Congress, nor any agent nor department of the government."

Whereupon the defendants moved to dismiss on the ground that "the claimant was not a citizen of the United States at the time of the depredation alleged to have been committed," which motion was sustained, and on December 4, 1893, a judgment entered dismissing the case for want of jurisdiction. 29 Ct. Cl. 1.

Mr. John Wharton Clark for appellant.
Mr. Charles B. Howry, Assistant Attorney General, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

549] *The principal question turns on the matter of citizenship. Claimant was a citizen at the time of the passage of the act of 1891, but not when the wrongs complained of were committed. Had the court of claims jurisdiction?

That court has no general jurisdiction over claims against the United States. It can take cognizance of only those matters which by the terms of some act of Congress are committed to it. Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163 [39: 108].

Congress did not by the act of 1891 assume, in behalf of the United States, responsibility for all acts of depredation by Indians, nor grant to the court of claims authority "to inquire into and finally adjudicate" all claims therefor. It carefully specified those which might be considered by that court.

By the 1st clause jurisdiction is given of "claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed." But claimant has no such claim. It is for property of an alien taken and destroyed. True, he is now a citizen, and was at the time of the passage of the act. But the language is not "claims of citizens for property," which might include his case. The definition is of the character of the claim and not of the status of the claimant; if the property was not, when taken or destroyed, the property of a citizen, a claim therefor was at that time clearly outside the statute; and while the status of the claimant may have changed, the nature of the claim has not. Suppose the property taken or destroyed had at the time belonged to a citizen, and an alien had succeeded by inheritance to the right to recover compensation for its loss or destruction, is it not clear that such alien would have a claim within the very terms of the act for property of a citizen taken and destroyed, and upon what construction of its language could the court have refused to take jurisdiction?

Further, the property must have been taken or destroyed by Indians "in amity with the United States." Clearly that refers to the status of the Indians at the time of the depredation. Any other construction would lead to manifest absurdities. The certainty of this date renders equally certain the date at which citizenship must exist in the owner of the property taken or destroyed.

550] *Much was said in argument and many authorities are cited in the briefs in respect to the difference between retrospective and prospective statutes, but we fail to see the pertinency of this discussion. Obviously the act is prospective in its operation, in that it grants to the court of claims a jurisdiction that it did not theretofore possess, and authorizes it in the future to hear and determine certain claims. But as to the claims thus committed to its consideration the statute is expressly retrospective. The last proviso in § 2 reads: "And provided further, That no suit or proceeding shall be allowed under this act for any depredation which shall be committed after the passage thereof."

160 U. S.

The only question for determination in this case is whether the claim presented is within either of the classes of past wrongs which are submitted by the act to the jurisdiction of the court. And, for the reasons given, we are clear that it does not come within the 1st clause defining such jurisdiction.

Is it within the 2d clause? By that, jurisdiction is extended to "cases which have been examined and allowed by the Interior Department, and also to such cases as were authorized to be examined under the act of Congress" of March 3, 1885, and subsequent acts. As the claimant alleges in his petition that his claim was never presented to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, nor to Congress, nor any agent nor department of the government, it was not a case which had been examined or allowed by the Interior Department, and does not come under the first of the two classes named. We turn, therefore, to the act of March 3, 1885, to see what cases were authorized to be examined under it.

It appropriates $10,000 for the investigation of certain Indian depredation claims, and in describing them it mentions such claims as had been theretofore filed in the Interior Department and approved in whole or in part, and adds, "also such claims as are pending but not yet examined, on behalf of a citizen of the United States on account of depredations committed." In order to come within the second class the claim must be one on behalf of a citizen of the United States, and also one pending but not yet examined. *If it be assumed that claimant was, on March 3, 1885, a citizen, as may be inferred from the language of the petition, although not explicitly averred, the question arises whether the different phraseology of that act would include a claim in his favor, although he was not a citizen at the time of the depredation. But passing that question, the claim must be one then "pending but not yet examined," and this language, taken in connection with the words descriptive of the prior class, manifestly refers to such claims as had been presented for examination, and so, in a technical sense of the term, were pending, and does not embrace all cases of depredations, whether claims therefor had been presented or not.

We are aware of the fact that the Interior Department, acting under an opinion of its chief law clerk, of August 23, 1886, has construed the authority given by the 2d clause of this act to reach to all claims existing and not barred, whether at the date of the act on file or not in the Interior Department. We quote from that opinion, approved by the assistant secretary, as follows:

"I am of the opinion, however, that all claims that were not barred March 3, 1885, are included within the claims to be investigated, although filed after the passage of either the act of 1885 or 1886, because the act of May 29, 1872, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, require the Secretary of the Interior to investigate such claims and make report thereof to Congress in the same manner as provided for by the act of March 3, 1885. This act and the rules and regulations adopted by the Secretary, as provided for by said act, is not repugnant to any provision of § 2156, but provides for the enforcement and execution of that section. As no statutory bar attaches to any claim for depredations committed since the adoption of the Revised Statutes, such claims may be filed at any time."

531

We are unable to concur in the views thus expressed. Without stopping to inquire whether U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2156, may or may not be repealed by this act of March 3, 1885, and conceding, for the purposes of this case, that such section remains in full force and effect, we are of the opinion that the act of 552]*March 3, 1885, is special and limited in its scope. It purports to be limited, for it is for the investigation of "certain Indian depredation claims." Not only is it by these words restricted, but the meagerness of the appropriation, $10,000, indicates the narrowness of the investigation intended, and the limited number of claims which were designed to be examined. The claims to be reported are defined. First, those which "have been approved." This necessarily limits, so far as this portion of the section is concerned, the report to those claims presented, considered, and acted upon by the Interior Department. It refers to what has been and not what may be. It defines and includes, not claims which might thereafter be presented and investigated, but those which at the date of the act had been finally passed upon and determined by the Interior Department. There is no possibility of construction which would open this clause to include any claims other than those already considered and determined by the department. The other clause of the section describes "such claims as are pending, but not yet examined." That either means such claims as have been already presented and are before the department for consideration, or it includes all unallowed claims then existing and not barred. If the latter was the thought of Congress in this enactment, there was no need of a division into classes, for the one description of claims existing would include all, both those allowed and those not yet examined and allowed; those filed and those not filed. The obvious intent was not to reach all Indian claims, but to call from the Interior Department a statement of the claims then before the department, and upon such presentation to determine its future action. And the purpose of the 2d clause in the act of March 3, 1891, was to take the cases which on March 3, 1885, were pending in the department and transfer them in bulk to the court of claims.

It follows, therefore, that this claim, having been filed in the department, does not come within the category of claims provided for in the 2d clause of the act conferring jurisdiction upon the court.

It was further insisted in the argument that 553] the claimant *had taken out his first papers at the time of the depredation, and therefore that when he took out his final papers citizenship related back, and he was entitled, for all the benefits of this act, to claim the privileges of citizenship from the date of his first papers. But there is nothing in his petition to show when he took them out, and therefore the contention, if it had any foundation in law, has none in fact. It is true, mention is made in the opinion of the court of claims of the time of taking out his first papers, but we cannot act upon any such statement, but must be governed by the averments of the petition.

We see nothing else in the record which requires comment. The judgment of the court of claims was correct, and it is affirmed.

FRANK CARVER, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 553-556.)

Dying declarations—subsequent declaration—repetition—objection to testimony.

1. Declarations of the victim of a homicide as to the facts of the homicide, made under the impression of almost immediate dissolution, are admissible in evidence on a trial for the crime.
2. A subsequent declaration by the same person that her former dying declaration was true is not admissible when it does not appear whether she then spoke under the admonition of her approaching end or anticipated recovery.
3. The repetition of a dying declaration cannot itself be admitted as a reiteration of the alleged facts, if made when hope has been regained.
4. Testimony for which a proper foundation has not been laid, and which is not legitimate rebutting testimony, is sufficiently objected to by objecting that no foundation therefor has been laid, without challenging it on the ground that it is not proper in rebuttal.

[No. 721.]

Submitted November 20, 1895. Decided January 13, 1896.

NOTE.—For what purposes evidence of intoxication may be given by one accused of crime, see note to Hopt v. Utah, 28: 873.

As to when confessions of accused are evidence against him, see note to Hopt v. Utah, 28: 262.

Declarations of injured party as to injury; expressions of pain, suffering, etc.—see note to Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Moseley, 19: 437.

Declarations of third persons referred to, evidence against party, see note to Clerk v. Russell, 1: 660, and Leeds v. Marine Ins. Co. 4: 268.

Dying declarations, when admissible in cases of homicide; under sense of impending death; subsequent hope of recovery; by signs or other modes; obtained by solicitation; how restricted; must relate to facts; duty of court; declarations in favor of accused.

Dying declarations are admissible only in cases of homicide, where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge and the circumstances of the death are the subject of such declarations. Rcy-nolds v. State, 68 Ala. 502; Johnson v. State, 50 Ala. 456; Hudson v. State, 3 Coldw. 355; Leiber v. Com. 9 Bush, 13; Wooten v. Wilkins, 39 Ga. 223, 99 Am. Dec. 456; Hill v. State, 41 Ga. 484; State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 257; State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 407; Marshall v. Chicago & G. E. R. Co. 48 Ill. 475, 95 Am. Dec. 561; Barnett v. People, 54 Ill. 325; State v. Harper, 35 Ohio St. 78, 35 Am. Rep. 596; Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 281, 41 Am. Rep. 815; State v. McCanon, 51 Mo. 160; Wright v. State, 41 Tex. 246; Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 636; Hackett v. People, 54 Barb. 370; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; Wilson v. Boerem, 15 Johns. 286; Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510; State v. Shel-ton, 2 Jones, L. 360, 64 Am. Dec. 587; Brownell v. Pacific R. Co. 47 Mo. 239; Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 41 Am. Rep. 815.

Dying declarations are not incompetent because

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas to review a judgment convicting Frank Carver of murder. Reversed, and cause remanded with a direction for a new trial.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Frank Carver was convicted of the murder of Anna Maledon in the circuit court of the 554] United States for the western *district of Arkansas, and sentenced to be hanged, whereupon he sued out this writ of error.

The fatal wound was inflicted by the discharge of a pistol on the night of March 25, 1895, at Muscogee, Creek Nation, in the Indian country, but the death occurred at Fort Smith, Arkansas, May 19, 1895.

In addition to other evidence, there was testimony tending to show that Carver and the deceased were attached to each other, that he was very drunk on the night of the homicide, and that he was in the habit of carrying a pistol, which he was flourishing at that time. A declaration in writing in respect of the circumstances attendant upon the commission of the act, made by the deceased March 27, 1895, was admitted in evidence against objection as made under a sense of impending death.

The testimony of the clerk of the court, Wheeler, to the effect that the deceased, after she was brought to Fort Smith, which was April 14, 1895, said that her former statement was true, was admitted subject to an exception because no proper foundation was laid for its admission.

Exceptions were also taken to certain parts of the charge.

Mr. Wm. M. Cravens for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. M. Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

of the constitutional requirement that the accused shall be confronted with witnesses against him. State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299; State v. Nash, 7 Iowa, 347; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131; People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32; Brown v. Com. 73 Pa. 321, 13 Am. Rep. 740; Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. 246; Woodside v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655; Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 353; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713; Walston v. Com. 16 B. Mon. 15; State v. Tilghman, 11 Ired. L. 513; State v. Vansant, 80 Mo. 67; People v. Green, 1 Denio, 614.

Dying declarations, though made with a full consciousness of approaching death, are admissible in evidence only where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declarations. Rex v. Mead, 2 Barn. & C. 605, 4 Dowl. & R. 120; Rex v. Hutchinson, 2 Barn. & C. 608, note; Rex v. Lloyd, 4 Car. & P. 233.

In one case where A and B were both poisoned by the same means, upon an indictment against the prisoner for the murder of A, evidence was allowed to be given of the dying declarations of B, the ground alleged being "that it was all one transaction." Rex v. Baker, 2 Mood. & R. 53; State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. L. 321; State v. Wilson, 23 La. Ann. 558.

Dying declarations are admissible in prosecutions for manslaughter. State v. Hannah, 10 La. Ann. 131.

They must be made, not merely in articulo mortis, but under the sense of impending death, without expectation or hope of recovery. People v. Chin Mook Sow, 51 Cal. 597; People v. Ah Dat, 49 Cal. 652; People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49, 95 Am. Dec. 49; People v. Lee, 17 Cal. 79; State v. Garrand, 5 Or. 216; Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229, 35 Am. Dec. 54; Hays v. State, 40 Md. 633; Hill v. Com. 2 Gratt. 594; State v. Blackburn, 80 N. C. 474; Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 636; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308, 12 Am. Rep. 200; State v. Cautieny, 34 Minn. 1; State v. Cameron, 2 Chand. (Wis.) 172; Fitzgerald v. State, 11 Neb. 577; Rakes v. People, 2 Neb. 157; State v. Wilson, 24 Kan. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 257; State v. Simon, 50 Mo. 370; People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112; People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474; Montgomery v. State, 11 Ohio, 424; Scott v. People, 63 Ill. 508; Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 144; Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 66; Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 193; Smith v. State, 9 Humph. 9; Walston v. Com. 16 B. Mon. 34; Com. v. Haney, Jr. 127 Mass. 455; State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378; Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 159; People v. Perry, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 27; People v. Knickerbocker, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 302; Small v. Com. 91 Pa. 304; Dumas v. State, 62 Ga. 58; Thompson v. State, 24 Ga. 297; Brown v. State, 32 Miss. 433;

160 U. S.

Lewis v. State, 9 Smedes & M. 115; Jordan v. State, 81 Ala. 20; Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 192; May v. State, 55 Ala. 39; Ex parte Nettles, 58 Ala. 268; Benavides v. State, 31 Tex. 579; Edmondson v. State, 41 Tex. 496; State v. Brunneto, 13 La. Ann. 45; State v. Spencer, 30 La. Ann. 362; State v. Freeman, 1 Speers, L. 57; State v. Poll, 1 Hawks, 412, 9 Am. Dec. 655; State v. Peace, 1 Jones, L. 251; Vass v. Com. 3 Leigh, 736, 24 Am. Dec. 695; Bull v. Com. 14 Gratt. 613; United States v. Woods, 4 Cranch, C. C. 484; United States v. Veitch, 1 Cranch, C. C. 115; State v. Quick, 15 Rich. L. 342.

It must be proved that the man was dying, and there must be a settled hopeless expectation of death in the declarant. Reg. v. Peel, 2 Fost. & F. 21.

The belief of a speedy dissolution is the test by which the competency of dying declarations is to be measured. It is not error to admit evidence showing the condition of the deceased at the time such dying declarations were made. Sullivan v. Com. 93 Pa. 284.

As to whether consciousness of death can be inferred from the nature of the wound, the party being speechless, see Reg. v. Morgan, 14 Cox C. C. 337, 28 Eng. Rep. (Moak's ed.) 583; Reg. v. Beddingfield, 14 Cox, C. C. 341, 28 Eng. Rep. (Moak's ed.) 587.

It is not necessary that the declarations should be stated at the time to be made under a sense of impending death. It is enough if it satisfactorily appears in any mode that they were made under that sanction; whether it be directly proved by the express language of the declarant, or be inferred from his evident danger, or the opinions of the medical or other attendants stated to him, or from his conduct or other circumstances of the case. People v. Taylor, 59 Cal. 640; People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, 44 Am. Rep. 549.

It must be made to appear that it was made under a fixed belief and moral conviction that death was then impending and certain to follow almost immediately, and otherwise under such circumstances as to exclude the supposition that the declarant in making it was influenced by malice, revenge, or any conceivable motive to misrepresent the real facts. Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 101.

If it appears in any mode that there was a hope of recovery, however faint, still existing in the mind of the declarant, the declaration is not admissible. People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, 44 Am. Rep. 549; Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 296; People v. Anderson, 2 Wheel. C. C. 398.

Dying declarations are not admissible in evidence if the declarant had the slightest hope of recovery, although he dies within an hour afterwards. People v. Hodgdon, 52 Cal. 72, 36 Am. Rep. 30.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

While in the admission of the declarations of the victim as to the facts of a homicide the utmost caution must be exercised to the end that it be satisfactorily established that they were made under the impression of almost immediate dissolution, we think that the evidence of the state of mind of Anna Maledon, in that particular, when the declaration of March 27, 1895, was made, and which we need not recapitulate, was sufficient to justify the 555 circuit court in admitting *it. Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 140, 151 [36: 917, 921]. But the testimony of Wheeler stands on different ground and we are of opinion should not have been admitted.

In answer to leading questions, the witness said that he saw Anna Maledon after she was brought to Fort Smith; that he asked her whether the declaration of March 27, 1895, was true; and that she replied "It was, in every particular."

The deceased received the fatal wound March 25, and her statement of March 27, 1895, was admitted as a dying declaration. The interview with Wheeler was on or after April 14, 1895, and whether she then spoke under the admonition of her approaching end or anticipated recovery does not appear.

It has been held that a declaration is admissible if made while hope lingers, if it is afterwards ratified when hope is gone (Reg. v. Steele, 12 Cox, C. C. 168); or if made when the person is without hope, though afterwards he regains confidence. State v. Tilghman, 11 Ired. L. 513; Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. 963, 21 Am. Rep. 330; 1 Greenl. Ev. (15th ed.) § 158, note a. But the repetition of a dying declaration cannot itself be admitted as a reiteration of the alleged facts if made when hope has been regained. Nor can we perceive that this

A hope of recovery subsequently entertained will not affect the admissibility of a declaration made under the consciousness of impending death. State v. Kilgore, 70 Mo. 546; Reg. v. Hubbard, 14 Cox, C. C. 565; Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. 963, 21 Am. Rep. 330; Jackson v. Com. 19 Gratt. 656.

A, when under sense of impending death, declared that the shooting was accidental; a week afterwards, while in cheerful spirits, said her former statement was a "story." Held, that her last statement was not admissible. Stewart v. State, 2 Lea, 598.

A man was wounded in a fight with the defendant, and on the same day, while expecting to die, made certain statements in relation to the fight. He lived ten days longer, and his physicians expressed the hope to him that he would recover, and he said, "I hope so too," but at last died of the wounds. It was held by the court that evidence of his statements was admissible on the trial of defendant for murder. Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. 963, 21 Am. Rep. 330.

The declaration may be by signs or other appropriate modes of communication. People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474; Rex v. Mosley, 1 Mood. C. C. 97; Com. v. Casey, 11 Cush. 417, 59 Am. Dec. 150; Reg. v. Morgan, 14 Cox, C. C. 337, 28 Eng. Rep. (Moak's ed.) 583; Reg. v. Beddingfield, 14 Cox, C. C. 341, 28 Eng. Rep. (Moak's ed.) 587.

It is no objection to their admissibility that they were made in answer to leading questions, or obtained by pressing and earnest solicitation. 3 Russell, Crimes & Misdemeanors (5th ed.) 360; Com. v. Casey, supra; Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455; Vass v. Com. 3 Leigh, 786, 24 Am. Dec. 635; Ingram v. State, 67 Ala. 67; Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 66; People v. Vincente Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17; State v. Wilson, 24 Kan. 189, 33 Am. Rep. 257; State v. Trivas, 32 La. Ann. 1080, 36 Am. Rep. 293; Rex v. Fagent, 7 Car. & P. 238; Rex v. Reason, 1 Strange, 499; Rex v. Woodcock, 2 Leach, C. C. 561.

An instruction that dying declarations given in evidence on the part of the state are to be received with the same degree of credit as if testified to under oath on examination is erroneous. State v. Mathes, 90 Mo. 571; State v. Vansaut, 80 Mo. 67; Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322.

They must be uttered under a sense of impending dissolution, and it does not matter that death failed to ensue until a considerable time after such declarations were made. 3 Russell, Crimes & Misdemeanors (5th ed.) 355; Reynolds v. State, 68 Ala. 502; Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587; McDaniel v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 401, 47 Am. Dec. 93; State v. Wilson, 24 Kan. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 257; Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455; Com. v. Cooper, 5 Allen, 495, 81 Am. Dec. 762; Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; People v. Simpson, 48

Mich. 474; Rakes v. People, 2 Neb. 157; State v. Kilgore, 70 Mo. 546; Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. 970, 21 Am. Rep. 330; State v. Oliver, 2 Houst. (Del.) 585; State v. Tilgham, 11 Ired. L. 513; State v. Poll, 1 Hawks, 442, 9 Am. Dec. 605; State v. Daniel, 31 La. Ann. 91; People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474; Rex v. Woodcock, 2 Leach, C. C. 5; Rex v. Tinkler, 1 East, P. C. 354; Rex v. Mosley, Mood. C. C. 97; Rex v. Bonner, 6 Car. & P. 386; Craven's Case, 1 Lew. C. C. 77.

Dying declarations are restricted to the act of killing and to the circumstances immediately attending it and forming a part of the res gestæ. When they relate to former and distinct transactions, and embrace facts or circumstances not immediately illustrating or connected with the declarant's death, they are inadmissible. Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 192; Ben v. State, 37 Ala. 103; Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618; Faire v. State, 58 Ala. 74; Rattree v. State, 53 Ga. 570; West v. State, 7 Tex. App. 150; People v. Fong Ah Sing, 64 Cal. 253; Nelson v. State, 7 Humph. 542; Moses v. State, 11 Humph. 232; Hudson v. State, 3 Coldw. 355; Leiber v. Com. 9 Bush, 13; Luby v. State, 12 Bush, 1; State v. Shelton, 2 Jones, L. 360, 64 Am. Dec. 587; State v. Wood, 53 Vt. 560; State v. Center, 35 Vt. 386; Wroe v. State, 20 Ohio St. 460; Hackett v. People, 54 Barb. 370; Marshall v. Chicago & G. E. R. Co. 48 Ill. 475, 95 Am. Dec. 561; State v. Vansant, 80 Mo. 67; State v. Draper, 65 Mo. 335, 27 Am. Rep. 287; State v. Chambers, 87 Mo. 406; Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 333, 41 Am. Rep. 815; Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 66; Weyrich v. People, 89 Ill. 90; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 397 (19: 437).

What occurs before or after the act has been done does not constitute a part of the res gestæ, although the interval of separation may be very brief. Montgomery v. State, and Jones v. State, supra; Wheeler v. State, 14 Ind. 573; Binns v. State, 57 Ind. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 48; Bland v. State, 2 Ind. 603; Field v. State, 57 Miss. 474, 34 Am. Rep. 476, and note.

Dying declarations must be at the time and place of shooting, in order to be admitted on the ground that they are part of the res gestæ. Before such declarations, alleged to have been made some time after the shooting, will be admitted in evidence, it must be shown that the declarant was aware of his approaching death. Kane v. Com. 109 Pa. 541; Kendrick v. State, 55 Miss. 436; Kraner v. State, 61 Miss. 158; Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587; People v. Ah Lee, 60 Cal. 85; Territory v. Davis (Ariz.) 10 Pac. 359; Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 36; Chapin v. Marlborough, 9 Gray, 244, 69 Am. Dec. 281; Com. v. Densmore, 12 Allen, 535; Wroe v. State, 20 Ohio St. 460; Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405; People v. Grunzig, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 299.

is otherwise, because the record states that Wheeler was sworn "in rebuttal." Rebutting evidence is evidence in denial of some affirmative case or fact which defendant has attempted to prove. Our attention has been called to no attempt on behalf of defendant below to prove that Anna Maledon made on her death bed, after her declaration of March 27, any retraction thereof, or any statement inconsistent with it, if evidence to that effect would have justified the introduction of this testimony as tending to rebut it.

It is true that counsel for plaintiff in error rested their objection on the ground that no foundation for the admission of the testimony was laid. But while the omission to challenge the evidence as not properly in rebuttal may have waived the mere order of proof, this did not concede that the want of foundation could be excused for any reason. The contention was that the foundation must be laid, and that covered sufficiently every suggestion that [556] the evidence was admissible without it. And as this was not legitimate rebutting testimony, it could not be admitted without the proper foundation, although the order of proof was waived.

As we understand the record, a sharp controversy was raised over what deceased had said at the time of the homicide; and the evidence of Wheeler may have had so important a bearing that its admission must be regarded as prejudicial error.

Whether the homicide was committed under such circumstances as to reduce the grade of the crime from murder to manslaughter, or as to permit an acquittal on the ground of misadventure, were questions raised in the case on behalf of plaintiff in error; and it is urged that the exception should be sustained to the statement in the charge that "if a man does

The exclamations of deceased at the time he was shot, "O God! O my God!"—are admissible as part of the res gestæ. People v. Brown, 59 Cal. 345; Stagner v. State, 9 Tex. App. 440; State v. Porter, 34 Iowa, 131; State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 178; Burns v. State, 61 Ga. 192; Jackson v. State, 52 Ala. 305; Com. v. Hackett, 2 Allen, 136; Lewis v. State, 9 Smedes & M. 115.

The following question to the wounded man, and his answer, are not admissible: "Had either of them threatened to injure you before?" "Yes; my wife (one of the respondents) has threatened a thousand times to kill me before. She threatened to kill me before she went away the last time. She went away in July; I think, though, it was August 10th. She came back day before yesterday." State v. Wood, 53 Vt. 560.

Where the declaration was: "I believed he (defendant) was going after his pistol when he went into the house. . . . I had seen him at the house with a pistol before,"—held, that this ought to have been excluded. State v. Vansant, 80 Mo. 67.

The name of the person who committed the homicide, as well as the name of his victim, may be proved by the dying declarations of the latter. Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 55 Am. Rep. 218; State v. Hamilton, 27 La. Ann. 400; Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 17; State v. Johnson, 76 Mo. 121; Lister v. State, 1 Tex. App. 739.

Where the deceased said, on the evening before the morning of her death, "Mr. F. has killed me," and, about the same time, "I am dead; Mr. F. has killed me,"—it was held that the declarations were admissible of the dying declarations of the deceased. State v. Freeman, 1 Speers, L. 57.

Where two persons were killed and A was found dead at a short distance from his house, and B, his wife, was found in the house mortally wounded,—held, that her dying declarations were not admissible upon the trial for the murder of A. Brown v. Com. 73 Pa. 321, 13 Am. Rep. 740; State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 407; Krebs v. State, 3 Tex. App. 348; State v. Sullivan, 51 Iowa, 142; State v. Fitzhugh, 2 Or. 227; Reg. v. Hind, 29 L. J. M. C. 147.

The declarations of the deceased are admissible only as to those things as to which he would have been competent to testify if sworn as a witness in the cause. They must relate to facts only, and not to mere matters of opinion or belief. People v. Taylor, 59 Cal. 640; People v. Vincente Sanchez, 24 Cal. 26; Warren v. State, 9 Tex. App. 629, 35 Am. Rep. 745; Roberts v. State, 5 Tex. App. 141; Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 221; State v. Chambers, 87 Mo. 406; State v. Draper, 65 Mo. 335, 27 Am. Rep. 287; McPherson v. State, 22 Ga. 478; Whitley v. State, 38 Ga. 60; Ratteree v. State, 53 Ga. 570; Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909; Reynolds v. State, 68 Ala. 502; Ben v. State, 160 U. S.

37 Ala. 103; Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618; Mose v. State, 35 Ala. 421; McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 674; People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431; Moeck v. People, 100 Ill. 242, 39 Am. Rep. 38; Collins v. Com. 12 Bush, 271; Nelson v. State, 7 Humph. 542; Binns v. State, 46 Ind. 311; Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 41 Am. Rep. 815; Wroe v. State, 20 Ohio St. 460; State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12; People v. Shaw, 63 N. Y. 38; United States v. Veiteh, 1 Cranch, C. C. 115.

The ascertainment of the primary facts is for the court. The judicial mind must be satisfied and when satisfied that the requisite predicate is established, the duty to receive the evidence is imperative. Ward v. State, 78 Ala. 441; McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672; Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 21; Kilpatrick v. Com. 31 Pa. 198; Kehoe v. Com. 85 Pa. 127; People v. Smith, 104 N. Y. 491, 58 Am. Rep. 537; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 601; Com. v. Murray, Ashm. 41; State v. Frazier, 1 Houst. Crim. Rep. 176; Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. 903, 21 Am. Rep. 330; State v. Williams, 63 N. C. 62; Owens v. State, 59 Miss. 547; Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322; Bolin v. State, 9 Lea, 516; State v. Cantieny, 34 Minn. 1; State v. Elliott, 45 Iowa, 486; State v. Johnson, 76 Mo. 121; Doles v. State, 97 Ind. 555; Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 66; Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 17; People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32; State v. Ah Lee, 7 Or. 237.

But the court can determine only as to the admissibility of dying declarations. Their weight or credit must be left to the jury. Campbell v. State, 38 Ark. 509; State v. McCanon, 51 Mo. 160; Walker v. State, 37 Tex. 366; People v. Abbott (Cal.) 4 Pac. 769; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463, and 601; Doles v. State, supra; Com. v. Casey, 11 Cush. 417, 59 Am. Dec. 150.

Dying declarations may be given in evidence, as well to acquit as to convict the prisoner. Moore v. State, 12 Ala. 764.

The dying declarations of the deceased are not only admissible against a prisoner, but also in his favor. Rex v. Seafie, 1 Mood. & R. 551; People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112; Moore v. State, supra; Moeck v. People, 100 Ill. 242, 39 Am. Rep. 38; Adams v. People, 47 Ill. 376; Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 140 (36: 917).

When the declarant, if living, would have been incompetent to testify by reason of infamy and the like, his dying declarations are inadmissible. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.) § 157; Nesbit v. State, 43 Ga. 238; Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 221.

The dying declaration of a husband is competent evidence against the wife, on her trial for his murder, to show her guilt; and on the trial of the husband for the murder of his wife, her dying declarations are evidence against him. Moore v. State, 12 Ala. 764; People v. Green, 1 Denio, 614; Pennsylvania v. Stoops, Add. 381.

not exercise the highest possible care that he can exercise under the circumstances, when handling firearms, his act passes out of that classification known as an accident." But we do not feel called upon to consider this question or any of the other errors assigned, as they may not arise on a new trial in the form in which they are now presented.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded with a direction to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

MISSOURI PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Pf. in Err.,

v.

MARY FITZGERALD, Administratrix of
JOHN FITZGERALD.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 556-584.)

Federal question—when not presented—denial of Federal right—order of circuit court, how reviewed—when reviewable on state judgment—removal of cause.

1. A decision of a state court which rests on independent ground not involving a Federal question, and broad enough to maintain the judgment, cannot be reviewed in this court.
2. A decision of a state court which does not question the validity of an act of Congress or deny any right claimed under it does not present a Federal question.
3. The appointment of a receiver for a corporation by a Federal court before such an appointment is made by a state court is ineffectual to divest the control of the state court over the assets of the corporation, or debar its right to enforce its judgment for an accounting and other relief sought in a suit which had been pending several years, and in which a receiver had been asked and direction therefor made by an appellate court on remanding the case prior to the appointment by the Federal court.
4. The decision of a state court that the rule that the court which first acquires jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action will retain it until the controversy is finally determined applies, and that the appointment of a receiver by the United States circuit court was under the circumstances ineffectual to divest the control of the state court over the assets of a company,—denies no Federal right.
5. An order of the circuit court remanding a cause to a state court cannot be reviewed in this court by any direct proceeding for that purpose.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court, where Federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martín v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zaue, 2: 634; Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; Commercial Bank v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question; what constitutes Federal question,—see note to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37: 267.

As to removal of causes from state to Federal courts where United States Constitution, act of Congress or treaty comes in question, see note to Little York Gold Washing & W. Co. v. Keyes, 24: 656.

6. If a state court proceeds to judgment in a cause notwithstanding an application for removal, its ruling in retaining the case will be reviewable in this court after final judgment, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709.
7. If a case be removed to the circuit court and a motion to remand be made and denied, then after final judgment the action of the circuit court in refusing to remand may be reviewed here on error or appeal.
8. If the circuit court and the state court go to judgment respectively, each judgment is open to revision in the appropriate mode.
9. The denial of an application to remove a cause to a Federal court is not prejudicial when the cause is remanded by the Federal court to the state court, which has taken no action in the mean time.
10. If the circuit court remands a cause and the state court thereupon proceeds to final judgment, the action of the circuit court is not reviewable on writ of error to such judgment.

[No. 627.]

Submitted December 9, 1895. Decided January 13, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska to review a judgment of that court against the defendant, The Missouri Pacific Railway Company, in an action brought by John Fitzgerald, on behalf of himself and all other stockholders of the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company against said railway company et al. for an accounting, and to declare null and void certain action of the directors and arrangements between the Missouri Pacific Company and the construction company, and for the payment of moneys due the construction company, etc. Pending the action, Mary Fitzgerald was appointed administratrix of John Fitzgerald. On motion to dismiss or affirm. Dismissed.

See same case below, 45 Fed. Rep. 812, 41 Neb. 374.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a petition filed December 24, 1888, in the district court for Lancaster county, Nebraska, by John Fitzgerald, suing on behalf of himself and all other stockholders of the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company against that company and the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska. The petition was based on two contracts (copies of which were annexed), one bearing date April 28, 1886, between the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company and the Denver, Memphis, & Atlantic Railway Company, a corporation*organized under the laws of the state of Kansas. By this contract the construction company agreed to build a railroad in Kansas from the east to the west line of that state; to furnish all materials and money; to equip the same with at least $1,000 of rolling stock per mile; to grade the line according to the engineer's surveys; to furnish oak ties on curves not less than 2,600 to the mile, and steel rails not less than 26 pounds to the yard; to build such depots and stations as the Denver company should require, and all necessary sidings or turnouts, and, generally, to construct the road equal to railroads then being built in southern Kansas. The Denver company agreed to pay $16,000 per mile of its full-paid capital stock for every mile of completed road constructed, and $16,000, in its first-mortgage bonds, per mile of single track of the road, which bonds were each to be for $1,000, or such other denomination as the parties should agree upon, draw interest at 6 per cent, be dated July 1, 1886, run thirty years from date, and be secured by a trust deed on the line and branches. They were to be delivered as the construction company required them. The Denver company was also to deliver to the construction company all municipal and county bonds voted and to be voted in aid of the railroad, and all donations thereto, and procure the right of way in advance of the work so as not to delay the construction, but the construction company was to pay for the right of way.

The other contract, dated May 4, 1886, was between the Missouri Pacific Railway Company and the construction company. It recited the contract of April 28, and also that the Missouri Pacific company desired to obtain control of the railway. The construction company agreed to sell to the Missouri Pacific company all the securities which it should receive under the first contract, for which the Missouri Pacific company was to deliver to it 5 per cent bonds at the rate of $12,000 per mile of completed road. The Missouri Pacific company also agreed to transport at cost the men and materials of the construction company while it was carrying on the work.

The petition alleged that the construction 559] company was a *corporation of Iowa, having a capital of a million and a half, divided into shares of $100 each, of which Fitzgerald held $1,500, S. H. Mallory, $1,500, and Gould and other citizens of New York, something over $10,000; that the holders of over 8,000 shares were officers and directors of the Missouri Pacific company; and that the bankers of the latter company held 2,000 shares. It was further alleged that shortly after the execution of the two contracts, all the directors of the Denver company, except Fitzgerald and Mallory, resigned, and their places were filled by officers and directors of the Missouri Pacific company; that the directory of the construction company was so changed that of its five directors three were connected with the Missouri Pacific company, Fitzgerald and Mallory being the other two. The work in the field was carried on by Fitzgerald and Mallory, and the financial dealings of the Denver and the construction companies were in the hands of the New York directors. Fitzgerald complained of many transactions of the New York directors of the construction company which were prejudicial to himself and other creditors and stockholders and in the interest of the Missouri Pacific company.

The road was built by the construction company, and Fitzgerald alleged that, after that was accomplished, he made efforts to secure an accounting between the Missouri Pacific and the construction companies, which were unsuccessful, and he brought the suit as a stockholder for the purpose of settling the dealings between the two companies.

The petition also averred that the Denver company failed to comply with the provisions of the contract in reference to procuring the right of way, to the damage of the construction company, for which it charged that the Missouri Pacific company was liable.

It was also alleged that the construction company not only owed Fitzgerald a large amount of money, but for money expended in the bringing of this as well as other suits, for attorneys' fees, and other like matters, for which he asked reimbursement.

*The prayer of the petition was that an[560 accounting be had between the Missouri Pacific company and the construction company; that certain action of the board of directors and arrangements between the Missouri Pacific company and the construction company be declared null and void; that the Missouri Pacific company be compelled to account in relation to certain enumerated matters and generally, and pay over all moneys found due to the construction company; also that complainant "be reimbursed for all expenses and attorneys' fees in other suits that he has been forced by the action of said directors to commence, as well as in this case;" and for general relief.

The answer of the Missouri Pacific company was filed January 19, 1889, and admitted that defendant was a corporation duly organized under the laws of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska; but averred that the liability proceeded on, if any, was a liability of the company incorporated under the laws of the state of Kansas. It charged that while the contract between the Denver and construction companies required the Denver company to acquire the right of way, the construction company undertook to procure it and became responsible to the Missouri Pacific company for a good title; that some 15 or more miles of the railroad were built over the public lands without complying with the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands, so that for that distance of the road the Missouri Pacific company did not acquire such title as it was entitled to, and it claimed that if there should be an accounting between the construction company and itself, it should not be required to pay or account for any portion of the line where the lawful right of way had not been secured, and that a deduction of $12,000 per mile of railroad so situated should be made. The answer further alleged that Fitzgerald had theretofore commenced suit in the district court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, against the construction company to recover a sum exceeding $50,000, and caused garnishee proceedings to be instituted against the Missouri Pacific company, upon which it was required to *answer as to all moneys in its hands or[561 under its control belonging to the construction company or due from the Missouri Pacific company thereto, but that it had no interest in Fitzgerald's individual claim or knowledge concerning the merits thereof. Various other admissions, denials, and averments were made in the answer upon the merits, which it is unnecessary to set forth. The construction company filed a demurrer to the petition.

On the same day, January 19, 1889, the Missouri Pacific company filed its petition to remove the cause to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska on two grounds, diverse citizenship and the question raised by the claim of the Missouri Pacific company in respect of part of the road constructed over the public lands. It appeared from the pleadings that Fitzgerald was a citizen of Nebraska, and that the construction company was a corporation of Iowa; that the Missouri Pacific company was a corporation organized under the laws of Kansas, Missouri, and Nebraska; but in its answer, as already stated, the Missouri Pacific company claimed that it was not the corporation referred to in the petition, and that the liabilities arising under the contract were liabilities of the company organized and existing under the laws of Kansas. The construction company also filed a petition for removal.

The district court denied the petitions and refused to accept the bonds. The Missouri Pacific company, however, filed the record in the circuit court of the United States, and Fitzgerald filed a motion to remand and a plea to the jurisdiction, which motion was denied and the plea overruled, and the cause was referred to a special master to take proofs.

May 6, 1891, the cause came on to be heard upon the pleadings, proofs, and the report of the master, and the circuit court held that the cause had been improperly removed from the state court, and ordered it remanded at the costs of the Missouri Pacific company. The reasons for this conclusion are given in an opinion reported 45 Fed. Rep. 812. The cause having been returned to the district court of the state, the parties entered into a stipulation 562] that the action be *continued to the next September term, then to be tried, and that the depositions taken in the circuit court might be read as if taken in the state court. An amended petition and an amended and supplemental answer were filed. Trial was had as agreed in the district court of Lancaster county, which made a finding of facts, and rendered judgment against the Missouri Pacific company.

The forty-seventh finding of fact was as follows: "(47) That about 15 miles of railroad were laid out over government land; that no maps were filed with the Secretary of the Interior, showing the lines of way over said government land in the state of Kansas, but maps were filed with the local land officers of the United States at Wa Keeney, Kansas, duly certified to, showing said right of way."

Both parties appealed to the supreme court of the state, and that court rendered a judgment against the Missouri Pacific company. 41 Neb. 374. The Missouri Pacific company made application for a rehearing, pending which Fitzgerald died and Mary Fitzgerald, as his administratrix, filed her petition for revivor and for a receiver of the construction company to collect the judgment. In support of the application for a receiver, it was alleged that about the time Fitzgerald recovered judgment, the Missouri Pacific company caused a suit to be brought against the construction company in the name of the Kansas & Colorado Pacific Railway Company, which was owned by the Missouri Pacific company, and it was charged on various grounds that the action was collusive and contrived to deprive the supreme court of the state of its jurisdiction, and Fitzgerald of the fruits of its judgment, and that a receiver had been procured to be appointed by the circuit court in that action in furtherance of that object.

The Missouri Pacific company filed an answer and plea to this petition, denying collusion and urging objections to the application for a receiver in this case, which, so far as necessary, are hereafter stated. A reply was filed by Mrs. Fitzgerald to this answer and plea. The supreme court having granted a rehearing entered an order of revivor, rendered judgment *against the Missouri Pacific 563 company, and appointed a receiver. 41 Neb. 463. The pending writ of error was then snuffed out, and a motion to dismiss the writ for want of jurisdiction or to affirm the judgment was made.

The following are the errors assigned:

"1. The court erred in taking or assuming any jurisdiction and in holding that it had any jurisdiction of this cause, forasmuch as it appeared by the record that the defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, duly and seasonably and as within the time provided by the act of Congress, filed and presented its petition and bond for removal of said cause to the United States circuit court for the proper district, to wit, the United States circuit court for the district of Nebraska, on the ground that in said suit there was a controversy wholly between citizens of different states, removable under said act to said United States circuit court for the district of Nebraska, which said bond was refused and which said petition was denied, the defendant at the time duly excepting to such refusal and denial.

"2. The said court erred in taking or assuming any jurisdiction and in holding that it had any jurisdiction of this cause, forasmuch as in and by said petition for removal of this cause to the United States circuit court for the district of Nebraska, the said Missouri Pacific Railway Company set up and claimed a right, claim, privilege, immunity, and authority under an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled 'An Act Granting to Railroads the Right of Way through Public Lands of the United States,' and by reason of said act of Congress claimed that said cause arose under the laws of the United States, which said claim and petition of said defendant were erroneously overruled by said district court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, and by said supreme court of Nebraska.

"3. The said supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in taking or assuming jurisdiction or in holding that it had jurisdiction of this cause, forasmuch as it appeared by the record in said cause that the defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company was, at the time when said cause was *commenced, 564 a citizen, resident, and inhabitant of the state of Missouri, within the meaning of the acts of Congress of the United States relating to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and the plaintiff, John Fitzgerald, was a citizen, resident, and inhabitant of the state of Nebraska, but his said action was to enforce a cause of action as a stockholder of and for the benefit of the defendant, the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, which was at said time a citizen, resident, and inhabitant of the state of Iowa, within the meaning of said acts of Congress, and the controversy was therefore a controversy between citizens of different states within the meaning of the said acts of Congress relating to removal of causes. It further appeared from the record that the matter in dispute in said cause exceeded, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000. It further appeared from the record that the defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, upon the grounds aforesaid, including the ground of such diversity of citizenship and jurisdictional amount, duly and seasonably made and filed its petition in this cause in said court, to wit, the district court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, at the time or at a time before the said defendant was required by the laws of said state of Nebraska or by the rule of said state court in which such suit was brought, to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint or petition of the plaintiff, for the removal of such suit into the said circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where such suit was pending, to wit, the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Nebraska, and said defendant made and filed therewith, to wit, with its said petition, a bond with good and sufficient surety for its entering in such circuit court on the first day of its then next session a copy of the record in said suit, and for paying all costs that might be awarded by the said circuit court if said circuit court should hold that such suit was wrongfully and improperly removed thereto, which said petition was erroneously denied and which said bond was erroneously refused by said state court, to which denial and refusal the said Missouri Pacific Railway Company then and there duly excepted.

565] *4. The said supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in taking or assuming or in undertaking to exercise jurisdiction of this cause and of the parties thereto, by reason of the proceedings for the removal thereof hereinbefore recited, and in denying the right and authority set up and undertaken to be exercised by the said defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, under the statute and laws of the United States relating to the removal of causes of civil nature from the state to the Federal courts.

"5. The said supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in taking or assuming to exercise jurisdiction in this cause and to hear and determine the same and to pronounce final judgment therein, forasmuch as it was made to appear to said court, and did appear, by the record in this cause, that the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Nebraska had duly taken and undertaken to exercise jurisdiction of said cause and of the parties thereto, and had by due judgment and order overruled and denied application of the plaintiff herein to remand said cause to said state court, to wit, the district court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, and had by due order and judgment overruled a plea in abatement interposed by the said plaintiff to the jurisdiction of the said Federal court, all of which orders and judgments of said

Federal court then remained in full force and effect, unappealed from and unreversed.

"6. The supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in denying and overruling the plea in abatement to its jurisdiction interposed by the said defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, in answer and reply to the petition of Mary Fitzgerald, administratrix, to revive this action and cause in her name, as the successor of John Fitzgerald, the original plaintiff, then deceased.

"7. The said supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in denying the claim set up and claimed by the said defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, to immunity from any recovery for or in respect of 17 miles of railroad constructed over the public domain by the said Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company in the name of the *Denver, [566] Memphis, & Atlantic Railway Company, without compliance with an act of Congress of the United States, approved March 3, 1875, entitled 'An Act Granting to Railroads the Right of Way through Lands of the United States,' specifically referred to and set forth in the answer of the said defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, in this cause.

"8. Said supreme court of Nebraska erred in denying and overruling the plea in abatement of the defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, to the jurisdiction of said court, wherein and whereby it appeared that on the 24th day of December, 1888, John Fitzgerald, the original plaintiff herein, instituted an action in his own name against the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company to recover from said company an amount alleged to be due from said company, and thereby by due proceedings caused an attachment to issue and garnishment notice to be served upon the Missouri Pacific Railway Company charging it as garnishee, and thereby placing whatever fund or moneys might be due from it to said construction company in the custody of the law; and whereby it further appeared that by due proceedings had, said action so instituted by said John Fitzgerald was in due time properly removed from the district court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, in which it was instituted, to the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Nebraska, and under and by virtue of § 4 of the removal act of Congress, March 3, 1875, the said attachment and garnishment proceedings were wholly removed into said circuit court of the United States, and said court then and there, by virtue thereof, acquired exclusive jurisdiction of said fund and moneys due from said Missouri Pacific Railway Company to said Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, and of any controversy between said companies with respect to such fund.

"9. The said supreme court of Nebraska erred in holding and deciding that under and by virtue of said removal act of Congress the said fund so garnished in the hands of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company was not placed in the custody and under the exclusive control of said circuit court of the *United [567] States, by reason of said removal of said action of John Fitzgerald against the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company.

"10. The supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in appointing a receiver of the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, and in investing or undertaking to invest the said receiver with any cause of action against the defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, forasmuch as it was made to appear and did appear by the record in said court in said cause that in a certain cause entitled 'The Kansas & Colorado Pacific Railroad Company against The Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company,' theretofore and then pending in the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Nebraska, by due proceedings had in the said circuit court had appointed a receiver of said Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, and of all of the property and assets thereof, and said receivership so appointed by said circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska had not been terminated and vacated, and said receivership had not been discharged.

"11. The supreme court of Nebraska erred in allowing, as a charge against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company in favor of said Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, various items of alleged indebtedness of the Denver, Memphis, & Atlantic Railway Company to the said Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company.

"12. The supreme court of Nebraska erred in refusing to allow, as proper charges against the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, the several items of indebtedness of said construction company to the Missouri Pacific Railway Company.

"13. The supreme court of the state of Nebraska erred in holding that it had any jurisdiction to render and in rendering any judgment whatever against the defendant, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, in this cause."

Messrs. J. M. Woolworth, J. W. Deweese, and F. M. Hall for defendant in error, in favor of motion.

Messrs. John F. Dillon, Winslow S. Pierce, and B. P. Waggener for plaintiff in error, in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Was any title, right, privilege, or immunity under the Constitution or any statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States, specially set up or claimed by plaintiff in error, denied by the decision of the state court?

575] *An assignment of errors cannot be availed of to import questions into a cause which the record does not show were raised and passed on in the court below, but we may refer to such assignment by way of convenience to ascertain the contentions of plaintiff in error.

Of the errors assigned here those which do not involve matters purely within the jurisdiction of the state courts may be grouped as follows:

That the supreme court of Nebraska erred—

First. In that the court decided against a right set up by plaintiff in error, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, entitled "An Act Granting to Railroads the Right of Way through the Public Lands of the United States" (18 Stat. at L. 482, chap. 182), by its refusal to allow damages for the failure of the construction company to properly comply with the act.

Second. In that the court in maintaining jurisdiction decided against the claim of plaintiff in error that by reason of process of garnishment in attachment against the Missouri Pacific company, in the action brought by Fitzgerald against the construction company to recover an amount alleged to be due him individually, in the state court and removed into the circuit court, the circuit court acquired exclusive jurisdiction and custody of the fund or moneys due from the Missouri Pacific company to the construction company, and of any controversy in respect thereof.

Third. In that the court in appointing a receiver of the construction company to collect the amount of the decree against the Missouri Pacific company, and disburse the same under the direction of the court, decided against the claim of the plaintiff in error that a receiver appointed by the circuit court in the cause therein pending, in favor of the Kansas & Colorado Pacific Railway Company and against the construction company, was entitled to the possession of the latter's assets.

Fourth. In that the court in exercising jurisdiction, notwithstanding the cause had been wrongfully remanded by the circuit court, decided against the plaintiff in error that the cause had been properly removed. And *herein also that the court in main-[576] taining jurisdiction decided against the claim of plaintiff in error that the state district court erred in denying its application to remove.

1. We repeat what we said in California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 393 [38: 206, 207], that "it is axiomatic that, in order to give this court jurisdiction on writ of error to the highest court of a state in which a decision could be had, it must appear affirmatively, not only that a Federal question was presented for decision by the highest court of the state having jurisdiction, but that its decision was necessary to the determination of the cause, and that it was actually decided, or that the judgment as rendered could not have been given without deciding it. And where the decision complained of rests on independent ground not involving a Federal question, and broad enough to maintain the judgment, the writ of error will be dismissed by this court without considering any Federal question that may also have been presented." Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361 [37: 1111], and cases cited.

In the case at bar, the state court did not decide a Federal question in this connection, but its decision rested on an independent ground broad enough to sustain the judgment.

The contention of plaintiff in error was that, although the contract between the Denver company and the construction company required the Denver company to secure the right of way, it was understood that when the Missouri Pacific company and the construction company entered into their contract the construction company should use the name of the Denver company, exercise its power of eminent domain, comply with the act of Congress, and secure the right to build the road over the public lands; that the construction company failed to secure the lawful right of way as to a portion of the road; that the Missouri Pacific company should be allowed a deduction for each and every mile so situated; and that the controversy in this regard depended upon a right construction of the act of Congress. It would seem that this dispute between the parties turned on whether the construction company had failed in its duty to the Missouri Pacific company, and not on any difference between them as to the proper 577] *meaning of the act, but it is sufficient to say that the validity of the act of Congress was not questioned, and that the decision of the state courts denied no right claimed under it. The finding of fact was that about 15 miles of road were laid out over government land, and that no maps were filed with the Secretary of the Interior, showing the lines of way thereon, though they were filed with the local land officers. In Real v. Hollister, 20 Neb. 112, it was decided that in an action for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, the plaintiff must allege and prove that he has been turned out of possession, or has yielded to a paramount title, and, applying that doctrine in this case, the state courts held that the Missouri Pacific company could not maintain its claim for damages, because its possession had not been disturbed or its title questioned. 41 Neb. 451.

2. The answer and plea of the Missouri Pacific company to Mrs. Fitzgerald's petition for an order of revivor and the appointment of a receiver, filed January 29, 1895, set up that on December 24, 1888, which was the same day that he instituted this suit as a stockholder, Fitzgerald brought an action against the construction company to recover an amount alleged to be due him; that notice of garnishment was served on the Missouri Pacific company; that the cause was then removed into the circuit court, and there Fitzgerald recovered judgment; and that control over the indebtedness of the Missouri Pacific company to the construction company and of the accounting between them was thus transferred to the circuit court.

The matter of the garnishment proceedings was referred to in the original answer of the Missouri Pacific company, filed in this cause January 19, 1889, but the position now taken was put forward for the first time in the answer and plea to Mrs. Fitzgerald's petition in the supreme court. Apart, however, from the objection that the course of proceedings could not be obstructed in this way at so late a date and in the court of appellate jurisdiction, the position cannot be maintained, for it was not 578] made to appear but that the *notice of garnishment may have been issued and served after jurisdiction had attached in this suit; and, moreover, it did not appear that the garnishment process was prosecuted or that any order or judgment charging the Missouri Pacific company was rendered. Under Neb. Code, §§ 224, 225 (Neb. Comp. Stat. 1895, 1170, 1171), the garnishee must deliver the property of the defendant in the action or pay the money due, as disclosed on his examination, into court, or give bond that the amount shall be paid or the property be forthcoming, as directed by the court, or if the garnishee fail to appear and answer, or his disclosure is not satisfactory, or he fail to comply with the order of the court, etc., the plaintiff may proceed against him by action and recover judgment as in other cases, defendant being substituted as plaintiff when plaintiff is satisfied.

The supreme court of Nebraska disposed of this objection by saying "that the attachment proceeding was evidently abandoned in the circuit court, where the record shows an ordinary judgment for damages, unaccompanied by an order against the Missouri Pacific company as garnishee."

We are unable to perceive that that court in declining to entertain the objection so passed upon a Federal question as to furnish ground for the interposition of this court.

3. By the amended petition filed May 4, 1891, the appointment of a receiver was prayed, but the judgment of the district court was rendered December 28, 1891, for $429,573.43, to be paid to the clerk of the court to abide its further order, execution to issue on failure of payment.

The cause having been taken to the supreme court by appeal, judgment was there rendered, June 26, 1894, for $764,942.08, with interest from December 24, 1893, and the cause remanded to the district court, with instructions to enforce the collection of said judgment, and to appoint a receiver to collect and pay out the proceeds thereof and of such other assets of the construction company as might be within the jurisdiction of the court. December 30, 1894, pending an application for a rehearing, Fitzgerald died, and Mrs. Fitzgerald, having been appointed special administratrix* of his estate, filed, January 15, 1895, 579 her petition for an order of revivor, and also that a receiver be appointed by the supreme court.

January 5, 1895, a rehearing was granted, and on April 4 the supreme court entered the order of revivor, and modified its former judgment by reducing the amount to $300,906.33. And on April 6, 1895, the court appointed a receiver, having reviewed and overruled the Pacific company's objections thereto presented by its answer and plea to Mrs. Fitzgerald's application. 44 Neb. 463.

July 2, 1891, the Kansas & Colorado Pacific Railway Company brought its action in the state district court against the construction company with garnishee notice to the Missouri Pacific company, which cause was removed into the circuit court on July 3, 1891. January 12, 1895, the Kansas company filed an amended and supplemental complaint, and a receiver was appointed by the circuit court, the district judge presiding.

As the state courts had been in possession of the res for years before January 12, 1895, when, pending the modification by the supreme court of its judgment of June 26, 1894, the circuit court permitted the amended and supplemental complaint to be filed by the Kansas company against the construction company, and thereupon appointed a receiver, the supreme court of Nebraska held that the rule that the court which first acquires jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action will retain it until the controversy is finally determined, applied, and that the appointment of a receiver by the circuit court was, under the circumstances, ineffectual to divest the control of the supreme court over the assets of the construction company, or defeat its right to enforce its judgment in the accounting.

In our opinion the supreme court in so holding denied no Federal right of the Missouri Pacific company.

4. It is contended that by its judgment the supreme court affirmed the order of the state district court denying the application to remove, and that that order was erroneous. But as the Missouri Pacific company, notwithstanding 580 such denial, *filed the record in the circuit court, and the cause proceeded in that court to final hearing, when it was remanded, and as the state court in the meantime awaited the action of the circuit court, the order worked no prejudice, and if any error were committed in that regard, it became wholly immaterial.

5. We are thus brought to the remaining and most important question arising on this motion.

Under the act of Congress of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 552, 553, chap. 373), as re-enacted for the purpose of correcting the enrolment, by the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, 435, chap. 866), is the order of the circuit court remanding the cause to the state court open to review on this writ of error? If not, then we cannot take jurisdiction to revise the proceedings of the state court. Nor can the inquiry be affected by the fact that a motion to remand had been previously made and denied. That order was subject to reconsideration, as the question of jurisdiction always is, until final judgment, and, indeed, it was the duty of the circuit court under the statute, if it appeared at any time that jurisdiction was lacking, to dismiss or remand as justice might require. 18 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 137, § 5.

Prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1875, just cited, an appeal or writ of error would not lie to review an order of the circuit court remanding a suit which had been removed because such an order was not a final judgment or decree. This was expressly held in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiswall, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 507 [23: 103], decided at October term, 1874, and it was also ruled that the remedy was by mandamus. But by the last paragraph of § 5 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 137), it was provided that "the order of said circuit court dismissing or remanding said cause to the state court shall be reviewable by the supreme court on writ of error or appeal as the case may be."

By § 6 of the act of March 3, 1887, however, this paragraph was expressly repealed, and by the last paragraph of § 2 it was enacted that "whenever any cause shall be removed from any state court into any circuit court of the United States, and the circuit court shall decide that the cause was improperly removed 581 and order the same to be *remanded to the state court from whence it came, such remand shall be immediately carried into execution, and no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the circuit court so remanding such case shall be allowed."

These provisions were referred to by Mr. Chief Justice Waite in Morey v. Lockhart, 123 U. S. 56, 57 [31: 68], and the Chief Justice said:

"It is difficult to see what more could be done to make the action of the circuit court final, for all the purposes of the removal, and not the subject of review in this court. First, it is declared that there shall be no appeal or writ of error in such a case, and then, to make the matter doubly sure, the only statute which ever gave the right of such an appeal or writ of error is repealed."

It was subsequently decided in the case of Ex parte Pennsylvania Co. 137 U. S. 451, 454 [34: 738, 740], that the power to afford a remedy by mandamus when a cause, removed from a state court, is improperly remanded, was taken away by the acts of March 3, 1887, and August 13, 1888.

Adverting to the clause just quoted from § 2 of those acts, Mr. Justice Bradley said:

"In terms, it only abolishes appeals and writs of error, it is true, and does not mention writs of mandamus; and it is unquestionably a general rule that the abrogation of one remedy does not affect another. But in this case, we think it was the intention of Congress to make the judgment of the circuit court remanding a cause to the state court final and conclusive. The general object of the act is to contract the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The abrogation of the writ of error and appeal would have had little effect in putting an end to the question of removal, if the writ of mandamus could still have been sued out in this court. It is true that the general supervisory power of this court over inferior jurisdictions is of great moment in a public point of view, and should not, upon light grounds, be deemed to be taken away in any case. Still, although the writ of mandamus is not mentioned in the section, yet the use of the words 'such remand shall be immediately carried into execution,' in addition to the prohibition *of appeal and writ of error, is 582 strongly indicative of an intent to suppress further prolongation of the controversy by whatever process. We are therefore of opinion that the act has the effect of taking away the remedy by mandamus as well as that of appeal and writ of error."

We see no reason for reconsidering these conclusions and it may be regarded as settled that an order of the circuit court remanding a cause cannot be reviewed in this court by any direct proceedings for that purpose.

If a state court proceeds to judgment in a cause notwithstanding an application for removal, its ruling in retaining the case will be reviewable here after final judgment, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709. Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430 [29: 962].

If a case be removed to the circuit court and a motion to remand be made and denied, then, after final judgment, the action of the circuit court in refusing to remand may be reviewed here on error or appeal. Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571 [33: 462].

If the circuit court and the state court go to judgment respectively, each judgment is open to revision in the appropriate mode. Meyer v. Delaware R. Const. Co. ("Removal Cases") 100 U. S. 457 [25: 593].

But if the circuit court remands a cause and the state court proceeds to final judgment, the action of the circuit court is not reviewable on writ of error to such judgment.

A state court cannot be held to have decided against a Federal right when it is the circuit court and not the state court which has denied its possession.

The supreme court of Nebraska rightly recognized the courts of the United States to be the exclusive judges of their own jurisdiction and declined to review the order of the circuit court.

As under the statute a remanding order of the circuit court is not reviewable by this court on appeal or writ of error from or to that court, so it would seem to follow that it cannot be reviewed on writ of error to a state court, the prohibition being that "no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the circuit court re-583] manding such cause shall be *allowed." And it is entirely clear that a writ of error cannot be maintained under § 709 in respect of such an order, where the state court has rendered no decision against a Federal right but simply accepted the conclusion of the circuit court.

We regard this result as intended by Congress, in effectuation of the object of the act of March 3, 1887, to restrict the jurisdiction of the circuit court and to restrain the volume of litigation which, through the expansion of Federal jurisdiction in respect of the removal causes, had been pouring into the courts of the United States. Smith v. Lyon, 133 U. S. 315 [33: 635]; Ex parte Pennsylvania Co. 137 U. S. 451 [34: 738]; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 467 [35: 1080, 1082].

So far as the mere question of the forum was concerned, Congress was manifestly of opinion that the determination of the circuit court that jurisdiction could not be maintained should be final, since it would be an uncalled-for hardship to subject the party who, not having sought the jurisdiction of the circuit court, succeeded on the merits in the state court, to the risk of the reversal of his judgment, not because of error supervening on the trial, but because a disputed question of diverse citizenship had been erroneously decided by the circuit court; while as to applications for removal on the ground that the cause arose under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, that this finality was equally expedient, as questions of the latter character, if decided against the claimant, would be open to revision under § 709, irrespective of the ruling of the circuit court in that regard in the matter of removal.

It must be remembered that when Federal questions arise in causes pending in the state courts, those courts are perfectly competent to decide them, and it is their duty to do so.

As this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, in Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 637 [28: 542, 546], said: "Upon the state courts, equally with the courts of the Union, rests the obligation to guard, enforce, and protect every right granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, whenever those rights are involved in any suit or proceeding before them; for the 584] judges of the state courts *are required to take an oath to support that Constitution, and they are bound by it, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made under their authority, as the supreme law of the land, 'anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.' If they fail therein, and withhold or deny rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, the party aggrieved may bring the case from the highest court in the state in which the question could be decided to this court for final and conclusive determination."

Writ of error dismissed.

FRANK P. DICKSON, Appt.,

v.

RICHARD C. PATTERSON ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 584-592.)

Setting aside conveyance for fraud—accounting.

1. Where two persons have purchased land to be sold on joint account, a claim by one against the other for his share of the proceeds of sales, made without knowledge that a conveyance by the latter to a third person was fraudulent, will not constitute such an election by the former as to preclude him, on discovering the fraud, from suing to set aside such conveyance and asserting his rights in the property.

NOTE.—As to estoppel in pais, see note to Stowe v. United States, 22: 144.

As to when vendee is estopped from disputing the title of his vendor,—see note to Watkins v. Holman, 10: 873.

Actionable fraud; elements necessary to constitute; rescission of deeds or contracts for fraud; false representations.

In order to render fraud actionable in any case, the following essential elements should be present:

1. The misrepresentation must be of a matter of fact, and not of law. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 49 (23: 204, 205); Seeley v. Reed, 25 Fed. Rep. 361; Clodfelter v. Hulett, 72 Ind. 137; Dillman v. Nadle-hoffer, 119 Ill. 567; Fish v. Cleland, 33 Ill. 238; Jordan v. Stevens, 51 Me. 78, 81 Am. Dec. 556; Gormely v. Milwaukee Gymnastic Asso. 55 Wis. 350.

2. The misrepresentation must be of a fact, as distinguished from a mere expression of opinion. Reynolds v. Palmer, 21 Fed. Rep. 433; Buckner v. Street, 15 Fed. Rep. 365; Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191; Hubbell v. Meigs, 50 N. Y. 480, 489; Sawyer v. Prickett, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 146 (22:105).

3. The misrepresentation must be of a fact at the time or previously existing, and not a mere promise for the future. Fenwick v. Grimes, 5 Cranch. C. C. 439; Long v. Woodman, 58 Me. 49; Burt v. Bowles, 69 Ind. 1; Fouty v. Fouty, 34 Ind. 433; Bethell v. Bethell, 92 Ind. 318; Bigham v. Bigham, 57 Tex. 238; Wilson v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 257; Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 197; Gross v. McKee, 53 Miss. 536; Farrar v. Bridges, 3 Humph. 566; Miller v. Howell, 2 Ill. 499, 32 Am. Dec. 36; Higgins v. Higgins, 57 N. H. 224.

4. The misrepresentation must be of a material matter. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 898; Hall v. Johnson, 41 Mich. 286; Clark v. Everhart, 63 Pa. 347; Yeates v. Pryor, 11 Ark. 58; Lynch v. Mercantile Trust Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 486; Seeberger v. Hobert, 55 Iowa, 756; Noel v. Horton, 50 Iowa, 687; Ohio First Nat. Bank v. Yocum, 11 Neb. 328.

5. The misrepresentation must be relied upon by the person to whom it is made or whose action it is intended to influence. Nye v. Merriam, 35 Vt.

543

2. One who joins with another in purchasing land under an agreement that they are to pay equally for the land and subdivide and sell it, and share equally in all sales, is not entitled, on discovering that, from the misrepresentations of the other as to the purchase price, he has been led to pay all that was paid for the land, to claim the whole property and all the proceeds of the sales, but his remedy is by an accounting in which he shall be credited for what he has paid and one half of such proceeds.

[No. 15.]

Submitted October 15, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska in favor of Richard C. Patterson et al., defendants, dismissing a suit in equity brought by Frank P. Dickson to procure a decree rescinding certain sales of real estate on the ground of fraud. Reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Westel & Morsman and Chas. Offutt, for appellant:

The facts upon which the trial judge based his conclusions of law utterly fail to constitute a ratification of the sale by Dickson, because Dickson did not then possess full knowledge of the fraud.

Anderson's Appeal, 36 Pa. 496; Reaves v.

Garrett, 34 Ala. 558; Wilson v. Higbee, 62 Fed. Rep. 723.

The fraud practised by Patterson upon Dickson was so gigantic as to beggar belief. It was so monstrous that a court of chancery cannot say that Dickson acquiesced in it.

Complainant offered to repay the supposed purchase money received from Patterson, and there is nothing to indicate that this offer was not made within a reasonable time.

Clough v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 7 Exch. 35; Wicks v. Smith, 21 Kan. 412, 30 Am. Rep. 433; Marston v. Simpson, 54 Cal. 189; Williamson v. New Jersey S. R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311.

Appellees having failed to plead the alleged acquiescence and election of appellant as a defense, the trial court could not grant any relief based upon this theory, even though the evidence had established such acquiescence and election.

Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 54 U. S. 13 How. 307 (14: 157); Mabury v. Louisville & J. Ferry Co. 60 Fed. Rep. 645; Wood v. Ostram, 29 Ind. 179; Robbins v. Magee, 76 Ind. 390; Cole v. Lafontaine, 84 Ind. 448; Stewart v. Beck, 90 Ind. 458.

Messrs. Jno. L. Webster and H. D. Estabrook, for appellees:

Complainant is estopped from insisting upon the frauds charged for the reason that he ratified the sales by his conduct; failed to rescind 438; Hagee v. Grossman, 31 Ind. 223; Taylor v. Guest, 53 N. Y. 262, 266; Roseman v. Canovan, 43 Cal. 110; Percival v. Harger, 40 Iowa, 286; Tuek v. Downing, 76 Ill. 71; Slaughter v. Gerson, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 379 (20: 627); Pollock, Torts, 251.

Where false representations of the character indicated are so made for the purpose of being acted upon, and are so acted upon, the party to whom and for whom they are made may ordinarily maintain an action for such damages as proximately result from the deception. Cooley, Torts, 475; Pollock, Torts, 240; Endsley v. Johns, 120 Ill. 469, 60 Am. Rep. 572; Sellar v. Clelland, 2 Colo. 532; Byard v. Holmes, 34 N. J. L. 296; Busterud v. Farrington, 36 Minn. 320.

It is sufficient to constitute actionable fraud, so far as the question of knowledge is concerned, if the person making the misrepresentations had no knowledge and no belief upon the subject, and recklessly made them with intent to deceive; or even if he supposed his representations to be true, but had no reason therefor, and nevertheless made them as of positively known facts, and thereby induced the person to whom they were made to act upon them to his damage. Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 308, 46 Am. Dec. 598; Weed v. Case, 55 Barb. 534; Orinrod v. Huth, 14 Mees. & W. 652; Munroe v. Pritchett, 16 Ala. 785, 50 Am. Dec. 203; Taylor v. Ashton, 11 Mees. & W. 401; Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53; Fisher v. Mellen, 103 Mass. 503; Litchfield v. Hutchinson, 117 Mass. 195; Frenzel v. Miller, 37 Ind. 1, 10 Am. Rep. 62; Bennett v. Judson, 21 N. Y. 238; Allen v. Hart, 72 Ill. 104; Bethell v. Bethell, 92 Ind. 318; West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335; Humphrey v. Merriam, 32 Minn. 197; Cooper v. Schlesinger, 111 U. S. 148 (28: 383).

Generally, no one but the party to whom they are made is entitled to rely on representations of another intended for him. Ashuelot Sav. Bank v. Albee, 63 N. H. 152, 56 Am. Rep. 501; Carter v. Harden, 78 Me. 528.

Where representations are made to one to be communicated to another for the purpose of influencing the latter, and not the former, there is no actionable fraud as to the former; but there may be actionable fraud as to the party to whom they were intended to be communicated. Wells v. Cook, 16 Ohio St. 67, 88 Am. Dec. 436; McCracken v. West, 17 Ohio, 16; Eaton, C. & B. Co. v. Avery, 83 N. Y. 31, 34; Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519; Carvill v. Jacks, 43 Ark. 454.

And where representations are made for the express purpose of influencing the public generally, and inducing any individual members thereof that may be so influenced, as one of the public, to act upon them, whoever so receiving and relying upon them does act in the manner intended may, if deceived thereby to his damage, treat them as a fraud upon himself. Holmes v. Harrington, 20 Mo. App. 661; Carvill v. Jacks, supra; Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 476; Peck v. Gurney, L. R. 13 Eq. Cas. 79, 1 Eng. Rep. (Moak's ed.) 567; Terwilliger v. Great West. Teleg. Co. 59 Ill. 249; Booth v. Wonderly, 36 N. J. L. 250; Morse v. Swits, 19 How. Pr. 275; Denton v. Great Northern R. Co. 25 L. J. Q. B. 129.

Where a party can protect himself by ordinary care and prudence, he must do so; and if, with full means of knowledge, being equally able to judge of a matter for himself, he relies upon the representations of another with whom he stands on equal footing, without exercising the means of knowledge open to him, neither the courts of law nor courts of equity will relieve him from the effects of such folly. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (3d ed.) § 199, 200; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Reed, 83 Ohio St. 283; Slaughter v. Gerson, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 379 (20: 627); Brown v. Leach, 107 Mass. 364; Long v. Warren, 68 N. Y. 426; Parker v. Moulton, 114 Mass. 99, 19 Am. Rep. 315; Vincent v. Berry, 46 Iowa, 571; Chrysler v. Canaday, 90 N. Y. 272, 43 Am. Rep. 166; Mamlock v. Fairbanks, 46 Wis. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 716; Poland v. Brownell, 131 Mass. 138, 41 Am. Rep. 215; Schwabacker v. Riddle, 99 Ill. 343; Redgrave v. Hurd, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 1.

Where the parties stand on an unequal footing, and the one making the representations is an ex-upon the discovery of the alleged fraud; failed to put the defendant in statu quo; and acquiesced in the sale with knowledge of the facts.

Where a party intends to abandon or rescind a contract on the ground of fraud he must do so promptly and decidedly on the first information of such fraud. If with full knowledge, or with sufficient notice or means of knowledge of his rights and all the material facts, he lies by for a considerable time, or abstains from impeaching the transaction, this will be construed as an acquiescence; and the transaction, although originally impeached, ceases to become so in equity.

Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 62 (23: 802); Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 141 (25: 809); Dickey v. Lyon, 19 Iowa, 547; Cambridge Valley Bank v. Delano, 48 N. Y. 340; Merrill v. Wilson, 66 Mich. 232; Paine v. Harrison, 38 Minn. 346; Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389; Bell v. Keepers, 39 Kan. 105; Estes v. Reynolds, 75 Mo. 563; Bigelow, Fraud, 288.

Dickson cannot maintain this bill because he did not return or offer to return the purchase money received by him, to wit, the $1,500 and the $112.50.

An action to rescind a sale of land on the ground of fraud will not lie unless the consideration paid is returned or tendered before suit; and an election that the vendor is able and willing to return it, and now offers to do so, is insufficient.

Van Trott v. Wiese, 36 Wis. 439; Masson v. Bovet, 1 Denio, 69; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533; Latham v. Hicky, 21 La. Ann. 425; Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 40; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 47 N. H. 11, 90 Am. Dec. 555; Downer v. Smith, 32 Vt. 1, 76 Am. Dec. 148; Evans v. Gale, 17 N. H. 573, 43 Am. Dec. 614; Young v. Arntze, 86 Ala. 116; Thompson v. Peek, 115 Ind. 512.

The rescission must be in toto, and property received under the rescinded contract must be returned and the adverse party put as far as possible in statu quo, whatever may be the ground of rescission.

Conner v. Henderson, 15 Mass. 319, 8 Am. Dec. 103; Curneal v. May, 2 A. K. Marsh. 587, 12 Am. Dec. 453; Durrett v. Simpson, 3 T. B. Mon. 517, 16 Am. Dec. 115; Southern L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Lanier, 5 Fla. 110, 58 Am. Dec. 448; Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. 283, 34 Am. Dec. 56; Kimball v. Cunningham, 4 Mass. 502, 3 Am. Dec. 230; Fay v. Oliver, 20 Vt. 118, 49 Am. Dec. 764; Jennings v. Gage, 13 Ill. 610, 56 Am. Dec. 476; Emerson v. McNamara, 41 Me. 565; Estabrook v. Sweet, 116 Mass. 303; Cook v. Gilman, 34 N. H. 556; Herman v. Haffenegger, 54 Cal. 161.

This rule is so stringent that even a married woman cannot avoid a sale of property made pert in the matter in hand, or has means of knowledge not open to the other, such representations, if false, will be fraudulent in many cases in which there would be no actionable fraud if the parties stood on the same footing. Clough v. Adams, 71 Iowa, 17; Fishback v. Miller, 15 Nev. 428; Schwenk v. Naylor, 102 N. Y. 683; Jackson v. Armstrong, 50 Mich. 65; Haygarth v. Wearing, L. R. 12 Eq. 320; Alin v. Millison, 72 Ill. 201; Eaton v. Winule, 20 Mich. 156, 4 Am. Rep. 377; Mitchell v. Zimmerman, 4 Tex. 75, 51 Am. Dec. 717; Hanger v. Evins, 38 Ark. 334.

Suppressio veri or concealment will amount to fraud where the concealment is of material facts which one party is under some legal or equitable duty to communicate to the other, and which the latter has a right, juris et de jure, to know. Dambmann v. Schulting, 75 N. Y. 55, 62; Bench v. Sheldon, 14 Barb. 66; Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. C. C. 420; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (3d ed.) § 207; Hadley v. Clinton County Importing Co. 3 Ohio St. 502, 82 Am. Dec. 454; Juzan v. Toulmin, 9 Ala. 662, 44 Am. Dec. 448; Conover v. Wardell, 22 N. J. Eq. 492.

Where parties deal "at arm's length" on equal terms, and no particular relation of trust or confidence exists between them, there is usually no obligation to speak, and either may remain silent and be safe. Archbold v. Lord Howth, L. R. 2 Ir. C. L. 608; People's Bank v. Bogart, 81 N. Y. 101, 108, 87 Am. Rep. 481; Law v. Grant, 37 Wis. 548; Fisher v. Budlong, 10 R. I. 525; Laidlaw v. Organ, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 178 (4: 214); Ward v. Packard, 18 Cal. 391; Barnett v. Stanton, 2 Ala. 181; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake (Bump's ed.) 100; Allen's Appeal, 99 Pa. 196, 44 Am. Rep. 101; New York C. & H. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24 (25: 532).

But where one party knows that the other places a peculiar trust and confidence in him, or where they occupy a fiduciary relationship, there is usually an obligation to disclose all material facts; and silence or concealment thereof will, in such cases, constitute fraud. Emmons v. Moore, 85 Ill. 304; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Brown v. Montgomery, 20 N. Y. 287, 75 Am. Dec. 404; Pilling v. Armitage, 12 Ves. Jr. 78; Pidcock v. Townsend, 3 Barn. & C. 605; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 902.

160 U. S.

So, when one "stands by" and hears false representations made about a matter in which he is interested, without correcting them where it is his duty to do so, or remains silent while another asserts rights which he knows are his own, to the prejudice of a third person whom he thus allows to incur liability on the faith thereof, which would not have been incurred except for such silence, he will be estopped on the ground of fraud from afterwards setting up such rights as against that person. Michigan Paneling Mach. & Mfg. Co. v. Parsell, 38 Mich. 475; Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. 166, 169, 10 Am. Dec. 316; Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. 344; Thompson v. Sanborn, 11 N. H. 201, 35 Am. Dec. 490; Olliver v. King, 8 DeG. M. & G. 118; Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 474; Shepherd v. Sharpe, 4 L. T. 270; Davies v. Davies, 6 Jur. N. S. 1322; Lee v. Munroe, 11 U. S. 7 Crauch, 366, 368 (3: 373, 374); 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (3d ed.) § 384.

And there are numerous cases in which the rule is applied where there are latent defects or circumstances materially affecting the subject-matter of a sale, known to the seller and incapable of being discovered by the purchaser, who has not equal means of knowledge. Mellish v. Mottoux, Peake, 156; Smith v. Harrison, 26 L. J. Ch. 412; Prout v. Roberts, 32 Ala. 427; Turner v. Huggins, 14 Ark. 21; Glasscock v. Minor, 11 Mo. 655; Cecil v. Spurger, 32 Mo. 462, 82 Am. Dec. 140; Lunn v. Shermer, 93 N. C. 164.

One who buys on credit without evil design is not bound to volunteer a statement of his financial condition where no questions are asked. Talcott v. Henderson, 31 Ohio St. 162, 27 Am. Rep. 501; Ex parte Whittaker, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 446; Nichols v. Pinner, 18 N. Y. 295; Redington v. Roberts, 25 Vt. 636; Kloppenstien v. Mulcahy, 4 Nev. 296; Garbutt v. Prairie du Chien Bank, 22 Wis. 384; Belding v. Frankland, 8 Lea, 67, 41 Am. Rep. 630; Mears v. Waples, 3 Houst. (Del.) 581.

But where one who is insolvent buys on credit, with the intention or preconceived design of not paying for what he buys, he is guilty of fraud. Ayres v. French, 41 Conn. 142; Donaldson v. Far- by her, without restoring the consideration given by the purchaser.

Pileher v. Smith, 2 Head, 208.

And the same rule will apply to infants, if at the time of calling for rescission they still have in their possession and control the consideration received for the sale.

Bartlett v. Cowles, 15 Gray, 445.

The failure to offer to return the consideration received will be treated as an affirmation of the contract.

Sanborn v. Osgood, 16 N. H. 112; Ayers v. Hewett, 19 Me. 281; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307, 23 Am. Dec. 607; Bigelow, Fraud, p. 410.

Dickson, after discovering the fraud as indicated by his letter of February 27, 1886, should immediately have elected to rescind or abide by the contract. He elected to abide by the contract by retaining what he had already received, and by the writing of the letters demanding that Patterson pay to him the balance of the money arising from the sale to Otto Boehme.

Dennis v. Jones, 44 N. J. Eq. 513; Arnold v. Hagerman, 45 N. J. Eq. 186; Grabenheimer v. Blum, 63 Tex. 369; Nounnan v. Sutter County L. Co. 81 Cal. 1, 6 L. R. A. 219; Whiting v. Hill, 23 Mich. 399; Vernol v. Vernol, 63 N. Y. 45.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to procure a decree rescinding certain sales of real estate on the ground of fraud.

The case made by the original and amended bill of the appellant, who was plaintiff below, is substantially as follows:—

Plaintiff and defendant Patterson married sisters and had been friends for a long time. The former had expressed a wish to join the latter upon equal terms in the purchase of real estate in or near Omaha, Nebraska, with a view to platting the same into lots as an addition to that city.

*Defendant accordingly wrote to plain-[586 tiff on May 18, 1885, stating that he was about to purchase 10 acres of land, and that "this 10 acres of land will cost $4,800, $2,500 cash. They will make 48 lots worth $250 each. If you want to go in, it will cost you $1,250 cash, balance to suit." The plaintiff having made further inquiries by letter, defendant answered that the expenses of surveying, advertising, and platting the property would be about $300, and the net profits at least $6,000; that they would probably not be called upon to make the deferred payments; that he, defendant, had realized large profits from other like ventures; that other persons desired to join him, and he urged plaintiff to do so.

Relying upon the above statements, plaintiff accepted the proposition, and subsequently sent defendant Patterson the sum of $1,250 as his half of the cash payment. His wife joining him, he signed a mortgage for the balance well, 93 U. S. 631 (23: 993); Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301; Burrill v. Stevens, 73 Me. 395, 40 Am. Rep. 366; Mulliken v. Millar, 12 R. 1. 296; Fox v. Webster, 43 Mo. 181; Peters v. Hilles, 48 Md. 506, 512; Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 274; Buckley v. Archer, 21 Barb. 585; Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 253; Davis v. McWhirter, 40 U. C. Q. B. 598; Wright v. Brown, 67 N. Y. 1.

Any contract, the making of which is induced by the fraud of either party practised upon the other at the time the contract is made, or while negotiations in regard to it are being carried on, is voidable and may be rescinded at the election of the party defrauded. Smith v. Richards, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 26 (10: 42); Daniel v. Mitchell, 1 Story, 172; Warner v. Daniels, 1 Woodb. & M. 90, 91; Foreman v. Bigelow, 4 Cliff. 508; Taylor v. Fleet, 1 Barb. 471; Buckner v. Street, 15 Fed. Rep. 365; Addington v. Allen, 11 Wend. 375; Masson v. Bovet, 1 Denio, 69; Dauchy v. Silliman, 2 Lans. 361; Schwenk v. Naylor, 102 N. Y. 683; Babcock v. Case, 61 Pa. 427, 100 Am. Dec. 654; Sheldon Axle Co. v. Scofield, 85 Mich. 177; Dennis v. Leaton, 72 Mich. 586; Skinner v. Brigham, 126 Mass. 132; Bowker v. Delong, 141 Mass. 315; Hickey v. Drake, 47 Mo. 369; Reed v. Peterson, 91 Ill. 288; Bradley v. Luce, 99 Ill. 234; Wright v. Haskell, 45 Me. 489; Farris v. Ware, 60 Me. 482; Leeds v. Boyer, 59 Ind. 289; Leake v. Ball, 116 Ind. 214; Dietz v. Sutcliffe, 80 Ky. 650; White v. Cox, 3 Hayw. 79; Pendarvis v. Gray, 41 Tex. 326; Cook v. Moore, 39 Tex. 255; Tyner v. Cotter, 67 Wis. 482; Foster v. Gressett, 29 Ala. 393; Lindsey v. Veasy, 62 Ala. 421; West v. Waddill, 33 Ark. 575; Grindrod v. Wolf, 38 Kan. 292; Wampler v. Wampler, 30 Gratt. 454; Davis v. Henry, 4 W. Va. 571; Preston v. Reeve, 65 N. H. 6; Gates v. Bliss, 43 Vt. 299; Yoeman v. Lasley, 40 Ohio St. 190.

In regard to false representations, it is primarily essential that they be positive statements of facts, and not of mere matters of opinion. Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4; Broughton v. Winn, 60 Ga. 486; Holbrook v. Connor, 60 Me. 573, 11

Am. Rep. 212; Bishop v. Small, 63 Me. 12; Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 Allen, 212; Hazard v. Irwin, 18 Pick. 105; Mooney v. Miller, 102 Mass. 217; Tucker v. White, 125 Mass. 344; Clark v. Everhart, 63 Pa. 347; McClanahan v. McKinley, 52 Iowa, 222; Lucas v. Crippen, 76 Iowa, 507; Hunter v. McLaughlin, 43 Ind. 38; Neidefer v. Chastain, 71 Ind. 363, 36 Am. Rep. 198; Foster v. Caldwell, 18 Vt. 176; JaTray v. Moss, 41 La. Ann. 543; Sawyer v. Prickett, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 146 (22: 105); Stebbins v. Eddy, 4 Mason, 414; New Brunswick & C. R. & L. Co. v. Conybeare, 9 H. L. Cas. 711.

Where a representation is made of a fact which has nothing to do with opinion, and is peculiarly within the knowledge of the person making it, the one receiving such representation has the absolute right to rely on its truthfulness, although the means of ascertaining its falsity are fully open to him. Mead v. Bunn, 32 N. Y. 275; David v. Park, 103 Mass. 501; Kiefer v. Rogers, 19 Minn. 32; Matlock v. Todd, 19 Ind. 130; Keller v. Equitable F. Ins. Co. 28 Ind. 170; Reynell v. Sprye, 8 Hare, 222.

Where parties stand in a confidential relation to each other, there is always an obligation on the part of one to communicate whatever may be known to him and unknown to the other in regard to the subject-matter of the contract. Emmons v. Moore, 85 Ill. 304; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Cornelius v. Molloy, 7 Pa. 300. So of persons standing in a fiduciary relation. Narcissa v. Watham, 2 B. Mon. 241.

In the case of principal and agent, the right to rescind for the agent's fraud, in case of false representations, depends on whether the representation was within the scope of the agent's authority; in such case, the party defrauded may rescind. Weir v. Bell, L. R. 3 Exch. Div. 238; Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Exch. 259; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 Wend. 518, 23 Am. Dec. 476; Durst v. Burton, 47 N. Y. 167, 7 Am. Rep. 428; Krumm v. Beach, 25 Hun, 293; Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. L. 288, 39 Am. Rep. 581; Perley v. Catlin, 31 Ill. 533.

of the purchase money, dated June 10, 1885, the same to be executed also by defendant and wife. This mortgage was sent to Dickson by Patterson for execution.

On June 9, 1885, the premises were conveyed by deed to plaintiff and Patterson, jointly, the consideration stated in it being $4,800. The deed was duly recorded.

Patterson caused the premises to be laid out in lots and streets, the plat of which was recorded as "Patterson and Dickson Place." After writing several letters to plaintiff, speaking in the most encouraging terms of the probability of realizing large returns from the venture, Patterson, on October 21, 1885, wrote to Dickson: "I have sold our 10 acres to-day for $6,000, an advance of $1,200. It did not turn out as well as I expected. . . . This is a very handsome profit for the length of time we have held it. He pays $3,000 cash and the other $700 inside of six months, and assumes the mortgage and all taxes. It nets us a little over $500 each profit."

On October 30, 1885, Patterson inclosed his check for $1,500 to plaintiff, correcting his statement as to net profits by the statement that $224.18 was yet due and coming to the plaintiff. He also inclosed a deed to one Otto Boehme, 587] to be *signed by plaintiff and wife, in which the consideration was expressed to be $6,000. That deed was dated October 28, 1885, and was duly executed by plaintiff and wife, but the amount of the consideration as set forth in the deed was thereafter changed without plaintiff's knowledge to $10,000. On the day after the conveyance to Boehme, the latter, without plaintiff's knowledge, reconveyed the property to Patterson, the consideration recited being $10,000. On February 23, 1886, Patterson vacated the plat made by him and plaintiff, and replatted the premises as "East Side Addition," of which he sold several lots.

After the filing of the original bill, Patterson filed for record a deed dated June 4, 1887, conveying all the premises, with the exception of eight lots, to one Isaac Martin, who was made a party defendant in the amended bill. That deed purported to have been made in execution of an agreement with Martin, he having failed to make payment pursuant to a prior contract alleged to have been made on February 17, 1887.

Long after the transactions above referred to, it became known to Dickson — and he so charged in his bill — that the purchase price of the premises in question was not $4,800 but $3,600 and the cash payment $1,250 and no more, all of which was paid by the plaintiff; that the conveyance to Boehme and reconveyance by him to Patterson were fraudulent, having been made without consideration, and executed in pursuance of the preconceived design of the latter to vest the title in himself.

Whereupon the plaintiff prayed that inasmuch as he had paid all the consideration for the premises, and as the defendant Patterson had advanced no part thereof, he, the plaintiff, was entitled to have all of the said premises and all the advantages arising from the said purchase. He further prayed that inasmuch as the deed to Boehme and the deed from Boehme to Patterson were fraudulent and void, an accounting be directed of all sums received by Patterson in that behalf, and also all sums received by plaintiff from him, and that it be ascertained what sum, if any, plaintiff should repay to him, which he offered and stood ready to pay as soon *as ascertained; [588 that it be decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to have all the benefits of the original purchase; and that by the deed made to plaintiff and Patterson, the latter became seised in fee of an undivided half of the premises in trust for the plaintiff, and not otherwise. The bill further prayed that the deed made by plaintiff and wife, together with Patterson and wife, to Boehme, and as well as the deed made by Boehme to Patterson, and the deed from Patterson to Martin, be declared fraudulent and void; that it be decreed that Patterson convey the premises to the plaintiff in fee, except such lots as had been sold to other parties for a valuable consideration without his knowledge; that Patterson account to the plaintiff for the sums of money realized from such sales; and also that he be restrained from selling any other lots, or receiving any money on account of said sales, or transferring any security therefor, etc.

The bill was dismissed upon the ground that the plaintiff, after acquiring knowledge of the fraud, elected to retain what he had received from the sale of the land in question, and to pursue his claim for moneys claimed to be still due; that the fraud alleged having come to his knowledge, he was bound promptly to make his election, and having elected to let the sale stand, he could not thereafter maintain an action to set it aside.

This ruling was based upon certain letters offered in evidence from which it appeared that Dickson first charged Patterson with fraud in 1886, and wrote him on February 27th of that year, stating, among other things: "In your letter last October you state you sold it for $6,000, and the deed called for the same amount, but I notice the records, etc., call for $10,000,—a slight difference of $4,000. This change seems to have occurred after the paper left Kansas City. Then, too, I object to the original cost of the land as stated in your letter last May, viz., $4,800 ($2,500 cash and $2,500 in note), when I know now that the land only cost $3,600, or a difference of $1,200, making my half interest cost $600 less than you stated, which, taken together with my half of the $4,000 which you did not report, would be something like $2,600 which you are owing me. I *cannot say with you, 'thus far my [589 feelings alone have been affected,' but you have taken money from me by false representations, the knowledge of which fact has only lately come to my hands. Now I wish to know when you propose to pay me the above amount due me." Patterson replied to this letter on March 3, 1886, explaining that the amount of consideration in the deed had been changed at Boehme's request; and as to the land being purchased originally for $3,600, it was not true. He added that he did not blame him for being aroused over such a false report, but that he, Patterson, could "explain all discrepancies in a manner that cannot be impeached, and when necessary can be proven up with living testimony and plenty of it." Boehme, also, at the instance of Patterson, wrote to Dickson, under date of March 2, 1886, stating that the consideration paid by him for the land was $6,000 and no more; that the amount expressed in the deed to him was changed at his request in order that he might the more easily secure a large profit; and that he believed Patterson was honest and straight and bore that reputation.

After some further correspondence with a view to a settlement,—Patterson insisting that a balance was due him from plaintiff on account of a certain other real-estate transaction in Kansas City,—Dickson on August 4, 1887, filed his bill in equity praying a rescission of these sales and an accounting, as hereinbefore set forth.

The bill having been dismissed for the reasons above stated, Dickson took an appeal to this court.

The evidence fully sustained the allegations of fraud made in the original and amended complaint. We cannot doubt from the record that after the land in question was purchased and conveyed to the plaintiff and defendant Patterson, jointly, the latter conceived the purpose of acquiring the title to the whole of it. To that end he pretended to have made a sale of it to Boehme, and induced the plaintiff not only to believe that it was a real sale at a named price, but to join in the deed to Boehme. The day after the title was vested in Boehme the latter reconveyed the property to Patterson. According to the preponderance 590 of evidence that transaction *was a sham, but not more so than the pretended sale and conveyance to one Martin. That which purports to be a deed to Martin, reciting a consideration of $19,425 in hand paid, was in fact executed after the institution of this suit, although dated and certified to have been acknowledged on the 4th day of June, 1887. It would subserve no useful end to set forth in this opinion all the facts and circumstances bearing upon the issue of fraud. But we may remark that, according to the evidence, some one assumed the name of Martin long enough to go through the form of a purchase from Patterson, after which he disappeared, his whereabouts pending this suit being unknown although his answer was filed by direction of Patterson.

We content ourselves with saying that the proof makes it clear that the pretended sales to Boehme and Martin were in execution of a scheme devised by Patterson to deprive Dickson of his interest in these lands without his receiving the full value of such interest, and thus to become himself the sole owner.

This was substantially the view taken of the case by the circuit court. The presiding judge not only expressed the fear that the charges of fraud and misconduct were well founded, but said that the testimony of the defendant Patterson was impeached by so many circumstances that it could not be safely made the basis of judicial action. Assuming the charges of fraud to have been proved, the court dismissed the bill upon the ground that the plaintiff's letters, written in 1886, show that he, "with knowledge of the fraud, not only retained what he had received from the sale, but elected to let it stand and pursue his claim for the moneys still due him thereon." Undoubtedly it appears from these letters that the plaintiff charged that Patterson had falsely represented the original cost of the land (one half of which Dickson was to pay) to have been $4,800, when it was only $3,600, and that the deed to Boehme, at the time it was executed by plaintiff and his wife, recited the consideration to be $6,000 (the amount for which Patterson said he had sold the 10 acres), and yet, when put on record, it recited $10,000 as the *consideration. Upon the basis of [591] $3,600 as the price originally paid for the lands by Patterson, representing himself and the plaintiff, and $10,000 as the amount paid by Boehme, the plaintiff rightfully claimed a larger sum than had been paid to him by Patterson. If this were the whole case there would be force in the suggestion that Dickson, with information of the fraud practised upon him, had elected to affirm the sale to Boehme and to claim the additional sum that he supposed to be due him upon a proper accounting.

But there are other considerations which preclude Patterson from insisting that Dickson made his election of remedies, and must abide by that election. During the correspondence that took place between the parties in 1886, Dickson, so far as the record shows, was not aware that the sale and conveyance to Boehme was merely fictitious, and in execution of Patterson's scheme to defraud him. Patterson assured him that that sale was a real one, and there is no proof to show that Dickson, at the time, knew or believed anything to the contrary. If it was a real sale, Dickson, having joined in the deed to Boehme, could not go behind it, unless he could show that the latter did not purchase in good faith. But from what Patterson wrote to him, he had no reason to doubt the validity of the sale to Boehme. Besides, Patterson induced Boehme to inform Dickson by letter that the amount paid was only $6,000, and that it was changed in the deed to $10,000 at his, Boehme's, request, and that Patterson was an honest man, with a good reputation. All this was well calculated to make the impression upon Dickson that the only relief he could have against Patterson was to obtain an accounting and a decree or judgment for such additional sum as was justly due him.

After the correspondence between the parties ended in the latter part of the year 1886, the plaintiff, as we must assume from the record, ascertained for the first time all the facts as they are now disclosed, and, without unreasonable delay, commenced the present suit. We should not be justified by the record in saying that he had, for any considerable time before the bringing of this suit, such knowledge of all the *circumstances of [592] this transaction as enabled him to know with certainty what his rights were, and to determine what course should be taken to vindicate them. If, as the evidence shows, the real facts were concealed from him by one from whom he had reason to expect a frank disclosure of all the material circumstances as they occurred, he is not, for that reason,—no rights of innocent third parties having intervened,—to be denied the fullest relief to which, according to the principles of equity, he is entitled.

The plaintiff in his amended complaint claims that he paid the original consideration for these lands, and is entitled to a conveyance of them upon his paying to the defendant Patterson such sum as, upon a proper accounting, he ought to pay, Patterson being charged with such sums as he received on account of the premises or the lots into which they were divided by him.

We are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to relief to that extent. But he is entitled to a decree setting aside and annulling the deed purporting to have been executed by Patterson to Martin, the deed from Boehme to Patterson, and the deed to Boehme from Patterson and Dickson and their wives, respectively, leaving the title to the premises in question where it was prior to the execution of the last-named deed; such decree to be without prejudice to any valid rights acquired by parties who purchased in good faith from Patterson while the fee was in him alone. The cause should be referred to a commissioner for an accounting between Dickson and Patterson in respect of the sums paid by them respectively on the original purchase as evidenced by the deed of June 9, 1885, from Tukey and Keysor and their wives, respectively, to Patterson and Dickson; Dickson, in such accounting, to have credit for one half of all amounts received by Patterson, on the sales by him of any of the lots into which the 10 acres were subdivided, and Patterson to have credit for any sums paid by him in discharge of taxes or other charges upon the property.

The decree is reversed and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as are not inconsistent with this opinion.

593] UNITED STATES, Appt.,
v.
HENRY C. FULLER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 593-598.)

Mate in naval service, when entitled to a ration.

A mate in the United States Navy, attached to and serving on a United States receiving ship, is entitled to a ration while so serving, or to the commutation price thereof, under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 1579, 1585.

[No. 805.]

Submitted January 9, 1896. Decided January 20, 1896.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of Henry C. Fuller, claimant, against the United States for the commutation price of a ration to which he was entitled as a mate in the Navy. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to extra pay or compensation to officers, see note to United States v. Macdaniel, 8: 587.

160 U. S.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a petition for a commutation of rations alleged to be due to claimant as a "mate" in the Navy.

The petitioner alleged his appointment as mate on March 4, 1870, and that from March 20, 1888, until August 12, 1891, he was attached to the receiving ship Vermont at the Navy Yard in Brooklyn; that, under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 1579, 1585, he was entitled to rations while so serving, or to the commutation price thereof; but that the same had been refused him, and he therefore prayed judgment in the sum of $380.

The court of claims found the following facts:

1. The claimant, a mate in the United States Navy, was attached to and served on the United States receiving ship Vermont from March 20, 1888, to August 14, 1891.

2. During his said service he was not allowed a ration nor commutation therefor.

3. Mates have not been regarded as petty officers by the Treasury Department, nor by the Navy Department, prior to the adoption of the Navy Regulations of 1893.

4. From the year 1799 master's mates in the United States Navy were warrant officers, except when acting under temporary and probationary appointments. Warrants were issued to them after at least one year's sea service under a probationary appointment. No such warrants were, however, issued after 1843, and in 1847 a regulation of the Navy Department forbade commanding officers to make such probationary appointments.

On October 7, 1863, the Secretary of the Navy issued the following circular:

"Seamen enlisted in the naval service may hereafter, as formerly, be advanced to the rating of master's mate, and such rating may be bestowed by the commander of a squadron, subject to the approval of the department, or by the commander of a vessel, with the previous sanction of the department.

"Seamen so rated will be entitled to the same pay, rank, and privileges as appointed or warranted master's mates, but will not be released by their rating from the obligations of their enlistment, and may be disrated by the order or with the sanction of the department. They will not, while rated as master's mates, be considered as subject to trial by a summary court-martial, nor be disrated by transfer, as in the case of petty officers.

"Seamen rated as master's mates will not be discharged with that rating, and will be considered as disrated to seamen upon the expiration of their enlistment, but upon their immediate re-enlistment the rating of master's mate may be considered as renewed. The acceptance of such renewed rating will be considered as a renunciation of any claim to additional pay for re-enlistment. All ratings of master's mates made by order of the commander of a squadron, and all such ratings renewed by re-enlistment, will be reported to the department as early as practicable."

Upon these facts the court held, as a conclusion of law, that the claimant was entitled to recover the sum of $372.60, for which judgment was entered, and the government appealed.

Messrs. J. E. Dodge, Assistant Attorney General, and Charles C. Binney, for appellant.

Messrs. John Paul Jones and Robt. B. Lines for appellee.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

Petitioner's claim is based upon the exception contained in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1579, which reads as follows: "No person not actually 595 attached to and doing duty on board a seagoing vessel, except the petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships, or to the ordinary of a navy yard, and midshipmen, shall be allowed a ration," which, by § 1585, for the purpose of commutation, is fixed at 30 cents.

The personnel of the Navy is divided generally into commissioned officers, noncommissioned or warrant officers, petty officers, and seamen of various grades and denominations. That a mate is not a commissioned officer is entirely clear, and is not disputed by either party. It is equally clear that he is above the grade of seaman, and the real question is whether he is a noncommissioned or warrant officer, a person "temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer," or a "petty officer."

We think little is to be gained in the solution of this question by a detailed examination of the several acts of Congress and Navy Regulations which antedate the Revised Statutes. Prior to 1843 "master's mates" were recognized by the law as warrant officers, or as "warranted master's mates," and appear to have been sometimes appointed by the President and sometimes rated (that is, promoted from lower grades) by commanding officers. But shortly after this time they seem to have fallen into disuse, and no further appointments were made, although the grade was not formally abolished, and those who had been previously appointed continued to hold their offices and receive their pay.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, however, a great increase in all the naval forces became necessary, and the Secretary of the Navy made temporary appointments of "acting masters and master's mates," which were confirmed by act of Congress of July 24, 1861 (12 Stat. at L. 272). By act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat. at L. 539), their names were changed to that of "mates," and the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to increase their pay and to rate them from seamen and ordinary seamen who had enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years. By act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 321, 330), they were formally recognized as a part of the naval forces, and their pay was fixed at $900 when at sea, $700 596 on shore *duty, and $500 on leave or waiting orders. These amounts were raised in 1894. 28 Stat. at L. 212.

By the Revised Statutes, which were intended to consolidate and codify all the prior enactments upon the subject, the President was authorized to appoint (§ 1405) "as many boatswains, gunners, sailmakers, and carpenters as may, in his opinion, be necessary and proper," who (§ 1406) "shall be known and shall be entered upon the naval register as warrant officers in the naval service of the United States," and whose pay was specified in a separate paragraph of § 1556, fixing the pay of the naval forces.

By § 1408 "mates may be rated, under authority of the Secretary of the Navy, from seamen and ordinary seamen who have enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years." By § 1556 their pay was fixed at the rates provided by the acts of July 15, 1870, and by § 1410 "all officers not holding commissions or warrants, or who are not entitled to them, except such as are temporarily appointed to the duties of a commission or warrant officer, and except secretaries and clerks, shall be deemed petty officers, and shall be entitled to obedience, in the execution of their offices, from persons of inferior ratings." By § 1569 "the pay to be allowed to petty officers, excepting mates" (whose pay was fixed by § 1556), "and the pay and bounty upon enlistment of seamen, firemen, and coalheavers in the naval service, shall be fixed by the President," with the further provision (§ 1579) that "no person not actually attached to and doing duty on board a seagoing vessel, except the petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships or to the ordinary of a navy yard, and midshipmen, shall be allowed a ration."

From this summary of the Revised Statutes it appears reasonably clear:

1. That boatswains, gunners, sailmakers, and carpenters are warrant officers to be appointed by the President, and that they are the only ones specifically mentioned as such.

2. That mates are officers not holding commissions or warrants, and not entitled to them, but are petty officers *promoted by the 597 Secretary of the Navy from seamen of inferior grades, who have enlisted for not less than two years, and that they are distinguished from other petty officers only in the fact that their pay is fixed by statute instead of by the President. From this it would seem to follow that, although their pay is fixed by law instead of by the President, they are in other respects entitled to the emoluments of petty officers, among which are rations.

The exception of mates from § 1569 merely indicates that, Congress having already fixed their pay, such pay need not be fixed by the President. But they are still within the exception of "petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships," who are inferentially allowed a ration by § 1579. The exception of mates from other petty officers in § 1569 indicates that they are petty officers, and the exception of petty officers from those who are not entitled to rations under § 1579 indicates that, as such, they are entitled to a ration.

We think there is no authority for saying that they are temporarily appointed to the duties of a warrant officer. While the words "acting master's mates," sometimes employed prior to the Revised Statutes, might indicate, by the use of the word "acting," a person temporarily appointed to the duties of a master's mate, officers who are recognized by law, and whose pay is fixed by a permanent statute, cannot be said to be temporarily appointed. The argument that a "warrant" is defined to be "an instrument conferring authority upon persons, inferior to a commission," and that mates must therefore be warrant officers because they are appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, proves too much; since all petty officers hold by some sort of designation from a superior authority, and if a warrant be an instrument inferior to a commission, this would make all petty officers warrant officers. On the other hand, as, by § 1405, warrant officers are appointed by the President, it would seem to follow that, if they held their appointments from an inferior authority, they were not to be considered as warrant officers. There is also an implication to the same effect from the act of 598]*August 1, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 212), raising the pay of mates, and providing that "the law regulating the retirement of warrant officers in the Navy shall be construed to apply to the twenty-eight officers now serving as mates." This provision would be quite unnecessary if, under the general provisions of law, they fell within the designation of warrant officers.

After some hesitation and apparent confusion of opinion on the part of the Navy Department, this was the construction of the Revised Statutes finally settled upon by the Navy Regulations of 1893, art. 28, and we think it is correct. The only difficulty in the case seems to have arisen from certain acts prior to the Revised Statutes, notably the act of 1813, which dealt with warranted "master's mates," under which mates continued to be classified by the Navy Department as warrant officers, until the Revised Statutes were adopted.

The judgment of the court of claims is therefore affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF NEW YORK.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 598-624.)

Transmission to the court of claims—claims for adjudication—limitation—claim of state—interest paid by state.

1. The power of an executive department to transmit claims for final adjudication, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, to the court of claims when they involve disputed facts or controverted questions of law where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000, or in certain cases without regard to the amount involved, is not taken away by the Bowman act or the Tucker act, but all these statutes are to be regarded as parts of one general system and standing together, without conflict in any essential particular.
2. Such claims, if not barred by the statute of limitations, and if such as the court of claims could take cognizance of at the suit of the claimant, may be so transmitted to that court for final adjudication.
3. A claim presented to the Treasury Department before it was barred by limitation may be transmitted to the court of claims for adjudication, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, after the expiration of six years from the time the cause of action accrued; such transmission is only a continuation of the original proceeding.

160 U. S.

4. Interest paid by the state of New York on its bonds issued to defray the expenses of raising troops for the national defense is a part of the "costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred" within the meaning of the act of Congress of July 27, 1861, to be reimbursed to the state by the general government.
5. Interest paid by the state of New York to its canal fund on moneys borrowed from that fund, under an agreement by its officers to pay such interest, is an expense properly incurred by the state in raising troops for the national defense, to be repaid by the United States to that state, as the state could not legally borrow from the canal fund without paying interest.

[Nos. 45, 136.]

Argued April 11, 1895. Ordered for reargument April 15, 1895. Reargued October 17, 18, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

A PPEALS from a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the State of New York against the United States for $91,320.84, for interest paid on the bonds of said state in anticipation of taxes imposed for the public defense. The state appealed on the ground that it was entitled to judgment for the additional sum of $39,867.13 paid by it to its canal fund for interest upon moneys borrowed from that fund for the national defense. Motion to dismiss denied, judgment reversed, and case remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 26 Ct. Cl. 467.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. David B. Hill and T. E. Hancock, Attorney General of New York, for New York.

Messrs. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, and J. E. Dodge, Assistant Attorney General, for the United States.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 3d day of January, 1889, the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to the court of claims all the papers and vouchers relating to a claim of the state of New York against the United States, then pending in the Treasury Department, for interest paid on money borrowed and expended in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, and equipping troops for the suppression of the rebellion of 1861. That claim, the Secretary certified, involved controverted questions of law, and exceeded $3,000 in amount. The communication accompanying the papers stated that the case was transmitted to the court of claims under and by authority of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, to be there proceeded in according to law.

In further prosecution of this claim, the state promptly filed its petition in the court below and asked judgment against the United States for the sum of $131,188.02, with interest from the first day of July, 1862, together with such other relief as would be in conformity with law.

This claim was based on the act of Congress of July 27, 1861, chap. 21, providing that "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the governor of any state or to his duly authorized agents the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such state for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting its troops employed in aiding to suppress the present insurrection against the United States, to be settled upon proper vouchers to be filed and passed upon by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury." 12 Stat. at L. 276.

By a joint resolution of Congress, approved 601] March 8, 1862, *it was declared that the above act should be construed "to apply to expenses incurred as well after as before the date of the approval thereof." 12 Stat. at L. 615.

Before July 4, 1861, the state of New York—pursuant to a statute passed by its legislature April 15, 1861, chap. 277—enlisted, enrolled, armed, equipped, and caused to be mustered into the military service of the United States, for the period of two years or during the war, thirty thousand troops to be employed in suppressing the rebellion. That statute provided that all expenditures for arms, supplies, or equipments necessary for such forces should be made under the direction of the governor and other named officers, and that the moneys therefor should, on the certificate of the governor, be drawn from the treasury on the warrant of the comptroller, in favor of such person or persons as from time to time were designated by the governor; and the sum of $3,000,000, or so much thereof as was necessary, was appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses authorized by that act, or any other expenses of mustering the militia of the state or any part thereof into the service of the United States. That act also imposed, for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st day of October, 1861, a state tax to meet the expenses authorized, not to exceed 2 mills on each dollar of the valuation of real and personal property in the state. N. Y. Laws 1861 (84th Sess.) p. 634.

There was no money in the treasury of the state in 1861 that had not been specifically appropriated for the expenses of the state government; none that could have been used to defray the expenses of enlisting, enrolling, arming, equipping, and mustering troops into the service of the United States.

Under the laws of the state the moneys authorized to be raised by the act of April 15, 1861, did not reach the state treasury, and were not available for use until the months of April and May, 1862.

The total state tax rate fixed at the session of the legislature beginning on the first Tuesday in January, 1861, was $3\frac{1}{2}$ mills, of which, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mills 602] was the amount authorized by the *above statute of 1861. The moneys realized from this tax were paid into the state treasury during the year 1862.

The state had no other means of raising the money required for the purpose of immediately defraying the expenses of enlisting, enrolling, arming, equipping, and mustering in such troops, except by borrowing money in anticipation of the collection of its taxes; and between June 3, 1861, and July 2, 1861, in order to provide for the public defense, it issued bonds in anticipation of such taxes to the amount of $1,250,000 payable on July 1, 1862, except that $100,000 was made payable June 1, 1862, at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, which at that time was the legal rate of interest under the laws of the state.

The issuing of these bonds was necessary for the purpose of providing the money required, and upon their sale the full amount of their face value was received and was used and applied by the state, together with other moneys, in raising troops. The entire sum so expended between the 23d day of April, 1861, and the 1st day of January, 1862, was $2,873,501.19, exclusive of interest upon the bonds or loans made by the state for that purpose.

In addition to the above sums, the state, during the years 1861 and 1862, paid, on account of interest that accrued on its bonds issued in anticipation of the tax for the public defense, the sum of $91,320.84.

By a statute of New York of April 12, 1862, the legislature specifically appropriated the sum of $1,250,000 for the redemption of comptroller's bonds issued for loans in anticipation of the tax imposed by the act of April 15, 1861, and the additional sum of $91,320.84 for the payment of the accruing interest on those bonds. N. Y. Laws 1862 (85th Sess.) chap. 192, p. 364.

Of the remainder of the above sum of $2,873,501.19 necessarily expended by the state of New York for the purpose stated, between April 23, 1861, and January 1, 1862, after deducting the amount of $1,250,000 raised by issuing bonds, $1,623,501.19 was taken from the canal fund of the state. That fund, under the Constitution of the state, was a sinking *fund for the ultimate pay- [603 ment of what is known as the canal debt. N. Y. Const. 1846, art. 7, § 1.

Under the tax rate of 1860 there had been levied and collected and paid into the treasury of the state the sum of $2,039,663.06 for the benefit of and to the credit of the canal fund. That sum reached the state treasury in April and May, 1861, subject to be invested by the state officers pursuant to the requirements of law and the Constitution of the state, in securities for the benefit of the canal fund. On May 21, 1861, the lieutenant governor, comptroller, treasurer, and the attorney general, constituting the commissioners of the canal fund, authorized the comptroller to use $2,000,000 of the canal fund moneys for military purposes until the 1st of October next, and $1,000,000 until the 1st day of January, 1862, at 5 per cent; and of this amount the sum of $1,623,501.19 was used by the comptroller for the purpose of defraying the expenses of raising and equipping such troops. The following was the order: "State of New York, Canal Department, Albany, May 21, 1861. The comptroller is to be permitted to use $2,000,000 of the canal fund moneys for military purposes until the first day of October next, when the commissioners of the canal fund will invest $1,000,000 of the canal sinking fund under § 1, art. 7, in the tax levied for military purposes until the 1st of July, 1862, at 5 per cent, and the comptroller may use $1,000,000 of the tax levied to pay interest on the $12,000,000 debt until the 1st of January, 1862, when the commissioners will, if they have the means, replace that or as large an amount as they may have the means to do it with, from the toll of the next fiscal year, so as that the whole advance from the canal fund on account of the tax be $2,000,000. It is understood the comptroller will retain the taxes now in process of collection for canal purposes until the above investments are made, paying the funds 5 per cent interest therefor." This order was signed by the commissioners of the canal fund.

On December 28, 29, and 31, 1861, the United States repaid to the state, on account 604 of moneys so expended by the latter, *the sum of $1,113,000 which sum with interest was placed in the canal fund on April 4, 1862. This left $510,501.19 unpaid of the moneys used from the canal fund.

The amount of interest at 5 per cent per annum on the moneys of the canal fund during the time it was used by the state in raising troops was $48,187.13. But during the same time the state had received interest on portions of those moneys, while it was lying in bank unused, to the amount of $8,319.95, and the net deficiency of the state on account of interest on such moneys during the period when they were so used was $39,867.18, which sum was paid into the canal fund from the state treasury.

The total amount paid by the state for interest upon its bonds issued in anticipation of the tax for the public defense, and upon the moneys of the canal fund used for the purpose of defraying the expenses of raising and equipping troops, was $131,188.02. No part of that sum has been paid by the United States.

The moneys above specified as actually expended by the state of New York were necessarily expended for the purpose of enlisting, enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting such troops, and causing them to be mustered into the military service of the United States, and were so paid and expended at the request of the civil and military authorities of the United States.

Prior to January 3, 1889, the state had presented, from time to time, various claims and accounts to the Treasury Department of the United States for charges and expenses incurred by it in enlisting, enrolling, arming, equipping, and mustering troops into the military service of the United States. Those claims amounted in the aggregate to $2,950,479.46, and included charges for all the moneys paid and placed as hereinbefore specified. The department, from time to time, allowed thereon various sums aggregating $2,775,915.24, leaving a balance of $174,564.22 not allowed, and the claims for which were pending in the department unadjusted when this case was transmitted to the court of claims on the 3d day of January, 1889. Of that sum of 605 $174,564.22, the sums *hereinbefore specified amounting to $131,188.02, constituted a part.

The claim of the state for expenditures in furnishing troops with clothing and munitions of war was filed in the Treasury Department in May, 1862, and included the above items of interest. The claim for interest has from that time been suspended in the department, and was so suspended at the time it was transmitted to the court of claims.

The court, after finding the facts substantially as above stated, gave judgment in favor of the state for $91,320.84, on account of interest paid upon its bonds issued in anticipation of taxes imposed for the public defense. From that judgment the United States appealed. The state also appealed, and claims that it was entitled to judgment for the additional sum of $39,867.13 paid into what is called the canal fund as interest upon the moneys it has borrowed from that fund to be repaid with interest.

The government has moved to dismiss the state's appeal, its contention being that the judgment brought here by the state for review is not obligatory in character and appealable, but only ancillary and advisory. This motion assumes that the court below was without jurisdiction under existing legislative enactments to render a final judgment, reviewable by this court, upon any claim, whatever its amount, made against an executive department and transmitted to the court of claims to be there proceeded in according to law.

We recognize the importance of the question thus presented, and have bestowed upon it the most careful consideration. Its solution can be satisfactorily reached only by an examination of the various statutes regulating the jurisdiction of the court of claims, including those known as the Bowman act of March 3, 1883, chap. 116 (22 Stat. at L. 485), and the Tucker act of March 3, 1887, chap. 359 (24 Stat. at L. 505).

By the act of Congress of July 27, 1861, chap. 21, the Secretary of the Treasury was directed, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, and upon vouchers to be passed upon by the accounting officers of that department, to pay the *costs, charges, 606 and expenses properly incurred by any state in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting its troops to be employed in suppressing the rebellion of 1861. 12 Stat. at L. 276.

The claim of New York was founded on the above act of Congress of July 27, 1861, if not on contract with the United States. It was transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the court of claims under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, as one involving controverted questions of law.

By the act of June 25, 1868, chap. 71, § 7, the jurisdiction of the court of claims was enlarged so as to embrace several classes of claims that might be transmitted to it by the head of an executive department for adjudication. 15 Stat. at L. 75, 76.

The provisions of that act were preserved in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, which is as follows: "§ 1063. Whenever any claim is made against any executive department, involving disputed facts or controverted questions of law, where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000, or where the decision will affect a class of cases, or furnish a precedent for the future action of any executive department in the adjustment of a class of cases, without regard to the amount involved in the particular case, or where any authority, right, privilege, or exemption is claimed or denied under the Constitution of the United States, the head of such department may cause such claim, with all the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the court of claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in as if originally commenced by the voluntary action of the claimant; and the Secretary of the Treasury may, upon the certificate of any auditor or comptroller of the Treasury, direct any account, matter, or claim, of the character, amount, or class described in this section, to be transmitted, with all the vouchers, papers, documents, and proofs pertaining thereto, to the said court, for trial and adjudication: Provided, that no case shall be referred by any head of a department unless it belongs to one of the several classes of cases which, by reason 607] of the subject-matter and character, *the said court might, under existing laws, take jurisdiction of on such voluntary action of the claimant."

It is clear that under this section no claim against an executive department, not otherwise described than as one "involving disputed facts or controverted questions of law," could be transmitted to the court of claims for adjudication unless the amount in controversy exceeded $3,000. It is equally clear that that section did not make the amount jurisdictional where a claim of that class is transmitted as one the decision of which would affect a class of cases, or furnish a precedent for the action of the executive department in adjusting a class of cases, nor where any authority, right, privilege, or exemption was claimed or denied under the Constitution of the United States. But, as bearing on the inquiry to be presently made whether that section was superseded by subsequent enactments, it should be here noted that there might be claims in the hands of an auditor or of the comptroller of the Treasury for examination, which in the first instance were to be passed on by some other department than that of the Treasury. Claims of that special class could not be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the court of claims, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, for adjudication, except "upon the certificate of the auditor or comptroller of the Treasury" having it under examination. This is indicated not only by the words of that section, but by §§ 1064 and 1065, the first of which sections provides that "all cases transmitted by the head of any department, or upon the certificate of any auditor or comptroller, according to the provisions of the preceding section, shall be proceeded in as other cases pending in the court of claims, and shall, in all respects, be subject to the same rules and regulations;" and the latter, that "the amount of any final judgment or decree rendered in favor of the claimant, in any case transmitted to the court of claims under the two preceding sections, shall be paid out of any specific appropriation applicable to the case, if any such there be; and where no such appropriation exists, the judgment or decree shall be paid in the same manner as other judgments of the said court."

608] *We come now to what is known as the Bowman act of March 3, 1883, chap. 116, entitled "An Act to Afford Assistance and Relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the Investigation of Claims and Demands against the Government." 22 Stat. at L. 485.

By the 1st section of that act it is provided: "§ 1. Whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the court of claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration."

The 2d section is in these words: "§ 2. When a claim or matter is pending in any of the executive departments, which may involve controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such department may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report its findings and opinions to the department by which it was transmitted for its guidance and action."

As the Bowman act contains no words of express repeal, the question arises whether, by necessary implication, its 2d section superseded § 1063 of the Revised Statutes, in respect of claims transmitted by an executive department to the court of claims.

The court of claims was required by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, to adjudicate any claim properly transmitted from an executive department by a final judgment, while the Bowman act prohibited any judgment being entered for *or against a claim transmitted under 609] that act; the duty of the court, in cases involving controverted questions of fact or law, transmitted to and heard by it under the Bowman act, being only to report its findings of fact and conclusions of law to the proper department, for "its guidance and action."

It is nevertheless suggested that the Bowman act, although without words of repeal, covers the entire subject of claims involving controverted questions of fact or law that may be transmitted to the court of claims from an executive department, and it is argued that we must apply the rule that a prior statute is to be regarded as repealed or modified where "the last statute is so broad in its terms and so clear and explicit in its words as to show that it was intended to cover the whole subject, and therefore to displace the prior statute." Frost v. Wenie, 157 U. S. 46, 58 [39: 614, 619].

If that act be held to have displaced the whole of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063 (except the clause relating to claims transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certificate of an auditor or of the comptroller of the treasury) the result would be that, after its passage, the court of claims was wholly without jurisdiction to render judgment on any claim for money transmitted from an executive department, whatever its nature or amount. Such a construction would exclude from judicial cognizance by that court not only claims exceeding $3,000 in amount, and specifically designated as claims involving controverted questions of law and fact, but even claims the determination of which would affect a class of cases, or furnish a precedent for the future action of an executive department, and claims that involved an authority, right, privilege, or exemption asserted or denied under the Constitution of the United States. Congress, when it passed the Bowman act, must have had in view the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, under which the court of claims had so long exercised jurisdiction of claims for money made against an executive department and transmitted to that court for final adjudication. As the Bowman act makes no reference to that section, and contains no words of repeal, we cannot suppose that Congress intended to take from the *court of claims jurisdiction to render judgment in cases coming before it under the Revised Statutes. The object of that act is expressed in its title, and was to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the government. To that end, and in respect of claims and demands involving controverted questions of fact or law and pending in the executive departments, authority was given to the heads of such departments upon their own motion, and whether the claimant desired it or not, to obtain, for their "guidance and action," findings of fact and conclusions of law, without regard to the amount involved. Re Billings, 23 Ct. Cl. 166, 174. Neither expressly nor by necessary implication did that act take from an executive department the right to send to the court of claims, for final adjudication, any claim made against it that was embraced by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063. So far as the Bowman act relates to claims for money pending in an executive department, it only authorized the head of the department to send them to that court for a report of facts and conclusions that would not have the force of a judgment reviewable by this court. In this view, there is no conflict between the Bowman act and the Revised Statutes. As there are no words of repeal in the Bowman act, we have given it such construction as will make it consistent with previous legislation, and thus avoid the abrogation of existing statutes which Congress had not repealed either expressly or by necessary implication. The 2d section of the Bowman act should be construed as if it were a proviso to U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063. Thus construed, the later statute is not in conflict with the earlier one.

We turn now to the act of March 3, 1887, chap. 359, known as the Tucker act, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Bringing of Suits against the Government of the United States." 24 Stat. at L. 505.

The 1st section of that act gives the court of claims original jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, *except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an executive department or upon contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable; nothing, however, in that section to be construed as giving to any of the courts mentioned in the act jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war, and commonly known as "war claims," nor other claims therefor rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same. Jurisdiction was also given of all set-offs, counterclaims, claims for damages whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the government of the United States against any claimant. It also provided that no suit against the government of the United States should be allowed under that act unless the same was brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

Other sections of that act are as follows: "§ 12. That when any claim or matter may be pending in any of the executive departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such department, with the consent of the claimant, may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court of claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall report its findings to the department by which it was transmitted. § 13. That in every case which shall come before the court of claims, or is now pending therein, under the provisions of an act entitled "An Act to Afford Assistance and Relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the Investigation of Claims and Demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883 [the Bowman act], if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the *facts established, that it has jurisdiction [612 to render judgment or decree thereon under existing laws or under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and report its proceedings therein to either House of Congress or to the department by which the same was referred to said court." By its 16th section all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with that act were repealed.

What is the scope of the 12th section of the Tucker act? Did that section supersede § 1063 of the Revised Statutes, or § 2 of the Bowman act?

It is difficult to tell what was intended by the words "with the consent of the claimant," in the 12th section of the Tucker act. If Congress intended that no claim, large or small in amount, involving controverted questions of fact or law, and pending in an executive department, should be transmitted to the court of claims, except with the consent of the claimant, that intention would have been expressed in words that could not have been misunderstood; for that court had long exercised jurisdiction in cases of that kind. But, in view of the words used, no such purpose can be imputed to Congress. The Tucker act cannot be held to have taken the place of § 2 of the Bowman act; for § 13 of the Tucker act distinctly provides for judgment in every case then pending in or which might come before the court of claims under the Bowman act, of which that court could have taken judicial cognizance if the case had been commenced originally by suit instituted in that court by the claimant. That Congress did not intend to supersede the Bowman act is made still more apparent by the 14th section of the Tucker act, declaring "that whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress, providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the house in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the court of claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved 613] March 3, 1883, entitled 'An *Act to Afford Assistance and Relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the Investigation of Claims and Demands against the Government' [the Bowman act], and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, etc." It thus appears that any bill, except for a pension, in either House of Congress, providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, may be transmitted to the court of claims, to be proceeded in, not, let it be observed, under the Tucker act, but under the Bowman act of March 3, 1883, and to report the facts, etc., to such House. It is impossible, therefore, to hold that the Tucker act displaced or repealed the 2d section of the Bowman act.

In our opinion the 12th section of the Tucker act should be construed as not referring to claims which an executive department, proceeding under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, seeks to have finally adjudicated by the court of claims, nor to claims described in that section, in respect of which the department, upon its own motion, and whether the claimant consents or not, desires from that court a report, under the Bowman act, of facts and law for its guidance and action. It refers only to claims which the head of an executive department, with the express consent of the claimant, may send to the court of claims in order to obtain a report of facts and law which the department may regard as only advisory. It no doubt often happened that the head of a department did not desire action by the court of claims in relation to a particular claim, but, in order to meet the wishes of the claimant, was willing to have a finding by that court which was not followed by a judgment nor by any report for the guidance and action of the department. So that U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, the 2d section of the Bowman act, and the 12th section of the Tucker act may be regarded as parts of one general system, covering different states of case, and standing together without conflict in any essential particular.

The claim of New York being for money, 614] and founded on *an act of Congress, was within the general jurisdiction of the court of claims. If not barred by limitation it could, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, have been transmitted or certified to the court of claims under the Bowman act after its passage, for a finding of facts or law, and that court, when the Tucker act came into operation, could, under its 13th section, have rendered a final judgment, sending, however, to the Treasury Department a report of its proceedings. But the Secretary of the Treasury, in the exercise of an authority given him by statute and never withdrawn, chose to certify or transmit this claim to the court of claims, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, for final adjudication.

Touching the suggestion that the 12th section of the Tucker act entirely superseded the 2d section of the Bowman act, it may be further observed that the Tucker act repeals only such previous statutes as were inconsistent with its provisions. There is no inconsistency between the sections just named; one, as we have said,—the 2d section of the Bowman act,—relating to claims involving controverted questions of fact or law, which an executive department may transmit to the court of claims without consulting the wishes of the claimant, in order to obtain a report of facts and law for its guidance and action; the other,—the 12th section of the Tucker act,—relating to claims of the same class transmitted to that court with the express consent of the claimant in order to obtain a report of facts and law that would be only advisory in its character.

The object of the 13th section of the Tucker act is quite apparent. A case transmitted under the Bowman act is, we have seen, one in which the findings of fact and law are made for the guidance and action of the executive department from which it came, and therefore a rendition of judgment in such a case, if it be one of which the court could at the outset have taken cognizance at the voluntary suit of the claimant, would be a saving of time for all concerned. If the cases embraced by the 12th section of the Tucker act were only those provided for by the 2d section of the *Bow- [615 man act, the 13th section of the Tucker act, authorizing a final judgment or decree where the claim was one of which the court could originally have taken jurisdiction for purposes of final adjudication, would not have made special reference to cases coming before the court of claims under the Bowman act.

Our conclusions then as to the several statutes under examination, so far as they relate to claims pending in an executive department, are:—

First. Any claim made against an executive department, "involving disputed facts or controverted questions of law, where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000, or where the decision will affect a class of cases, or furnish a precedent for the future action of any executive department in the adjustment of a class of cases, without regard to the amount involved in the particular case, or where any authority, right, privilege, or exemption is claimed or denied under the Constitution of the United States,"—may be transmitted to the court of claims by the head of such department, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, for final adjudication; provided such claim be not barred by limitation, and be one of which, by reason of its subject-matter and character, that court could take judicial cognizance at the voluntary suit of the claimant.

Second. Any claim embraced by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, without regard to its amount and whether the claimant consents or not, may be transmitted under the Bowman act to the court of claims by the head of the executive department in which it is pending, for a report to such department of facts and conclusions of law for "its guidance and action."

Third. Any claim embraced by that section may, in the discretion of the executive department in which it is pending and with the expressed consent of the plaintiff, be transmitted to the court of claims, under the Tucker act, without regard to the amount involved, for a report, merely advisory in its character, of facts or conclusions of law.

Fourth. In every case involving a claim of 616 money, *transmitted by the head of an executive department to the court of claims under the Bowman act, a final judgment or decree may be rendered when it appears to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that the case is one of which the court, at the time such claim was filed in the department, could have taken jurisdiction, at the voluntary suit of the claimant, for purposes of final adjudication.

Whether the words "or matter" in the 2d section of the Bowman act embrace any matters except those involving the payment of money, and of which the court of claims under the statutes regulating its jurisdiction could, at the voluntary suit of the claimant, take cognizance for purposes of final judgment or decree, need not be now considered.

It results that as the claim of New York exceeded $3,000, and was certified under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1063, as one involving controverted questions of law, the court below had jurisdiction to proceed to a final judgment, unless, as suggested by the Assistant Attorney General, the claim when transmitted to the court of claims by the Secretary of the Treasury was barred by limitation.

At the time the claim of New York was filed in the Treasury Department there was no statute of limitations in force expressly applicable to cases in the court of claims. But by the act of March 2, 1863, chap. 92, § 10, it was provided that (within certain exceptions that have no application to this case) every claim against the United States, cognizable by the court of claims, should be barred unless the petition setting forth a statement of it was filed in or transmitted to that court within six years after the claim first accrued; claims that had accrued before the passage of that act not to be barred, if filed or transmitted as above stated, within three years after the passage of the act. 12 Stat. at L. 765, 767. This limitation of six years was preserved in the Revised Statutes and in the Tucker act. Rev. Stat. § 1069; 24 Stat. at L. 505.

Was the claim of New York barred because more than six years passed after it accrued before it was transmitted to the court of claims? In Finn v. United States, 123 U. S. 227, 232 [31: 617]128, 130], *this court said: "The general rule that limitation does not operate by its own force as a bar, but is a defense, and that the party making such a defense must plead the statute if he wishes the benefit of its provisions, has no application to suits in the court of claims against the United States. An individual may waive such a defense, either expressly or by failing to plead the statute; but the government has not expressly or by implication conferred authority upon any of its officers to waive the limitation imposed by statute upon suits against the United States in the court of claims. Since the government is not liable to be sued as of right by any claimant, and since it has assented to a judgment being rendered against it only in certain classes of cases, brought within a prescribed period after the cause of action accrued, a judgment in the court of claims for the amount of a claim which the record or evidence shows to be barred by the statute, would be erroneous." To the same effect was De Arnaud v. United States, 151 U. S. 433, 495 [38: 244, 248].

But, in United States v. Lippitt, 100 U. S. 663, 668, 669 [25: 747, 749], where the question was whether a claim that accrued in 1864, and which was presented to the War Department in 1865, and in 1878 was transmitted to the court of claims as one involving controverted questions of law, the decision whereof would affect a class of cases, the court said: "Limitation is not pleadable in the court of claims against a claim cognizable therein, and which has been referred by the head of an executive department for its judicial determination, provided such claim was presented for settlement at the proper department within six years after it first accrued; that is, within six years after suit could be commenced thereon against the government. Where the claim is of such a character that it may be allowed and settled by an executive department, or may, in the discretion of the head of such department, be referred to the court of claims for final determination, the filing of the petition should relate back to the date when it was first presented at the department for allowance and settlement. In such cases, the statement of the facts upon which the claim rests, in the form of a petition, is only another mode of asserting *the same demand which had previously [618 and in due time been presented at the proper department for settlement. These views find support in the fact that the act of 1868 describes claims presented at an executive department for settlement, and which belong to the classes specified in the 7th section, as cases which may be transmitted to the court of claims. 'And all the cases mentioned in this section, which shall be transmitted by the head of an executive department, or upon the certificate of any auditor or comptroller, shall be proceeded in as other cases pending in said court, and shall in all respects be subject to the same rules and regulations,' with right of appeal. The cases thus transmitted for judicial determination are, in the sense of the act, commenced against the government when the claim is originally presented at the department for examination and settlement. Upon their transfer to the court of claims they are to be 'proceeded in as other cases pending in said court.'"

The same principle was recognized in Finn v. United States, 123 U. S. 227, 232 [31:128, 130], in which case the court, referring to the act of 1863 limiting the time for bringing suits in the court of claims, also said: "The duty of the court under such circumstances, whether limitation was pleaded or not, was to dismiss the petition; for the statute, in our opinion, makes it a condition or qualification of the right to a judgment against the United States that—except where the claimant labors under some one of the disabilities specified in the statute—the claim must be put in suit by the voluntary action of the claimant, or be presented to the proper department for settlement, within six years after suit could be commenced thereon against the government."

Upon the authority of those cases we adjudge that as the claim of New York was presented to the Treasury Department before it was barred by limitation, its transmission by the Secretary of the Treasury to the court of claims for adjudication was only a continuation of the original proceeding commenced in that department in 1862. The delay by the department in disposing of the matter before the expiration of six years after the cause of 619 action accrued, could not impair the rights of the state. Of course, if the claim had not been presented to the Treasury Department before the expiration of that period the court of claims could not have entertained jurisdiction of it.

For the reasons we have stated, a motion of the United States to dismiss the appeal of the state is denied, and we proceed to the examination of the case upon its merits.

The entire sum for which the state asked judgment was $131,188.02, of which $91,320.84 represented the amount paid as interest on moneys borrowed for the purpose of raising troops for the national defense, and for the repayment of which, with interest at 7 per cent, the state executed its short-time bonds. The balance, $39,867.18, represented the amount paid as interest on moneys received by way of loan from the canal fund and applied by the state for the same purpose.

On behalf of the government it is contended that payment by the United States of the above sum of $91,320.84 is prohibited both by the statute (act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. at L. 765; Rev. Stat. § 1091) providing that interest shall not be allowed on any claim up to the time of the rendition of judgment thereon by the court of claims, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest, and by the general rule based on grounds of public convenience, that interest "is not to be awarded against a sovereign government, unless its consent to pay interest has been manifested by an act of its legislature, or by a lawful contract of its executive officers." United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 216 [34:336, 338]; United States v. Bayard ("Angarica v. Bayard") 127 U. S. 251, 260 [32:159, 162].

The allowance of the $91,320.84 would not contravene either the statute or the general rule to which we have adverted. The duty of suppressing armed rebellion having for its object the overthrow of the national government was primarily upon that government and not upon the several states composing the Union. New York came promptly to the assistance of the national government by enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting troops to be employed in putting down the rebellion. Immediately after Fort Sumpter was fired upon, its legislature passed an act appropriating $3,000,000, or so much thereof as was necessary, out of any moneys in its treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray any expenses incurred for arms, supplies, or equipments for such forces as were raised in that state and mustered into the service of the United States. In order to meet the burdens imposed by this appropriation, the real and personal property of the people of New York were subjected to taxation. When New York had succeeded in raising thirty thousand soldiers to be employed in suppressing the rebellion, the United States, well knowing that the national existence was imperiled, and that the earnest co-operation and continued support of the states were required in order to maintain the Union, solemnly declared by the act of 1861 that "the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred" by any state in raising troops to protect the authority of the nation, would be met by the general government. And to remove any possible doubt as to what expenditures of a state would be so met, the act of 1862 declared that the act of 1861 should embrace expenses incurred before, as well as after, its approval. It would be a reflection upon the patriotic motives of Congress if we did not place a liberal interpretation upon those acts, and give effect to what, we are not permitted to doubt, was intended by their passage. Before the act of July 27, 1861, was passed, the Secretary of State of the United States telegraphed to the governor of New York, acknowledging that that state had then furnished fifty thousand troops for service in the war of the rebellion, and thanking the governor for his efforts in that direction. And on July 25, 1861, Secretary Seward telegraphed: "Buy arms and equipments as fast as you can. We pay all." And on July 27, 1861, that "treasury notes for part advances will be furnished on your call for them." On August 16, 1861, the Secretary of War telegraphed to the governor of New York: "Adopt such measures as may be necessary to fill up your regiments as rapidly as possible. We need the men. Let me know the best the Empire State can do to aid the country in the present emergency." And on February 11, 1862, he 621 telegraphed: "The government will refund the state for the advances of troops as speedily as the treasurer can obtain funds for that purpose." Liberally interpreted, it is clear that the acts of July 27, 1861, and March 8, 1862, created, on the part of the United States, an obligation to indemnify the states for any costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred for the purposes expressed in the act of 1861, the title of which shows that its object was "to indemnify the states for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States."

So that the only inquiry is whether, within the fair meaning of the latter act, the words, "costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred," included interest paid by the state of

New York on moneys borrowed for the purpose of raising, subsisting, and supplying troops to be employed in suppressing the rebellion. We have no hesitation in answering this question in the affirmative. If that state was to give effective aid to the general government in its struggle with the organized forces of the rebellion, it could only do so by borrowing money sufficient to meet the emergency; for it had no money in its treasury that had not been specifically appropriated for the expenses of its own government. It could not have borrowed money any more than the general government could have borrowed money, without stipulating to pay such interest as was customary in the commercial world. Congress did not expect that any state would decline to horrow and await the collection of money raised by taxation before it moved to the support of the nation. It expected that each loyal state would, as did New York, respond at once in furtherance of the avowed purpose of Congress, by whatever force necessary, to maintain the rightful authority and existence of the national government. We cannot doubt that the interest paid by the state on its bonds, issued to raise money for the purposes expressed by Congress, constituted a part of the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by it for those objects. Such interest, when paid, became a principal sum, as between the states and the United States, that is, became a part of the aggregate sum properly paid by the state for the 622]United States. The principal *and interest so paid constitute a debt from the United States to the state. It is as if the United States had itself horrowed the money, through the agency of the state. We therefore hold that the court below did not err in adjudging that the $91,320.84 paid by the state for interest upon its bonds issued in 1861 to defray the expenses to be incurred in raising troops for the national defense was a principal sum which the United States agreed to pay, and not interest within the meaning of the rule prohibiting the allowance of interest accruing upon claims against the United States prior to the rendition of judgment thereon.

The court of claims disallowed so much of the state's demand as represented interest paid by it on moneys borrowed from the canal fund. The instalment of interest paid into that fund by the state was $48,187.13. But as the state itself earned interest to the amount of $8,319.95 on a part of the money obtained by it from the commissioners of the canal fund, it only claimed $39,867.18 on account of interest paid to that fund.

The canal fund was made by the Constitution of the state a sinking fund for the ultimate liquidation of what is know as the canal debt of New York. In April and May, 1861, $2,039,663.06 from the taxes of 1860 reached the treasury of the state, and under the Constitution and laws of New York that amount should have been invested in securities for the benefit of the canal fund, and the interest* derived from those securities paid into the fund. The state was permitted to use a part of the above sum under an agreement by its officers that interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent should be paid. It recognized and fulfilled that agreement, and now claims that the interest it so paid to the canal fund constituted a charge or expense properly incurred in raising, subsisting, and supplying troops to suppress the rebellion.

We are of opinion that, so far as the question of the liability of the United States is concerned, there is, on principle, no difference between the claim for $91,320.84 and the claim for $39,867.18. We do not stop to inquire whether the *action of the canal commissioners, [623] in allowing the state to use a part of the moneys collected for the benefit of the canal fund, was strictly in accordance with law. Suffice it to say, that the canal fund was entitled to any interest earned upon moneys belonging to it, and fidelity to the Constitution and laws of New York required the state to recognize that right in the only way it could at the time have been done, namely, by paying the interest that ought to have been realized by the commissioners of the canal fund, if they had invested in interest-paying securities the money they permitted the state to use for military purposes. If the canal fund money, used by the state comptroller to defray the expenses of raising and equipping troops, had been borrowed upon the bonds of the state sold in open market, the interest paid on such bonds would, for the reasons we have stated, be a just charge against the United States on account of expenses properly incurred by the state for the purposes expressed by Congress. And such would have been the result if the moneys of the canal fund had been invested by the commissioners directly in bonds of the state, bearing the same rate of interest that was paid to the commissioners of that fund. The substance of the transaction was that the state, for moneys that could not be legally appropriated for the ordinary expenses of its own government, and which the law required to be so invested as to earn interest for the canal fund, used those moneys for military purposes, under an agreement by its officers, subsequently ratified by the state, to pay interest thereon. It was, in its essence, a loan to the state by the commissioners of the canal fund, of money to be repaid with interest. The obligation of the United States to indemnify the state, on account of such payment, is quite as great as it would be if the transaction had occurred between the state and some corporation from which it borrowed the money. It is not the case of the state taking money out of one pocket to supply a deficiency in another over which it had full power; for, although the moneys brought into its treasury by the collection of taxes was under its control, the state was without power to manage and control taxes collected for the *canal fund, except as [624] provided in its Constitution and laws. It could not legally have become a party to any arrangement or agreement involving the use, without interest, of the moneys of the canal fund that had been set apart for the ultimate payment of the canal debt.

We are of opinion that the claim of the state for money paid on account of interest to the commissioners of the canal fund, is not one against the United States for interest as such, but is a claim for costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred and paid by the state in aid of the general government, and is embraced by the act of Congress declaring that the states would be indemnified by the general government for moneys so expended.

As the state was entitled to a larger sum than $91,320.84, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded with directions for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

E. NALLE & CO., Appts.,

v.

WADE R. YOUNG ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 624-643.)

Mortgage sale—revival of mortgage—wife's general mortgage—party to foreclosure—Louisiana law—redemption.

1. Under La. Code, arts. 679, 683, 684, no sale of mortgaged property can be made under a junior mortgage unless the price bid is sufficient to discharge the prior mortgage if that was conventional or special; but if the prior mortgage was legal or judicial this requirement does not apply, and the property passes to the purchaser subject to the payment of the prior lien.
2. Where mutual debts between two persons are discharged by agreement and compensate each other and are reciprocally extinguished, a mortgage securing one of them falls with the extinguishment of the debt which is secured, and will not be revived though the indebtedness be reacknowledged in favor of another—the wife of the mortgagor—in consideration of the release of her paraphernal claims against her husband.
3. The general mortgage which the wife has in Louisiana on the property of her husband for the reimbursement of her paraphernal property cannot be extinguished by the transfer of a special mortgage of a third party satisfied as between the immediate parties thereto; or if it can be done at all can only be when taking place in accordance with arts. 2379 and 2390, and recorded as required by art. 3345 of the Code of that state.
4. The rendition of judgment for all the paraphernal claims of a wife, without any recognition of a special conventional mortgage to secure them, seems conclusive that none such existed, or at least is persuasive proof thereof.
5. A prior mortgage is not a necessary party in Louisiana to the foreclosure of a subsequent mortgage, and purchasers take subject to the prior lien.
6. In Louisiana a subsequent mortgagee need not be made a party to the foreclosure of a prior mortgage containing the pact de non alienando, but must take notice of the proceedings at his peril. He may, however, apply to set aside the sale.
7. Redemption from a mortgage sale is not allowable as such in Louisiana in any foreclosure case.

[No. 17.]

Submitted October 15, 1895. Decided January 20, 1896.

NOTE.—As to strict foreclosure of mortgage,—see note to Clark v. Reyburn, 19: 354.

As to who is entitled to redeem from the lien of a mortgage,—see note to Noyes v. Hall, 24:909.

560

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Louisiana in a foreclosure case brought by Edward Nalle et al. against Wade R. Young, upon an intervening petition in that case by Mrs. B. F. Young, wife of Wade R. Young, against Nalle et al., and upon a cross bill filed by defendant, decreeing that a foreclosure sale of property be set aside, and that a special mortgage of said Mrs. B. F. Young be recognized as the first mortgage on the property, etc. Reversed, and cause remanded with instructions to enter a decree overruling the objections to the sale, dissolving the injunction, adjudicating the property to Mrs. Mary Nalle, and ordering the delivery of possession to her.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Edward Nalle & Co., composed of Edward Nalle and Walter C. Flower, doing business in the city of New Orleans, filed their petition in the district court for the ninth district of Louisiana, holding sessions in and for the parish of Tensas, on May 30, 1883, against Wade R. Young, to foreclose a mortgage executed on June 2, 1882, to secure Young's note for $1,632.61, payable December 1, 1882, on [626] his interest in certain real estate in that parish, known as the St. Peter plantation. The petition alleged "that said Wade R. Young resides permanently out of the state of Louisiana and is not represented in this state," and prayed for the appointment of a curator ad hoc. The appointment of a curator was made and citation served upon him. On June 25, 1883, Wade R. Young filed his answer to the petition, wherein he described himself as "a resident and citizen of the state of Mississippi," and on the same day filed his petition for the removal of the cause, accompanied by a removal bond; and June 28, the district court entered an order transferring the case to the United States circuit court for the western district of Louisiana, which was done accordingly. Plaintiffs thereupon prayed in that court that their petition be allowed to stand as a bill in equity, and October 12, 1883, the defendant Young filed his answer thereto, admitting the execution of the note and mortgage, but alleging in substance that he had been compelled to pay usurious interest; that the account current between the parties was composed of excessive and objectionable charges; that plaintiffs failed to carry out their agreement and understanding with him; and that upon a proper taking of accounts there was nothing or but little due.

In addition to his answer, to which a replication was filed, defendant made a reconventional demand, on which, upon a trial thereof, judgment passed against him. November 11, 1884, the cause was revived as to the heirs of Edward Nalle, who had deceased, and they entered their appearance March 24, 1885.

Proofs were taken, and the cause was referred to a master to state an account, who made a report of the amount due to Nalle & Co., less a specified credit. The cause coming on to be heard on the pleadings and proofs and oral testimony then adduced, a decree was entered November 6, 1886, "that plaintiff's mortgage on the property described in the act of mortgage annexed to the bill of complaint herein, viz.: [here follows description] the said interest of Wade R. Young in the above lands having been ascertained by a survey 627 made by *John Johnson, surveyor, on the 15th of March, 1879, be, and the same is, hereby recognized and ordered to be enforced to satisfy the sum of $1,632.61 with 8 per cent per annum interest thereon from the 1st day of December, 1882, until paid, subject to the credit aforesaid, and also for the payment of the attorney's fees stipulated by said act of mortgage, being 5 per cent on said amount, and the costs of this suit, to be taxed."

160 U. S.

An execution was thereupon issued, and the mortgaged premises seized and sold by the marshal, July 30, 1887, to Mrs. Mary Nalle, wife of Eustis F. Golson.

October 12, 1887, Mrs. B. F. Young, wife of Wade R. Young, on motion of her husband as her solicitor, was allowed to file "her bill and intervening petition, by her husband and next friend," against Nalle & Co., in which she averred that she was married to Wade R. Young in October, 1865, and resided with him continually in the state of Louisiana until the month of February, 1876; that in the year 1870 her father died in the parish of Catahoula, Louisiana, and left her a policy of insurance on his life for the sum of $5,000, which was collected by her husband for her and by him converted to his own use and to the use of the community existing between them; that her father also left a large estate, consisting of property, real and personal, which was sold at probate sale in 1881, and her interest therein, amounting to $2,500, adjudicated to her husband for his own sole use, benefit, and advantage, and for that of the community existing between them; and that her husband had so received the paraphernal moneys and property of complainant in the sum of $7,500, which had been converted by him to his own use and that of the community, and was now legally due complainant by her husband.

The petition further alleged that by an act of mortgage in 1868 by Margaret A. Young, William C. Young, and Wade R. Young, as joint owners, St. Peter plantation was mortgaged to Miss Eliza H. Young, to secure their joint and several note for $11,250, with interest at 8 per cent from January 1, 1867; and averred that in the year 1876, by a transaction between her husband and Mrs. S. J. Metcalfe, 628 as *sole surviving residuary legatee of Miss Eliza H. Young, and complainant, an undivided four-ninths of that note and mortgage, being the individual indebtedness of her husband thereon, was assigned to her by Mrs. Metcalfe by express warranty; that a new note was then made and delivered to her and accepted by her in replacement of her paraphernal moneys and property, so secured and converted by her husband. It was further averred that in 1881 complainant brought suit against her husband for a dissolution of the community and a separation of property in the ninth district court in the parish of Tensas, and obtained judgment therein on the — day of — for said sum of $7,500, and interest, with a recognition of her mortgage on the property described and a decree dissolving the community of acquets and gains between them; that in 1882, her husband, desiring to execute a mortgage on the property in favor of Nalle & Co. to secure advances of money and supplies to enable him to carry on certain planting operations, at the request of Nalle & Co., applied to complainant to renounce her prior right of mortgage in favor of Nalle & Co. by authorizing the canceling and erasure of the inscription of the mortgage transferred to her by Mrs. Metcalfe, so as to give Nalle & Co. the first mortgage; that Nalle & Co. refused to make any advances until given priority of rank; that for that purpose complainant executed a mandate and power of attorney authorizing the canceling and erasure of her mortgage, and "upon such authority the said mortgage was attempted to be canceled;" that the mortgage to Nalle & Co. was then executed by her husband; and that the inscription of her mortgage was then renewed. Petitioner then alleged that at the October term, 1886, a decree was rendered at the suit of Nalle & Co. against her husband for the foreclosure of their mortgage, the amount of indebtedness fixed, and the sale of the property ordered; that final process was issued in execution of that decree, and in obedience thereto the marshal advertised the property for sale for cash on Saturday, July 2, 1887; that on that day the property was appraised according to the requirements of the Louisiana law and offered to the highest bidder for cash at not less than two-thirds of the ap- 629 praised value, which had been placed at the sum of $6,000, and, no bid having been made, was advertised for sale on a credit of twelve months; that on July 30, 1887, her husband, as defendant, served notice and protest on the marshal of the prior encumbrance in favor of complainant for $7,500 and interest, and that any sale for a price less than the amount of such prior encumbrance would be invalid; that notwithstanding the notice and protest the marshal, acting under the direction of Nalle & Co.'s solicitor, accepted the bid of one of them for $2,000. Complainant charged that her attempted renunciation of her rights authorizing the erasure of her mortgage was of no effect under the laws of Louisiana, and set forth the grounds on which that charge was based; that her mortgage was the first encumbrance and superior to the mortgage in favor of Nalle & Co.; that no sale could be made to a purchaser for less than the amount of such mortgage; and that the attempted sale was absolutely null and void. It was further averred that Nalle & Co. pretended to have paid the taxes on the mortgaged property for the years 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886, amounting to the sum of $624.60, and to have become subrogated by such payments to the privilege of mortgage existing in favor of the state and parish, and claimed a priority of lien on the mortgaged premises in consequence of such payment and subrogation; that no such taxes were legally due on the mortgaged property; and that Nalle & Co. and Mrs. Mary Nalle acquired no right by such payment and attempted subrogation. The petition then charged that the revenue acts of Louisiana for 1880, 1882, 1884, and 1886, in pursuance of which these taxes were levied, were unconstitutional and void as repugnant to the state Constitution. It was further alleged that notwithstanding complainant had a first and prior encumbrance for $7,500 and interest, Nalle & Co. did not make complainant a party to the foreclosure proceedings, according to the practice of the circuit court as a court of equity, and had caused the proceedings to be brought in disregard of complainant's rights, and had endeavored to have the mortgaged property sold and adjudicated to one of themselves [630] for a low price, etc.; that if the *renunciation of complainant was invalid as charged, no valid sale could be made for a price not exceeding the amount of the prior mortgage, and the attempted sale would be null and void; that if the renunciation for any reason not known to the complainant was valid and binding, complainant was entitled to redeem by paying the amount of the prior encumbrances, if any such there might be; and that for the purpose of securing equitable protection, it had become necessary for complainant to intervene in the foreclosure suit, and to oppose the confirmation of the sale in order that a reference might be made to determine the priority of liens and adjust all conflicting claims.

Petitioner therefore prayed to be allowed to file this intervention pro interesse suo, and that Nalle & Co. (that is, Flower and the heirs of Nalle) be summoned to answer by writ of subpoena served on their solicitor; that the sale of the mortgaged premises by the marshal on July 30, 1887, be not confirmed, but be set aside; that a reference be made to have the priority of liens determined and all conflicting claims adjusted; that a valid title be assured to the purchaser and a sale made for the best interests of all concerned; that the attempted renunciation of her mortgage in favor of Nalle & Co. be declared null and void, and her mortgage recognized as the first and superior encumbrance on the property; that the revenue acts of Louisiana for 1880, 1882, 1884, and 1886 be declared unconstitutional, null, and void; that the taxes levied in pursuance thereof be declared of no effect, and for general relief. This intervention was not sworn to, and was signed "Wade R. Young, Solicitor." On the 24th of October, 1887, Mrs. Young and her husband prayed to amend their original petition by alleging that although Young removed with his family from Louisiana to Mississippi in 1876, he did not, at that time, establish a residence in Mississippi, and that it was not until January, 1883, that he abandoned finally his intention to return to Louisiana, renounced his residence and citizenship there, and declared himself a citizen of Mississippi with the intention of remaining permanently.

The copy attached to the intervening petition [631] showed an *act of mortgage, March 18, 1868, by Wade R. Young, William C. Young, and Margaret A. Young, of the parish of Tensas, to Miss Eliza H. Young, to secure their certain promissory note for $11,250, payable, with interest at 8 per cent, one year after date, on the property in question, being part of Lake St. Peter's plantation, with a confession of judgment; Mrs. B. F. Liddell, wife of Wade R. Young, and Mrs. Willie T. Evans, wife of William C. Young, ratifying said act of mortgage, and renouncing all their rights in the property therein mortgaged, upon due examination separate and apart from their husbands; and an acceptance by Eliza H. Young. Upon the record of this mortgage in the parish of Tensas appeared the cancellation of five ninths thereof, being the indebtedness of W. C. Young, one of the mortgagors, and special legatee for M. A. Young, deceased, leaving four ninths of the indebtedness of Wade R. Young for himself and as special legatee for M. A. Young, deceased, still unpaid; also the cancellation and erasure of the mortgage to the extent of the remaining four ninths on the 5th of June, 1882, under a power of attorney signed by Wade R. Young and his wife, Mrs. B. F. Young, whereby Charles Young of the parish of Tensas was constituted and appointed attorney in fact with full and complete power in the name of Mrs. Young to cause the act of mortgage to be canceled and erased. This power of attorney was executed June 1, 1882, in the presence of two witnesses, who signed the act with the parties, as did also the notary. The cancellation and power of attorney were duly certified as correct copies of the original as the same appeared on file and of record in the office of the clerk of the ninth district court of Tensas parish.

The act of transfer from Mrs. Metcalfe to Mrs. Young was dated December 2, 1876, and stated that Mrs. Metcalfe, residing in the parish of Catahoula; Wade R. Young of the parish of Concordia; and Mrs. B. F. Liddell, wife of Wade R. Young, "herein represented by her special attorney and attorney in fact, Volney M. Liddell, with a procuration hereto annexed,"—personally appeared before the notary and declared that whereas Mrs. Metcalfe, as sole surviving residuary legatee of Miss *Eliza H. Young, was the holder and [632] owner of the note of Wade R. Young, William C. Young, and Margaret A. Young for the sum of $11,250, secured by act of mortgage; and whereas Mrs. Metcalfe was indebted to Wade R. Young for certain sums of money; and whereas Wade R. Young was indebted to his wife, Mrs. B. F. Liddell, for $7,500, the dotal and paraphernal property of his wife, received by him, and converted to his own use, for the repayment of which his wife had a legal mortgage on the interest of her husband in his father's estate; therefore Mrs. Metcalfe transferred and assigned to Mrs. Young four-ninths interest in said promissory note and mortgage, being the portion thereof due by Wade R. Young, and bearing on his interest in the St. Peter plantation, and warranted the validity thereof; and Wade R. Young declared that, in consideration of the transfer and warranty by Mrs. Metcalfe, he thereby acknowledged the receipt of the four-ninths interest of the note and mortgage, and granted to Mrs. Metcalfe an acquittance pro tanto of the sums due by her to him; and Mrs. Young declared that she accepted the transfer and assignment of said four-ninths interest, and, in consideration thereof, and of the warranty by Mrs. Metcalfe of the validity of the note and mortgage, joined her husband "in so far as the mortgage accorded to her by law to secure the repayment of her paraphernal funds may bear upon the interest of her said husband in the succession of his deceased father, in giving to the said Mrs. S. J. Metcalfe an acquittance and release pro tanto of the sum due by her." This was signed by Wade R. Young, V. M. Liddell, attorney, S. J. Metcalfe, two witnesses, and the notary public, and a certificate was attached by the recorder of Catahoula parish that the foregoing was a true and correct copy of the original act of transfer and agreement on file in his office and recorded in its records December 6, 1876. There was also a certificate, under date of October 18, 1887, of the clerk of the ninth district court of Tensas parish that the foregoing was a true and correct copy of the copy of the act of transfer and agreement, "as the same now appear on file in my office, and of record there." The copy of the judgment of Mrs. Young against her husband was as follows:

633* "9th District Court, Parish of Tensas.

"Mrs. Bethia F. Liddell vs.

"Wade R. Young, her husband.

} No. 3050.

"In this case a regular trial was had after issue joined, and the law and the evidence being in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that there be judgment of separation, dissolving the community of acquets and gains between the plaintiff, Mrs. Bethia F. Liddell, and the defendant, Wade R. Young, and that the said plaintiff do have and recover judgment against the defendant for the sum of $7,500, seven thousand five hundred dollars, with a recognition of her mortgage on the property described in the petition, and that the same be sold to satisfy said judgment and costs.

"Thus done, read, and signed in open court this 9th day of July, 1881.

"Wade H. Hough,

"Judge 9th District."

This was certified to by the clerk of the ninth district court as "a true and correct copy of original judgment rendered in suit of 'Bethia F. Liddell vs. Wade R. Young, her husband,' as the same appears on file and of record in my office in mortgage book 'O,' pages 649 et seq., on June 5, 1882."

On the same day the intervening petition was filed, Young filed what was entitled an "opposition to confirmation of sale," in which it was alleged that plaintiffs had attempted to proceed according to the practice of the courts of Louisiana, and in doing so had violated the rules and practice prescribed in the conduct of equity cases in the circuit court; that there was a want of parties; that there existed a prior encumbrance on the property fully equal to or exceeding its value, and that by the laws of Louisiana no valid sale of the property could be made for a price not exceeding the amount of such prior encumbrance. He then set forth the mortgage of 1868 in favor of Miss Eliza H. Young, to secure the $11,250 note; the transaction between Mrs. Metcalfe, his wife, 634 and *himself of 1876; the judgment of 1881 in favor of his wife for $7,500; the renunciation by his wife of her prior right of mortgage in favor of Nalle & Co.; and the execution of the mortgage to Nalle & Co. to secure the payment of his note for $1,632.61, with interest at 8 per cent, until paid; and charged the renunciation to have been invalid. The rendition of decree in favor of Nalle & Co. against defendant for the foreclosure of their mortgage; the issue of final process in execution of the decree, and the proceedings and sale thereunder, were rehearsed at length, as in the intervening petition; and it was averred that his wife's mortgage was a first encumbrance, and that no sale or adjudication could be made to a purchaser for less than the amount of the mortgage. It was further alleged that the marshal in the second advertisement of the property for sale on twelve months' credit required the purchaser out of the price to deduct and pay in cash an amount for printing, marshal's fees, and clerk's fees, as well as taxes due on the property, and that much the largest amount required to be paid was claimed by Nalle & Co., or one of them, for taxes alleged to have been paid by them or him on the property, the legality of which was contested by defendant and by his wife; that this requirement was an oppressive and unjust act towards the mortgagor, and deterred a purchaser with whom defendant had arranged to buy; and other irregularities were set forth. As to the claim of the payment of taxes for the years 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885, and as to the taxes pretended to be due for the year 1886, the payment of which the marshal made a condition precedent to the accepting of any bid, no taxes were due and no necessity existed for the payment thereof, and that Nalle & Co. acquired no rights by such payment and subrogation, and thereupon the grounds on which the illegality was charged were given at considerable length. Defendant prayed that the sale be not confirmed and be set aside; that his wife be made or allowed to become a party to the suit; that a reference be made to a master to settle the priority of liens; that the renunciation of his wife be declared invalid, and her mortgage for $7,500 and interest be decreed the *first lien on the property and prior 635 in rank to Nalle & Co.; that the revenue acts of Louisiana for the years 1880, 1882, 1884, and 1886 be decreed unconstitutional, null, and void, and the inscription of the mortgage to secure the taxes be erased as a cloud, and for general relief. And he further prayed that, if it be determined that the sale was a valid sale, he might be allowed to redeem by paying to complainants the amount of the debt, interest, and costs, and such other sums as might be found to be legally due.

160 U. S.

Defendant also filed what he styled a cross bill against the marshal, Mrs. Mary Nalle and her husband Golson, and Nalle & Co., alleging the sale of the property by the marshal and the acceptance of the bid of Mrs. Mary Nalle, notwithstanding a written protest by defendant against the acceptance of any bid not exceeding $7,500, the amount of the prior encumbrance; that the marshal attempted to transfer the possession of the property to Nalle & Co. or Mrs. Mary Nalle for them, by giving complainants' solicitor an order to take such possession; and that the marshal and Mrs. Mary Nalle were now seeking to evict defendant from the possession of his property, and were trespassing thereon, all of which was without color of right; that the marshal had no power to pass the title to Mrs. Nalle until the oppositions to the sale had been tried and determined and the sale confirmed, and that, even if he had, the sale was absolutely null and void because the amount of the bid did not exceed the amount of the prior special mortgage; and prayed for an injunction, whereupon a restraining order was issued, and subsequently a writ of injunction.

563

Nalle & Co. demurred to the petition of intervention, and moved to dismiss the opposition and dissolve the injunction. The motion was denied and the demurrer overruled. Thereupon Nalle & Co. answered the intervening petition of Mrs. Young and the cross-bill and opposition to confirmation of sale of Wade R. Young, alleging that Mrs. Young was, at the time of the erasure and cancellation of her alleged mortgage, to wit, June 1, 1882, a citizen of the state of Mississippi, and as such sui juris in every respect, having, under the laws of said state, full capacity as a feme sole to 636 make any contract *whatever; denying that Wade R. Young moved his family to the state of Mississippi in 1876 with the intention of retaining, or that he did retain, either an actual or constructive domicile in the state of Louisiana; averring that the alleged agreement between Mrs. B. F. Young and Mrs. Metcalfe and Wade R. Young, under date of December, 1876, was null and void for reasons given; and that Mrs. Young and Wade R. Young were, in equity and good conscience, estopped from setting up her alleged mortgage. Wade R. Young and his wife filed a replication to the answer of Nalle & Co. and others "to the cross bill and intervening petition."

The case came on to be heard "upon the cross bill and opposition to the confirmation of the sale and the intervening petition" and the various papers heretofore referred to were offered in evidence as well as sundry depositions, and "generally everything of record in the suit." On June 9, 1890, the court entered a decree, whereby it was "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the sale of the mortgaged property made by the marshal, in pursuance and execution of the foreclosure decree, be set aside, canceled, and avoided. And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the attempted renunciation by the intervening petitioner, Mrs. Bethia F. Young, of her special mortgage on the property, was and is invalid and of no effect, and that said mortgage be recognized as the first mortgage on the property, superior in rank to the mortgage of the plaintiffs, E. Nalle & Co., and entitled to be paid by preference. And it is further ordered that the plaintiffs, E. Nalle & Co., pay the costs of the sale and of these proceedings."

From this decree Nalle & Co. and Mrs. Mary Golson, as purchaser, appealed to this court.

Messrs. Charles J. Boatner for appellants.

Mr. Wade R. Young for himself et al., appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

637 *The proceedings in the state court were ordinary and not executory, and in the circuit court the petition stood as a bill in equity to foreclose a mortgage. The decree of November 6, 1886, was a final decree, and the execution may be regarded as the equivalent of a direction to a master or commissioner to make sale in the enforcement thereof. Under the Civil Code and Code of Practice of Louisiana judicial sales are conducted by the sheriff or other public officer in the manner minutely described and adjudicated to the purchaser, who thereupon becomes the owner of the article adjudged. La. Civ. Code, arts. 2601-2621; La. Code Prac. 663 et seq. But in an equity foreclosure in a circuit court, while the requirements of the state law should be complied with and the forms of proceeding pursued as nearly as practicable, it is proper for the officer who makes the sale to make a report or return to the court for confirmation. Resistance to such confirmation may be made, under circumstances, and this sometimes results in the setting aside of the sale and an order for a resale. But the scope of these pleadings was much wider. To the confirmation of the sale the defendant, indeed, interposed objections, waiving any formal report for confirmation, but they were not passed upon by the circuit court independently of defendant's alleged cross bill and the petition of Mrs. Young in intervention, and these papers may all be considered together, as they were by the circuit court, and, so treated, they constituted in effect an independent suit brought by Young and his wife to set aside the sale and have the alleged mortgage of the wife declared the prior encumbrance and enforced, or for redemption.

The objections in respect of alleged irregularities in the conduct of the sale, or the invalidity of certain taxes and the requirement of their payment, need not be considered, as they are not sustained by the record, and mere informalities or irregularities in a judicial sale in Louisiana do not constitute a sufficient ground for setting it aside. Stockmeyer v. Tobin, 139 U. S. 176 [35: 123].

The principal objection to the sale was the insufficiency of the bid at which the property was disposed of, and that objection will be first examined.

*Under La. Code Prac. arts. 679, 683, 684, 638 when there exists a special conventional mortgage or privilege on the property put up for sale, the property is sold subject thereto, and the purchaser pays to the officer so much of the price as exceeds "the amount of the privileges and special mortgages to which such property is subject;" and, in case of sale on twelve months' credit, if there exist on the property any privileges or special mortgage, in favor of other persons than the judgment creditor, and who are preferred to him, the purchaser is entitled to retain in his hands out of the price the amount required to satisfy the privileged debts and special hypothecations to which the property sold was subject, but is bound to give his obligation for the surplus of the purchase money, if there be any, and subscribe his obligation at twelve months' credit, with security; but if the price offered is not sufficient to discharge the privileges and mortgages existing on the property, having a preference over the judgment creditor, there shall be no adjudication, and other property, if there be any, shall be seized.

If, therefore, the mortgage claimed by Mrs.

Young was conventional or special, and had been properly recorded and not legally renounced, and it was prior to that of Nalle & Co., no sale of the mortgaged property could be made under the junior encumbrance of the latter, unless the price bid was sufficient to discharge the prior lien. But if the prior mortgage was legal or judicial, this requirement did not apply, and the property passed to the purchaser subject to the payment of the prior lien. Alford v. Montejo, 28 La. Ann. 593; Godchaux v. Succession of Dicharry, 34 La. Ann. 579.

The circuit court held that the mortgage asserted by Mrs. Young was a special mortgage, which took precedence over that of Nalle & Co.; that her renunciation was void, and, the price bid not being sufficient to discharge this prior special mortgage, that the sale could not be confirmed, and must be set aside.

By the Civil Code, the partnership or community of acquets and gains exists between husband and wife by operation of law, unless otherwise stipulated in the contract. The separate property of the wife is that which she "brings into the marriage, or acquires during the marriage by inheritance or by donation made to her particularly," and "is divided into dotal and extradotal. Dotal property is that which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradotal property, otherwise called paraphernal property, is that which forms no part of the dowry." Fleitas v. Richardson (No. 2), 147 U. S. 550, 553 [37: 276, 278]; La. Civ. Code, arts. 2332, 2399, 2334, 2335.

By article 2337 "by dowry is meant the effects which the wife brings to the husband to support the expenses of the marriage."

Article 2383 declares: "All property which is not declared to be brought in marriage by the wife, or to be given to her in consideration of the marriage or to belong to her at the time of the marriage, is paraphernal."

Mrs. Young claimed an indebtedness on the part of her husband to her, arising from his having received the proceeds of a life insurance policy on the life of her father in her favor for $5,000, and the additional sum of $2,500, being an amount which came to her from her father's estate, and was received by him. This was paraphernal property. The wife has a legal mortgage on the property of her husband "for the restitution or reimbursement of her paraphernal property." Art. 3319. "Conventional mortgage is that which depends on covenants. Legal mortgage is that which is created by operation of law. Judicial mortgage is that which results from judgments." Art. 3287. A legal mortgage results by operation of law, and "no legal mortgage shall exist, except in the cases determined by the present Code." Arts. 3311, 3312.

Article 2376 declares that the wife has a legal mortgage on the property of her husband for the restitution of her dowry as well as for the replacement of her dotal effects; and by art. 2379 it is provided that, during the marriage, the husband may, with the consent of his wife, "be authorized by the judge, with the advice of five of the nearest relations of the wife, or friends, for want of relations, to mortgage,*specially for the preservation of his[640 wife's rights, the immovables which he shall designate; and then the surplus of his property shall be free from any legal mortgage in favor of his wife;" while art. 2390 is as follows: "The wife may alienate her paraphernal property with the authorization of her husband, or in case of refusal or absence of her husband, with the authorization of the judge; but should it be proved that the husband has received the amount of the paraphernal property thus alienated by his wife, or otherwise disposed of the same for his individual interest, the wife shall have a legal mortgage on all the property of her husband for the reimbursing of the same. The husband may release the mass of his property from this legal mortgage, by executing a special mortgage in the manner required in the preceding sections, for dotal effects." Thus it appears that a legal mortgage on all the husband's property exists until a special mortgage is executed according to the foregoing provisions, and the law does not contemplate a legal and a special mortgage existing at the same time. And the legal mortgage of the wife to affect third persons must be recorded in the office of mortgages for the parish where the property lies. Arts. 3342-3349.

Mrs. Young must either stand upon her legal mortgage resulting from the receipt of her paraphernal property, and recognized by the judgment of July 9, 1881, decreeing a separation of property, or a judicial mortgage arising from that judgment, or on the contract between herself and Mrs. Metcalfe, by which Mrs. Metcalfe purported to transfer to her an indebtedness due by Wade R. Young, secured on the property in controversy. If her mortgage be legal or judicial, its existence would not be a bar to the confirmation of a sale for an amount insufficient to satisfy it; and, moreover, it could not rank the special conventional mortgage of Nalle & Co. because it was not recorded until subsequently.

It is, indeed, insisted that it was altogether invalid under art. 3428: "The separation of property, although decreed by a court of justice, is null, if it has not been executed by the payment of the rights and claims of the wife, made to appear *by an authentic act, as[641 far as the estate of the husband can meet them, or at least by a bona fide noninterrupted suit to obtain payment." Chafee v. Scheen, 34 La. Ann. 690; Nachman v. Le Blanc, 28 La. Ann. 345, 346; Bertie v. Walker, 1 Rob. (La.) 431, 432. But this becomes immaterial, as, whatever rights, if any, might be claimed under it, it could have no effect as against Nalle & Co. for want of record.

According to articles 3345 and 3349, all mortgages, whether conventional, legal, or judicial, are required to be recorded as provided, and the preservation of the legal mortgage or privilege in favor of a married woman depends on the record of the evidence of her mortgage or privilege in the mortgage book of the parish where the property is situated; and that evidence, if not by written instrument, must consist of "a written statement, under oath, made by the married woman, or her husband, or any other person having knowledge of the facts, setting forth the amount due to the wife, and detailing all the facts and circumstances on which her claim is based." There was no such evidence as last named here, and no such inscription until after the mortgage to Nalle & Co. had been given and registered. Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U. S. 130, 149 [34: 372, 378].

The transaction between Mrs. Metcalfe, Young, and Mrs. Young appears to have been that Mrs. Metcalfe being indebted to Young, and Young indebted to Mrs. Metcalfe, the respective debts were discharged by agreement, and compensated each other, but that it was agreed that Young's indebtedness to Mrs. Metcalfe should be kept alive for the benefit of Mrs. Young, upon the consideration on Mrs. Young's part of the release of her paraphernal claims against her husband. Compensation had, however, taken place, and the two debts were reciprocally extinguished. Arts. 2180, 2207, 2208.

This was the necessary effect by operation of law, and when the principal obligation was discharged the mortgage fell with it and would not be revived though the indebtedness were reacknowledged in favor of another. Smith v. McWaters, 22 La. Ann. 432; Davidson v. Carroll, 20 La. Ann. 199; Schinkel v. Hane-winkel, 19 La. Ann. 260.

Again, contracts between husband and wife 642 are forbidden *in Louisiana except as specified. Contracts of sale between them "can take place only in the three following cases: 1. When one of the spouses makes a transfer of property to the other, who is judicially separated from him or her, in payment of his or her rights. 2. When the transfer made by the husband to his wife, even though not separated, has a legitimate cause, as the replacing of her dotal or other effects alienated. 3. When the wife makes a transfer of property to her husband in payment of a sum promised to him as a dowry." Arts. 1790, 2446; Carroll v. Cockerham, 38 La. Ann. 813, 824.

This transaction was an attempt to extinguish the wife's general mortgage by the transfer of the special mortgage of a third party, satisfied by the act as between the immediate parties thereto, and if it could be done at all, it could only be when taking place in accordance with articles 2379 and 2390, and recorded as required by article 3345; and, as already seen, these articles were not complied with.

But were this otherwise, the judgment of 1881 did not recognize her alleged special mortgage, which recognition was evidently not prayed for, and recognized only her legal mortgage in complete disregard of her special mortgage if she had had any.

The rendition of judgment for all her paraphernal claims without any recognition of a special conventional mortgage to secure them would seem to have concluded the fact that none such then existed, or at least furnishes such persuasive proof thereof as must be controlling on this record. Nicolson v. Citizens' Bank, 27 La. Ann. 369.

Conceding, then, that the renunciation by Mrs. Young in favor of Nalle & Co. was ineffectual, her legal or judicial mortgage, if outstanding, was nevertheless subordinate to their mortgage and not entitled to precedence. In the jurisprudence of Louisiana, and under the statutes of that state, the right of redemption from a decree in foreclosure does not obtain. If a prior mortgage exists, the prior mortgagee is not a necessary party, and purchasers take subject to the prior lien. If there be a subsequent mortgage, the prior mortgage containing the pact de non alienando as Nalle & Co.'s mortgage *did, the mortgagee there- 643 in need not be made a party, but must take notice of the proceedings to enforce the prior mortgage at his peril. He may, however, apply to set aside the sale on proper grounds. Dupasseur v. Rochereau, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 130 [22: 588]; Watson v. Bondurant, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 123 [22: 509]; Carile v. Trotot, 105 U. S. 751 [26: 1223].

As heretofore noticed, Mrs. Young and her husband prayed for redemption, which is not, in any foreclosure case, allowable as such; while, so far as their pleadings are regarded as seeking the setting aside of the sale and for a resale, we find no adequate grounds for according that relief.

The decree of June 9, 1890, is reversed with costs; and the cause remanded to the circuit court with instructions to enter a decree overruling the objections to the sale of July 30, 1887, dissolving the injunction, adjudicating the property to Mrs. Mary Nalle, wife of Eustis F. Golsen, and ordering the delivery of possession to her.

CHARLES A. GREGORY, Appl.,

v.

JOHN C. KEMP VAN EE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 643-646.)

Finality of decree of circuit court of appeals—ancillary proceedings.

1. Where a decree of the circuit court of appeals is final in the main suit, under the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, § 6, decrees in accessory and subordinate proceedings are also final, and appeals therefrom to this court cannot be sustained.
2. Where the jurisdiction of the circuit court rested solely on the ground of diverse citizenship of the parties, a decree on ancillary or supplemental proceedings in the cause, although independent of the original controversy, partakes of the finality of the main decree of the circuit court of appeals, and cannot be brought to this court on appeal.

[No. 601.]

Submitted December 23, 1895. Decided January 27, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit modifying and affirming a decree of the Circuit Court in a suit by Charles A. Gregory,

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court depending on parties and residence, see note to Emory v. Greenough, 1: 640.

As to colorable conveyances to enable suit to be brought; motive of transfer; when no objection; coupons; residence of assignor,—see note to M'Donald v. Smalley, 7: 287.

plaintiff, against John C. Kemp Van Ee, for the recovery of certain promissory notes. On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.

See same case below, 67 Fed. Rep. 837.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Gregory, a citizen of Illinois, filed his bill in the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, 644] December 16, 1884, against *Frederick A. Pike, a citizen of Maine, and William C. N. Swift, a citizen of Massachusetts, to recover two certain non-negotiable promissory notes made by Swift, held by Pike, and alleged by Gregory to be his property. This suit was afterwards removed on Gregory's petition to the circuit court on the sole ground of the diverse citizenship of the parties. Pending the suit the notes were collected, and the proceeds transferred to the registry in the cause. On the petition of Swift and John C. Kemp Van Ee, who claimed to be interested in the notes, Van Ee was made a party defendant by order of court, against Gregory's objection, and filed a cross bill. Butterfield was made a defendant on the application of himself and Swift, and filed a cross bill, and Talbot, attorney for Pike and his estate, filed a petition for attorney's fees. Pike died, and his executrix, Mary H. Pike, was made a party. The circuit court dismissed the cross bill of Butterfield and decreed payments out of the fund in favor of Mrs. Pike and Van Ee. From this decree separate appeals were taken by Gregory as against Mrs. Pike, and as against Van Ee, by Talbot, and by Butterfield to the circuit court of appeals for the first circuit, and went to judgment there. The opinion of that court gives a clear idea of a somewhat confused record. 67 Fed. Rep. 837. The court of appeals concurred with the disposition of the case by the circuit court as to Mrs. Pike and Butterfield, but awarded relief to Talbot; and held that Van Ee was improperly made a party defendant, that his cross bill was unauthorized and should be dismissed, but that it could be properly treated as an intervening petition, and, so treating it, that he was entitled thereon to the relief accorded by the circuit court. The case was remanded to the circuit court with directions to enter a final decree, modifying the original decree in the particulars pointed out. From the decree of the circuit court of appeals separate appeals to this court were prayed by Gregory and allowed, as against Van Ee, Mary H. Pike, and Talbot, which appeals were separately docketed here as Nos. 601, 602, and 603. The appeals in Nos. 602 and 603, those against Mrs. Pike and Talbot, were dismissed November 25, and a motion to dismiss the appeal against Van Ee, No. 601, is now made.

Mr. Russell Gray for appellee, in favor of motion to dismiss.

Messrs. F. A. Brooks and E. J. Phelps for appellant, in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The jurisdiction of the circuit court in the suit of Gregory against Pike and Swift rested 160 U. S.

on the fact that the controversy therein was between citizens of different states, and this was the sole ground on which Gregory removed the cause from the state court to the circuit court. The fund was in the circuit court because realized out of and substituted for the subject of contention in that suit, and Van Ee recovered on his intervening petition what he claimed to be his share of that fund.

In Rouse v. Letcher, 156 U. S. 47 [39: 341], we held that if the decree of a circuit court of appeals is final under the 6th section of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, a decree upon an intervention in the same suit must be regarded as equally so because the intervention is entertained in virtue of jurisdiction in the circuit court already subsisting. It was pointed out that where property is in the actual possession of the circuit court, this draws to it the right to decide upon conflicting claims for its ultimate possession and control, and that where assets are in the course of administration all persons entitled to participate may come in under the jurisdiction acquired between the original parties, by ancillary or supplemental proceedings, even though jurisdiction in the circuit court would be lacking if such proceedings had been independently prosecuted; that the exercise of the power of disposition by a circuit court of the United States over such an intervention is the exercise of power invoked at the institution of the main suit; and that it is to that point of time that the inquiry as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court must necessarily be referred. Therefore that, if the decree in the main suit were final, decrees in accessory and subordinate proceedings would be also final, and appeals therefrom could not be sustained.

*The circuit courts of the United States [646] have cognizance of suits as provided by the acts of Congress, and when their jurisdiction as Federal courts has attached, they possess and exercise all the powers of courts of superior general jurisdiction. Accordingly, they entertain and dispose of interventions and the like on familiar and recognized principles of general law and practice, but the ground on which their jurisdiction as courts of the United States rests is to be found in the statutes, and to that source must always be attributed.

Manifestly, the decree in the main suit cannot be revised through an appeal from a decree on ancillary or supplemental proceedings, thus accomplishing indirectly what could not be done directly. And even if the decree on such proceedings may be in itself independent of the controversy between the original parties, yet if the proceedings are entertained in the circuit court because of its possession of the subject of the ancillary or supplemental application, the disposition of the latter must partake of the finality of the main decree, and cannot be brought here on the theory that the circuit court exercised jurisdiction independently of the ground of jurisdiction which was originally invoked as giving cognizance to that court as a court of the United States.

Appeal dismissed.

CHEMICAL NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CITY BANK OF PORTAGE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 646-654.)

Review of state judgment—Federal question.

1. Where the decision of the supreme court of the state rests upon a ground broad enough to sustain its judgment without deciding any Federal question, this court will not review its decision on the ground that a Federal question was also decided.
2. This court cannot review the decision of a state court that it had power to decide a controverted question of fact, for the purpose of excluding any other ground of decision than that which involves a Federal question, and thereby sustaining a writ of error. If the state court proceeded to judgment upon the facts, this court will accept its views as controlling.

[No. 736.]

Submitted January 7, 1896. Decided January 27, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the Appellate Court for the First District of Illinois which affirmed the judgment of the Superior Court of Cook County, Illinois, in favor of plaintiff, the City Bank of Portage, against the Chemical National Bank of Chicago, defendant, for the amount of a note. Dismissed.

See same case below, 55 Ill. App. 251, 156 Ill. 149.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the City Bank of Portage against the Chemical National Bank of Chicago, in the superior court of Cook county, Illinois. The declaration contained a special count upon a note signed by C. E. Braden, which it was alleged was made by defendant in that name, and the common counts. The defendant pleaded the general issue and a plea denying the execution of the note described in the special count. A jury was waived and the cause submitted to the court for trial.

Under the practice act of Illinois where a trial is by the court, either party may "submit to the court written propositions to be held as law in the decision of the case, upon which the court shall write 'Refused' or 'Held,' as he shall be of opinion is the law, or modify the same, to which either party may except as to other opinions of the court." Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 110, § 42; 2 Starr & C. Stat. 1803.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571. As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; and Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question; what constitutes Federal question,—see note to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37: 287.

Defendant requested the court to hold as law in the decision of the case the eight propositions given in the margin.† *Of these [648 the court refused to hold propositions numbered one, two, three, four, six, and eight, and also proposition numbered six "if it appears that the bank, its officers knowing the facts, used the money;" and defendant excepted. The court held propositions numbered five and seven. The issues were found in favor of plaintiff, and judgment entered on the finding, and, the case having been taken to the appellate court for the first district of Illinois, the judgment of the superior court was affirmed. 55 Ill. App. 251. And this judgment of the appellate court was affirmed by the supreme court of the state on appeal. 156 Ill. 149. Thereupon a writ of error from this court was sued out.

There was evidence tending to show that in 1893 the Chemical National Bank had taken some of its own stock in payment of a debt; that Hopkins, assistant cashier, had given to a firm of brokers his note, payable on call, secured by part of this stock as collateral; that the brokers procured the money on the note and paid it to the bank, the assistant cashier not getting any of it; and that after the note had run fifteen days the holders called it in and it was paid out of the moneys of the bank. It was then agreed between Curry, president, Braden, cashier, and Hopkins, assistant cashier, that the bank should raise $5,000 through a broker in Minneapolis, by giving a note in Braden's name, payable to the broker and with the stock as collateral, and that, as the bank was to have the money, the note should be the bank's obligation and be paid by it. In carrying out this arrangement the note in suit was given, being signed by Braden in his own name and not as cashier, and made payable to the Minneapolis broker; and fifty shares of the stock

†1. If the court finds from the evidence that some of the directors of the Chemical National Bank of Chicago were desirous of purchasing shares of the capital stock of said bank for themselves, individually; that in pursuance of such desire they instructed the president of said bank to purchase such an amount of said shares of stock not exceeding $100,000 par value as might be offered at par, stating to him that they would take the stock so purchased at different times as their money came in; that in pursuance of such instruction the president of said bank caused a broker to purchase fifty shares of said capital stock, and in payment for said stock owe Hopkins, assistant cashier of said bank, gave to said broker his individual note for the purchase price of said stock, payable on demand; that thereafter, payment of said note being demanded of said Hopkins, the president and cashier of said bank paid said note out of the moneys of said bank, and thereupon it was arranged by and between the president, the cashier, and the assistant cashier, that the cashier, Braden, should execute his individual note for $5,000 to a broker; that fifty shares of said stock so purchased should be transferred upon the books of the bank to said Braden, and attached to said note to be given to said broker as collateral security; that said broker should procure said note to be discounted, and that the money realized by discounting said note should be paid into the moneys of the bank to replace the money of the bank used in paying the Hopkins' note; and that in pursuance of such arrangement said Braden gave the note in controversy, and the same was discounted and the held by the bank were issued in Braden's name and attached to the note as collateral. Braden did not own this stock; received none of the money and had no personal interest in the transaction. The note was sent to the broker at Minneapolis, who indorsed it without recourse, procured the money from the City Bank of Portage, and sent it to the Chemical National Bank. He advanced no money on the note either to Braden or the bank; did not owe Braden anything, and the note was given by Braden to him purely as a means of raising money for the bank. There was also evidence that the board of directors of the Chemical National Bank at a meeting thereof had authorized the president to buy stock of the bank when offered for sale at par up to $100,000, agreeing to take it as soon as they could, but that no entry of this authority was made on the bank's records; that the money obtained on the Hopkins note was used in making such a purchase; and that the stock which was annexed to the Hopkins note and to that in suit was a part of the stock purchased under these circumstances, and not part of that taken by the bank upon a debt; of all which the City Bank of Portage had no notice.

The defense was that the purchase by the bank of its own stock was illegal; that it was equally illegal for the bank to borrow money to replace money paid out in making such a purchase; that that was what this transaction amounted to; and that plaintiff could not recover because the money was obtained and used for a purpose forbidden by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5201, which is as follows:

"No association shall make any loan or discount on the security of the shares of its own capital stock, nor be the purchaser or holder of any such shares, unless such security or purchase shall be necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith; and stock so purchased or acquired shall, within six months from the time of its purchase, be sold or disposed of at public or private sale; or, in default thereof, a receiver may be appointed to close up the business of *the association, according to § 5234." [651

The supreme court held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under the common counts; that it was unimportant to consider whether the superior court ruled correctly on the propositions of law requested on behalf of defendant since they all related to the right of recovery on the note; and the court said:

"Curry, president of the Chemical National Bank, was called as a witness, and it may be inferred from his evidence, although he does not state the fact, that the bank stock procured by the bank was not taken in on a debt, but was purchased. Conceding that the Chemical National Bank purchased fifty shares of its own stock, contrary to the provisions of the national banking act, does that unlawful act so pollute the transaction between plaintiff and defendant, under which plaintiff loaned its money, that the defendant may keep the money and the plaintiff bear the loss? If the facts were as claimed by counsel, they would not defeat a recovery on the part of plaintiff. The purchase of the stock and the borrowing of the money from plaintiff were two distinct transactions. In the purchase of the stock the money used by the defendant in payment was raised on the note of Hopkins, assistant cashier. Afterwards the bank paid the Hopkins note with its own funds, and this ended the transaction so far as the purchase of stock was concerned. After this transaction was ended the bank applied to the plaintiff for a loan of money and obtained it, placing the bank stock previously obtained in the hands of plaintiff as collateral.

"The plaintiff did not know where, of whom, or in what manner the Chemical National Bank had acquired the bank stock turned over as collateral, nor did it know what use that bank would make of the money loaned. Moreover, this money was not loaned by plaintiff to pay for bank stock, and, so far as it appears, it was never used for that purpose. So proceeds were deposited with the moneys of the Chemical National Bank of Chicago,—then the court should find that said note was the individual note of said Braden, and not the note of the defendant, and should find the issues in favor of the defendant.

2. If the court believes the testimony given by J. O. Curry in this case to be true and to be a correct statement of the circumstances connected with the execution by Braden of the note sued on, then the court must find the issues joined in favor of the defendant.

3. Although the court may believe the testimony of Braden to be true, yet his testimony with all inferences that may be justifiably drawn therefrom in favor of the plaintiff does not justify a finding in favor of the plaintiff.

4. The fact that the money realized upon the note in suit was received by the Chemical National Bank of Chicago does not make said Chemical National Bank of Chicago liable upon said note; and this is true notwithstanding it was agreed by and between Curry, Braden, and Hopkins that the note should be treated as a note of the Chemical National Bank of Chicago and paid by it.

5. A national banking association is prohibited by law from purchasing shares of its own capital stock, unless such purchase shall be necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith.

6. The purchase by officers of a national banking association of shares of its own capital stock, unless such purchase is necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith, cannot be regarded as a transaction of the association itself, unless expressly authorized by its board of directors, and a note executed by an officer in his own individual name for the purpose of borrowing money to make such a purchase cannot be regarded as the note of the association unless recognized as such by its board of directors, and unless the lender parted with his money upon the faith of the liability of the association.

7. There is no evidence in this case legally sufficient to justify a finding that the plaintiff at the time it accepted the note in controversy and advanced money on the same had any knowledge whatever that Braden was not the real principal or that it advanced any money on the note upon the faith of any supposed liability of the defendant upon said note.

8. Although a corporation may be held liable upon a contract that is ultra vires, or prohibited by law when such contract has been fully executed by the other party, yet where such contract has been entered into by an officer of the corporation in his own individual name, and the other party, at the time he performed the same on his part, had no knowledge that the same was for the benefit of the corporation, and did not part with any money or property on the faith or the liability of the corporation upon the contract, but, on the contrary, executed the contract on his part in reliance solely upon the individual liability of such officer,—such other party cannot enforce such contract against the corporation as an undisclosed principal.

far as appears from the evidence there was nothing illegal in the transaction between plaintiff and defendant which resulted in the loan of $5,000."

Mr. Hiram T. Gilbert for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Daniel Kent Tenney and Samuel P. McConnell for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

We are of opinion that the supreme court of Illinois in rendering judgment denied no title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by defendant under the laws of the United States, and that this writ of error cannot be maintained.

The contention of plaintiff in error is that the state court decided "either, first, that the cashier, Braden, by virtue of his office, had, under the laws of the United States regulating national banks, implied authority to borrow money in the name of the defendant and bind it to repayment thereof; or, second, that the transaction out of which the discounting of the Braden note arose, which transaction consisted of the original purchase of the fifty shares of the bank's stock, the giving of the Hopkins note, and the payment thereof out of the moneys of the bank, was one which, in law, could be regarded as a transaction of the bank." And that therefore the state court decided against an immunity from liability expressly set up or claimed by the Chemical National Bank under the laws of the United States.

The appellate court reviewed the judgment of the superior court for errors committed on the trial, and, finding none, affirmed it, and the supreme court affirmed the judgment of the appellate court; and if no such claims were set up in the trial court, the supreme court, in approving the affirmance of its judgment by the appellate court, could not be held to have decided against a claim with which the trial court had not been called upon to deal. It does not appear that the immunity from liability was expressly claimed by plaintiff in error in the trial court on the ground that the bank could retain the money because it was obtained by means in excess of the powers of its cashier or other officers.

653]*The propositions on which the trial court was asked to rule were manifestly directed to the right of recovery on the notes as such, under the special count, and certainly fell far short of a claim of the character suggested as a defense to a recovery under the common counts. Moreover, the question of liability, whatever the authority of these bank officers to borrow this money for the bank, depended upon general principles of law applicable under the particular facts. Western Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 152 U. S. 346, 352, 353 [38: 470, 473].

Nor can we perceive that the supreme court denied any immunity from liability claimed as arising out of the purchase by the bank of its own stock other than to prevent loss on previous indebtedness. The decision of the supreme court rested on the fact that that purchase of stock and the loaning of the money from the City Bank of Portage were two distinct transactions, and this was a ground broad enough to sustain the judgment without deciding any Federal question at all.

It is said that the supreme court had no power to decide any controverted question of fact, but we cannot review the decision of that court in that respect, even if the position were well taken, but we do not understand that the supreme court did so decide. It is true that under §§ 87 and 89 of the practice act the supreme court of Illinois does not re-examine controverted questions of fact, but it nevertheless examines the evidence bearing upon the issues of fact determined to see what principles of law are involved in a controversy, and whether they are properly applied by the trial court. Sexton v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 323, 326; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 580, 7 L. R. A. 474. In this case the supreme court recapitulated the evidence as being that on which the trial court rendered judgment in order to disclose the basis of the ruling that plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The affirmance by the appellate court of the judgment of the trial court without any recital of the facts found conclusively settles all controverted questions of fact necessary to support the judgment. Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Utica & D. P. Highway Comrs. 101 Ill. 518; Bernstein v. Roth, 145 Ill. 189. If the appellate court disposes of a cause on a finding of facts different from the finding of the trial court, it is its duty to recite in its final judgment the facts so found (Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 110, § 87; 2 Starr & C. Stat. 1842); but there was no such finding of facts by the appellate court here, and it is to be presumed that that court found the facts in the same way as did the trial court. As the supreme court proceeded to judgment upon the facts as thus determined, we must accept its view as controlling.

Writ of error dismissed.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,
v.
ROBERT THORNTON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 654-660.)

Soldier, when not entitled to commutation.

1. A soldier is not entitled to commutation for travel and subsistence to the place of his second enlistment, where his service was practically a continuous one, and his second discharge occurred at the place of his original enlistment.
2. Judicial notice is taken of the fact that a person could not possibly travel from Mare Island, California, to Washington, D. C., and back again, within four days.
3. A soldier who cannot possibly intend to incur the expense of transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment or who for some other reason is not within the spirit of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1290, as amended by the act of February 27, 1877, providing allowances therefor, is not entitled to such allowance.

NOTE.—As to extra pay or compensation to officers, see note to United States v. Macdaniel, 8: 587.

[No. 138.]

Submitted December 20, 1895. Decided January 6, 1896.

ON APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the claimant, Robert Thornton, against the United States for commutation for travel and subsistence as a private in the marine corps. Reversed, with directions to dismiss.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

The petition in this case set forth that the petitioner enlisted as a private in the marine corps, November 10, 1886, at Mare Island, California, to serve five years, and was discharged March 13, 1889, at Washington, D. C., by order of the Secretary of the Navy; that, under the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1290, he was entitled to receive transportation and subsistence or travel pay and commutation of subsistence from the place of his discharge to that of his enlistment; that he made written application for the same to the Treasury Department, and was informed that [655] his claim was adjusted and *transmitted to the second comptroller, who declined to allow the case, on the ground that he was discharged at his own request before the expiration of his term of enlistment.

The case having been heard before the court of claims, that court upon the evidence found the following facts:

1. The claimant enlisted at the age of thirteen years, one month, and three days, in the marine corps of the United States, at Washington, D. C., on August 29, 1878, for a term of seven years, ten months, and twenty-seven days, and was then "bound to learn music" in said corps.

April 17, 1880, he was rated as a drummer.

November 6, 1886, he was discharged from the service at Mare Island, California, as a drummer.

November 10, 1886, he re-enlisted at Mare Island, California, as a private in said corps for a term of five years.

On March 13, 1889, before the expiration of the last-mentioned term of enlistment, Thornton, as a private in said corps, was, at his own request, and not by way of punishment for an offense, discharged from service at the Marine Barracks, Washington, D. C., by direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The claimant was settled with in full for all pay and allowances except transportation and subsistence in kind, or, in lieu thereof, travel pay and commutation of subsistence, from Washington, D. C., the place of his discharge, to Mare Island, California, the place where he had re-enlisted. And when he was discharged, at the end of his term of enlistment, he received travel pay and commutation of subsistence computed at the rate of one day for every 20 miles of the distance from Mare Island, California, to Washington, D. C.

2. The travel pay and commutation of subsistence of a private in the marine corps when discharged in the third year of his second term of enlistment, and when he is allowed the same, are stated by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to be one day's pay at 60 cents per day, and one ration commuted at 30 cents for each 20 miles of the distance from place of discharge to place of last enlistment; and in the settlement of accounts they adopt 3,136 miles as the distance from Washington, D. C., to Mare Island, California.

*According to this practice the travel [656] pay and commutation of subsistence on such a discharge would be for—

157 days' pay, at 60 cents	$94 20
157 rations, at 30 cents	47 10

Total	$141 30
-------------	----------

3. Under a long-standing construction by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department of the law embraced in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1290, it has been the practice to refuse travel pay and commutation of subsistence to enlisted men from the place of their discharge to the place of enlistment, when they have been discharged at their own request prior to the expiration of their term of enlistment.

The only exception made under this practice is when an enlisted man is discharged at his own request after twenty years of faithful service. Army Regulations 1863, ¶ 163.

4. Before bringing suit here the claimant presented the claim set forth in his petition to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and it was disallowed in accordance with the practice mentioned in finding 3.

The court also found, as a conclusion of law, that the claimant was entitled to recover of the defendants the sum of $141.30, for which amount judgment was entered, and the government appealed.

Mr. Joshua Eric Dodge, Assistant Attorney General, for appellant.

Mr. Robert Thornton, appellee, for himself.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1290, as amended by the act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat. at L. 244), "when a soldier is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment,*enrolment, or [657] original muster into the service. The government may furnish the same in kind, but in case it shall not do so, he shall be allowed travel pay and commutation of subsistence, according to his rank, for such time as may be sufficient for him to travel from the place of discharge to the place of his residence or original muster into service, computed at the rate of one day for every 20 miles."

The case was disposed of in the court below as one depending solely upon the question whether a soldier, who is discharged from the service by his own consent, shall, under the above section, be allowed the transportation and subsistence therein provided for.

We do not find it necessary to express an opinion upon this question, as there is another point apparently not called to the attention of the court of claims, upon which we think the case must be reversed. The transportation provided for is "from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrolment, or original muster into the service." Claimant was originally enlisted at Washington in August, 1878, and was discharged at Mare Island, California, November 6, 1886, receiving, under the provisions of the above section, travel pay and commutation of subsistence from Mare Island to Washington. He did not return to Washington, however, but on the fourth day thereafter (November 10) re-enlisted at Mare Island as a private, and in the course of his service was returned to Washington, where, at the expiration of two years and four months, he was discharged at his own request, and now claims transportation and commutation of subsistence from Washington to Mare Island as the place of his enlistment, amounting to $141.30. The result is that, notwithstanding his original enlistment and final discharge were both at Washington, he receives $282.60 for travel and subsistence twice across the continent without ever having, so far as it appears, expended a dollar or traveled a mile.

These allowances are both of them presumptively for expenses actually incurred, as is evident from the provision that they may be furnished in kind, and are designed to reimburse the soldier for all necessary outlays of returning to the place of his enlistment, which is treated as presumptively his home. Indeed, the law of 1812 originally provided (2 Stat. at L. 674) that the travel and subsistence should be allowed from the place of discharge to the place of residence of the claimant. By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1290, however, Congress substituted for place of residence the expression "place of enlistment, enrolment, or original muster into the service," the purpose of which was, doubtless, to protect the government against the soldier choosing a distant place for his assumed residence and recovering a large mileage, to which he was not justly entitled. The presumption, however, that these allowances are for expenses actually incurred is not absolutely conclusive, and if it be shown that the soldier cannot possibly intend to incur the expense for which the allowance is made, or for some other reason he is not within the spirit of the act, he is not entitled to the allowance. His claim, therefore, should be based upon something more than a mere technicality. If, for example, petitioner's discharge and re-enlistment at Mare Island had been contemporaneous acts, he would clearly not have been entitled to travel and subsistence to Washington; and such we understand to have been the practice of the department. So, if such discharge and re-enlistment were so near together that they constituted, practically, a continuous service, we think the second enlistment may be treated as a re-enlistment, and if the soldier be returned to the place of his original enlistment and there discharged, he would not be entitled to an allowance for travel and subsistence.

In the case of United States v. Alger, 151 U. S. 363 [38: 192], 152 U. S. 384 [38: 488], where an officer resigned one day, and was appointed to a higher grade the next day, it was held that, for the purpose of computing longevity pay, he was to be considered as having been engaged in a continuous service. Bounties to private soldiers, in the form of increased pay after five years' service, are allowed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1282, and § 1284, to those who re-enlist within one month (since extended to three months, 28 Stat. at L. 216), after having been honorably discharged. This would seem to indicate an intention on the part of Congress to regard a re-enlistment within thirty days as practically a continuous service for the purpose of additional pay, though not necessarily so for the purpose of transportation and subsistence.

In this case we are able to take judicial notice of the fact that claimant could not* [659 possibly have traveled from Mare Island to Washington and back within the four days which elapsed between his discharge and his re-enlistment, and hence, if he intended to re-enlist, that he received there an allowance to which he was not justly entitled, and, as the second discharge is at the place of his original enlistment, he is not entitled to another mileage across the continent. It will, perhaps, not be just to say of the claimant that the interval which elapsed between his discharge as a drummer, and his re-enlistment as a private at Mare Island was for the purpose of drawing transportation and subsistence to Washington, but the case at least suggests that possibility. Nor do we undertake to say that the paymaster was not fully justified in paying the claimant his transportation and subsistence when originally discharged at Mare Island, since it was manifestly impossible for him to know whether the claimant intended to re-enlist or not; but under the circumstances we think the service should be treated as a continuous one. Indeed, it is somewhat doubtful whether this is not specially provided for by § 1290, which allows transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge "to the place of his enlistment, enrolment, or original muster into the service." If the word "original" preceded the word "enlistment" this construction would be freer from doubt, but the section as it reads certainly lends support to the theory that the allowances were not intended as a mere bounty.

Whether the claimant should be recharged, after his re-enlistment, with the travel and subsistence allowed him on his first discharge, raises a question which is not presented by the record in this case, and upon which we do not feel warranted in expressing an opinion. Other considerations may have a bearing upon this question, which do not enter into the present controversy. If, for instance, the claimant did not intend to re-enlist when first discharged, but subsequently changed his mind, it does not necessarily follow that he should be recharged these allowances, if the government chose to re-enlist him. The question at issue concerns only the propriety of the second claim and not of the first allowance. The case is* somewhat exceptional [660 one, and all that we decide is that, where the service is practically a continuous one, and the soldier's second discharge occurs at the place of his original enlistment, he is not entitled to his commutation for travel and subsistence to the place of his second enlistment.

The judgment of the court of claims is therefore reversed, and the case remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF GARNETT, KANSAS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

R. H. AYERS, Sheriff of Anderson County, Kansas, AND OTHERS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 660-663.)

Construction of state statute—discrimination against national banks—judicial notice.

1. This court is bound by the interpretation given to a state statute by the supreme court of that state.
2. Whether a state statute discriminates against national banks in not allowing debts to be deducted from their shares in taxation cannot be determined without showing that the amount of moneyed capital in the state from which debts may be deducted, as compared with the moneyed capital invested in shares of such banks, is so large and substantial as to amount to an illegal discrimination against national bank shareholders, where the statute treats shares in national and state banks on an equality.
3. This court cannot take judicial notice of the relative proportions in which the moneyed capital of a state is invested in the various kinds of securities therein found.

[No. 446.]

Submitted January 7, 1896. Decided January 27, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas to review a judgment of that court, affirming the judgment of the District Court of Anderson County in favor of defendants in an action brought by the First National Bank of Garnett, to restrain the defendants, R. H. Ayers, sheriff of that county, et al., from levying upon the property of the bank on a warrant for the collection of taxes upon its stockholders. Affirmed.

See same case below, 53 Kan. 440, 463.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

This is a writ of error to the supreme court of Kansas to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the district court of Anderson county, which was in favor of the defendants, and for costs against plaintiff. The action was brought to restrain the defendants from levying upon the property of the plaintiff in error for the purpose of collecting a warrant, issued for the collection of taxes upon the stockholders of the bank on the ground that certain deductions claimed on the part of some of the stockholders from the assessment upon their shares of stock were not allowed them, as they claimed they should have been, under the statutes of the United States.

The petition of the plaintiff in error stated the facts upon *which it was alleged the cause [661 of action arose, and the defendants voluntarily entered appearance in the cause, and thereupon an agreement was signed by the parties to the action setting forth the facts upon which the case was to be tried. The material portion of the agreement sets forth that the plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, with its office at the city of Garnett, Anderson county, Kansas. The defendant Ayers was sheriff of the county of Anderson during all the time mentioned in the complaint, and the defendant Hargrave during such time was treasurer of that county. The plaintiff is a national bank with a capital stock of $75,000, divided into 750 shares of the par value of $100 each; the actual value of such shares of stock was $100 per share on the first day of March, 1890. On the day last named certain stockholders, named in the statement, were jointly indebted and owed in good faith the several sums of money set opposite their respective names in plaintiff's petition. These debts were not owing to any person, company, or corporation as depositors in any bank or banking association, or any person or firm engaged in the business of banking in Kansas or elsewhere, nor were they debts owing on account of any of the things named in the Kansas statute hereinafter alluded to. The stockholders owing such debts duly complied with the statutes of Kansas in asking to be allowed to deduct from the value of their stock the amount of the debts which they were justly owing in good faith, as above stated. This was refused by the proper authorities, and an assessment was made against the named stockholders of the plaintiff without allowing any such deductions as claimed, and the taxes so levied on the stock held by the stockholders amounted to the sum of about $2,000. The debts of the stockholders were all of the kind and character that could be deducted from "credits" under the statutes of Kansas, and due and legal demand was made to have such debts deducted from the value of the stock, which was refused. The debts were justly due and owing on the first of March, 1890, and no part of them had been deducted from the "credits" at any time or place during that year. The plaintiff paid the taxes assessed against its stockholders who did not *claim [662 any deductions, and the only taxes remaining due were those assessed against the named stockholders who claimed deductions for their debts, as above stated. Other facts were agreed upon which it is not necessary to mention for the purpose of discussing the question involved in this case.

NOTE.—That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations,—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

160 U. S.

Several statutes of the state of Kansas are set forth, the first being the one which permits an action of this kind to be brought for the purpose of enjoining an illegal levy of any tax, charge, or assessment. Kan. Gen. Stat. § 6847 (to be found in vol. 2 of those laws), defines the different terms used in the chapter on taxation. In this section the term "credit" is defined as follows: "The term 'credit' when used in this act shall mean and include every demand for money, labor, or other valuable thing, whether due or to become due, but not secured by lien on real estate." Section 6851 of the same General Statutes permits a deduction of debts from "credits." That part of the section bearing upon this subject is as follows:

"Debts owing in good faith by any person, company, or corporation may be deducted from the gross amount of credits belonging to such person, company, or corporation: Provided, Such debts are not owing to any person, company, or corporation as depositors in any bank or banking association, or with any person or firm engaged in the business of banking in this state or elsewhere; and the person, company, or corporation making out the statement of personal property to be given to the assessor, claiming deductions herein provided for, shall set forth both the amount and nature of the credits, and the amount and nature of his debts sought to be deducted; but no person, company, or corporation shall be entitled to any deduction on account of any bond, note, or obligation given to any mutual insurance company, or deferred payment, or loan for a policy of life insurance, nor on account of any unpaid subscription to any religious, literary, scientific, or benevolent institution or society: Provided, That in deducting debts from credits no debt shall be deducted where said debt was created by a loan on government bonds or other taxable securities."

663] *Kan. Sess. Laws 1891, chap. 84, § 1, provides for the taxation of bank stock, and is as follows:

"Sec. 1. That § 6868 of the General Statutes of 1889 be amended as follows: Sec. 6868. Stockholders in banks and banking associations and loan and investment companies, organized under the laws of this state or the United States, shall be assessed and taxed on the true value of their shares of stock in the city or township where such banks, banking associations, loan or investment companies are located; and the president, cashier, or other managing officers thereof shall, under oath, return to the assessor on demand a list of the names of the stockholders, and amount and value of stock held by each, together with the value of any undivided profit or surplus; and said banks, banking associations, loan or investment companies shall pay the tax assessed upon said stock and undivided profits or surplus, and shall have a lien thereon until the same is satisfied: Provided, That if from any causes the taxes levied upon the stock of any banking association, loan or investment company shall not be paid by said corporation, the property of the individual stockholders shall be held liable therefor: Provided further, That if any portion of the capital stock of any bank or banking association or loan or investment company shall be invested in real estate, and said corporation shall hold a title in fee simple thereto, the assessed value of said real estate shall be deducted from the original assessment of the paid-up capital stock of said corporation, and said real estate shall be assessed as other lands or lots: And provided further, That banking stock or loan and investment company stock or capital shall not be assessed at any higher rate than other property: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to all mutual fire and life insurance companies or associations having assets, accumulations, money, or credits, and doing business under the laws of this state: And provided further, That such assets, money, and credits, held and under the control of such mutual fire and life insurance companies or associations, shall be subject to assessment and taxation."

*These are the only sections of the Kan-[664 sas statute that the plaintiff in error claims have any bearing upon this case, and counsel for plaintiff in error states that the only really important question herein is the right of stockholders of a national bank to treat their stock therein as a credit from which they may be allowed to deduct the debts which they are owing in good faith.

Upon the above agreed statement of facts the court, after due consideration, found generally for the defendants, and entered judgment in their favor for the costs of this action against the plaintiff, to which finding and judgment of the court plaintiff, at the time, duly excepted. The plaintiff also filed its motion for a new trial, which motion was by the court overruled, and duly excepted to by plaintiff. The summons in error issued from the supreme court of Kansas was duly served, and the record removed into that court for review, where, after argument, the judgment of the court below was affirmed, with costs. 53 Kan. 463, upon the opinion in Dutton v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 53 Kan. 440. The plaintiff thereupon sued out a writ of error from this court, directed to the supreme court of Kansas, and the record is now here for review.

Mr. J. W. Gleed for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Abram Bergen and C. T. Richardson for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

By the decision of the supreme court of Kansas, § 6847 of the General Statutes of that state, defining the word "credit" as used in the chapter providing for the assessment and collection of taxes, was held not to include shares of stock in a national or state bank, and the owners of such shares were held to have no right under that statute to deduct from the assessed value of their shares the amount of their debts. This court is bound by the interpretation given to the Kansas statute by the supreme court of that state (New York v. Weaver, *100 U. S. 539, 541 [25: 705, 706]), and [665 the only question that remains to be decided by us is whether, under that construction, the statute is in conflict with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5219, which provides as follows: "Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the state within which the association is located, but the legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any state shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either state, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed."

The plaintiff in error claimed that an illegal discrimination was made against the holders of national bank stock, because the statute of the state of Kansas permits certain kinds of debts owing in good faith by any person, company, or corporation to be deducted from the gross amount of credits belonging to such person, company, or corporation in listing their property for taxation, while owners of shares of stock in national banks are not allowed to deduct their indebtedness from the value of their shares of stock, and for that reason the plaintiff says that the Kansas statute is in conflict with the above-cited section (5219) of the statutes of the United States. It will be seen that the term "credit," when used in the Kansas statute, is defined by that statute to mean and include every demand for money, labor, or other valuable thing, whether due or to become due, but not secured by a lien on real estate; and it is only from such credits, so defined, that the class of debts named in the statute and owing in good faith by any person, company, or corporation may be deducted. There is no proof in the case as to the proportion which credits from which such debts may be deducted bear to the whole amount of the credits owned in the state, nor is there any proof as to what proportion the entire credits owned in the state bear to other moneyed capital owned therein. Debts owing to any person, company, or corporation as depositors in any bank or banking association, or with any person or firm engaged in the business of banking in Kansas or elsewhere, cannot be deducted; and no person, company, or corporation is entitled to any deduction on account of any bond, note, or obligation given to any mutual insurance company, or deferred payment or loan for a policy of life insurance; nor on account of any unpaid subscriptions to any religious, literary, scientific, or benevolent institution or society; nor can any debt be deducted from credits where the debt was created by a loan on government bonds or other taxable securities. Kan. Gen. Stat. § 6851.

It is thus seen that there is a very large and important class of what is termed moneyed capital from which no deductions are permitted on account of debts. The statute treats shares of stock in a national bank upon a perfect equality and in the same way as shares of stock in a state bank for the purpose of assessment and taxation.

In Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138 [30: 895], it was held that the main purpose of Congress in fixing limits to taxation on investments in shares of national banks was to render it impossible for a state, in levying such a tax, to create and foster an unequal and unfriendly competition by favoring state institutions or individuals carrying on a similar business and operations and investments of a like character. Mr. Justice Matthews, in delivering the opinion of the court in the above-cited case, gave an exhaustive review of the cases which had been decided in this court up to that time, under this section of the United States statute, and it is evident from the opinion and decision of the court in that case that the intent of the United States statute was to prevent an unjust discrimination against the moneyed capital invested in shares of national banks, by rendering it "impossible for the state *in levying a tax on such shares to create [667 and foster an unequal and unfriendly competition by favoring institutions or individuals carrying on a similar business and operations and investments of a like character." Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 155 [30: 901].

From the record in this case it is wholly impossible to determine that there is any discrimination against the holders of national bank stock. In order to come to a decision in favor of the plaintiff in error it would be necessary for this court to take what counsel for plaintiff calls judicial notice of what is claimed to be a fact, viz., that the amount of moneyed capital in the state of Kansas from which debts may be deducted, as compared with the moneyed capital invested in shares of national banks, was so large and substantial as to amount to an illegal discrimination against national bank shareholders. This we cannot do. There is no proof whatever upon the subject. The state court has itself determined from its own knowledge that the credits from which debts may be deducted do not constitute a large or even material part of the moneyed capital of the state, and, on the contrary, that court says that debts secured by liens on real estate, money invested in corporate stocks of all kinds and descriptions, including railroad, banking, insurance, loan, and trust companies, and all the multifarious forms of moneyed securities, moneys on deposit subject to call, and other forms of invested capital, constitute the great bulk of the moneyed capital in that state, and from all such moneyed capital no deduction for debts is allowed.

As the record appears there is no fact of which the court can take judicial notice. The relative proportions in which the moneyed capital of the state of Kansas is invested in the various kinds of securities to be therein found, this court cannot judicially know. When proof shall be made regarding that matter, it may then be determined intelligently whether, within the case of Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, supra, there has been a real discrimination against the holders of national bank shares and hence a violation of the above-cited act of Congress. The single fact that the statute of Kansas *permits [668 some debts to be deducted from some moneyed capital, but not from that which is invested in the shares of national banks, is not sufficient to show such violation. The judgment must be affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
GETTYSBURG ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.†

Same
v.
Same.

(Sec S. C. Reporter's ed. 668-693.)

Condemnation of land by the United States—act of Congress—battlefield of Gettysburg—appropriation—power—quantity of land.

1. The United States may condemn land whenever it is necessary or appropriate to use the land in the execution of any of the powers granted to it by the Constitution.
2. In examining an act of Congress every intendment will be made by the courts in favor of its constitutionality.
3. The preservation of the battlefield of Gettysburg, with the leading tactical positions properly marked with tablets, is a use which comes within the constitutional power of Congress to provide for by condemnation of land.
4. That Congress limited the amount to be appropriated for such purpose, and provided that no liability on the part of the government should be incurred, nor any expenditure made beyond the appropriations then made or to be made during that session, does not prevent the condemnation of lands for such use, when it does not appear that the appropriation has been exhausted.
5. Congress has power to take land devoted to one public use for another and different public use, upon making just compensation; the intention to take land of a railway company, in this case, appears from the recital in the joint resolution of June 6, 1894.
6. The quantity of land to be taken for a public use is a legislative and not a judicial question; the effect of taking a part upon the rest of the land remaining is a mere question of compensation.

[Nos. 599, 629.]

Argued January 8, 9, 1896. Decided January 27, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to review a judgment of that court in each of the foregoing cases dismissing proceedings taken by the United States for the purpose of condemning for public use for the objects mentioned in acts of Congress certain lands on the battlefield of Gettysburg. Reversed, and case remitted, with directions for a new trial.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

These are two writs of error to the circuit court of the United States for the eastern dis-

†The title of the case in the docket and record is "United States v. A Certain Tract of Land in Cumberland Township, Adams County, Pa."

NOTE.—As to payment for private property taken for public use,—see note to Withers v. Buckley, 15: 816.

As to damages to easements, etc., by eminent domain,—see note to Osborne v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37: 156.

trict of Pennsylvania. They involve the same questions.

By the act of Congress, approved August 1, 1888 (chap. 728), entitled "An Act to Authorize Condemnation of Land for Sites of Public Buildings and for Other Purposes," it is provided "that in every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury, or any other officer of the government, has been or hereafter shall be authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building or for any other public uses, he shall be and hereby is authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation, under judicial process, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or advantageous to the government to do so."

By the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1893, generally called the sundry civil appropriation act, it was provided, among other things, as follows: "Monuments and Tablets at Gettysburg. For the purpose of preserving the lines of battle at Gettysburg, Pa., and for properly marking with tablets the positions occupied by the various commands of the Armies of the Potomac and of Northern Virginia on that field, and for the opening and improving avenues along the positions occupied by troops upon those lines, and for fencing the same, and for determining the leading tactical positions of batteries, regiments, brigades, divisions, corps, and other organizations, with reference to the study and correct understanding of the battle, and to mark the same *with suitable tablets, each bearing a [670] brief historical legend, compiled without praise and without censure, the sum of $25,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Subsequently to the passage of that act and on the 6th of June, 1894, a joint resolution of Congress was approved by the President, which, after reciting the passage of the act of 1893, and the appropriation of the sum of $25,000 thereby, contained the further recital that the sum of $50,000 was then under consideration by Congress as an additional appropriation for the same purposes, and that it had been recently decided by the United States court, sitting in Pennsylvania, that authority had not been distinctly given for the acquisition of such land as may be necessary to enable the War Department to execute the purposes declared in the act of 1893, and that there was imminent danger that portions of the battlefield might be irreparably defaced by the construction of a railroad over the same, thereby making impracticable the execution of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893. It was therefore "Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire by purchase (or by condemnation) pursuant to the act of August 1, 1888, such lands, or interest in lands, upon or in the vicinity of said battlefield, as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary for the complete execution of the act of March 3, 1893: Provided, That no obligation or liability upon the part of the government shall be incurred under this resolution, nor any expenditure made except out of the appropriations already made and to be made during the present session of this Congress." A further appropriation of $50,000 was made for this purpose by the act of August 18, 1894, the same session of Congress.

Acting under the authority of these various statutes and joint resolution, the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, by direction of the Attorney 671] *General, filed a petition in the name of the United States for the purpose of condemning certain lands therein described, for the objects mentioned in the acts of Congress.

The petition in the first case recited the foregoing facts, and also stated the inability to agree with the owners upon the price of the land desired, and asked for the appointment of a jury, according to the law of the state of Pennsylvania in such case provided. The 2d section of the act of Congress, approved August 1, 1888, above mentioned, provides that the practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceedings are to conform so far as may be to those existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the state within which such circuit or district courts are held. The Gettysburg Electric Railway Company answered this petition, and set up the fact that it was a corporation existing under the laws of Pennsylvania, and that by virtue of its charter it had the power to build its road along a certain portion of the Gettysburg borough limits, described in the answer; that it had acquired as a part of a route of one of the branches of its road, and for the purpose of using the same as a part of its right of way, the tract of land particularly mentioned and described in the petition, and which is the subject of the condemnation proceedings. It alleged that the effect of the condemnation of the strip of ground would be to cut off a particular branch railway or extension belonging to it, and destroy its continuity and prevent its construction and operation. The company further answered that the greater part of the appropriation of $25,000, under the act of March 3, 1893, had already been expended for the purposes stated therein, and that the balance remaining to the credit of the appropriation was less than $10,000. The electric railway company afterwards filed a further or amended answer and therein set forth that the entire balance remaining unexpended of the appropriation of $25,000, under the act of March 3, 1893, and of $50,000, which had been appropriated by the act approved August 18, 1894, were covered by contracts already made under the authority of the Secretary of War, and that there was not, in point of fact, at that time any part of either appropriation available for the 672] *purpose of paying any judgment which might be recovered by the company in these condemnation proceedings.

Evidence was given on the question of the value of the land to be taken, and on the 5th of November, 1884, the jury filed a report awarding the sum of $30,000 as the value of the land proposed to be taken in the first or main proceeding. The Gettysburg Electric Railway Company duly filed exceptions to the award, and on the same day appealed therefrom. The United States also appealed. The case was argued, and in April, 1895, an order was entered that the first and second exceptions filed by the defendant be sustained and that the petition of the United States be dismissed. Those two exceptions are as follows:

"1. The act of Congress approved August 1, 1888, provides for the acquisition of real estate by the United States by condemnation only for the erection of public buildings or for other public uses. It does not appear in the petition of Ellery P. Ingham, Esq., United States attorney, that the Secretary of War has been authorized to procure the tract of land mentioned in the 5th paragraph thereof, belonging to the Gettysburg Electric Railway Company, for the erection of a public building or for other public uses. The purposes named for the expenditure of the appropriation in the act of Congress of March 3, 1893, are not such public uses as authorize the condemnation by the United States of the real estate of private persons."

"11. The purpose specified in the 6th paragraph of the said petition, namely, 'of preserving the lines of battle,' 'properly marking with tablets the positions occupied,' and 'determining the leading tactical positions of batteries, regiments, brigades, divisions, corps, and other organizations with reference to the study and correct understanding of the battle, and to mark the same with suitable tablets,' are none of them public uses or purposes, authorizing the condemnation by the United States of private property."

The second proceeding was taken for the purpose of condemning a certain other portion of land containing a little over 2 acres. There was no trial in that matter, but the *case 673 was dismissed, under the motion made by the defendant to quash the proceedings, upon the same grounds stated in the main case.

The substance of the holding of the circuit judge was that the intended use of the land was not that kind of a public use for which the United States had the constitutional power to condemn land. The district judge dissented from that view and was of the opinion that the use was public, and that the United States had the power to condemn land for that purpose.

Messrs. Judson Harmon, Attorney General, and Holmes Conrad, Solicitor General, for plaintiff in error:

It was within the power of Congress to direct the appropriation of the land in question for the purposes named.

The general government possesses the power of eminent domain as incident to its sovereignty, although such power is not expressly given by the Constitution.

Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367 (23: 449); United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 518 (27: 1015, 1017); Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 656 (34: 295, 302).

By the 5th Amendment to the Constitution, providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, the existence of the power in the Federal government was recognized. The amendment was a mere limitation upon the power.

United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513 (27: 1015); McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4

Wheat, 316, 407 (4: 579, 601); Knox v. Lee ("Legal Tender Cases"), 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 533 (20: 306); United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock, 96; Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 117 U. S. 154 (29: 846); Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564 (39: 1092); Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1 (28: 896); Olcott v. Fond du Lac County Supers. 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 678 (21: 382); People v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 595; Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403 (25: 206); Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 327 (37: 468); Kohl v. United States, supra.

If the proposed taking of land by and for the government alone could have, or be fairly thought by Congress to have, any possible direct and immediate relation to any of the subjects of governmental action which are committed to Congress, it is not open to the courts to question the necessity or propriety of the appropriation.

Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282 (37: 170).

Interest in preserving historic spots is naturally in the government, whose welfare is involved in the ideas and principles which have come to have there the local name and habitation so essential to their preservation and perpetuation. It is the natural idea and the principle of the indissolubility of the Union, which Gettysburg embodies.

United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196 (27: 171); Walton v. Cotton, 60 U. S. 19 How. 355 (15: 659); Daggett v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 35, 14 L. R. A. 474; Hilbish v. Catherman, 64 Pa. 154; Dexter v. Raine, 18 Ohio L. J. 61; Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118.

Where the land is not to be acquired for the benefit of a particular state but solely for the preservation of a historic spot as a perpetual monument to those who there lost or risked their lives, to be directly controlled by the general government, and remain forever the property of the people of the whole country for their instruction and patriotic inspiration, the use is clearly public, and therefore an appropriate one for the exercise of the power of eminent domain.

Congress clearly delegated to the Secretary of War power to acquire this land.

Corporations hold their franchises subject to the right of eminent domain.

Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Louisa R. Co. 54 U. S. 13 How. 83 (14: 60); West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 47 U. S. 6 How. 507 (12: 535); Re Brooklyn, 143 N. Y. 596; Lock Haven Bridge Co. v. Clinton County, 157 Pa. 379.

The intention to grant such right may be inferred even in favor of bodies to which the power of eminent domain is merely delegated.

Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 63; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367 (23: 449).

If the taking of the land—the tangible property—destroys or impairs a franchise, this can only increase the damages.

Rahn Twp. v. Tanaqua & L. Street R. Co. 167 Pa. 84.

The act and joint resolution sufficiently provide for compensation.

Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 659 (34: 303); United States v. Manderson, 3 U. S. App. 205; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 124 U. S. 599 (31: 533).

Mere selection of the land and the institution of proceedings to ascertain damages are not a taking which must be preceded by payment.

United States v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 16 Fed. Rep. 524; Standish v. Liverpool, 15 Eng. L. & Eq. 255; Fox v. Western P. R. Co. 31 Cal. 538; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313.

A similar limitation of the amount to be expended was held not to invalidate condemnation proceedings in Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 302 (37: 170, 186).

Messrs. Thomas Hart, Jr., and Charles Heebner, for defendant in error:

The purposes named in the act of Congress of March 3, 1893, are not public uses, and the United States is not authorized to condemn private property for said purposes.

The right of the United States to take private property for certain public uses cannot be exercised within the limits of the states for any purpose which is not incident to some power delegated to the general government, and necessary or at least adapted to its execution.

1 Hare, Const. 346; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 372 (23: 451); Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 642 (34: 297); United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315 (24: 192); Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 117 U. S. 154 (29: 846).

The question whether the purposes named in the act of 1893 have such a relation to the powers granted by the Constitution as to come within the above-stated rule is for the court.

Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 657 (34: 302); Lewis, Em. Dom. § 158, note 1.

The question of the publicity of the use is not at all determined and concluded by the fact that the sovereign itself is the medium of the exercise of the power.

Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 534; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 160, cases cited; Willyard v. Hamilton, 7 Ohio, Pt. II. 111, 30 Am. Dec. 195; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 51, p. 3.

The Constitution provides that private property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation. These words are a limitation, the same in effect as: You shall not exercise this power except for public use.

Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts, 63, 36 Am. Dec. 141; United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 518 (27: 1017); Lewis, Em. Dom. § 163; Twelfth Street Market Co. v. Philadelphia & R. Terminal R. Co. 142 Pa. 580; Palairt's Appeal, 67 Pa. 479; Keeling v. Griffin, 56 Pa. 307; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 47 U. S. 6 How. 507 (12: 535); 4 Kent, Com. 270; Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Chappell, 1 Rice, L. 383; Memphis v. Overton, 3 Yerg. 387; King v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 692, 654, 655; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 60, 31 Am. Dec. 313; Memphis Freight Co. v. Memphis, 4 Coldw. 419; Sholl v. German Coal Co. 118 Ill. 427, 59 Am. Rep. 379.

The condemnation of ground for a cemetery has only been sustained where the right of burial is vested in the public or in the public authorities.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 176, and cases cited note 1; Mills, Em. Dom. § 19, and cases cited in notes; Evergreen Cemetery Asso. v. Beecher, 53 Conn. 551.

The courts have refused to sustain a taking of private property in invitum, upon the ground that the object of the use was merely pleasure or ornament.

Randolph, Em. Dom. § 52; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Grotius, De Jure B. & P. book 8, chap. 14, § 7; Puffendorf, De Jure Nat. et Gent. book 8, chap. 5., § 7; Bynkershoek, Quaest. Jur. Pub., book 2. chap. 15; Re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 375.

The taking of lands by municipalities for public parks is recognized as a taking for public use.

Brooklyn Park Comrs. v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70; Re New York, 99 N. Y. 569.

The proceedings in the case of Higginson v. Nahant, 11 Allen, 530, and Mount Washington Road Co's. Petition, 35 N. H. 134, were justified on the ground that they were public highways in the ordinary sense, although primarily intended as pleasure drives.

Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 587; Farist Steel Co. v. Bridgeport, 60 Conn. 278, 13 L. R. A. 590.

A great difference exists between the two classes of decisions,—that is, in national and state cases.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 645; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 371 (23: 451); United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 320 (24: 193); Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 117 U. S. 151 (29: 845); Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 153 U. S. 525 (33: 808); Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 106 Mass. 356, 8 Am. Rep. 339; United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645 (28: 846); Re League Island, 1 Brewst. 524; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229; Reddall v. Ryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590; United States v. Chicago, 48 U. S. 7 How. 185 (12: 660); Fort Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 525 (29: 264).

Congress has power to provide only for those highways, whether roads, bridges, or railroads, which are intended as a means of communication between the states.

California v. Central P. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1 (32: 150), 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 153; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641 (34: 295); Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 153 U. S. 525 (33: 808).

In all these cases the power of Congress to provide such highways was put upon the power to regulate commerce.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312 (37: 463).

This necessarily excludes from Federal control all that commerce which is entirely carried on within the limits of a state and does not extend to or affect other states.

Daniel Ball v. United States ("The Daniel Ball") 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557 (19: 999); Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1 (6: 23); Hare, Am. Const. L. 246, 248; Forepaugh v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 128 Pa. 217, 5 L. R. A. 508.

Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the states.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 199 (6: 71).

The power to lay and collect taxes is quite distinct from the right to take private property for public use; and it is not the power of taxation, but the right of eminent domain, which is here asserted.

1 Hare, Am. Const. L. 333; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Weister v. Hade, 52 Pa. 474; Kelly v. Pittsburg, 85 Pa. 179, 27 Am. Rep. 633.

The power to tax is the strongest, the most pervading, of all the powers of government.

Citizens Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall 655 (22: 455).

The power of eminent domain is expressly provided for by article 5 of the amendments to the Constitution: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." This is a limitation upon the exercise of this power by the government of the United States.

Barron v. Baltimore, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 243 (8: 672).

It is by no means clear that the United States may condemn land in a state for the purpose of a national park.

Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282 (37: 170).

There is a distinction between a taking by a state of the United States and a taking by a corporation under a delegation of power.

In the former case the giving of security is not necessary, but something in the way of a provision for compensation is.

The cases in which the resources of taxation to be employed in raising the amount have been held to afford a sufficient security were those in which the law contained some provision stating how payment was to be made. It was because sure and certain provision was made for obtaining compensation that it was held that the provision in the Constitution was satisfied.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 457; Keene v. Bristol, 26 Pa. 46; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Long v. Fuller, 68 Pa. 170.

The taking of land from a citizen for the use of the United States cannot be constitutional without a provision being made for a tribunal for the ascertainment of compensation, and for a method by which payment can be enforced by such proper tribunal, or a pledge of public faith being made that a distinct fund should be held by the government for its payment.

2 Kent, Com. 12th ed. 339, note f; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313; People v. Hayden, 6 Hill, 361; Loweree v. Newark, 38 N. J. L. 151; Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County Comrs. 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Callison v. Hedrick, 15 Gratt. 244; People v. Michigan S. R. Co. 3 Mich. 496; Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591; Jackson v. Winn, 4 Litt. 323; White v. Nashville & N. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 518; Brook v. Hishen, 40 Wis. 674; State v. Messenger, 27 Minn. 119; Com. v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. 53 Pa. 50; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coons, 6 Watts & S. 114; Yost's Report, 17 Pa. 524.

A corporation or individual must pay or secure the price of the property before it is taken, but the state must provide the means of payment at the passing of the act.

Re Sedgeley Ave. 88 Pa. 509; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590; Haverhill Bridge Proprs. v. Essex County Comrs. 103 Mass. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 518;

Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 659 (34: 303).

The extended litigation between the Great Falls Manufacturing Company and the United States government, reported in 25 Fed. Rep. 521, 112 U. S. 645 (28: 846), and 124 U. S. 581 (31: 527), is full of this subject.

Most of the cases upon this subject have been those of municipal corporations against which, upon the rendition of a judgment, process could issue for the collection thereof.

Re Sedgely Ave. 88 Pa. 509.

The proviso to the resolution of June 6, 1894, renders the whole unconstitutional, nugatory, and void. The proviso in effect reads "that no obligation or liability on the part of the government shall be incurred or any expenditure made under this resolution."

United States v. Manderson, 3 U. S. App. 199.

An act of the state legislature, divesting one person of his property and vesting it in another at a fixed compensation, is unconstitutional and void.

Van Horne v. Dorrance, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 304 (1: 391); Com. v. Pittsburg & O. R. Co. 58 Pa. 26; Cunningham v. Campbell, 33 Ga. 625; Rich v. Chicago, 59 Ill. 286.

The determination of what is "just compensation" for private property when taken for public use is a judicial act, which can properly be performed only by the judicial department of the government.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 60 Md. 263; Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County Comrs. 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282 (37: 170); Charles River Bridge Proprs. v. Warren Bridge Proprs. 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 420 (9: 773).

General laws or general words will not authorize the condemnation of property already devoted to a public use.

Housatonic R. Co. v. Lee & H. R. Co. 118 Mass. 391; Boston & M. Railroad v. Lowell & L. R. Co. 124 Mass. 368; Re Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 574; Re Boston, H. T. & W. R. Co. 79 N. Y. 64; State v. Montclair R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 328; New Jersey S. R. Co. v. Long Branch Comrs. 39 N. J. L. 28; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Faribault, 23 Minn. 167; Earber v. Andover, 8 N. H. 398; Armington v. Barnet, 15 Vt. 745, 40 Am. Dec. 705; Cake v. Philadelphia & E. R. Co. 87 Pa. 307; Pennsylvania R. Co's. Appeal, 93 Pa. 150.

An implication of power does not arise out of the circumstances of each particular case subsequently arising or appearing, but the place where implied power is to be looked for is in the statute itself.

Pennsylvania R. Co's. Appeal, supra; Pennsylvania R. Co's. Appeal, 115 Pa. 514; Pittsburg J. R. Co's. Appeal, 122 Pa. 511; Graff's Appeal, 128 Pa. 621, 5 L. R. A. 661; Philadelphia, G. & N. R. Co's. Appeal, 1 Montg. Law Rep. 129.

Under the legislation in this matter a part only of a railway franchise cannot be condemned and taken.

Elizabethtown & P. R. Co. v. Elizabethtown, 12 Bush, 238; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bate, 12 Lea, 573; Missouri River, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Morris, 7 Kan. 222; Porter v. Rockford, R. I. &

St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 584; Dubuque v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 202.

A railroad and its equipment must be regarded for most, if not all, purposes as a unit, or as constituting a single entire property.

Stein v. Mobile, 17 Ala. 240; People v. Pond, 13 Abb. N. C. 1; People v. Barker, 48 N. Y. 70; People v. Fredericks, 48 Barb. 173; State v. Southwestern R. Co. 70 Ga. 33; Virginia & T. R. Co. v. Washington County, 30 Gratt. 480; Georgia v. Atlantic & G. R. Co. 3 Wood, 438; Lao v. People, 87 Ill. 412.

The property and franchises of a corporation cannot be sold piece-meal under executions.

Graham v. P. & O. Canal Co. 2 Pitts. L. J. N. S. 101; Bayard's Appeal, 72 Pa. 453; Longstreth v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 11 W. N. C. 309; Com. v. Susquehanna & D. R. R. Co. 122 Pa. 303, 1 L. R. A. 225.

Lauds necessary for the enjoyment and exercise of a corporate franchise are parts of it, and cannot be levied on apart from it.

Plymouth R. Co. v. Colwell, 39 Pa. 337, 80 Am. Dec. 526; Shamokin V. R. Co. v. Livermore, 47 Pa. 465, 86 Am. Dec. 552; Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Northampton County, 8 Watts & S. 334; Railroad v. Berks County, 6 Pa. 70.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

The really important question to be determined in these proceedings is whether the use to which the petitioner desires to put the land described in the petitions is that kind of public use for which the government of the United States is authorized to condemn land.

It has authority to do so whenever it is necessary or appropriate to use the land in the execution of any of the powers granted to it by the Constitution. Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367 [23: 449]; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641-656 [34: 265-301]; Chappell v. United States, 160 U. S. 499 [ante, 510].

Is the proposed use to which this land is to be put a public use within this limitation?

The purpose of the use is stated in the first act of Congress, passed on the 3d day of March, 1893 (the appropriation act of 1893), and is quoted in the above statement of facts. The appropriation act of August 18, 1894, also contained the following: "For continuing the work of surveying, locating, and preserving the lines of battle at Gettysburg, Pa., and for purchasing, opening, constructing, and improving avenues along the portions occupied by the various commands of the Armies of the Potomac and Northern Virginia on that field, and for fencing the same; and for the purchase, at private sale or by condemnation, of such parcels of land as the Secretary of War [680] may deem necessary for the sites of tablets, and for the construction of the said avenues; for determining the leading tactical positions and properly marking the same with tablets of batteries, regiments, brigades, divisions, corps, and other organizations with reference to the study and correct understanding of the battle, each tablet bearing a brief historical legend, compiled without praise and without censure; $50,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

In these acts of Congress and in the joint resolution the intended use of this land is plainly set forth. It is stated in the 2d volume of Judge Dillon's work on Municipal Corporations (4th ed.), § 600, that when the legislature has declared the use or purpose to be a public one, its judgment will be respected by the courts, unless the use be palpably without reasonable foundation. Many authorities are cited in the note, and, indeed, the rule commends itself as a rational and proper one.

As just compensation, which is the full value of the property taken, is to be paid, and the amount must be raised by taxation where the land is taken by the government itself, there is not much ground to fear any abuse of the power. The responsibility of Congress to the people will generally, if not always, result in a most conservative exercise of the right. It is quite a different view of the question which courts will take when this power is delegated to a private corporation. In that case, the presumption that the intended use for which the corporation proposes to take the land is public is not so strong as where the government intends to use the land itself.

In examining an act of Congress it has been frequently said that every intendment is in favor of its constitutionality. Such act is presumed to be valid unless its invalidity is plain and apparent; no presumption of invalidity can be indulged in; it must be shown clearly and unmistakably. This rule has been stated and followed by this court from the foundation of the government.

Upon the question whether the proposed use of this land is a public one, we think there can 681] be no well-founded doubt. *And also, in our judgment, the government has the constitutional power to condemn the land for the proposed use. It is, of course, not necessary that the power of condemnation for such purpose be expressly given by the Constitution. The right to condemn at all is not so given. It results from the powers that are given, and it is implied because of its necessity, or because it is appropriate in exercising those powers. Congress has power to declare war and to create and equip armies and navies. It has the great power of taxation to be exercised for the common defense and general welfare. Having such powers, it has such other and implied ones as are necessary and appropriate for the purpose of carrying the powers expressly given into effect. Any act of Congress which plainly and directly tends to enhance the respect and love of the citizen for the institutions of his country and to quicken and strengthen his motives to defend them, and which is germane to and intimately connected with and appropriate to the exercise of some one or all of the powers granted by Congress must be valid. This proposed use comes within such description. The provision comes within the rule laid down by Chief Justice Marshall, in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 421 [4: 605], in these words: "Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adequate to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional."

160 U. S.

The end to be attained by this proposed use, as provided for by the act of Congress, is legitimate, and lies within the scope of the Constitution. The battle of Gettysburg was one of the great battles of the world. The numbers contained in the opposing armies were great; the sacrifice of life was dreadful; while the bravery and, indeed, heroism displayed by both the contending forces rank with the highest exhibition of those qualities ever made by man. The importance of the issue involved in the contest of which this great battle was a part cannot be overestimated. The existence of the government itself and the perpetuity of our institutions depended upon the result. Valuable lessons in the art of war can now be learned *from 682 an examination of this great battlefield in connection with the history of the events which there took place. Can it be that the government is without power to preserve the land, and properly mark out the various sites upon which this struggle took place? Can it not erect the monuments provided for by these acts of Congress, or even take possession of the field of battle in the name and for the benefit of all the citizens of the country for the present and for the future? Such a use seems necessarily, not only a public use, but one so closely connected with the welfare of the Republic itself as to be within the powers granted Congress by the Constitution for the purpose of protecting and preserving the whole country. It would be a great object lesson to all who looked upon the land thus cared for, and it would show a proper recognition of the great things that were done there on those momentous days. By this use the government manifests for the benefit of all its citizens the value put upon the services and exertions of the citizen soldiers of that period. Their successful effort to preserve the integrity and solidarity of the great Republic of modern times is forcibly impressed upon every one who looks over the field. The value of the sacrifices then freely made is rendered plainer and more durable by the fact that the government of the United States, through its representatives in Congress assembled, appreciates and endeavors to perpetuate it by this most suitable recognition. Such action on the part of Congress touches the heart, and comes home to the imagination of every citizen, and greatly tends to enhance his love and respect for those institutions for which these heroic sacrifices were made. The greater the love of the citizen for the institutions of his country the greater is the dependence properly to be placed upon him for their defense in time of necessity, and it is to such men that the country must look for its safety. The institutions of our country which were saved at this enormous expenditure of life and property ought to and will be regarded with proportionate affection. Here upon this battlefield is one of the proofs of that expenditure, and the sacrifices are rendered more obvious and more easily appreciated when such a battlefield is preserved by the government at the *public expense. The right to take land 683 for cemeteries for the burial of the deceased soldiers of the country rests on the same footing and is connected with and springs from the same powers of the Constitution. It seems very clear that the government has the right to bury its own soldiers and to see to it that their graves shall not remain unknown or unhonored.

No narrow view of the character of this proposed use should be taken. Its national character and importance, we think, are plain. The power to condemn for this purpose need not be plainly and unmistakably deduced from any one of the particularly specified powers. Any number of those powers may be grouped together, and an inference from them all may be drawn that the power claimed has been conferred.

It is needless to enlarge upon the subject, and the determination is arrived at without hesitation that the use intended as set forth in the petition in this proceeding is of that public nature which comes within the constitutional power of Congress to provide for by the condemnation of land.

Second. It is objected that the appropriations made by the several acts of Congress had been exhausted when the amended answers were put in, and that the proviso attached to the joint resolution above mentioned, prohibiting any expenditure other than such as might be appropriated in that session of Congress, renders it impossible for the land owner to obtain payment with any certainty for his property that might be taken from him. Although it is set up in the answer of the electric company to the petition filed on the part of the United States, the fact that the fund appropriated has been exhausted does not appear by any evidence contained in either record. So far as this court can see from the record, there is an appropriation amounting to $75,000, for the purpose of obtaining land, a part of which has been found to be worth $30,000, and the other, and much smaller portion, is not valued. The proviso, therefore, would seem to be immaterial, as the appropriations were much larger than the value of the land to be taken. The mere fact that Congress limited the amount to be appropriated for the purpose indicated does not render the law providing for the taking of the land invalid. Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282-302 [37: 170-186]. Mr. Justice Shiras in delivering the opinion of the court in the case cited, said: "The validity of the law is further challenged because the aggregate amount to be expended in the purchase of land for the park is limited to the amount of $1,200,000. It is said that this is equivalent to condemning the lands and fixing their value by arbitrary enactment. But a glance at the act shows that the property holders are not affected by the limitation. The value of the lands is to be agreed upon, or, in the absence of agreement, is to be found by appraisers to be appointed by the court. The intention expressed by Congress, not to go beyond a certain aggregate expenditure, cannot be deemed a direction to the appraisers to keep within any given limit in valuing any particular piece of property. It is not unusual for Congress, in making appropriations for the erection of public buildings, including the purchase of sites, to name a sum beyond which expenditure shall not be made, but nobody ever thought that such a limitation had anything to do with what the owners of property should have a right to receive in case proceedings to condemn had to be resorted to." If it appeared by proof that the appropriation for the purpose indicated had been exhausted before the proceedings had been commenced to take the land in controversy, or during the hearing, then the provision in the joint resolution directing that no obligation or liability upon the part of the government should be incurred, or any expenditure made, except out of the appropriations already made and to be made during the session of Congress, would give rise to a very serious question. It is not now presented. Congress has the power, even now, to appropriate moneys for this purpose in addition to that which it appropriated in the two acts of 1893 and 1894. This court cannot, therefore, upon the record as it stands, give judgment for the land owner on the ground that the appropriation for the land has been exhausted in other ways, and that Congress prohibited the incurring of any obligation to a greater extent than the moneys then appropriated.

Third. Another objection taken in the court below, though not decided by that court, [685 but which counsel for defendant in error now urges as an additional ground for the affirmance of the judgment, is that the land proposed to be taken in this proceeding was already devoted to another public use, to wit, that of the railroad company, and that it does not appear that it was the intention of Congress to take land which was devoted to another public use. The defendant in error concedes what is without doubt true, that this is a question of intention simply; the power of Congress to take land devoted to one public use for another and a different public use upon making just compensation cannot be disputed. Upon looking at the two acts of Congress and the joint resolution of June 6, 1894, above referred to, in the latter of which it is stated, "There is imminent danger that portions of said battlefield may be irreparably defaced by the construction of a railway over the same, thereby making impracticable the execution of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893,"—we think it is plainly apparent that Congress did intend to take this very land, occupied and used by this company for its railroad.

Further elaboration is unnecessary. It is so plain to our minds that extended argument would be unprofitable.

Fourth. It is also objected that the exception below is valid, wherein it was stated that all of the land of the railroad company ought to be taken, if any were to be taken. The use for which the land is to be taken having been determined to be a public use, the quantity which should be taken is a legislative and not a judicial question. Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282-298 [37: 170-184]. As to the effect of the taking upon the land remaining, that is more a question of the amount of the compensation. If the part taken by the government is essential to enable the railroad corporation to perform its functions, or if the value of the remaining property is impaired, such facts might enter into the question of the amount of the compensation to be awarded.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 333, 334 [37:463, 470].

Fifth. It is also objected that the petition does not allege that the Secretary of War has decided it to be necessary to take this land. A perusal of the petition shows that the allegation 686 *therein contained upon this subject is not very clear. It might possibly be regarded as sufficiently alleged in an argumentative kind of way, but it certainly is not as plainly alleged as it ought to be. The petition, however, can be easily amended on application to the court below before further proceedings are taken.

This, we think, completes the review of the material questions presented by the record. The first and important question in regard to whether the proposed use is public or not having been determined in favor of the United States, we are not disposed to take any very technical view of the other questions which might be subject to amendment or to further proof upon the hearing below.

The judgment of the circuit court in each case must be reversed, and the record remitted to that court, with directions to grant a new trial in each.

SIOUX CITY & ST. PAUL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appts.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 686, 687).

Rehearing denied.

A rehearing will not be granted where the principal matters presented in the petition have already been fully considered, and the only additional point on which the rehearing is asked is immaterial and cannot affect the result.

Submitted December 17, 1895. Denied January 13, 1896.

ON PETITION for rehearing. Denied.

See same case, 159 U. S. 349, 367 (ante, 177, 183).

Messrs. J. H. Swan and Geo. B. Young for appellants.

Mr. J. M. Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, for appellee.

In the opinion of this court (159 U. S. 349, 367 [40: 177, 183]), it was said: "Upon examination of the certified list of lands, based on the 687 *diagram originally furnished by the railroad company to the Secretary of the Interior and transmitted by the General Land Office to the local land office on the 26th of August, 1867, it is found that the actual area of the odd-numbered sections within the place limits of the Sioux City road, excluding odd-numbered sections within the conflicting place limits of the two roads, contained only 247,476.85 acres; and the actual area within the conflicting place limits of the two roads, according to the same diagram, was 70,705.29 acres." This was not strictly correct. The diagram referred to was prepared in the Department of the Interior, but it was based on the original survey made and furnished by the railroad company. Other sentences in the same connection are subject to the like criticism. But this inaccuracy of statement does not affect in any degree the grounds upon which the court reached the conclusion that the diagram of 1867 should not control, and that the measurement and diagram of 1887 should be taken as the basis for determining the area of the odd-numbered sections within place limits.

160 U. S.

None of the other matters mentioned in the petition for a rehearing require special notice. The views therein presented were fully considered by the court before the original opinion was filed. The point now pressed by counsel as to errors in the matter of addition is immaterial, even if it be well taken; for, whatever the excess in the quantity of land received by the railroad company, the result, in the present case, will be the same as stated in the opinion, namely, that the railroad company is not entitled to any of the lands here in dispute, whatever may be the aggregate quantity of acres.

The application for rehearing is denied.

STATE OF MISSOURI, Complainant, 688

v.

STATE OF IOWA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 688-692).

Boundary line between two states.

This court appoints commissioners to find and redesignate with proper and durable monuments portions of a boundary line between two states, heretofore marked under a decree of this court, which have since become obliterated, and directs the expenses, including pay for the commissioners, to be paid by such states equally.

[No. 10, Original.]

Submitted December 17, 1895. Decided February 3, 1896.

ORIGINAL SUIT IN EQUITY by the State of Missouri, complainant, against the State of Iowa, defendant, to ascertain and establish the northern boundary line of the state of Missouri, it being the boundary line between the complainant and the defendant, and for further relief. Relief granted.

The following are the pleadings, etc., in this case:

Complaint.

In the Supreme Court of the United States of America, in Vacation, 1895.

THE STATE OF MISSOURI, Complainant,
v.
THE STATE OF IOWA, Respondent.

R. F. Walker, Attorney General of the state of Missouri, acting in accordance with the provisions of an act of the general assembly of said state approved March 16, 1895, and under the direction of the governor thereof, NOTE.—As to judicial settlement of state boundaries, see note to Nebraska v. Iowa, 36: 798.

respectfully states that heretofore, to wit, on the 19th day of July, A. D. 1820, the people living in the territory of Missouri, in pursuance of an act of the Congress of the United States of America, approved March 6, A. D. 1820, by their representatives in convention assembled, did organize, form, and establish a free and independent state by the name of the state of Missouri, and for the government thereof did adopt a Constitution in which are described the following boundaries of said state:

"Beginning in the middle of the Mississippi river, on the parallel of 36° of north latitude; thence west along the said parallel of latitude to the St. Francois river; thence up and following the course of that river in the middle of the main channel thereof to the parallel of latitude of 36° 30'; thence west along the same to a point where the said parallel is intersected by a meridian line passing through the middle of the mouth of the Kansas river, where the same empties into the Missouri river; thence from the point aforesaid north along the said meridian line to the intersection of the parallel of latitude which passes through the rapids of the river Des Moines, making said line correspond with the Indian boundary line; thence east from the point of intersection last aforesaid along the said parallel of latitude to the middle of the channel of the main fork of the said river Des Moines; thence down along the middle of the main channel of the said river Des Moines to the mouth of the same, where it empties into the Mississippi river; thence due east to the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi river; thence down and following the course of the Mississippi river in the middle of the main channel thereof to the place of beginning."

That said Constitution, with the foregoing description of the boundaries prescribing the territorial limits of the said state of Missouri, was submitted to the Congress of the United States of America and by a resolution of that body approved March 2, A. D. 1821; that the said state of Missouri, with the boundaries as above set forth, was admitted into the Federal Union as an independent sovereign state; and the President of the United States of America, by his proclamation dated August 10, A. D. 1821, in pursuance of the said resolution of the Congress of the United States of America, did announce the fact of such compliance, and thereupon the admission of the said state of Missouri into the Union as one of the sovereign states aforesaid became complete.

That by the action of the legislature of the state of Missouri in the manner prescribed by the Constitution thereof for altering or amending the same, and with the assent of the Congress of the United States of America as evidenced by an act of that body approved June 7, A. D. 1836, the boundaries of the state of Missouri were in that year so altered and extended as to include all the tract of land lying on the north side of the Missouri river and west of the original western boundary of the said state, so that the said addition to the state of Missouri is bounded on the west and south by the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river, and on the north by the original northern boundary line of said state when the same is continued in a right line due west to the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river.

And the said complainant states that by virtue of the Constitution of the state of Missouri aforesaid, the said resolution of Congress admitting the said state into the Union, the said amendment to said Constitution, and the said act of Congress of June 7, 1836, A. D., sanctioning and approving the said amendment, as well as that of each Constitution that has heretofore been adopted by the state of Missouri, including the organic law now in force in said state, to wit, the Constitution adopted in said state in 1875, the true and lawful boundary of the state of Missouri is the parallel of latitude which passes through the rapids of the river Des Moines, making the said parallel of latitude correspond with the "Indian boundary line" established, marked, and defined by a survey made by one John C. Sullivan in the year 1816 under the direction and authority of the United States government, which said Indian boundary line extends from the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river on the west to the middle of the channel of the main fork of the said river Des Moines; thence down along the middle of the main channel of the said river Des Moines to the mouth of the same, where it empties into the Mississippi river; thence due east to the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi river; that by virtue of said Constitution and laws, including the Constitution and laws now in force in the said state of Missouri, said state is entitled to the possession, jurisdiction, and sovereignty over all the territory included within the said boundary and south of said northern boundary as above described, and that said state of Missouri has of right all of the lawful power and authority to possess, enjoy, and exercise full jurisdiction and sovereignty within and over the said territory which an independent state could or can exercise while a member of the United States.

Complainant states that the said state of Missouri has constantly held possession of all said territory, and has exercised jurisdiction and sovereignty over the same until hindered and disturbed therein as hereinafter set forth.

Complainant states that some time in the year 1846 the people living within the territory lying north of the said state of Missouri and west of the Mississippi river organized a state government for themselves and assumed the name of the "state of Iowa," which state was afterwards by the Congress of the United States of America admitted into the Federal Union as a sovereign and independent state upon an equal footing with the original states and with certain territorial limits, the southern boundary of which was made identical with the northern boundary of the state of Missouri.

Complainant states that since the organization of the government of the state of Iowa and the admission of the said state into the Union as aforesaid, said state has claimed to have jurisdiction and sovereignty, and is attempting to exercise the same over a part of the territory lying south of the northern boundary of the state of Missouri as above set forth; that the said state of Iowa has taken actual possession of a part of the territory of the state of Missouri lying in the county of Mercer, in the state of Missouri, and south of the northern boundary line of said state between the said county of Mercer, in the state of Missouri, and the county of Decatur, in the state of Iowa, and the said state of Iowa is attempting through her officials to administer her laws in the said county of Mercer, in the state of Missouri, and is claiming, asserting, and attempting to exercise sovereignty over that portion of the said county of Mercer lying south of the said state line and between the 50th and 55th mile posts heretofore legally established along said northern boundary line; that said state of Iowa has obstructed and hindered, and is still obstructing and hindering, the officers of the state of Missouri and the courts thereof, from executing and administering the laws of the said state of Missouri within said territory and south of said northern boundary line of the said state of Missouri and between the points before mentioned; that the said state of Iowa in so wrongfully claiming and asserting jurisdiction over a part of said territory lying south of the northern boundary line of the said state of Missouri is hindering said state of Missouri in the administration of her laws.

Complainant states that by a proceeding instituted in the Supreme Court of the United States at its January term, 1849, by the state of Missouri against the state of Iowa, and a like proceeding instituted at the same time in the same court by the state of Iowa against the state of Missouri to settle a controversy that had then arisen between the two said states respecting the true location of the line dividing them, it was agreed by said court, after an examination of all the facts, that said boundary line was and should be identical with the line known as the "Indian boundary line," which had, as aforesaid, been run, established, and defined by the survey made under the authority of the United States government by said John C. Sullivan in the year 1816; that under the provisions of said decree H. B. Henderson and R. W. Wells were by said court named as commissioners to find and remark said boundary line between said states as established by said John C. Sullivan; that said R. W. Wells subsequently resigned, and one W. G. Minor was appointed in his stead; that said commissioners proceeded upon their appointment to find and remark with permanent and durable monuments said boundary line between said states as established by said Sullivan as aforesaid, and at the December term, 1850, of said court, formally reported their finding in regard thereto; that thereupon the said Supreme Court of the United States decreed that said Sullivan's line so surveyed and remarked by said commissioners was and should constitute the true boundary line between the said states of Missouri and Iowa; that said boundary line so marked out by said Sullivan, remarked by said commissioners, and decreed to be the boundary line between said states by the said Supreme Court is the line now asserted and held to be the boundary line between said states by the said state of Missouri; that the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the said state of Missouri have been exercised over all of said territory lying south of said boundary line except when hindered and prevented by said state of Iowa and her citizens.

Complainant states that it is highly important to the states of Iowa and Missouri that the question of boundary should be speedily and finally settled; that heretofore the peace of the people of the states of Missouri and Iowa, especially in the county of Mercer, in the former, and the county of Decatur, in the latter, have been seriously disturbed in consequence of frequent conflicts of jurisdiction arising from differences of opinion as to the location of the said state line between said counties.

Complainant further states that the state of Missouri has no adequate relief at law, and, as the controversy herein involves questions of jurisdiction and sovereignty, it is respectfully prayed that the state of Iowa may be made a defendant in this proceeding, and that she may be permitted to answer the matters and things herein set forth, and upon a final hearing that the northern boundary line of the state of Missouri, it being the boundary line between the complainant and defendant, be by the order and decree of this court ascertained and established; that the rights of possession, jurisdiction, and sovereignty of the state of Missouri to all the territory south of the line heretofore marked and run out by said J. C. Sullivan in 1816, remarked by the commissioners heretofore named in 1850, and approved by the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered aforesaid, be restored to said state of Missouri, and that said state of Missouri be quieted in her title thereto, and the defendant, the state of Iowa, be forever enjoined and restrained from disturbing the said state of Missouri, her officers and her citizens, in the full enjoyment and possession of the territory lying south of said line, and that such other and further relief may be granted as the nature of the case may require.

Mr. R. F. WALKER,
Attorney General of Missouri,
for Complainant.

Answer of Respondent.

Comes now the state of Iowa, by Milton Remley, its attorney general, and, answering the bill of complainant herein, respectfully states that the respondent admits all the allegations of said bill with reference to the boundary of the state of Missouri, complainant as aforesaid, so far as the same is material to the controversy set forth in said bill, and especially admits that the state of Iowa lies adjacent to and immediately north of the said state of Missouri, complainant herein, and the north line of said complainant is the south line of the state of Iowa.

The said respondent avers, however, that the southern boundary line of the state of Iowa as fixed and determined by its Constitution is the northern boundary line of the state of Missouri, complainant herein, as established by the Constitution of the said state of Missouri adopted June 12, 1820.

The said respondent further admits that in a suit brought by the state of Missouri against the state of Iowa in this court a decree was entered determining and establishing the true boundary line between the said complainant and the said respondent states as therein set forth, adopting and approving and decreeing to be the true line, the line retraced, surveyed, and marked by the commissioners of this court, H. B. Hendershot and W. G. Minor.

Said respondent denies that it has, by its officers or in any manner whatsoever, exercised jurisdiction and sovereignty, or attempted so to do, over any part of the territory of the state of Missouri, but has claimed jurisdiction and sovereignty over the territory lying north of said line thus surveyed, marked, determined, and established by the commissioners of this court and the decree of this court in said case.

Said respondent admits that between the 50th and 55th mile post a controversy has arisen as to the exact location of the true line thus found and established, and, further, it is desirable that the question of the true line should be speedily and finally settled, and that the peace of the people of Decatur county, in the state of Iowa, and Mercer county, in the state of Missouri, has been seriously disturbed in consequence of the conflict of jurisdiction arising from the difference of opinion as to the true location of the state line, but respondent avers that the state of Missouri attempts to exercise jurisdiction north of the true line and within the jurisdiction of the state of Iowa, as hereinbefore stated.

Respondent further avers that the 52d mile post, set as a mark of the true line between said states by the said commissioners, has been destroyed, but the bearing trees still exist, and the location of said post may easily be determined. The 53d is not to be found nor the bearing trees thereof, and the differences arising between the two states and the people thereof is because of that fact, but any uncertainty or dispute in regard to the true line extends no further than 2 miles in each direction east and west of said 52d mile post.

Said respondent, with the view to have an ultimate and final decision of the controversy, prays that this answer may also be treated as a cross bill, and joins in the prayer of said complainant that the said boundary line between said complainant and respondent be by the order and decree of this court ascertained and established, and to that end that a commission be appointed, in such manner as to this court shall be deemed proper, to retrace the line traced and marked by the commission of this court in 1850 and as set forth in the decree of this court in the case of the State of Missouri v. the State of Iowa, as aforesaid, and that such retracing of such line thus found be by such commissioners marked with fixed and enduring monuments, that the title to the state of Iowa in and to all land or territory north of the line thus found and marked be forever quieted in the said respondent, and for such other and further relief as equity and good conscience may require.

MR. MILTON REMLEY,
Attorney General of Iowa,
for Respondent.

Replication.

Complainant, for his reply to respondent's answer herein, states that it is true, as heretofore alleged in complainant's petition heretofore filed in this cause, that the officers of the state of Iowa are exercising jurisdiction over territory lying south of the boundary line between the states of Missouri and Iowa.

Complainant, for further reply to respondent's answer herein, states that it is necessary, in order that conflicts of jurisdiction should be avoided between said states, that the true boundary line, as heretofore established under a decree of this court by Hendershot and Minor, in 1850, should be re-established and relocated, and to this end it is asked that the court may enter a decree relocating and re-establishing said line, and that such other and further orders may be made herein as are necessary to effect the same.

R. F. WALKER,
Attorney General of Missouri,
for Complainant.

Stipulation.

It is hereby agreed that the above-entitled cause may be submitted to the court on the petition, answer, and reply of the parties hereto, and, if to the court it seems proper, that a commission of two civil engineers or surveyors may be appointed to retrace the line established and decreed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the State of Missouri v. the State of Iowa, one of such commissioners to be appointed by the state of Missouri and one by the state of Iowa, and, if the parties are unable to agree, that they may appoint a third; that such commission shall proceed without unnecessary delay and retrace the line as run and located by Hendershot and Minor in 1850, between the 50th and 55th mile posts on said line, beginning and ending the survey at such points as may be necessary to ascertain the true original line between said mile posts, and, having found said true line, to mark the same by plain and enduring monuments and make report of their said retracing and survey of said line to this court.

Witness our hands this 16th day of December, 1895.

R. F. WALKER,
Attorney General of the State of Missouri.
MILTON REMLEY,
Attorney General of the State of Iowa.

Mr. R. F. Walker, Attorney General of Missouri, for complainant.

Mr. Milton Remley, Attorney General of Iowa, for respondent.

The following decree was ordered:

*This cause coming on to be heard on [691 the original bill filed herein by the state of Missouri against the state of Iowa, the answer thereto by the state of Iowa, and the reply to said answer by the state of Missouri, and the pleadings and stipulations filed herein by counsel for the respective parties having been duly considered, and the decrees heretofore rendered by this court on February 13, 1849, and on January 3, 1851, with the report of commissioners forming part thereof, in a cause then pending before this court between the said states of Missouri and Iowa in regard to the same boundary line now in controversy having been examined:

It is thereupon, this 3d day of February, A. D. 1896, ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the true and proper northern boundary line of the state of Missouri and the true and proper southern boundary line of the state of Iowa is the line run, located, marked, and defined by Hendershott and Minor, commissioners of this court, under the order and decree of this court, as set forth in their report annexed to said decree of January 3, 1851. And it appearing further to the court that the proper boundary line between said states, run, located, and established by Hendershott and Minor, as aforesaid, has, between the 50th and 55th mile posts on the same, become obliterated, and that the monuments originally placed thereon have been destroyed: therefore it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that James Harding of the state of Missouri, Peter Dey of the state of Iowa, and Dwight C. Morgan of the state of Illinois, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners to find and remark with proper and durable monuments such portions of said line so run, marked, and located by Hendershott and Minor as have become obliterated, especially between the 50th and 55th mile posts on the same, and that they begin and end such survey at such points along said line as will enable them to definitely relocate and redesignate the same.

It is further ordered that the clerk of this court at once forward to the chief magistrate of each of said states and to each of the commissloners designated by this decree a copy of said decree duly authenticated, and that said commissioners *request the co-operation and assistance of the state authorities in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by this decree, and proceed with all convenient speed to discharge their duty in relocating and remarking such portions of said line as have become obliterated, as herein directed, and make their report thereof and of their proceedings in the premises to this court on or before the 1st day of May, 1896, together with a complete bill of costs and charges annexed.

And it is further ordered that, should either of said commissioners die or refuse to act or be unable to perform the duties required by this decree, while the court is not in session, the Chief Justice is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint another commissioner to supply the vacancy, and he is authorized to act on such information in the premises as may be satisfactory to himself.

It is further ordered that all costs of this proceeding, including not exceeding $10 per day for each commissioner, and the other costs incident to the marking and establishment of this line, shall be paid by the states of Missouri and Iowa equally.

160 U. S.

587

END OF REPORTED CASES IN VOL. 160

CASES

ARGUED AND DECIDED

IN THE

SUPREME COURT

OF THE

UNITED STATES

IN

OCTOBER TERM, 1895.

Vol. 161.

REFERENCE TABLE

OF SUCH CASES

DECIDED IN U. S. SUPREME COURT,

OCTOBER TERM, 1895,

AND REPORTED HEREIN,

VOL. 161.

AS ALSO APPEAR IN OFFICIAL REPORTER'S EDITION.

Off. Rep. 161 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 161 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
1-2	Chemical Nat. Bank v. Hartford		108-110	Beebe v. United States . . .	636
	Deposit Co.	595	110-113	" " " . . .	637
2-4	" " " . . .	596	113-115	" " " . . .	638
4-7	" " " . . .	597	115	Carey v. Houston & T. O. R. Co.	638
7-10	" " " . . .	598	116-118	" " " . . .	639
10	" " " . . .	599	118-121	" " " . . .	640
10-12	Belknap v. Schild . . .	599	121-124	" " " . . .	641
12-15	" " " . . .	600	124-127	" " " . . .	642
15-18	" " " . . .	601	127-130	" " " . . .	643
18-20	" " " . . .	602	130-133	" " " . . .	644
20-23	" " " . . .	603	133	" " " . . .	645
23-26	" " " . . .	604	184	Bank of Memphis v. Tennessee,
26-29	" " " . . .	605		Memphis
29-31	Rosen v. United States . . .	606		Bank of Commerce v. Tennes-
31-34	" " " . . .	607		see, Shelby County . . .	645
34-37	" " " . . .	608	134-136	" " " . . .	646
37-40	" " " . . .	609	136-141	" " " . . .	647
40-43	" " " . . .	610	141-144	" " " . . .	648
43-46	" " " . . .	611	144-147	" " " . . .	649
46-49	" " " . . .	612	147-149	" " " . . .	650
49-51	" " " . . .	613	149	Shelby County v. Union & Plant-
52	Re Emblen	613		ers' Bank	650
52-54	" " " . . .	614	150-153	" " " . . .	652
55-57	" " " . . .	616	153-155	" " " . . .	653
57-58	Harrison v. Fortlage . . .	616	155-158	" " " . . .	654
58-59	" " " . . .	617	158-161	" " " . . .	655
63-64	" " " . . .	618	161-164	Mercantile Bank v. Tennessee,
64-65	" " " . . .	619		Memphis	656
65-66	France v. Connor . . .	619	164-167	" " " . . .	657
66-69	" " " . . .	620	167-170	" " " . . .	658
69-72	" " " . . .	621	170-172	" " " . . .	659
72-75	Ball v. Halzell	622	172-173	" " " . . .	660
77-78	" " " . . .	623	174-175	Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v.
78-81	" " " . . .	624		Tennessee, Memphis . . .	660
81-84	" " " . . .	625	175-178	" " " . . .	661
84-85	" " " . . .	626	178-181	" " " . . .	662
85-87	Smith v. United States . . .	626	181-183	" " " . . .	663
87-90	" " " . . .	627	183-186	" " " . . .	664
90	" " " . . .	628	186	Memphis City Bank v. Tennessee,
91-92	Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan	628		Memphis	664
92-95	" " " . . .	629	187-188	" " " . . .	665
95	" " " . . .	630	188-191	" " " . . .	666
96-98	Fishback v. Western U. Teleg. Co.	630	191-193	" " " . . .	667
98-101	" " " . . .	631	193-194	Planters' F. & M. Ins. Co. v.
101	" " " . . .	632		Tennessee, Memphis . . .	667
101	Fishback v. Pacific Express Co.	632	194-197	" " " . . .	668
101-103	Board of Flour Inspectors v.		197-198	" " " . . .	669
	Glover	632	198-199	Home Insurance & T. Co. v.
103	" " " . . .	633		Tennessee, Memphis . . .	669
104-105	Beebe v. United States . . .	633	199-200	" " " . . .	670
105-108	" " " . . .	634	200	Home Ins. & T. Co. v. Tennessee	670
161 U. S.					591

REFERENCE TABLE.

Off. Rep. 161 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 161 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
200-201	District of Columbia v. Lyon	670	350 Douglas v. Wallace -	729
201-204	" " "	671	350-352 Cochran v. Blout . . .	729
204-207	" " "	672	352-354 " " . . .	730
207-208	" " "	673	345-355 " " . . .	731
208-209	Ainsa v. United States . . .	673	355-357 Smith v. McKay . . .	731
209-212	" " " . . .	674	357-359 " " . . .	732
212-215	" " " . . .	675	359 Graves v. Saline County . . .	732
215-218	" " " . . .	676	360-362 " " " . . .	733
218-221	" " " . . .	677	362-365 " " " . . .	734
221-224	" " " . . .	678	365-368 " " " . . .	735
224-227	" " " . . .	679	368-370 " " " . . .	736
227-230	" " " . . .	680	370-373 " " " . . .	737
230-233	" " " . . .	681	373-375 " " " . . .	738
233-234	" " " . . .	682	375 Spalding v. Mason . . .	738
235-236	Durham v. Seymour . . .	682	375-377 " " . . .	739
236-238	" " " . . .	683	377-380 " " . . .	740
238-240	" " " . . .	684	380-383 " " . . .	741
240	Baltzer v. North Carolina (No. 1.)	684	383-386 " " . . .	742
241	" " " " "	685	386-389 " " . . .	743
241-244	" " " " "	686	389-392 " " . . .	744
244-246	" " " " "	687	392-395 " " . . .	745
246-247	Baltzer v. North Carolina (No. 2.)	687	395-397 " " . . .	746
247-249	Lynch v. Murphy . . .	688	397 Hansen v. Boyd . . .	746
249-253	" " " . . .	689	398-401 " " . . .	747
253-255	" " " . . .	690	401-404 " " . . .	748
255-256	" " " . . .	691	404-407 " " . . .	749
256	Hamilton v. Brown . . .	691	407-410 " " . . .	750
257	" " " . . .	692	410-412 " " . . .	751
257-258	" " " . . .	693	412 United States v. Stanford . . .	751
258-261	" " " . . .	694	413 " " . . .	752
261-264	" " " . . .	695	413-415 " " . . .	753
264-267	" " " . . .	696	415-418 " " . . .	754
267-270	" " " . . .	697	418-421 " " . . .	755
270-273	" " " . . .	698	421-423 " " . . .	756
273-275	" " " . . .	699	423-426 " " . . .	757
275-278	Davis v. Elmira Sav. Bank . . .	700	426-429 " " . . .	758
278-285	" " " " "	701	429-432 " " . . .	759
285-288	" " " " "	702	432-434 " " . . .	760
288-290	" " " " "	703	434 Evansville v. Dennett . . .	760
291	Leighton v. United States . . .	703	435-437 " " . . .	761
291-293	" " " " "	704	437-440 " " . . .	762
293-296	" " " " "	705	440-443 " " . . .	763
296-297	" " " " "	706	443-446 " " . . .	764
297-299	Marks v. United States . . .	706	446 " " . . .	765
299-302	" " " " "	707	446-449 Swearingen v. United States . . .	765
302-305	" " " " "	708	449-451 " " . . .	766
305-306	" " " " "	709	451 Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien . . .	766
306-307	Durland v. United States . . .	709	452 " " " . . .	767
307-310	" " " " "	710	452-453 " " " . . .	768
310-313	" " " " "	711	453-454 " " " . . .	769
313-315	" " " " "	712	454-457 " " " . . .	770
316	Washington Gaslight Co. v. Dis-	712	457-458 " " " . . .	771
316-317	trict of Columbia . . .	712	459 The Delaware . . .	771
317-318	" " " " "	713	460-463 " " . . .	772
318-321	" " " " "	714	463-464 " " . . .	773
321-322	" " " " "	715	464-467 " " . . .	774
322-324	" " " " "	716	467-470 " " . . .	775
324-327	" " " " "	717	470-473 " " . . .	776
327-330	" " " " "	718	473-474 " " . . .	777
330-333	" " " " "	719	475 United States v. Zucker . . .	777
333	" " " " "	720	475-478 " " " . . .	778
334	Schroeder v. Young . . .	721	478-481 " " " . . .	779
334-335	" " " " "	721	481-482 " " " . . .	780
335-336	" " " " "	722	483 Spalding v. Vilas . . .	780
336-339	" " " " "	723	484-486 " " . . .	781
339-342	" " " " "	724	486-489 " " . . .	782
342-345	" " " " "	725	489-492 " " . . .	783
345	" " " " "	726	492-495 " " . . .	784
345-347	" " " " "	727	495-498 " " . . .	785
347-350	Douglas v. Wallace . . .	727	498-499 " " . . .	786
350	" " " " "	728	499 Spalding v. Dickinson . . .	786

REFERENCE TABLE.

Off. Rep. 161 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 161 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
500	Matthews v. United States	786	599-601	Brown v. Walker	822
500-502	"	787	601-604	"	823
502	Ornelas v. Ruiz	787	604-607	"	824
503-506	"	788	607-610	"	825
506-509	"	789	610-613	"	826
509-512	"	790	613-616	"	827
512	"	791	616-619	"	828
513-514	Dushane v. Beall	791	619-622	"	829
514-517	"	792	622-624	"	830
517-518	"	793	624-627	"	831
519-520	Geer v. Connecticut	793	627-630	"	832
520-523	"	794	630-633	"	833
523-525	"	795	633-636	"	834
525-528	"	796	636-638	"	835
528-531	"	797	639	Southworth v. United States	835
531-534	"	798	639-642	"	836
534-537	"	799	642	"	837
537-540	"	800	642-645	{ Owens v. McCloskey
540-543	"	801		{ "Owens v. Henry"	837
543-544	"	802	645-646	"	838
545-546	St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James	802	646	Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co.	838
546-548	"	803	648-651	"	839
548-551	"	804	651-653	"	840
551-554	"	805	659-660	"	842
554-557	"	806	660-662	"	843
557-560	"	807	662-665	"	844
560-563	"	808	665-668	"	845
563-566	"	809	668-671	"	846
566-569	"	810	671-674	"	847
569-571	"	811	674-677	"	848
571-572	"	812	677	"	849
573-574	Gildersleeve v. New Mexico Min- ing Co.	812	677-679	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ken- tucky	849
574-577	"	813	679-682	"	850
577-580	"	814	682-683	"	851
580-582	"	815	683-685	"	853
583-585	Post v. United States	816	685-688	"	854
585-587	"	817	688-690	"	855
588	Rouse v. Hornsby	817	690-693	"	856
588-591	"	818	693-696	"	857
591	"	819	696-699	"	858
591-593	Brown v. Walker	819	699-702	"	859
593-596	"	820	702-704	"	860
596-599	"	821

161 U. S.

593

THE DECISIONS
OF THE
Supreme Court of the United States
AT
OCTOBER TERM, 1895.

[Authenticated copy of opinion record strictly followed, except as to such reference words and figures as are inclosed in brackets.]

CHEMICAL NATIONAL BANK of Chicago, Plff. in Err.,
v.

HARTFORD DEPOSIT COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 1-10.)

Receiver for national bank—corporate existence—Federal question.

1. The appointment of a receiver for a national bank does not, in itself, put an end to the corporate existence of the bank so as to prevent the rendition of a judgment against it.
2. A national bank survives for the purpose of the discharge of its liabilities and the distribution of its assets after its insolvency is declared.
3. The decision of a state court that a claim against a national bank was an existing demand at the time it suspended does not involve a Federal question.

[No. 735.]

Submitted January 7, 1896. Decided February 3, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the Appellate Court for the First District of Illinois which affirmed the judgment of the Superior Court of Cook County as to the receiver, but reversed it as to the Chemical National Bank, and entered judgment for the sum of $9,000, in an action against the bank and its receiver to recover damages for a failure to pay rent. Affirmed.

See same case below, 58 Ill. App. 256, 156 Ill. 522.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the Hartford Deposit Company against the Chemical National Bank of Chicago and the receiver of the bank in the superior court of Cook county to recover damages for a failure to pay rent *alleged to be due, under a written [2] lease, from August 1, 1893, to April 30, 1894. The cause was submitted to the court for trial on a stipulation as to the facts, of which the lease formed a part; the issues were found in favor of defendants and judgment was rendered accordingly. Plaintiff took the case to the appellate court for the first district of Illinois, which affirmed the judgment as to the receiver, but reversed it as to the Chemical National Bank, and entered judgment for the sum of $9,000. 58 Ill. App. 256. An appeal was prosecuted to the supreme court of Illinois and the judgment of the appellate court affirmed. 156 Ill. 522. This writ of error was thereupon brought.

The facts were thus stated by the supreme court:

"The Chemical National Bank of Chicago entered into a lease, dated November 18, 1892, with the Hartford Deposit Company, of a banking office of a certain building owned by the said Hartford Deposit Company. In accordance with its terms the bank paid $2,500 on the delivery of said lease. The term was for a period of five years, from May 1, 1893, at an annual rental of $12,000, payable in equal monthly instalments of $1,000, in advance, exclusive of and in addition to said first payment of $2,500. The bank entered into and took possession of said premises on May 1, 1893, the first day of said term, and the first instalment of rent fell due and was payable on that day. This instalment was not paid when due, nor had it, or any part of it, been paid when,

NOTE.—As to liability of banks for collection; failure of collecting banks; liability of receiver or assignee of bank; altered check or draft,—see note to Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 37: 363.

As to powers and duties of receivers, see note to Davis v. Gray, 21: 447.

As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question; what constitutes Federal question,—see note to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37: 267.

on May 9, 1893, the bank became insolvent and a national bank examiner took possession of its assets and of said premises. On July 21 a receiver was duly appointed, and on July 27 he notified the Hartford Deposit Company of his election to terminate said lease after July 31, 1893, so far as he, as receiver, was concerned. On the same day, —namely, July 27, —said receiver paid to the Hartford Deposit Company the sum of $2,709.68, which was, as agreed, the ratable amount of rent due for the period to July 31, inclusive. No other or further rent was paid under said lease by any other person or at any other time. The premises remained vacant until May 1, 1894, when they were relet at a reduced rental."

Mr. Hiram T. Gilbert, for plaintiff in error:

The appointment of a receiver of a national banking association by the comptroller of the currency on account of its insolvency amounts, for all practical purposes, to the dissolution of such association.

Fidelity S. D. & T. Co. v. Armstrong, 35 Fed. Rep. 567; First Nat. Bank v. National Pahquioque Bank, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 383 (20: 840); United States v. Knox, 111 U. S. 784 (28: 603); U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5141, 5151, 5191, 5195, 5201, 5205, 5234, 5235, 5236, 5239; Act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 63, chap. 156, § 1).

A claim, to be entitled to be proved up and paid by dividends out of the assets of a national banking association in the hands of a receiver, must be one which, at the date of the suspension of the association, was a then existing demand, and the claim for rent under this lease is not such a demand.

Riggin v. Magwire, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 549 (21: 232); French v. Morse, 2 Gray, 111, 115; Savory v. Stocking, 4 Cush. 607; Deane v. Caldwell, 127 Mass. 242; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 59 Fed. Rep. 372, 16 U. S. App. 465, 28 L. R. A. 231.

After the appointment by the comptroller of the currency of a receiver of a national banking association, judgment cannot be rendered against such association, or its receiver, for any claim which, at the date of the bank's suspension, was not an existing demand.

First Nat. Bank v. National Pahquioque Bank, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 383 (20: 840); United States v. Knox, 111 U. S. 784 (28: 603); U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5235, 5236.

Mr. Charles H. Baldwin, for defendant in error:

A lessee who during the term renders the performance of his part of the contract impossible, whether by his insolvency or otherwise, is not thereby discharged from his obligations incurred under the express covenants of the lease.

Re Orne, 12 Fed. Rep. 779; Martin v. Black, 9 Paige, 641, 38 Am. Dec. 574; Re Washburn, 11 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 63; Beale v. Thompson, 3 Bos. & P. 420; Paradine v. Jane, Aleyn, 26; Mills v. Auriol, 1 H. Bl. 433, 4 T. R. 94, Smith, Lead. Cas. (8th ed.) 1255; Boot v. Wilson, 8 East, 318; Marks v. Upton, 7 T. R. 305; Fisher v. Milliken, 8 Pa. 120, 49 Am. Dec. 497; Wall v. Hinds, 4 Gray, 256, 64 Am. Dec. 64; Thursby v. Plant, 1 Saund. 240.

596

The insolvency of a national bank and appointment of a receiver by the comptroller of the currency do not dissolve the corporation. It remains liable on all its obligations legally entered into before insolvency.

Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54 (26: 693); First Nat. Bank v. National Pahquioque Bank, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 388 (20: 840); New York Security Bank v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, 2 Hun, 287; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Bailey, 12 Blatchf. 480; Jones v. Bank of Leadville, 10 Colo. 464; Ordway v. Central Nat. Bank, 47 Md. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 455; United States v. Knox, 111 U. S. 787 (28: 604).

There is no language in the national bank act which, directly or by implication, can relieve an insolvent national bank from its obligations incurred under an unexpired lease entered into before insolvency.

Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 6 Biss. 301; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 48 (30: 871); Ex parte Houghton, 1 Low. Dec. 554; U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5136, 5151, 5220-5222, 5228, 5234, 5236; U. S. Rev. Stat. Supp. chap. 156, §§ 1, 3; Act. of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 63, chap. 156).

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It is not claimed that the express covenant to pay rent was released by the insolvency of the lessee merely; nor that the election of the receiver not to accept the lease had any effect on the contract between the lessor and the lessee; nor that the lessor had done anything itself to terminate its rights under the lease. But it is argued that no judgment could be rendered against the bank because the appointment [4] of a receiver amounted to its dissolution, and because the rent in question was not a demand existing at the date of the bank's suspension and therefore not a claim entitled to be proved up and paid out of the assets of the bank, or carried into judgment. The state courts ruled both branches of this contention adversely to plaintiff in error.

Granting that, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, suits cannot be maintained and judgments rendered against corporations whose chartered existence has terminated, it is not pretended in this case that that event had taken place by lapse of time, by judicial proceedings, or otherwise, unless, as is insisted, the appointment of a receiver in itself put an end to the bank as a corporate entity.

The general rule is that the legal existence of a corporation cannot be cut short in this way, and we can find nothing in the statutes in relation to insolvent national banks which gives that effect to such an appointment or justifies any distinction in that regard as between them and other insolvent corporations.

By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5136, it is provided that every national bank, duly incorporated, shall have succession for the period of twenty years from its organization "unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association, or by the act of its shareholders owning two thirds of its stock, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law."

A receiver may be appointed upon the occurrence of the particular defaults enumerated in §§ 5141, 5151, 5191, 5195, 5201, and 5205, not in question here.

Section 5151 provides: "The shareholders of every national banking association shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares."

Sections 5220 and 5221 provide for the voluntary dissolution of these associations, and §§ 5] 5226 and 5227 for the protest *of their circulating notes on failure to redeem and the appointment of a special agent to ascertain the fact.

Sections 5228, 5234, 5236, and 5239 are as follows:—

"Sec. 5228. After a default on the part of an association to pay any of its circulating notes has been ascertained by the comptroller, and notice thereof has been given by him to the association, it shall not be lawful for the association suffering the same to pay out any of its notes, discount any notes or bills, or otherwise prosecute the business of banking, except to receive and safely keep money belonging to it, and to deliver special deposits."

"Sec. 5234. On becoming satisfied, as specified in §§ 5226 and 5227, that any association has refused to pay its circulating notes as therein mentioned, and is in default, the comptroller of the currency may forthwith appoint a receiver, and require of him such bond and security as he deems proper. Such receiver, under the direction of the comptroller, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and, upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like order, may sell all the real and personal property of such association, on such terms as the court shall direct; and may, if necessary to pay the debts of such association, enforce the individual liability of the stockholders. Such receiver shall pay over all money so made to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the comptroller, and also make report to the comptroller of all his acts and proceedings."

"Sec. 5236. From time to time, after full provision has been first made for refunding to the United States any deficiency in redeeming the notes of such association, the comptroller shall make a ratable dividend of the money so paid over to him by such receiver on all such claims as may have been proved to his satisfaction or adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction, and, as the proceeds of the assets of such association are paid over to him, shall 6] make further dividends *on all claims previously proved or adjudicated; and the remainder of the proceeds, if any, shall be paid over to the shareholders of such association, or their legal representatives, in proportion to the stock by them respectively held."

"Sec. 5239. If the directors of any national banking association shall knowingly violate, or knowingly permit any of the officers, agents, or servants of the association to violate, any of the provisions of this title, all the rights, privileges, and franchises of the association shall be thereby forfeited. Such violation shall, however, be determined and adjudged by a proper circuit, district, or territorial court of the United States, in a suit brought for that purpose by the comptroller of the currency, in his own name, before the association shall be declared dissolved. And in cases of such violation, every director who participated in or assented to the same shall be held liable in his personal and individual capacity for all damages which the association, its shareholders, or any other person, shall have sustained in consequence of such violation."

On June 30, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 63, chap. 156), Congress passed an act, the 1st section of which provides: "That whenever any national banking association shall be dissolved, and its rights, privileges, and franchises declared forfeited, as prescribed in section fifty-two hundred and thirty-nine of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or whenever any creditor of any national banking association shall have obtained a judgment against it in any court of record, and made application, accompanied by a certificate from the clerk of the court stating that such judgment has been rendered and has remained unpaid for the space of thirty days, or whenever the comptroller shall become satisfied of the insolvency of the national banking association, he may, after due examination of its affairs, in either case, appoint a receiver, who shall proceed to close up such association and enforce the personal liability of the shareholders, as provided in section fifty-two hundred and thirty-four of said statutes."

By the 3d section, whenever any association is placed in the hands of a receiver and the creditors and expenses have been paid and the redemption of the circulating notes of such association *provided for, the shareholders may [7 elect an agent to whom, on filing bond, the remaining assets of the association shall be transferred, and "such agent shall hold, control, and dispose of the assets and property of any association which he may receive as hereinbefore provided for the benefit of the shareholders of such association as they, or a majority of them in value or number of shares, may direct, distributing such assets and property among such shareholders in proportion to the shares held by each; and he may, in his own name or in the name of such association, sue and be sued, and do all other lawful acts and things necessary to finally settle and distribute the assets and property in his hands."

It thus appears that by the terms of the statutes the corporation continues, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver, if its corporate life has not been extinguished by lapse of time, by any provision of its articles, by any action of its stockholders, or by any judgment of forfeiture. The receiver is indeed appointed to close up the association, that is to say, to wind up its business, get in its assets and pay its debts, and, if need be, to enforce the personal liability of its shareholders for all its "contracts, debts, and engagements;" but the corporation lingers while this is being done, and on occasion when the receiver has discharged his duty with the satisfactory results enumerated, and assets remain, an agent may be chosen, who may sue and be sued in the name of the association in the conduct of the final liquidation. Of course, when insolvency is declared, the corporation is incapacitated from doing any new business. It has ceased to be a going concern, but it still survives for the purpose of the discharge of its liabilities and the final distribution of its remaining assets when that has been accomplished. No refinement of construction leads to any other result, and numerous decisions preclude further discussion.

In National Pahquioque Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Conn. 325, 4 Am. Rep. 80, a national bank having failed and a receiver been appointed, the supreme court of errors of Connecticut, in a well-considered opinion, held that the winding up of the corporation as provided did not put an end to its existence so as to affect *the rights of creditors to enforce their claims or determine their validity by suit or otherwise; that there was nothing in the national banking act which justified the claim that the franchise was transferred to the receiver in the authority conferred on him to take possession of the assets; and that the court was unable to discover "by what mode of operation known in the law the proceedings in question can produce that absolute and technical dissolution of a corporation which is produced by a judgment for forfeiture or by a legislative repeal, and bars a suit by a creditor." Judgment was given against the insolvent bank and that judgment affirmed by this court in First Nat. Bank v. National Pahquioque Bank, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 383 [20: 840], where it was said: "None of these proceedings, however, support the theory that the association ceased to exist when the receiver was appointed, nor at any time before the assets of the association are fully administered, and the balance, if any, is paid to the owners of the stock or their legal representatives."

In Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54 [26: 693], it was held that a national bank in voluntary liquidation is not thereby dissolved as a corporation, but may sue and be sued by name for the purpose of winding up its business; and Mr. Justice Matthews, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is to be observed that the sections under which the proceedings took place which, it is claimed, put an end to the corporate existence of the bank, do not refer, in terms, to a dissolution of the corporation, and there is nothing in the language which suggests it, in the technical sense in which it is used here as a defense. The association goes into liquidation and is closed. It is required to give notice that it is closing up its affairs, and, in order to do so completely and effectually, to notify its creditors to present their claims for payment. And the redemption of its bonds given to secure the payment of its circulating notes, by the required deposit of money in the treasury, is limited in its effect to a discharge of the association and its shareholders from all liability upon its circulating notes. The very purpose of the liquidation provided for is to pay the debts of 9]the corporation, that the *remainder of the assets, being reduced to money, may be distributed among the stockholders. That distribution cannot take place, with any show of justice and according to the intent of the law, until all liabilities to creditors have been honestly met and paid. If there are claims made which the directors of the association are not willing to acknowledge as just debts, there is nothing in the statute which is inconsistent with the right of the claimant to obtain a judicial determination of the controversy by process against the association, nor with that of the association to collect by suit debts due to it. It is clearly, we think, the intention of the law that it should continue to exist as a person in law capable of suing and being sued, until its affairs and business are completely settled. The proceeding prescribed by the law seems to resemble, not the technical dissolution of a corporation, without any saving as to the common-law consequences, but rather that of the dissolution of a copartnership, which, nevertheless, continues to subsist for the purpose of liquidation and winding up of its business."

And in Rosenblatt v. Johnston, 104 U. S. 462, 463 [26: 832, 833], Mr. Chief Justice Waite speaking for the court, referring to the assets and property of an insolvent national bank, remarked: "Such property and assets, in legal contemplation, still belong to the bank, though in the hands of a receiver, to be administered under the law. The bank did not cease to exist on the appointment of the receiver. Its corporate capacity continues until its affairs are finally wound up and its assets distributed."

It is further urged that the claim was not an existing demand at the time of the suspension of the bank and could not be proved up for participation in the distribution of the assets. What effect, if any, this might have on the mere recovery of judgment, and the questions often arising in respect of discharges in bankruptcy or insolvency, or of proceedings against insolvent decedent's estates as to the postponement of belated claims to subsequently discovered assets, the state courts did not find it necessary to consider, as they were of opinion that the liability was an existing demand.

The appellate court said: "The lease in [10] question was a lawful contract and engagement for the bank to make. The first monthly instalment of rent was due under it nine days before the bank suspended. By its terms the default that was made by the bank in the non-payment of rent on May 1st gave the right to the appellant to re-enter and terminate the lease. The damages were then matured and could have been at once sued for, or appellant could defer its suit, as it did, until, by a reletting of the premises, the extent of damages had been made certain. That they were unliquidated did not render them contingent. The contingency, default in payment of rent, had happened. After that the damages were a mere matter of calculation." And a similar view was thus expressed by the supreme court: "The money was not paid, and there was then a breach of the contract for which an action might have been maintained, and this occurred nine days before insolvency. There is therefore no foundation for the position of counsel that the claim of appellee was not an existing demand at the time the bank suspended. The amount of damages may not have been as large on the first day of May, 1893, as at a later period, but on that date there was a breach of the contract and a right of action for such breach."

Clearly the conclusion thus reached involved no denial of a title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed under the laws of the United States, and, as already seen, the only Federal question arising was rightly decided.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGE E. BELKNAP ET AL., Appts.,
v.
GEORGE F. SCHILD.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 10-29).

Infringement of patent—officers of the United States—injunction—equity suit.

1. Officers or agents of the United States, although acting under its order, are personally liable to be sued for their own infringement of a patent.
2. Officers and agents of the United States are not exempt from liability for their own infringement of a patent by the fact that it was not used by them for their own benefit, but for the benefit of the United States in a navy yard.
3. An injunction against infringement of a patent by the use of a caisson gate which is a part of a dry dock in a navy yard, put in place by, and the property of, the United States, and used for the public benefit, cannot be granted in an action against officers and agents of the government, as they have no individual interest in the controversy, but the relief is in fact asked against the United States.
4. A recovery of profits for the infringement of a patent cannot be had in a suit in equity against officers and agents of the United States, when the defendants made no profits from the use of plaintiff's invention, but the only profits from the use thereof accrued to the United States. The proper remedy of plaintiff against defendants is an action at law for the damages.

[No. 22.]

Argued January 21, 22, 1895. Decided February 3, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California in favor of the plaintiff,

George F. Schild, against the defendants, George E. Belknap et al., in a suit in equity for infringement of letters patent granted by the United States to the plaintiff for an improvement in caisson gates. Reversed, and case remanded with directions to dismiss without prejudice, etc.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a bill in equity, filed January 20, 1887, in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California, by George Schild against George E. Belknap, Joseph Feaster, Christopher C. Wolcott, and Jesse Diamond, for an infringement of letters patent granted by the United States to the plaintiff on October 23, 1883, for an improvement in caisson gates.

The bill alleged that the defendants, with full knowledge and in violation of the plaintiff's exclusive right, manufactured and used, and intended to continue to use, such caisson gates in the state of California; and that he had brought an action in the same court against the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, and on the trial of that action, and after he had waived other than nominal damages, recovered a verdict in the sum of $1, in August, 1886, and the validity of his patent and the fact of infringement were thereby established.

The bill prayed that the defendants be decreed to account for and pay over to the plaintiff all such gains and profits as *had or [12 might have accrued to them from purchasing or making or using such improved caisson gates; that any further damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendants' infringement be assessed and ordered to be paid; that the defendants be restrained by injunction from making or using caisson gates containing the patented improvement; that the caisson gates containing that improvement and so manufactured or purchased or in any manner obtained by the defendants, and now in their possession, be destroyed or delivered up to the plaintiff; and for further relief.

The defendants filed a plea to the whole bill (called in the record a "plea in abatement"), alleging that the court "ought not to take cognizance of or sustain the aforesaid action," for that the defendant Belknap was a commodore in the United States Navy, and commandant of the United States Navy Yard at Mare Island, California; that the defendants Wolcott, Feaster, and Diamond were, respectively, a

NOTE.—For what patents are granted; when declared void,—see note to Evans v. Eaton, 4:433.

As to patentability of inventions, see notes to Thompson v. Boisselier, 29: 76; and Corning v. Burden, 14: 683.

As to abandonment of invention, see note to Penock v. Dialogue, 7: 327.

As to distinction between inventions of mechanism, articles, or products and processes; when latter patented,—see note to Corning v. Burden, 14: 683.

As to including process and product in same patent; separate patents therefor,—see note to Evans v. Eaton, 4: 433.

As to what reissue may cover, see note to O'Reilly v. Morse, 14: 601.

As to assignment before issuing and reissuing patent; recording; when assignment transfers extended terms,—see note to Gayler v. Wilder, 13: 504.

As to when assignee may sue for infringement; when patentee must; when they must join,—see note to Wilson v. Rousseau, 11: 1141.

As to damages for infringement of patent; treble damages,—see note to Hogg v. Emerson, 13: 824.

As to anticipation of patents; prior patents and publications; application and issue; claims and specifications,—see note to Loggett v. Standard Oil Co. 37: 737.

As to patents for designs, when valid, see note to Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co. 37: 606.

As to what constitutes infringement of patent; similarity of devices; designs; combinations; machines; construction of patent,—see note to Royer v. Coupe, 36: 1073.

civil engineer in the Navy, an assistant naval constructor in the Navy, and an employee of the United States at Mare Island; that the only caisson gate which either of the defendants had any relation with, control over, or use of, within the state of California, was one constructed, manufactured, and used by the government of the United States and for their use and benefit at the navy yard at Mare Island, and was there built by the Union Iron Works, in pursuance of plans and specifications furnished by the Bureau of Yards and Docks,—a board in the naval service of the United States,—and was delivered by the Union Iron Works to the United States, and used by the United States in the dry dock of that navy yard; and that neither the defendants, nor either of them, made or constructed the caisson gate in question, or used it for their own use and benefit, or ever had, or pretended to have, any interest in or claim upon it; but that they only operated and used it as the officers, servants, and employees of the United States, as a part of the navy yard, and for public uses of the United States, in the exercise of their sovereign and constitutional powers.

The Attorney General of the United States, appearing for this purpose only, filed a suggestion (called in the record a “plea to the jurisdiction”) in which he stated that the caisson gate in question was planned and constructed by the United States, and ever since its construction had been in the possession, control, and use of the United States at the navy yard at Mare Island, and was operated at the dry dock in the navy yard for naval purposes and the public defense, in the building and repairing of ships for the Navy of the United States; that the United States, through their officers and agents, charged with the possession, control, and operation of that navy yard, had at all times been in possession, control, and operation of the caisson gate as public property of the United States, for public uses, in the exercise of their sovereign and constitutional powers; and that the defendants, and each of them, never had anything to do with the construction, use, or operation of the gate, or made any claim of right, title, possession, control, or use of it, other than as officers and agents of the United States, and in obedience to orders of the naval department of the government; and therefore, “without submitting the rights of the United States to the jurisdiction of the court, but insisting that the court has no jurisdiction of the controversy, for that the said caisson gate and its use now is and at all times has been the property of the United States,” moved that the bill be dismissed, and all proceedings stayed and set aside.

The case having been submitted to the court upon the plea of the defendants, and the suggestion of the Attorney General, both were overruled.

The defendants, Belknap, Feaster, Wolcott, and Diamond, then filed an answer, admitting the grant of the letters patent, denying the infringement, setting forth affirmatively the matters stated in their former plea, and alleging that neither these defendants nor the United States were parties to the action brought by the plaintiff against the Union Iron works, or estopped by the judgment therein.

A general replication was filed, and evidence was taken, by which it appeared that the validity of the plaintiff's patent, and its infringement by the defendants, were subjects of conflicting testimony; that Mare Island and the works and dock *thereon, including the [14] caisson gate, belonged to the United States, and were held and occupied for them by their officers and employees; that the defendants respectively held the positions stated in their former plea and had no interest in the caisson gate, and nothing to do with it beyond operating it under the direction of the United States; that the gate was built in 1884, without any agreement or license of the plaintiff, by the Union Iron Works under its contract with the United States, and according to plans and specifications furnished by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and Wolcott simply inspected the materials and workmanship, as the work progressed, to see if they were according to the contract; and that the gate had since been used by the United States as part of the dock in the navy yard aforesaid.

After a hearing upon pleadings and proofs, the court made an interlocutory decree adjudging that the patent was valid and had been infringed by the defendants; referring the case to a master to take an account of the number of caisson gates made or used by the defendants, or either of them, in violation of the patent, and also of the gains, profits, and advantages arising or accruing to the defendants or either of them, and of the damages sustained by the plaintiff; and ordering a perpetual injunction against the defendants and each of them, “and their and each of their agents, servants, clerks, and workmen, and all persons claiming or holding under or through them or either of them.”

The master reported that one caisson gate to the dock in the navy yard at Mare Island, for the making and using of which the defendants had been adjudged to have infringed the plaintiff's patent, had been made upon plans furnished by the plaintiff and modified by the government officials, and put in use in 1884; that the cost of this gate was $60,000, and the cost of the cheapest practicable gate, constructed on any other plan known to the defendants, would be at least $100,000, and therefore the gains, profits, and advantages, which had arisen and accrued to the defendants from infringing the plaintiff's patent, amounted to $40,000; and that no damages, in addition to such gains, profits, and advantages, had been proved.

*The court overruled exceptions taken [15] by the defendants to the master's report, confirmed his report, and entered a final decree for the plaintiff for the sum of $40,000, with interest and costs. The defendants appealed to this court.

Mr. Holmes Conrad, Assistant Attorney General, for appellants.

Messrs. J. H. Miller and L. T. Michener for appellee.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

A recapitulation of the principles heretofore affirmed by this court, touching the liability of the United States and of their officers and agents to suit in the judicial tribunals, will go far towards disposing of this case.

It should be premised that our law differs from that of England as to the right of the government to use, without compensation, an invention for which it has granted letters patent.

In England, the grant of a patent for an invention is considered as simply an exercise of the royal prerogative, and not to be construed as precluding the Crown from using the invention at its pleasure; and therefore a petition of right cannot be maintained against the Crown for using a patented invention; although a private person or corporation that has contracted to supply the government with articles embodying the invention may be sued for infringement of the patent. Feather v. Queen, 6 Best & S. 257; Dixon v. London Small Arms Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 130, and L. R. 1 App. Cas. 632.

But, in this country, letters patent for inventions are not granted in the exercise of prerogative, or as a matter of favor, but under U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, which gives Congress power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing, for limited terms, to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." The 16th patent act provides that "every patent shall contain a grant to the patentee, his heirs and assigns, for a certain term of years, of 'the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery throughout the United States.'" U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4884. And this court has repeatedly and uniformly declared that the United States have no more right than any private person to use a patented invention without license of the patentee or making compensation to him. United States v. Burns, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 246, 252 [20: 388, 389]; Cammeyer v. Newton, 94 U. S. 225, 235 [24: 72, 75]; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 356, 358 [26: 786, 787]; Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 59, 67 [28: 901, 903]; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 270-272 [32: 442, 444, 445].

The United States, however, like all sovereigns, cannot be impleaded in a judicial tribunal, except so far as they have consented to be sued. This doctrine has been affirmed by this court in cases too numerous to be cited; and was clearly stated by Mr. Justice Field, delivering judgment in the case of The Siren, as follows: "It is a familiar doctrine of the common law, that the sovereign cannot be sued in his own courts without his consent. The doctrine rests upon reasons of public policy,—the inconvenience and danger which would follow from any different rule. It is obvious that the public service would be hindered, and the public safety endangered, if the supreme authority could be subjected to suit at the instance of every citizen, and consequently controlled in the use and disposition of the means required for the proper administration of the government. The exemption from direct suit is therefore without exception. This doctrine of the common law is equally applicable to the supreme authority of the nation, the United States. They cannot be subjected to legal proceedings at law or in equity without their consent; and whoever institutes such proceedings must bring his case within the authority of some act of Congress. Such is the language of this court in United States v. Clarke, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 444 [8: 1004]. The same exemption from judicial process extends to the property of the United States, and for the same reasons. As justly observed by the learned judge who tried this case, there is no distinction between suits against the government directly, and suits against its property. [17 crty.] The Siren v. United States ("The Siren"), 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 152-154 [19: 129, 130]. So much of this statement as regards suits against the United States or against their property was repeated by the present Chief Justice in the recent case of Stanley v. Schwoably, 147 U. S. 508, 512 [37: 259, 261].

It necessarily follows that, unless expressly permitted by act of Congress, no injunction can be granted against the United States. United States v. McLeMORE, 45 U. S. 4 How. 286 [11: 977]; Hill v. United States, 50 U. S. 9 How. 286 [13: 185]; Case v. Terrell, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 199 [20: 134].

The United States, by successive acts of Congress, have consented to be sued upon their contracts, either in the court of claims, or in a circuit or district court of the United States. Acts of February 24, 1855 (10 Stat. at L. 612, chap. 122, § 1); March 3, 1863 (12 Stat. at L. 765, chap. 92, § 2; Rev. Stat. § 1059); Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 359, §§ 1, 2); United States v. Jones, 131 U. S. 1, 15, 16 [33: 90, 91]. The United States may accordingly be sued by a patentee for their use of his invention under a contract made with him by the United States or by their authorized officers. United States v. Burns, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 246 [20: 388]; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262 [32: 442]; United States v. Berdan Firearms Mfg. Co. 156 U. S. 552 [39: 530].

But the United States have not consented to be liable to suits, founded in tort, for wrongs done by their officers, though in the discharge of their official duties. Gibbons v. United States, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 269 [19: 453]; Morgan v. United States, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 31, 534 [20: 738, 759]; Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 341 [25: 1010]; United States v. Jones, 131 U. S. 1, 16, 18 [33: 90, 91]; German Bank of Memphis v. United States, 148 U. S. 573, 579, 580 [37: 564, 568, 569]; Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593 [37: 862]. The United States, therefore, are not liable to a suit for an infringement of a patent, that being an action sounding in tort. Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163 [39: 108]; United States v. Berdan Firearms Mfg. Co. 156 U. S. 552 [39: 530].

A public officer is not personally liable on a contract, although under his own hand and seal, made by him in the line of his duty, by legal authority, and on account of the government, and enuring to its benefit, and not to his own. Hodgson v. Dexter, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 345 [2: 130]. See also Macbeath v. Haldimand, 1 T. R. 172; Unwin v. Wolseley, 1 T. R. 674; Palmer v. Hutchinson, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 619.

*But the exemption of the United States [18 from judicial process does not protect their officers and agents, civil or military, in time of peace, from being personally liable to an action of tort by a private person whose rights of property they have wrongfully invaded or injured, even by authority of the United States. Little Barreme, 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 170 [2: 243]; Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204 [24: 471]. Such officer, or agents, although acting under order of the United States, are therefore personally liable to be sued for their own infringement of a patent. Cammeyer v. Newton, 94 U. S. 225, 235 [24: 72, 75]. See also Feather v. Queen, 6 Best & S. 257, 297; Vavasasseur v. Krupp, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 351, 355, 358.

The extent to which officers or agents of the government may be restrained by injunction from doing unlawful acts to the prejudice of private rights is illustrated by the decisions of this court regarding injunctions from the courts of the United States to officers and agents of a state, which, by the Constitution of the United States, is as exempt as the United States are from private suit. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1 [33: 842].

In a suit to which the state is neither formally nor really a party, its officers, although acting by its order and for its benefit, may be restrained by injunction, when the remedy at law is inadequate, from doing positive acts for which they are personally and individually liable, taking or injuring the plaintiff's property, contrary to a plain official duty requiring no exercise of discretion and in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States. Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 738, 868, 871 [6: 204, 235, 236]; Louisiana Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 531, 541 [23: 623, 628]; Allen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 114 U. S. 311 [29: 200]; Pennoyer v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 1 [35: 363].

But no injunction can be issued against officers of a state, to restrain or control the use of property already in the possession of the state, or money in its treasury when the suit is commenced; or to compel the state to perform its obligations; or where the state has otherwise such an interest in the object of the suit as to be a necessary party. Louisiana v. Jumel, and Elliott v. Wiltz, 107 U. S. 711, 720-728 [27: 448, 451-454]; Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 109 U. S. 446, 454-457 [27: 992, 995, 19] 996; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 70 [29: 805, 811]; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443 [31: 216]; North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22 [33: 849]; McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 684 [34: 304, 312].

In support of the decree below much reliance was placed upon United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196 [27: 171]; Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508 [37: 259]; and Poindexter v. Greenhow ("Virginia Coupon Cases"), 114 U. S. 270 [29: 185].

In United States v. Lee the decision of the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, was that the owner of land held and occupied by the United States for public uses, but under a defective title, might maintain against the officers in possession of the land under authority of the United States, an action of ejectment, notwithstanding the interposition of the Attorney General in behalf of the United States.

A year afterwards, Mr. Justice Miller, again delivering the opinion of the court, after mentioning a different class of cases, said: "Another class of cases is where an individual is sued in tort for some act injurious to another in regard to person or property to which his defense is that he has acted under the orders of the government. In these cases he is not sued as, or because he is, the officer of the government, but as an individual, and the court is not ousted of jurisdiction because he asserts his authority as such officer. To make out his defense he must show that his authority was sufficient in law to protect him." After citing several cases to this point he added: "To this class belongs also the recent case of United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196 [27: 171], for the action of ejectment in that case is, in its essential character, an action of trespass, with the power in the court to restore the possession to the plaintiff as part of the judgment. And the defendants Strong and Kaufman, being sued individually as trespassers, set up their authority as officers of the United States, which this court held to be unlawful, and therefore insufficient as a defense. The judgment in that case did not conclude the United States, as the opinion carefully stated, but held the officers liable as unauthorized trespassers, and turned them out of their unlawful possession." Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 109 U. S. 446, 452 [27: 922, 994].

This statement of the decision in United States v. Lee, supra, was repeated in Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508 [37: 259], in which the point decided was that the statute of limitations or adverse possession might be pleaded in defense of an action of trespass to try title against officers of the United States. 147 U. S. 508, 518 [37: 259, 263].

In Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., above cited, a bill in equity to foreclose a second mortgage of a railroad, and to set aside as invalid a sale and conveyance of the road to the state of Georgia under a foreclosure of the first mortgage, was filed by holders of bonds secured by the second mortgage against the governor and the treasurer of the state, as well as against the railroad company and its directors; and was ordered to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, because, as was said in the opinion, "it may be accepted as a point of departure unquestioned, that neither a state nor the United States can be sued as defendant in any court in this country without their consent, except in the limited class of cases in which a state may be made a party in the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of the original jurisdiction conferred on that court by the Constitution. This principle is conceded in all the cases, and whenever it can be clearly seen that the state is an indispensable party to enable the court, according to the rules which govern its procedure, to grant the relief sought, it will refuse to take jurisdiction. . . . In the case now under consideration the state of Georgia is an indispensable party. It is, in fact, the only proper defendant in the case. No one sued has any personal interest in the matter, or any official authority to grant the relief asked. No foreclosure suit can be sustained without the state, because she has the legal title to the property, and a purchaser under a foreclosure decree would get no title in the absence of the state. The state is in the actual possession of the property, and the court can deliver no possession to the purchaser. The entire interest adverse to plaintiff in this suit is the interest of the state of Georgia in the property, of which she has both the title and possession." 109 U. S. 451, 457 [27: 994, 996].

In the cases cited by the appellee, reported under the head of Poindexter v. Greenhow ("Virginia Coupon Cases"), 114 U. S. 270 [29: 185], where a collector of taxes due to the state [21] of Virginia refused to receive *coupons of the state tendered in payment of such a tax, because forbidden to do so by a statute of the state, which was unconstitutional and void as impairing the obligation of the contract made by the state with the holders of such coupons in the statute under which they were issued, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Matthews, held that the court was liable to an action of detinue or of trespass, for distraining personal property for nonpayment of the tax; or, where the remedy at law was inadequate, might be restrained by injunction from making the distraint. Poindexter v. Greenhow ("Virginia Coupon Cases"), supra; Chaffin v. Taylor, 114 U. S. 309 [29: 198]; Allen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 114 U. S. 311 [29: 200].

But where the circuit court of the United States, at the suit of one who has tendered such coupons in payment of his taxes, issued an injunction against the Attorney General and other attorneys of the state of Virginia to restrain them from bringing any action in behalf of the state to recover such taxes, and, upon their bringing such actions, committed them for contempt in disobeying the injunction, they were discharged by this court on writs of habeas corpus. Mr. Justice Matthews, again delivering its opinion, and fully reviewing the previous cases, said that from the decision in Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., above cited, "the inference is, that where it is manifest, upon the face of the record, that the defendants have no individual interest in the controversy, and that the relief sought against them is only in their official capacity as representatives of the state, which alone is to be affected by the judgment or decree, the question then arising, whether the suit is not substantially a suit against the state, is one of jurisdiction;" and added that actions had been sustained against officers acting in behalf of a state "only in those instances where the act complained of, considered apart from the official authority alleged as to its justification, and as the personal act of the individual defendant, constituted a violation of right for which the plaintiff was entitled to a remedy at law or in equity against the wrongdoer in his individual character;" and that the 11th Amendment of the Constitution, declaring that "the judicial power of the [22] United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state," must be held "to cover, not only suits brought against a state by name, but those also against its officers, agents, and representatives, where the state, though not named as such, is, nevertheless, the only real party against which alone in fact the relief is asked, and against which the judgment or decree effectively operates;" and therefore concluded that the suit in which the injunction was granted was in substance and in law a suit against the state of Virginia, and 161 U. S.

consequently the circuit court was without jurisdiction to entertain it, the order of injunction and the commitments for contempt were null and void, and the imprisonment of the officers was without authority of law. Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 489, 502, 506, 507 [31: 216, 224, 228, 230].

When the matter of the Virginia coupons was last brought before this court, Mr. Justice Bradley, delivering its unanimous opinion, summed up, as the result of the previous decisions, so far as concerns the subject now under consideration, "that no proceedings can be instituted by any holder of said bonds or coupons against the commonwealth of Virginia, either directly by suit against the commonwealth by name, or indirectly against her executive officers to control them in the exercise of their official functions as agents of the state;" but that any holder "who tenders such coupons in payment of taxes, debts, dues, and demands due from him to the state, and continues to hold himself ready to tender the same in payment thereof, is entitled to be free from molestation in person or goods on account of such taxes, debts, dues, or demands, and may vindicate such right in all lawful modes of redress,—by suit to recover his property, by suit against the officer to recover damages for taking it, by injunction to prevent such taking where it would be attended with irremediable injury, or by a defense to a suit brought against him for his taxes or the other claims standing against him." McGahey v. Virginia, 132 U. S. 662, 684 [34: 304, 312]. And this summary was repeated and approved in Pennoyer v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 15 [35: 363, 367].

*It only remains to apply the principles [23 established by the former decisions to this suit under the patent act of the United States.

That act not only provides that "damages for the infringement of any patent may be recovered by action on the case," but also provides that "the several courts vested with jurisdiction of cases arising under the patent laws shall have power to grant injunctions, according to the course and principles of courts of equity, to prevent the violation of any right secured by patent, on such terms as the court may deem reasonable; and upon a decree being rendered in any such case for an infringement, the complainant shall be entitled to recover, in addition to the profits to be accounted for by the defendant, the damages the complainant has sustained thereby; and the court shall assess the same, or cause the same to be assessed under its direction." U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4919, 4921.

This bill in equity was filed by the owner of letters patent for an improvement in caisson gates, and alleged that the defendants infringed the patent by manufacturing and using such gates. The defendant filed a plea to the whole bill, and the Attorney General, in behalf of the United States, filed a suggestion, the single ground of each of which was that the only caisson gate that the defendants had any relation with was not made by them, and was not used by them for their own benefit but was made and used by the United States in a dry dock at a navy yard, and the defendants only operated and used it as officers, servants, and employees of the United States. The fact so pleaded and suggested could not, consistently with the previous decisions, above cited, prevent the defendants from being held liable to the patentee for their own infringement of his patent. There was no error, therefore, in overruling the plea of the defendants and the suggestion of the Attorney-General.

But the circuit court erred in awarding an injunction against the defendants.

As this court, when deciding that things manufactured under letters patent of the United States were subject to be taxed by a state like other property, said: "The right of 24property in the physical substance, which is the fruit of the discovery, is altogether distinct from the right in the discovery itself." Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 506 [24: 1115, 1117]. Title in the thing manufactured does not give the right to use the patented invention; no more does the patent right in the invention give title in the thing made in violation of the patent.

In an English case quite analogous to the case at bar, where shells, bought and owned by a foreign sovereign, were brought to England to be put on board his ships of war, the court of appeals held that his agents, if they used the shells in England in infringement of an English patent, might be liable in damages to the patentee, but that the court could not restrain the delivery of the shells to the sovereign to whom they belonged. Lord Justice Brett said: "The patent law has nothing to do with property;" and Lord Justice Cotton expressed the same idea more fully as follows: "The property in articles which are made in violation of a patent is, notwithstanding the privilege of the patentee, in the infringer, if he would otherwise have the property in them. The court, in a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, does not proceed on the footing that the defendant proved to have infringed has no property in the articles; but, assuming the property to be in him, it prevents the use of those articles, either by removing that which constitutes the infringement, or by ordering, if necessary, a destruction of the articles so as to prevent them from being used in derogation of the plaintiff's rights, and does this as the most effectual mode of protecting the plaintiff's rights—not on the footing that there is no property in the defendant. The court cannot proceed to give that relief, and interfere with the articles, unless it has before it the person entitled to the articles in question, and has as against this person power to adjudicate that the articles are made or used in infringement of the plaintiff's rights." Varasseur v. Krupp, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 351, 358, 360.

In the present case, the caisson gate was a part of the dry dock in a navy yard of the United States, was constructed and put in place by the United States, and was the property 25] of the *United States, and held and used by the United States for the public benefit. If the gate was made in infringement of the plaintiff's patent, that did not prevent the title in the gate from vesting in the United States. The United States, then, had both the title and the possession of the property. The United States could not hold or use it, except through officers and agents. Although this suit was not brought against the United States by name, but against their officers and agents only, nevertheless, so far as the bill prayed for an injunction and for the destruction of the gate in question, the defendants had no individual interest in the controversy; the entire interest adverse to the plaintiff was the interest of the United States in property of which the United States had both the title and the possession; the United States were the only real party, against whom alone in fact the relief was asked, and against whom the decree would effectively operate; the plaintiff sought to control the defendants in their official capacity, and in the exercise of their official functions, as representatives and agents of the United States, and thereby to defeat the use by the United States of property owned and used by the United States for the common defense and general welfare; and therefore the United States were an indispensable party to enable the court, according to the rules which govern its procedure, to grant the relief sought; and the suit could not be maintained without violating the principles affirmed in the long series of decisions of this court, above cited.

There was also error in the final decree awarding profits to the plaintiff as against the defendants.

In a suit in equity for the infringement of a patent, the ground upon which profits are recovered is that they are the benefits which have accrued to the defendants from their wrongful use of the plaintiff's invention, and for which they are liable, ex æquo et bono, to the like extent as a trustee would be who had used the trust property for his own advantage. The defendants in any such suit, are therefore liable to account for such profits only as have accrued to themselves from the use of the invention, and not for those *which have ac- 26rued to another, and in which they have no participation. Elizabeth v. American Nicholson Pav. Co. 97 U. S. 126, 138 140 [24: 1000, 1005, 1006]; Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 189 [26: 975]; Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136, 144-148 [31: 664, 666-668]; Key-stone Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 151 U. S. 139, 147 [38: 103, 105]; Coupe v. Royer, 155 U. S. 555, 583 [39: 263, 270].

In the leading case of Elizabeth v. American Nicholson Pav. Co. a suit in equity for the infringement of a patent for an improvement in wooden pavements was brought against a city, as well as against the contractor who had laid down the pavements. It being shown that the city had made no profits from the use of the invention, but that the contractor had, this court held that profits could be recovered against the contractor only, and not against the city. Mr. Justice Bradley, in delivering judgment, said: "One thing may be affirmed with reasonable confidence: that if an infringer of a patent has realized no profit from the use of the invention, he cannot be called upon to respond for profits; the patentee, in such case, is left to his remedy for damages." 97 U. S. 138 [24: 1005].

In the case at bar there was no evidence that the defendants themselves had made any profits whatever from the use of the plaintiff's invention; but the only gains, profits, and advantages, upon which the report of the master and the decree of the court were based, were those which had accrued to the United States from the saving in the cost of the gate; and the master found that no damages, in addition to such gains, profits, and advantages, had been proved.

The necessary result is that, even if the validity of the patent and its infringement by the defendants are assumed, the plaintiff, upon this record, is not entitled to an injunction, to profits, or to damages.

The finding of the master, that no damages, in addition to profits, had been proved, does not indeed necessarily imply that the plaintiff had not sustained damages, independent of any profits. But no ground for equitable relief, by injunction, by account of profits, or otherwise, being shown, the proper remedy of the plaintiff against the defendants for such damages is by action at law. Elizabeth v. American Nicholson Pav. Co. and Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. above cited.

27] *The question whether the United States might be liable, in a suit against them in the court of claims or other court of concurrent jurisdiction, as upon a contract, for their use of the caisson gate, if an infringement of the plaintiff's patent, does not arise, and cannot be decided, in this case.

In order that the rights of all parties interested in the controversy may be preserved, the entry in this case will be—

Decree of the circuit court reversed, and case remanded to that court with directions to dismiss the bill, without prejudice to an action at law against the defendants, or to a suit against the United States.

Mr. Justice Peckham, not having been a member of the court when this case was argued, took no part in the decision.

Mr. Justice Harlan dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the disposition which has been made of this case.

As stated in the opinion of the majority, this court has frequently held that the United States has no more right than any private person to use a patented invention without license of the patentee or without making or securing compensation to him. It is not claimed that the defendants used the plaintiff's patent under a license from him, or that compensation or provision for compensation has been made. The government is therefore under an implied obligation to compensate the plaintiff. That obligation arises from the Constitution, which declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. Upon this point the court, in United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 657 [28: 846, 850], said: "Such an implication being consistent with the constitutional duty of the government, as well as with common justice, the claimant's cause of action is one that arises out of implied contract, within the meaning of the statute which confers jurisdiction upon the court of claims of actions founded 'upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the government of the United States.'" The same principle was recognized in Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 124 U. S. 581, 597 [31: 527, 532]; United States v. Alexander, 148 U. S. 186, 191 [37: 415, 417]; and Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163, 174, 175 [39: 108, 112]. In this view,—the defendants being public officers who derive no personal advantage from the use by the government of the plaintiff's invention,—the prayer for an injunction might well have been denied upon the ground that there was an adequate and complete remedy by a suit against the United States as upon implied contract. But the court does not proceed distinctly on that ground.

If the plaintiff cannot sue the United States to recover compensation for the use of his invention, actually appropriated by the government for public use, then the only adequate remedy for him would be an injunction against the individual officers, who are proceeding without his license, and without any provision having been made for his being compensated. This must be so, unless the court is prepared to hold that there is no remedy, under the Constitution, for the protection of private rights against illegal invasion by officers of the government. In United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196 [27: 171], this court said that when the citizen, "in one of the courts of competent jurisdiction, has established his right of property, there is no reason why deference to any person, natural or artificial, not even the United States, should prevent him from using the means which the law gives him for the protection and enforcement of that right;" that "no man in this country is so high that he is above the law; no officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity; all the officers of the government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law, and are bound to obey it." If the United States may appropriate to public use the invention of a patentee, without his consent, and without liability to suit, as upon implied contract, for the value of the use of such invention; if, as the court holds, a public officer acting only in the interest of the public is not individually liable for gains, profits, and advantages that may accrue to the United States from such use; and if the officer who thus violates the rights of the patentee cannot be restrained by injunction,—then the government may well be regarded as organized robbery so far as the rights of patentees are concerned.

*Instead of leaving open the question [29] whether the United States was liable to suit, as upon implied contract, the prayer for injunction, if denied, should have been denied upon the ground, and only upon the ground, that the plaintiff had a complete and adequate remedy by a suit against the government.

Mr. Justice Field also dissented.

LEW ROSEN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 29-51.)

Indictment for mailing obscene paper—sufficiency of—bill of particulars—knowledge—decoy letter—submitting case to jury.

1. A charge in an indictment that defendant unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly deposited in the postoffice a certain obscene, lewd, and lascivious paper, describing it, is an allegation of knowledge by him of its character, which is sufficient after verdict.
2. The constitutional right of the defendant to be informed of the accusation against him is not infringed by the omission from the indictment of indecent and obscene matter alleged as not proper to be spread on the records of the court, provided the crime charged is so described as reasonably to inform him of the nature of the charge sought to be established against him.
3. One charged with the offense of depositing in the postoffice an obscene paper may apply to the court before trial for a bill of particulars showing what parts of the paper will be relied on as being obscene; and if he fails to so apply or object to the sufficiency of the indictment, judgment will not be arrested, although some parts of the paper are not obscene, if he knew from the indictment what paper would be offered in evidence.
4. Knowledge of the contents of an obscene paper by one who deposits it in the mail is sufficient to make him guilty of an offense under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3893, although he did not regard the paper as one that the statute forbade to be carried in the mails.
5. That an obscene paper was mailed in response to a decoy letter is no defense to an indictment for mailing it.
6. Submitting to the jury the question whether the paper in question was obscene is not ground of reversal, where no injury was done to defendant by so doing, as the jury were properly instructed and their conclusion correct.

[No. 424.]

Argued October 29, 1895. Decided January 27, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a judgment convicting the defendant, Lew Rosen, of the crime of mailing an obscene paper, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3893. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William N. Cohen for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was indicted under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3893, providing that "every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, . . . and every article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use, and every written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, or how, or of whom, or by what means, any of the hereinbefore-mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, . . . are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any postoffice nor by any letter carrier; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails, for the purpose of circulating, or disposing of, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each and every offense be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one year nor more than ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The defendant pleaded not guilty, and the trial was entered upon without objection [31] in any form to the indictment as not sufficiently informing the defendant of the nature of the charge against him.

A verdict of guilty having been returned, the accused moved for a new trial upon the ground, among others, that the indictment was fatally defective in matters of substance. That motion was denied.

The defendant thereupon moved in arrest of judgment upon the ground that the indictment did not charge that he knew, at the time, what were the contents of the paper deposited in the mail and alleged to be lewd, obscene, and lascivious. This motion was also denied, and the accused was sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor during a period of thirteen months, and to pay a fine of $1.

The paper, "Broadway," referred to in the indictment, was produced in evidence, first by the United States, and afterwards by the accused. The copy read in evidence by the government was the one which, it was admitted at the trial, the defendant had caused to be deposited in the mail. The pictures of females appearing in that copy were, by direction of the defendant, partially covered with lamp black that could be easily erased with a piece of bread. The object of sending them out in that condition was, of course, to excite a curiosity to know what was thus concealed. The accused read in evidence a copy that he characterized as a "clean" one, and in which the pictures of females, in different attitudes of indecency, were not obscured by lamp-black.

The defendant having indicated his purpose to bring the case here for review, the court below ordered these papers to be sent to the clerk of this court with the transcript of the proceedings below.

1. The first contention of the plaintiff in error is, that the indictment was fatally defective in not alleging that the paper in question was deposited in the mail with knowledge on his part that it was obscene, lewd, and lascivious.

The indictment charged that the accused, on the 24th day of April, 1893, within the southern district of New York, "did unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly deposit and 32] cause *to be deposited in the postoffice of the city of New York, for mailing and delivery by the postoffice establishment of the United States, a certain obscene, lewd, and lascivious paper, which said paper then and there, on the first page thereof, was entitled 'Tenderloin Number, Broadway,' and on the same page were printed the words and figures following,—that is to say: 'Volume II. number 27; trademark, 1892; by Lew Rosen; New York. Saturday, April 15, 1893; ten cents a copy, $4.00 a year, in advance;' and thereupon, on the same page, is the picture of a cab, horse, driver, and the figure of a female, together (underneath the said picture) with the word 'tenderloineuse,' and the said paper consists of twelve pages, minute description of which, with the pictures therein and thereon, would be offensive to the court and improper to spread upon the records of the court, because of their obscene, lewd, and indecent matters; and the said paper, on the said twenty-fourth day of April, in the year one thousand, eight hundred and ninety-three, was enclosed in a wrapper and addressed as follows,—that is to say, 'Mr. Geo. Edwards, P. O. box 510, Summit, N. J.,'—against the peace of the United States and their dignity, and contrary to the statute of the United States in such case made and provided."

Undoubtedly the mere depositing in the mail of a writing, paper, or other publication of an obscene, lewd, or lascivious character, is not an offense under the statute if the person making the deposit was, at the time and in good faith, without knowledge, information, or notice of its contents. The indictment would have been in better form if it had more distinctly charged that the accused was aware of its character. But this defect should be regarded, after verdict and under the circumstances attending the trial, as one of form, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1025, providing that the proceedings on an indictment found by a grand jury in any district, circuit, or other court of the United States, shall not be affected "by reason of any defect or imperfection in the matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant." United States v. Chase, 27 Fed. Rep. 807; United States v. Clark, 37 Fed. Rep. 106.

33]*The indictment on its face implies that the defendant owned or managed the paper "Broadway." He admitted at the trial that he owned and controlled it. He did not pretend that he was ignorant at the time of the contents of the particular number that he caused to be put in the postoffice at New York. The general charge that he "unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited in the postoffice . . . a certain obscene, lewd, and lascivious paper"—describing it by its name, volume, number, date of trademark, date of issue, and as having on it the name of Lew Rosen, proprietor, the same name borne by the defendant,—may not unreasonably be construed as meaning that the defendant was, and must have been, aware of the nature of its contents at the time he caused it to be put into the postoffice for transmission and delivery. Of course he did not understand the government as claiming that the mere depositing in the postoffice of an obscene, lewd, and lascivious paper was an offense under the statute, if the person so depositing it had neither knowledge nor notice, at the time, of its character or contents. He must have understood from the words of the indictment that the government imputed to him knowledge or notice of the contents of the paper so deposited.

In their ordinary acceptance, the words "unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly" when applied to an act or thing done, import knowledge of the act or thing so done, as well as an evil intent or bad purpose in doing such thing; and when used in an indictment in connection with the charge of having deposited in the mails an obscene, lewd, and lascivious paper, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided, could not have been construed as applying to the mere depositing in the mail of a paper the contents of which at the time were wholly unknown to the person depositing it. The case is therefore, not one of the total omission from the indictment of an essential averment, but, at most, one of the inaccurate or imperfect statement of a fact; and such statement, after verdict, may be taken in the broadest sense authorized by the words used, even if it be adverse to the accused.

2. The defendant also contends that the indictment was *fatally defective, in that it [34] did not set out with reasonable particularity those parts of the paper relied on to support the charge in the indictment. He insists that the omission from the indictment of a description of the pictures of female figures found in the paper was in violation of the constitutional guaranty that the defendant in a criminal case shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him. U. S. Const. amend. 6.

A defendant is informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him if the indictment contains such description of the offense charged as will enable him to make his defense and to plead the judgment in bar of any further prosecution for the same crime. Does the indictment in this case meet these requirements? It describes the paper alleged to be obscene, lewd, and lascivious with such minuteness as to leave no possible doubt as to its identity. If the defendant did not have in his possession or could not procure a duplicate of such paper, he could have applied to the court for an order that he be furnished with a bill of particulars to the end that he might properly defend himself at the trial. United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatchf. 338, 351; Rex v. Hodgson, 3 Car. & P. 422; Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 702. He made no such application, but went to trial without suggesting that he was not sufficiently informed by the indictment of the nature and cause of the accusation against him. When the paper in question was produced in evidence he made no objection to it as not being sufficiently described in the indictment, but at the conclusion of the evidence on the part of the prosecution moved to dismiss on the ground that the paper was not obscene. This motion having been overruled he testified in his own behalf, offering in evidence a duplicate of the same paper, admitting that lamp-black—capable of being easily removed so as to bring each offensive picture in full view of any person receiving or inspecting the paper—had by his direction been put on the entire edition of April 15, 1893. He now insists that the indictment was fatally defective, because it did not disclose in detail the contents of the twelve pages that were charged to constitute an [35] obscene, lewd, and lascivious paper. *If it be said that he did not know what part of the twelve pages were considered by the grand jury as obscene, lewd, and lascivious, the answer is that he was not entitled to know what passed in the conferences of grand jurors. He was not entitled to show, as matter of defense, that the grand jury proceeded on insufficient grounds. He had to meet only the case made by the indictment and by the evidence adduced by the government. And if he wished to be informed, before entering upon the trial, what particular parts of the paper would be relied on as bringing the case within the statute, he could, as already suggested, have applied for a bill of particulars, which the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, might have granted or refused as the ends of justice required.

The principal authority relied on in support of the defendant's contention is the case in England of an indictment for publishing an obscene libel, namely, "a certain indecent, lewd, filthy, and obscene book called 'Fruits of Philosophy,' thereby contaminating, vitiating, and corrupting the morals, etc." The jury found that the book was obscene, and a motion in arrest of judgment was made by the accused. The motion was denied. Cockburn, Ch. J., Mellor, J., concurring, held: "If the omission is in the indictment,—if that be the objection, and it be a valid one,—it is an objection that ought to have been taken by demurrer, and therefore I cannot help thinking that, upon the balance of convenience we shall act more wisely in saying that the judgment pronounced on this indictment ought not to be set aside by making the motion absolute to arrest the judgment; but if there be any valid foundation for the contention the defendants have raised upon the indictment, it should be taken by demurrer." Queen v. Bradlaugh, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 569, 573. The judgment was reversed in the court of appeal, which held that in an indictment for publishing an obscene book described only by its title, the words alleged to be obscene must be set out, and their omission would not be cured by a verdict of guilty. In his opinion in that case, Lord Justice Brett considered what kind of omissions would be cured by verdict, and declared, as the [36] result of *the authorities, that "in every kind of crime which consists in words, if the words complained of are not set out in the indictment or information, the objection is fatal in arrest of judgment." But he also said: "I would strike out of the category of the cases which we are considering all cases with regard to obscene prints and obscene pictures. The publication of obscene prints and obscene pictures may be in one sense libelous, but they are not words, and therefore they do not seem to me to fall within the rules as to criminal pleadings which we are considering here to-day." Bradlaugh v. Queen, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 607, 634.

Looking at the cases in the American courts, we find that in Com. v. Sharpless (1815) 2 Serg. & R. 91, 102, 7 Am. Dec. 632, which was an indictment for exhibiting an obscene picture, it was objected, after verdict and on motion in arrest of judgment, that the picture was not sufficiently described. Chief Justice Tilghman said: "We do not know that the picture had any name, and therefore it might be impossible to designate it by name. What, then, is expected? Must the indictment describe minutely the attitude and posture of the figures? I am for paying some respect to the chastity of our records. These are circumstances which may be well omitted. Whether the picture was really indecent, the jury might judge from the evidence, or if necessary, from inspection. The witnesses could identify it. I am of opinion that the description is sufficient."

The question was considered in Massachusetts in 1821, in Com. v. Holmes, 17 Mass. 336. That was an indictment for publishing a lewd and obscene print contained in a certain book entitled "Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure," and for publishing the same book. Two of the counts alleged that the printed book was so lewd, wicked, and obscene "that the same would be offensive to the court here, and improper to be placed upon the records thereof." Chief Justice Parker, speaking for the court, held these counts to be good, saying: "It can never be required that an obscene book and picture should be displayed upon the records of the court; which must be done if the description in these counts is insufficient. This would *be to require that the public itself should [37] give permanency and notoriety to indecency in order to punish it." Subsequently, in Com. v. Tarbox, 1 Cush. 66, 72, which was an indictment under a state enactment for printing, publishing, and distributing an obscene paper, the court said: "In indictments for offenses of this description, it is not always necessary that the contents of the publication should be inserted; but, whenever it is necessary to do so, or whenever the indictment undertakes to state the contents, whether necessary or not, the same rule prevails as in the case of libel, that is to say, the alleged obscene publication must be set out in the very words of which it is composed, and the indictment must undertake or profess to do so, by the use of appropriate language. The excepted cases occur whenever a publication of this character is so obscene as to render it improper that it should appear on the record, and then the statement of the contents may be omitted altogether, and a description thereof substituted; but, in this case, a reason for the omission must appear in the indictment, by proper averments. The case of Com. v. Holmes, 17 Mass. 336, furnishes both an authority and a precedent for this form of pleading." In Com. v. McCance, 164 Mass. 162, 29 L. R. A. 61, an indictment charging the defendant with selling a certain book containing, among other things, obscene language, was held to be insufficient. The court distinguished the case before it from previous cases, and said that while the principle announced in Com. v. Holmes must be regarded as an exception to the general rule relating to libelous publications, the weight of authority in this country was in favor of that decision.

So, in People v. Girardin, 1 Mich. 90, 91, which was an indictment for printing and publishing a certain paper described by its title, and characterized as wicked, obscene, etc., the court said: "There is another rule, as ancient as that contended for by the counsel for the prisoner, which forbids the introduction in an indictment of obscene pictures and books. Courts will never allow their records to be polluted by bawdy and obscene matters. To do 38] this would be to require a court *of justice to perpetuate and give notoriety to an indecent publication, before its author could be visited for the great wrong he may have done to the public or to individuals. And there is no hardship in this rule. To convict the defendant, he must be shown to have published the libel; if he is the publisher he must be presumed to have been advised of the contents of the libel, and fully prepared to justify it. The indictment in this cause corresponds with the precedents to be found in books of the highest merit."

In State v. Brown, 27 Vt. 619, in which the indictment stated that the grand jurors omitted from the indictment the lewd and obscene paper alleged to have been sold, because it would be offensive to the court and improper to be placed on records of the court, Chief Justice Redfield said: "Ordinarily the indictment in a case like the present should set forth the book or publication in hæc verba, the same as in indictments for libel or forgery. This seems to be an acknowledged principle in the books. But even in indictments for forgery, it may be excused, as, if the forged instrument is in the possession of the opposite party. So, also, in a case like the present, if the publication be of so gross a character that spreading it upon the record will be an offense against decency, it may be excused, as all the English precedents show. Some of the precedents are much like the present, describing the obscene character of the publication in general terms. But more generally the nature of the publication is more specifically described. But in both cases the principle of the case is the same. If the paper is of a character to offend decency and outrage modesty, it need not be so spread upon the record as to produce that effect. And if it is alleged, in such case, to be a publication within the general terms in which the offense is defined by the statute, it is sufficient; which seems to be done in the present case. The degree of particularity with which the paper could be described without exposing its grossness would depend something upon the nature of that feature, whether it consisted in the words used or the general description given. In the former case it could not be more particularly described than it here is without offending decency."

39] *In McNair v. People, 89 Ill. 441, 443, the question was whether the indictment for printing, having in possession, and giving away an obscene and indecent picture was sufficient under a provision of the Illinois Criminal Code, declaring that an indictment should be deemed sufficiently technical and correct, which stated the offense in the terms and language of the statute creating the offense, or so plainly that the nature of the offense could be easily understood. The court, speaking by Mr. Justice Walker, said that "it was necessary to set out the supposed obscene matter in the indictment, unless the obscene publication is in the hands of the defendant, or out of the power of the prosecution, or the matter is too gross and obscene to be spread on the records of the court, either of which facts, if existing, should be averred in the indictment, as an excuse for failing to set out the obscene matter; that whether obscene or not is a question of law, and not of fact; that the question is for the court to determine, and not for the jury." To the same effect are Fuller v. People, 92 Ill. 182, 184; State v. Smith, 17 R. I. 371, 374, 375.

The earlier cases were fully examined by Mr. Justice Blatchford, when he was a judge of the circuit court, in United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatchf. 338, 351, in which was charged that the defendant "did unlawfully and knowingly deposit, and cause to be deposited, in the mail of the United States, then and there, for mailing and delivery, a certain obscene, lewd, and lascivious book, called 'Cupid's Yokes, or The Binding Forces of Conjugal Life,' which said book is so lewd, obscene, and lascivious, that the same would be offensive to the court here, and improper to be placed upon the records thereof; wherefore the jurors aforesaid do not set forth the same in this indictment." Speaking for himself and Judges Benedict and Choate, Mr. Justice Blatchford said: "In the present indictment, the defendant had information given to him as to the offense charged, by the date of the mailing, by the title of the book, and by the address on the wrapper. The indictment states the reason for not setting forth the book to be that it is too obscene and indecent to be set forth. A copy of the book, with a designation of the obscene passages relied on, *could have been 40] obtained before the trial, by asking for a bill of particulars. The defendant was not deprived of the right 'to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation.' The weight of authority, as well as of reasoning, is in favor of the sufficiency of the present indictment."

The doctrine to be deduced from the American cases is that the constitutional right of the defendant to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him entitles him to insist, at the outset, by demurrer or by motion to quash, and, after verdict, by motion in arrest of judgment, that the indictment shall apprise him of the crime charged with such reasonable certainty that he can make his defense and protect himself after judgment against another prosecution for the same offense; that this right is not infringed by the omission from the indictment of indecent and obscene matter, alleged as not proper to be spread upon the records of the court, provided the crime charged, however general the language used, is yet so described as reasonably to inform the accused of the nature of the charge sought to be established against him; and that, in such case, the accused may apply to the court before the trial is entered upon for a bill of particulars, showing what parts of the paper would be relied on by the prosecution as being obscene, lewd, and lascivious, which motion will be granted or refused, as the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, may find necessary to the ends of justice.

The refusal of the court to arrest the judgment was not erroneous. The defendant knew from the indictment itself what paper or publication would be offered by the government in evidence, and that the prosecution would insist that the pictures of females displayed in that paper were obscene, lewd, and lascivious. It is said that some of the printed matter and pictures in the paper could not possibly be regarded as of that class. That fact is not disclosed by the indictment. Besides, the failure to set out such matters and pictures could not have prejudiced the accused. The paper being offered in evidence, if it appeared that some of the printed matter or some of the pictures were not obscene, lewd, or lascivious, 41] the jury could have been instructed upon that subject at the instance of either party. But, as we have already said, the defendant did not ask for a bill of particulars nor object to the indictment as insufficient, but made his defense upon the broad ground that the paper that he caused to be deposited in the postoffice was not obscene, lewd, or lascivious.

We are of opinion that the indictment sufficiently informed the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and that there was no legal ground for an arrest of the judgment.

3. At the trial below, the defendant, by his counsel, asked the court to instruct the jury that he should be acquitted if they entertained a reasonable doubt whether he knew that the paper or publication referred to in the indictment was obscene. This request was refused, and an exception was taken to the ruling of the court.

This request for instructions was intended to announce the proposition that no one could be convicted of the offense of having unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly used the mails for the transmission and delivery of an obscene, lewd, and lascivious publication,—although he may have had at the time actual knowledge or notice of its contents,—unless he knew or believed that such paper could be properly or justly characterized as obscene, lewd, and lascivious. The statute is not to be so interpreted. The inquiry under the statute is whether the paper charged to have been obscene, lewd, and lascivious was in fact of that character, and if it was of that character and was deposited in the mail by one who knew or had notice, at the time, of its contents, the offense is complete, although the defendant himself did not regard the paper as one that the statute forbade to be carried in the mails. Congress did not intend that the question as to the character of the paper should depend upon the opinion or belief of the person who, with knowledge or notice of its contents, assumed the responsibility of putting it in the mails of the United States. The evils that Congress sought to remedy would continue and increase in volume if the belief of the accused as to what was obscene, lewd, and lascivious was recognized 42] as the test for determining whether the statute has been violated. Every one who uses the mails of the United States for carrying papers or publications must take notice of what, in this enlightened age, is meant by decency, purity, chastity in social life, and what must be deemed obscene, lewd, and lascivious.

4. Another contention of the accused is that the paper alleged to have been mailed was sent in response to a decoy letter, and, for that reason, no crime was committed. It is only necessary to say that that question has been disposed of adversely to the defendant's contention by Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 604, 611 [39: 550, 553]. In that case it was said: "The law was actually violated by the defendant; he placed letters in the postoffice which conveyed information as to where obscene matter could be obtained, and he placed them there with a view of giving such information to the person who should actually receive those letters, no matter what his name; and the fact that the person who wrote under these assumed names, and received his letters, was a government detective, in no manner detracts from his guilt." That doctrine was again announced in Goode v. United States, 159 U. S. 663 [ante, 297], in which case it was said that the fact that "certain prohibited pictures were drawn out of the defendant by a decoy letter written by a government detective was no defense to an indictment for mailing such prohibited publications."

5. It is also assigned for error that the court left it to the jury to say whether the paper in question was obscene, when it was for the court, as a matter of law, to determine that question. If the court had instructed the jury as matter of law that the paper described in the indictment was obscene, lewd, and lascivious, no error would have been committed; for the paper itself was in evidence; it was of the class excluded from the mails; and there was no dispute as to its contents. It has long been the settled doctrine of this court that the evidence before the jury, if clear and uncontradicted upon any issue made by the parties, presented a question of law, in respect of which the court could, without usurping the functions 43] of the jury, instruct them as to the principles applicable to the case made by such evidence. Pleasants v. Fant, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 116, 121 [22: 780, 782]; Montclair Twp. v. Dana, 107 U. S. 163 [27: 436]; Marshall v. Hubbard, 117 U. S. 415, 419 [29: 919, 920]; Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 99, 100 [39: 343, 360]. Even if we should hold that the court ought to have instructed the jury, as matter of law, that the paper was, within the meaning of the statute, obscene, lewd, and lascivious, it would not follow that the judgment should, for that reason, be reversed, because it is clear that no injury came to the defendant by submitting the question of the character of the paper to the jury. But it is proper to add that it was competent for the court below, in its discretion, and even if it had been inclined to regard the paper as obscene, lewd, and lascivious, to submit to the jury the general question of the nature of the paper, accompanied by instructions indicating the principles or rules by which they should be guided in determining what was an obscene, lewd, or lascivious paper within the contemplation of the statute under which the indictment was framed. That was what the court did when it charged the jury that "the test of obscenity is whether the tendency of the matter is to deprave and corrupt the morals of those whose minds are open to such influence and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall." "Would it," the court said, "suggest or convey lewd thoughts and lascivious thoughts to the young and inexperienced?" In view of the character of the paper, as an inspection of it will instantly disclose, the test prescribed for the jury was quite as liberal as the defendant had any right to demand.

Other questions are discussed in the elaborate brief filed for the defendant. Some of them do not require notice; others were not sufficiently saved by exceptions, at the proper time, and will not, therefore, be considered or determined.

We find no error of law in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice White, with whom concurs Mr. Justice Shiras, dissenting:

44] Mr. Justice Shiras and myself are unable to concur in the opinion and judgment of the court. Thinking, as we do, that the consequence of the affirmance of the judgment is to deprive the accused of rights guaranteed to him under the Constitution of the United States, we are impelled to state the reasons for our dissent.*

It was claimed at the bar of this court that the indictment was absolutely void because it failed to set forth an offense against the law of the United States. This contention rested on two propositions: First, that the indictment did not on its face contain a statement of the obscene matter charged to have been illegally mailed; second, because, even if the failure to so state was excused by the allegation in the indictment that the matter was too obscene and offensive to be repeated, the indictment was none the less absolutely void because it failed to give an identifying reference to that which the grand jury found to be obscene.

If these objections be well founded, they are necessarily apparent on the face of the record. They go to the jurisdiction of the court ratione materiae. They consequently demanded consideration whether or not they were presented to the court below, or have been regularly assigned for error here. Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, 351 [34: 681, 682]. The questions, then, are:

First. Was it necessary to spread the matter alleged to be obscene in full in the indictment, and was the failure to do so excused by the allegation in the indictment that it was too offensive to be put on the record?

It is unquestioned that the English rule requires, where obscene words are relied upon, that the obscene matter should be set out explicitly in the indictment, and that the averment that it is too obscene to be so stated is insufficient to excuse the omission. Bradlaugh v. Queen, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 621. But this is not the doctrine of the American courts. At the time Bradlaugh v. Queen was decided the contrary rule had been announced in several leading cases in this country, and the court in the Bradlaugh Case said: "In support of this contention for the Crown some American cases 45] were cited. *Decisions in the courts of the United States are not binding authorities, and although they may be expressly in point, yet, if they are contrary to our law, they must be disregarded." The cases thus referred to have since been followed by many other American authorities, so that the question may be considered in this country as determined adversely to the English rule. Com. v. Holmes, 17 Mass. 336; Com. v. Tarbox, 1 Cush. 66; People v. Girardin, 1 Mich. 90; State v. Pennington, 5 Lea, 506; McNair v. People, 89 Ill. 441; Fuller v. People, 92 Ill. 182; State v. Brown, 27 Vt. 619; State v. Griffin, 43 Tex. 538; State v. Smith, 17 R. I. 371; Com. v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 46, 30 Am. Rep. 652; Com. v. Wright, 139 Mass. 382; Com. v. McCance, 164 Mass. 162, 29 L. R. A. 61; United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatchf. 338. It was with reference to this well-settled view that in Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 604 [39: 550], in speaking of sending obscene matter through the mails, the court said (p. 608 [552]): "The charge is not of sending obscene matter through the mails, in which case some description might be necessary, both for identification of the offense, and to enable the court to determine whether the matter was obscene, and therefore nonmailable. Even in such cases it is held that it is unnecessary to spread the obscene matter in all its filthiness upon the record; it is enough to so far describe it that its obnoxious character may be discerned."

Second. Where the obscene matter is not spread upon the face of the indictment, and is excused under the averment that it would be offensive to morality to do so, is the indictment valid where it gives no specific reference identifying the matter found by the grand jury to be obscene, thus rendering it impossible to determine upon what the grand jury based its presentment?

In considering this question it must be borne in mind that imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary is the penalty which may be imposed for sending obscene matter through the mails; hence the offense is an infamous one. Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 348 [29: 909]; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417 [29: 89]; Re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200 [35: 409]. It must also be considered that, being an infamous offense, the prosecution can, under the 5th *Amendment to the Constitution, only be [46] by indictment. The necessity for identifying references in the indictment to the obscene matter upon which the grand jury makes its findings is an essential part of the rule dispensing with the obligation of stating the obscene matter, in so many words, in the indictment. The reason upon which the English rule rests is that spreading in full the obscene matter is essential to protect the accused in his rights, to enable him to move to quash or in arrest of judgment, or to present on review by error the validity or invalidity of the indictment. The American rule is based upon the reason that such spreading upon the record is not essential to protect the rights of the accused, because the obscene matter passed on by the grand jury can be so identified by a reference to it in the indictment as to enable it to be, by bill of particulars or otherwise, readily supplied for all the purposes of defense; hence the omission deprives the accused of no substantial right, whilst subserving the ends of public morality and decency.

The authorities make this clear. Thus in Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 604 [39: 550], the court said: "It is enough to so far describe it [obscene matter] that its obnoxious character may be discerned." And the reason which exacted this reference was declared to be "both for identification of the offense and to enable the court to determine whether the matter was obscene and therefore nonmailable." In Com. v. McCance, 164 Mass. 162, 29 L. R. A. 61, the indictment charged the accused with "selling a certain book then and there called 'The Decameron of Boccaccio,' and which said book upon the title page thereof was then and there of the tenor following (describing the title page), . . . which said book then and there contained among other things certain obscene, indecent, and impure language, . . . which said book is so lewd, obscene, indecent, and impure that the same would be offensive to the court and improper to be placed upon the records thereof." The court, whilst fully recognizing the rule which renders it unnecessary to spread obscene matter in the indictment, also applied the principle which holds that where such matter is not put upon the record there must be an identifying reference in the indictment so that it may be [47] *determined from the face thereof what was the particular matter upon which the grand jury acted. In consequence of so holding, the judgment was reversed and the verdict set aside. See also Babcock v. United States, 34 Fed. Rep. 873.

Indeed, the correctness of the ruling in Com. v. McCance, we think, results from the very nature of things. It being unquestionable that a grand jury must find an indictment in order that the prosecution be valid, how can it be said that there has been such a presentment when on the very face of the record it is absolutely impossible to determine what matter the grand jury charged to be obscene? To say that it can be supplied by a bill of particulars or otherwise is a misconception, for it becomes impossible to supply that which does not legally exist. The Constitution requiring that the grand jury should find the indictment, neither the court, the prosecuting officer, nor any one else has power to create the necessary averments to make that an indictment which otherwise would be no indictment at all. This case illustrates the danger of departing from constitutional safeguards. The general rule requires an indictment to be specific. Stephens v. State, Wright (Ohio) 73; Com. v. Gillespie, 7 Serg. & R. 469, 10 Am. Dec. 475; Com. v. Stow, 1 Mass. 54; Com. v. Bailey, 1 Mass. 62, 2 Am. Dec. 3; Com. v. Sweeney, 10 Serg. & R. 173; Com. v. Wright, 1 Cush. 46; Com. v. Tarbox, 1 Cush. 66; Com. v. Houghton, 8 Mass. 107; King v. Beere, 12 Mod. 219; State v. Parker, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 298, 11 Am. Dec. 735. See also Com. v. Stevens, 1 Mass. 203. To this rule there has been evolved an exception. This exception, as we have said, is that where the publication or mailing of obscene matter is charged by a grand jury, such matter need not be stated in the indictment, provided in that instrument it be referred to and identified. Under the ruling now announced, it seems to us that the exception is made to destroy the rule, and that an indictment is held to be valid even although it makes no reference whatever to the matter relied on to show guilt. Thus the qualification as to the identifying reference by which alone the exception is justified disappears, and the result *logically leads to the recognition of [48] the right of a grand jury to present without stating or referring to the facts upon which its presentment is made, and also concedes the power of a prosecuting officer to supply matter in an indictment, and thus make that which is absolutely void a valid instrument. The wisdom of the rule announced in Com. v. McCance was well illustrated by the indictment presented in that case, as it is by the alleged indictment under consideration here. Will it be said that an indictment which charged that an accused published obscene matter contained in twenty volumes of books called the "Encyclopædia Britannica or Americana," giving the title page and followed by the statement that a more minute description would be offensive to morality, would be adequate? And yet what difference would exist, except in degree, between such an indictment and the one here held to be valid? Nor is it logical to say that as an accused has no right to know the secrets of a grand jury room, therefore he is not entitled to be informed as to the matter upon which the grand jury bases its presentment. The Constitution forbids in a certain class of cases prosecution except by indictment, and therefore, to the extent that such knowledge is essential to constitute a valid instrument, the accused is entitled, under the Constitution, to know the secrets of the grand jury room.

If these views as to the necessity of an identifying reference, supported, as we think they are, by the statement of the court in Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 604 [39: 550], and the ruling of the supreme court of Massachusetts in Com. v. McCance, ubi supra, be sound, their application to this case is clear.

The language of the indictment, whilst it identifies the paper as an entirety, fails in any degree to designate what matter therein, whether words or picture, was found to be obscene by the grand jury, and upon which their presentment was made. It is impossible from the mere description of the title page of the paper, and the averment that it contains twelve pages and was published on a particular day, to in any way ascertain what part, whether pictures or print, contained in the twelve pages, was acted on by the grand *jury. [49] In other words, using the identification of the paper given by the indictment, the mind looks in vain for any reference to the particular things found in the paper which were considered as within the statute.

Nor can it be correctly said that the alleged indictment under consideration charged that each and every part of the newspaper was obscene, and therefore the grand jury found the whole paper was of that character, thus identifying the whole. It will be seen from an examination of the indictment, that its language expressly charges that only portions of the publication to which it refers are obscene. The paper to which the indictment relates is twelve pages of the ordinary size of illustrated papers, with a title page as described in the indictment. Three of its pages are devoted to advertisements; all the other pages, except the sixth and seventh, contained pictures and printed matter. The excepted pages contain only pictures which are blackened over in part so as seemingly to conceal them, and yet leaving enough unblackened to suggest the subject which they depict. The eighth page has similar pictures along with the printed matter. After describing the title page of the paper and the picture thereon, the indictment says: "and the said paper consists of twelve pages, minute descriptions of which with the pictures therein and thereon would be offensive to the court and improper to spread upon the records of the court, because of their obscene, lewd, and indecent matters." This is not an allegation that the entire contents of the publication were obscene, because if that was intended there would be no necessity of referring to a "minute description" of the paper as essential to disclose the obscene matter. It can, reasonably, only bear the construction that the publication was claimed to be obscene because of "obscene, lewd, and indecent matters" appearing somewhere in the publication. It is evident, therefore, that particular matter contained in the twelve pages was contemplated, and that the indictment furnishes no means for ascertaining in what this matter consists, by reference or otherwise.

It is clear that the defenses here advanced, if 50 they be well founded, assert, *not that the indictment is formally defective, but that it fails on its face to state an offense. The defect is therefore not one of form under Rev. Stat. § 1025. On both principle and authority such error goes to the existence of the indictment, and consequently is essentially one of substance. Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1 [30: 849]. This is especially applicable to a case where, by the Constitution, the accused cannot be prosecuted except on presentment by a grand jury. That the mere silence or acquiescence of the accused cannot deprive him of his constitutional right is obvious. In Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574 [28: 262], speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, the court said (p. 579 [265]):

"We are of opinion that it was not within the power of the accused or his counsel to dispense with the statutory requirements as to his personal presence at the trial. The argument to the contrary necessarily proceeds upon the ground that he alone is concerned as to the mode by which he may be deprived of his life or liberty, and that the chief object of the prosecution is to punish him for the crime charged. But this is a mistaken view as well of the relations which the accused holds to the public as of the end of human punishment. The natural life, says Blackstone, 'cannot be legally disposed of or destroyed by any individual, neither by the person himself, nor by any other of his fellow creatures, merely upon their own authority.' 1 Bl. Com. 144. The public has an interest in his life and liberty. Neither can be lawfully taken except in the mode prescribed by law. That which the law makes essential in proceedings involving the deprivation of life or liberty cannot be dispensed with or affected by the consent of the accused, much less by his mere failure, when on trial and in custody, to object to unauthorized methods. The great end of punishment is not the expiation or atonement of the offense committed, but the prevention of future offenses of the same kind. 4 Bl. Com. 11. Such being the relation which the citizen holds to the public, and the object of punishment for public wrongs, the legislature has deemed it essential to the protection of one whose life or liberty is involved in a prosecution for felony, that he shall be personally present at the *trial, that is, at every [51 stage of the trial when his substantial rights may be affected by the proceedings against him. If he be deprived of his life or liberty without being so present, such deprivation would be without that due process of law required by the Constitution."

Doubtless it was like reasoning which caused the court in Com. v. Mahar, 16 Pick. 120, to refuse, in a capital case, to allow an amendment as to a matter of substance, even with the consent of the prisoner, and which also made the court in Com. v. McCance, 164 Mass. 162, 29 L. R. A. 61, set aside the verdict against the accused. In accord with this view is the doctrine which denies the power, even by statute, to authorize amendments which substantially change an indictment. The result of the authorities to this effect is thus stated by Bishop: "If, in a case where the Constitution gives the defendant the right to be tried by an indictment, the legislature should undertake to authorize such amendments as leave the indictment no longer the finding of the grand jury, an amendment under it would oust the jurisdiction of the court, and the cause must stop. Such is the substance of the authorities, though the doctrine is not always stated in these words." 1 Bish. New Crim. Proc. § 97, p. 55, and authorities there cited; Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 90, subs. 2, and authorities there cited. The legislative authority not being competent to authorize an amendment so as to convert a void into a valid indictment, surely a prosecuting officer can have no such power.

The indictment being, as we think, fatally defective in failing to state an offense, which defect could not be supplied in the court below, and cannot be so supplied here without converting an absolutely void into a valid indictment, and thus violate the Constitution, which secures the accused an immunity from prosecution except upon presentment by a grand jury, the verdict and judgment should be reversed.

Re GEORGE F. EMBLEN, Petitioner. [52

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 52-57.)

Writ of mandamus, when not issued—claimant of public land.

1. A writ of mandamus will not be issued in favor of a claimant of land, to compel the Secretary of NOTE.—As to when mandamus will issue, see note to M'Cluney v. Silhiman, 4: 263.

As to pre-emption rights, see note to United States v. Fitzgerald, 10: 785.

That patents for land may be set aside for fraud, see note to Miller v. Kerr, 5: 381.

As to errors in surveys and descriptions in patents for lands, how construed, see note to Watts v. Lindsay, 5: 423.

the Interior to proceed with the hearing of a contest in which he has suspended the proceedings, where a patent for the land has been issued to the other claimant pursuant to an act of Congress confirming his entry and directing that the patent issue, even if that act was unconstitutional.

2. The only remedy of a claimant of public land where a patent has been actually issued to a rival claimant is by bill in equity to charge the latter with a trust in his favor.

[No. 9, Original.]

Argued December 16, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

PETITION for writ of mandamus to the Secretary of the Interior to hear and decide a contest between George F. Emblen and George F. Weed, as to a quarter-section of land in Colorado. Mandamus denied.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a petition of George F. Emblen for a writ of mandamus to the Secretary of the Interior to hear and decide a contest between Emblen and George F. Weed as to a quarter-section of land in Colorado. The petition alleged the following facts:

In February, 1885, and long before, the land in question, situated in the Denver land district, Colorado, was a part of the unappropriated public domain, suitable for agricultural purposes, and subject to entry and purchase under the pre-emption and homestead laws. On February 26, 1885, Weed filed in the land office of that district a declaratory statement under oath, as required by the pre-emption laws, alleging his settlement upon the land and his purpose to occupy and cultivate it, and to acquire title to it under those laws. On September 19, 1885, the register and receiver of the district received from Weed final proofs of settlement, improvement, and other essential facts, and the government price, and issued to him a cash entry certificate of purchase, entitling him in due course to a patent for the land.

On October 4, 1888, before any patent had been issued, Emblen filed a protest in that office against the issue of a patent to Weed for the land in question, alleging fraud, misrepresentation, and perjury on Weed's part touching his settlement, occupation, and purpose, and demanding a hearing thereon, and asking to be allowed all the rights of a contestant under the act of May 14, 1880, chap. 89. 21 Stat. at L. 140. On May 21, 1889, the register and receiver, [53] after hearing evidence and arguments, dismissed the protest and contest. Emblen appealed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, on February 20, 1890, reversed the decision, and held Weed's entry for cancellation. Meanwhile the town of Yuma had been built upon the land, and Weed and the board of trustees of Yuma petitioned for a rehearing, which was granted by the Commissioner.

Shortly afterwards a new land district was created, with offices at Akron, Colorado. The land being in this district, the rehearing was transferred to the register and receiver thereof. Emblen protested on the ground that the receiver was interested personally in the result of the contest, because he claimed ownership of a portion of the land by a conveyance from Weed. The protest was overruled, and Emblen refusing to appear before the register, or to submit to his jurisdiction, an ex parte hearing was had, and a decision was rendered on November 4, 1890, in favor of Weed, dismissing the contest, and was affirmed on successive appeals to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to the Secretary of the Interior. On August 25, 1893, the Secretary of the Interior granted a petition of Emblen for a rehearing upon newly discovered evidence, and expressed the opinion that the proceedings before the register and receiver at Akron were invalid.

Before such rehearing was had, Congress passed the act of December 29, 1894, chap. 15, confirming Weed's entry, and directing that a patent issue to him for the land. 28 Stat. at L. 599. In February, 1895, a patent was accordingly issued to Weed; and the Secretary of the Interior, solely by reason of the passage of this act, suspended all proceedings in the contest, and declined to authorize or direct any further hearing, trial, or consideration thereof.

The petitioner further alleged that in good faith and in reliance upon the acts of Congress and the regulations of the land department, he had spent in this contest years of labor and large sums of money; that he desired that the contest proceed to final adjudication and disposition; and that, should he succeed therein, it was his purpose to claim and to exercise his preference, *right of entry, and purchase of the land, [54 as by law authorized and provided.

The prayer of the petition was that the act of Congress be declared unconstitutional and void; that the patent to Weed be likewise declared void, because issued without warrant or authority in law; and "that a writ of mandamus issue, directed to the Secretary of the Interior, requiring him to proceed to the final adjudication and disposition of said contest, in accordance with the general acts of Congress and the rules and regulations of the land department, in that behalf made and provided."

Mr. Henry B. O'Reilly, for petitioner:

At the time of the passage of this act the land in question had been segregated from the mass of the public domain; it was no longer any part of the territory or property of the United States; it was in fact and in law private property.

Wilcox v. Jackson, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 498 (10: 264); United States v. Turner, 54 Fed. Rep. 228; Reichert v. Felps, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 160 (18: 849); Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629 (28: 1123); United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 146 U. S. 570 (36: 1191); Bardon v. Northern P. R. Co. 145 U. S. 535 (36: 806).

The act is void as an unprecedented and unwarranted interference with the judicial proceedings of a tribunal lawfully established while actually engaged, within the sphere of its lawful authority, in the determination of a controversy touching the respective rights of individuals to certain property.

Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch. 87 (3: 162); Astiazaran v. Santa Rita Land & Min. Co. 148 U. S. 80 (37: 376); Steel v. St. Louis Smelt. & Ref. Co. 106 U. S. 447 (27: 226); Germania Iron Co. v. United States, 58 Fed.

Rep. 334; Marqucz v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 473 (25: 800); Casey v. Vassor, 50 Fed. Rep. 258.

The act is void as an unprecedented and unlawful attempt, by special act, to deprive petitioner of a very valuable right and exclusive privilege secured to him and to his heirs, by general laws then and still in full force, upon the faith of which he had expended, as by law required, much time and money. It was an endeavor to abrogate a contractual, if not a vested, right secured to petitioner upon compliance with, and in pursuance of, lawful acts of Congress.

Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330 (23: 424); Reichert v. Felps, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 160 (18: 849); Stoddard v. Chambers, 43 U. S. 2 How. 284 (11: 269).

If the act be void, the patent issued thereunder upon the sole authority thereof must necessarily be void.

Earl of Leicester v. Heydon, Plowd. 384.

If the act of Congress be void it is within the power of the proper court, in this proceeding, so to declare.

McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1 (36: 869); Louisiana Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 541 (23: 628); Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 738, 859 (6: 204, 233); Poindexter v. Greenhow ("Virginia Coupon Cases") 114 U. S. 270 (29: 185); Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425 (30: 178); Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678 (32: 253).

If the act be void, and the secretary declines to proceed with this contest solely on account thereof, mandamus is the proper remedy to require him to reinstate said cause and to proceed with the judicial disposition thereof in due course.

Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653 (37: 1211); McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1 (36: 869); New York L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 251 (8: 949); Ex parte Morgan, 114 U. S. 174 (29: 136); Livingston v. Dorgenois, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 577 (3: 444).

As the proper disposition of this land contest requires the exercise of judicial consideration and judgment; as from such judgment there is no relief by appeal, error, certiorari, or other remedy; and as this court is vested with a supervisory authority over inferior tribunals, it may, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, grant the relief prayed for herein.

Ex parte Crane, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 190 (8: 92); Ex parte Morgan, supra.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for respondent:

This being an original application for a writ of mandamus against an officer of the executive department of the government, this court is without jurisdiction.

Re Green, 141 U. S. 325 (35: 765); Marbury v. Madison, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch. 137 (2: 60); M'Cluny v. Silliman, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 369 (4: 263); Ex parte Crane, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 190 (8: 92); Ex parte Bradley, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 364 (19: 214); Ex parte Newman, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 152 (20: 877); Ex parte Virginia ("Virginia v. Rives"), 100 U. S. 313 (25: 667).

The act which the Secretary of the Interior is asked to perform is not a mere ministerial act within the meaning of the authorities, and therefore mandamus is not a proper remedy.

161 U. S.

Kendall v. United States, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 524 (9: 1181); Decatur v. Paulding, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 497 (10: 559); United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378 (26: 167); Butterworth v. United States, 112 U. S. 50 (28: 656); Holloway v. Whitely, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 522 (18: 335); United States v. Black, 128 U. S. 40 (32: 354).

In a mandamus proceeding against an executive officer, it is a complete defense that the performance of the duty involves the exercise of discretion, either in construction of an ambiguous law (Brashear v. Mason, 47 U. S. 6 How. 92, 102 (12: 357, 361); Reeside v. Walker, 52 U. S. 11 How. 272, 289 (13: 693, 700); United States v. Guthrie, 58 U. S. 17 How. 284, 304, (15: 102, 106); United States v. Lamar, 116 U. S. 423 (29: 677); United States v. Lynch, 137 U. S. 280, 286 (34: 700, 703); Gaines v. Thompson, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 347 (19: 62)), or in examinations of parol evidence or affidavits. United States v. Seaman, 58 U. S. 17 How. 225 (15: 226); United States v. Edwards, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 563 (18: 692); Cox v. United States, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 298 (19: 579).

Even where the act is purely ministerial it will not be directed in a case of doubtful right.

United States v. Windom, 137 U. S. 636 (34: 811).

In the appellate jurisdiction over inferior courts, court officers, etc., there is no rule confining mandamus to ministerial acts; it is commonly used to compel the performance of duties involving discretion, exercise of discretion being directed, but not controlled.

Ex parte Taylor, 55 U. S. 14 How. 3 (14: 302); Ex parte Flippin, 94 U. S. 348 (24: 194); Ex parte Burtis, 103 U. S. 238 (26: 392).

But executive discretion can be neither directed nor controlled.

United States v. Windom, supra; United States v. Blaine, 139 U. S. 306 (35: 183).

Petitioner cannot have a writ of mandamus because, if his rights have been violated, he has another remedy. Mandamus issues only when there is no other legal remedy.

Cox v. United States, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 298 (19: 579); Boyard v. United States, 127 U. S. 246 (32: 116); Ex parte Pennsylvania Co. 137 U. S. 451 (34: 738); United States v. Windom, 137 U. S. 636 (34: 811); Morrison v. United States Dist. Ct. 147 U. S. 14 (37: 60); Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 277 (39: 424).

Petitioner has no vested rights.

Frisbie v. Whitney, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 187 (19: 668); Hutchings v. Low ("Yosemite Valley Case") 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 77 (21: 82); Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330 (23: 424); Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 575 (24: 1130); Buxton v. Traver, 130 U. S. 232 (32: 920); Campbell v. Wade, 132 U. S. 34 (33: 240).

The power of Congress over the public lands is unbounded so long as the claims of private persons thereto remain inchoate.

Frisbie v. Whitney, supra; United States v. Vallejo, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 541 (17: 232).

Mandamus is a writ directed against respondent as an individual, not in his official capacity.

United States v. Boutwell, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 604 (21: 721); United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378 (26: 167).

Messrs. S. M. Stockslager and George C. Heard for the Lincoln Land Company (by special leave).

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an attempt to use a writ of mandamus to the Secretary of the Interior as a writ of error to review his acts, and to draw into the jurisdiction of the courts matters which are within the exclusive cognizance of the land department.

By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2273: "When two or more persons settle on the same tract of land, the right of pre-emption shall be in him who made the first settlement, provided such person conforms to the other provision of the law; and 56] all *questions as to the right of pre-emption arising between different settlers shall be determined by the register and receiver of the district within which the land is situated; and appeals from the decision of the district officers, in cases of contest for the right of pre-emption, shall be made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose decision shall be final, unless appeal therefrom be taken to the Secretary of the Interior."

By the act of May 14, 1880, chap. 89, § 2: "In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancelation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancelation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands." 21 Stat. at L. 141.

The contest between Emblen and Weed was conducted in accordance with these statutes. After the last decision of the register and receiver, affirmed by the commissioner of the General Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior, in favor of Weed, and after the Secretary of the Interior had granted a petition of Emblen for a rehearing, and before the rehearing had been had, Congress passed an act confirming Weed's entry, and directing that a patent issue to him for the land in controversy. The Secretary of the Interior thereupon suspended the pending proceedings, and declined to authorize any further hearing of the contest; and a patent was actually issued to Weed before this petition for a writ of mandamus was filed.

Such being the state of the case, it is quite clear that (even if the act of Congress was unconstitutional, which we do not intimate) the writ of mandamus prayed for should not be granted. The determination of the contest between the claimants of conflicting rights of pre-emption, as well as the issue of a patent to either, was within the general jurisdiction and authority of the land department, and cannot be controlled or restrained by mandamus or injunction. After the patent has once been issued the original contest is no longer within the jurisdiction of the land department. The patent conveys the legal title to the patentees, and cannot 57] be revoked or set aside, except upon judicial proceedings instituted in behalf of the United States. The only remedy of Emblen is by bill in equity to charge Weed with a trust in his favor. All this is clearly settled by previous decisions of this court, including some of those on which the petitioner most relies. Johnson v. Towsley, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 72 [20: 485]; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530 [24: 848];

Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 473 [25: 800]; St. Louis Smelt. & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636 [26: 875]; Steel v. St. Louis Smelt. & Ref. Co., 106 U. S. 447 [27: 226]; Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 47 [37: 72]; Turner v. Sawyer, 150 U. S. 578, 586 [37: 1189, 1191].

Writ of mandamus denied.

CHARLES C. HARRISON ET AL., Plffs: in Err.,
v.

HERMANN FORTLAGE ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 57-65.)

Sale of goods to be shipped—transshipment—insurable interest.

1. A contract for goods "to be shipped" by a specified vessel at a price per pound "ex ship," with a provision for a fair allowance if "sea-damaged," and saying "no arrival, no sale," does not make the arrival of the goods on the vessel named a condition precedent, where a portion of them are transhipped at an intermediate port because of a disaster to the vessel.
2. By the maritime law as understood in England, the master, from the necessity of the case, has the right, and by our law the duty, in case of disaster to his ship, to tranship the goods and send them on by another vessel, if one can be had.
3. The purchaser of the goods under such contract had an insurable interest in them by reason of the title which would accrue to him upon arrival and delivery, and of the injury which he might suffer by a previous loss of the goods.

[No. 14.]

Argued November 13, 1894. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to review a judgment in favor of Hermann Fortlage et al., plaintiffs, against Charles C. Harrison et al., for breach of contract for refusing to receive goods sold, and for damages. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action of assumpsit brought April 22, 1890, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, by Hermann Fortlage and others, aliens, partners under the name of A. Tesdorpf & Company, against Charles C. Harrison and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, partners under the name of "Harrison, Frazier, & Company," upon a contract in writing for the purchase of 2,500 tons of sugar. The facts admitted or proved at the trial were as follows:

*The plaintiffs' agent signed and the de- [58

NOTE.—As to liability of carrier by water for loss or damage to goods, see note to Raymond v. Tyson, 15: 47.

As to lien of the contract of affreightment on the vessel and for damages to goods, see note to The Freeman v. Buckingham, 15: 341.

As to damages for marine torts, see notes to The Amiable Nancy, 4: 456; and United States v. The Nuestra Senora de Regla, 27: 662.

fendants accepted a contract in writing in the following terms:

New York, June 22, 1889.

Messrs. Harrison, Frazier, & Co., Philadelphia.

Dear Sirs: I have this day sold you, for account of Mess. A. Tesdorpf & Co., of London, about 2,500 tons superior Iloilo sugars, usual assortment ($\frac{1}{3}$ No. 1, $\frac{1}{3}$ No. 2, and $\frac{1}{3}$ No. 3), shipping or to be shipped during this month from the Philippines to Philadelphia, per steamer Empress of India, at 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. per pound ex ship, net landed weights, 2 per cent tare, cash, less 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, in ten days from average date of discharge.

Sea damaged, if any, to be taken at a fair allowance.

No arrival, no sale.

Should the steamer, through any unforeseen circumstance, such as accidents of the seas, stress of weather, etc., be unable to load these sugars within the time specified, and the sellers cannot secure other steam tonnage to load in June, this contract is to be void.

The words "ex ship," as used in this contract, were understood in the trade to mean that the buyer receives the goods at the tackle of the ship, the seller paying the freight and duty, and the buyer paying all charges of landing after the goods leave the ship's tackle.

The plaintiffs were merchants, and the defendants, as the plaintiffs knew, were refiners of sugar, and bought this sugar for use in their regular business.

The sugar was shipped at the Philippine islands in bags, in the amount, quality, and assortment, and within the time, specified in the contract, on the steamer Empress of India, which was then seaworthy and fit in every particular for her voyage, and which sailed for Philadelphia, via the Suez canal, June 23, 1889. The usual length of the voyage was three months, unless prolonged by accident or by perils of the sea.

On August 21, 1889, the Empress of India, while at anchor at Port Said, was, without her fault, run into by another steamer and so much damaged as to be obliged to land her cargo [59] *and to go to Alexandria to be repaired. After being repaired and reloading her cargo, she sailed from Port Said, November 30, 1889, and in crossing the Atlantic met with extraordinarily rough weather, and was forced to put into Bermuda, January 5, 1890, and there, upon the recommendation of surveyors, and in order to enable her to proceed on her voyage with safety, discharged 700 tons of the sugar.

On February 11, 1890, she arrived at Philadelphia, with the remaining 1,800 tons of the sugar on board. The 700 tons were forwarded from Bermuda by another steamer, which arrived at Philadelphia, March 3, 1890.

The plaintiffs tendered all the sugar to the defendants, and they refused to receive any of it, upon the sole ground that the contract required the sugar to be brought to Philadelphia in the Empress of India, and therefore the plaintiffs had not performed the contract.

The sugar was sold, by agreement of the parties, and for whom it might concern, for less than the contract price; and it was admitted that, if the plaintiffs were entitled to recover at all, the measure of damages was the sum of $63,098, the difference between the contract price and the proceeds of the sale.

The circuit court instructed the jury that the plaintiffs were not required by the contract to do more than they had done, and that the defendants were not warranted in declining to receive the sugar; and the jury, by direction of the court, returned a verdict for the plaintiffs for the sum claimed and interest, upon which judgment was rendered. The defendants excepted to the instruction and direction of the court, and sued out this writ of error.

Mr. John G. Johnson, for plaintiffs in error:

An arrival by the Empress of India was a condition precedent.

Johnson v. Macdonald, 9 Mees. & W. 603; Neldon v. Smith, 36 N. J. L. 154; Stockdale v. Dunlop, 6 Mees. & W. 233; Idle v. Thornton, 3 Campb. 274.

Arrival extends to both vessel and cargo, where there is a named vessel.

Bowes v. Shand, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 455.

Intentionally to divert the goods would be a fraud on the contract, if the seller's object was to avoid his obligation to deliver.

Hawes v. Humble, 2 Campb. 327.

If arrival by the ship is the condition, the seller is discharged altogether by the misfortune to that ship.

Idle v. Thornton, supra; Lovatt v. Hamilton, 5 Mees. & W. 639; Hale v. Rawson, 4 C. B. N. S. 85; Shields v. Pettie, 4 N. Y. 122; Johnson v. Macdonald, 9 Mees. & W. 600.

Unless the ship has the goods on board there is no sale.

Stockdale v. Dunlop, 6 Mees. & W. 226;

Lovatt v. Hamilton, 5 Mees. & W. 639.

The delivery by the Trinidad was not a delivery by the Empress of India for the purposes of this contract.

Flanders, Shipping, § 240; Griswold v. New York Ins. Co. 3 Johns. 327, 3 Am. Dec. 490.

If the parties stipulate for delivery by a certain vessel, there can be no other delivery substituted for it.

Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Rhodes, 121 U. S. 255 (30: 920); Coddington v. Paleologo, L. R. 2 Exch. 197.

The contract required the shipment to be on this vessel; hence, any performance consistent with the duty of the owner of that vessel under the charter was a performance for the purchaser as well as for the seller.

Ritchie v. Atkinson, 10 East, 303; Christy v. Row, 1 Taunt. 300.

A master should do that which a wise and prudent man would think most conducive to the benefit of all concerned. The concerned are the persons having an ownership in the goods or entitled to carry them and earn freight, or an insurer.

Gaudet v. Brown ("The Argos") L. R. 5 P. C. 164; Australasian Steam Nav. Co. v. Morse, L. R. 4 P. C. 222.

The master in this case was not an agent of the purchasers.

Notara v. Henderson, L. R. 7 Q. B. 225; Shipton v. Thornton, 9 Ad. & El. 314.

After abandonment of the ship the contract to tranship is not made as agent for the underwriter on the ship, for that has ceased to exist; it is on behalf of his owners to enable them to earn the agreed freight.

Hickie v. Rodocanachi, 4 Hurlst. & N. 455; Matthews v. Gibbs, 7 Jur. N. S. 186.

The master is the agent, first, of the owner of the goods, and, second, of the owners of the ship; certainly not of the person entitled to buy them if they arrive.

Vlierboom v. Chapman, 13 Mees. & W. 230; The Industrie [1894] Prob. Div. 69; The Soblomsten, L. R. 1 A. & E. 293; Chitty, Carr. 160, 201, 202.

The right to tranship is now frequently inserted in contracts to arrive, thus showing the sellers here had no such right under this contract.

Neillworth v. Hutchinson, 2 Q. B. 446; Neill v. Whitworth, L. R. 1 C. P. 684-686.

If the arrival of the goods is the one condition, the mode of getting them there is immaterial. If the mode constituted a part of the condition the legitimacy of a substituted mode has nothing to do with it.

Plantamour v. Staples, 1 T. R. 611, note.

Mutuality is the only consideration for the obligation to deliver.

Vernede v. Weber, 1 Hurlst. & N. 311; Searle v. Scovell, 4 Johns. Ch. 224; Iasigi v. Rosenstein, 65 Hun, 591; 3 Kent, Com. 212.

Messrs. William Allen Butler and Wilhelmus Mynderse, for defendants in error:

Where a contract contains all the terms of purchase and sale binding upon the parties respectively, and is free from any ambiguity, its construction is for the court.

Bowes v. Shand, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 455; Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510 (35: 837).

The words "ex ship," when connected with the stipulated price of a commodity sold, indicate, in their commercial use, merely that all expenses incurred up to the time the goods leave the ship's tackle are to be borne by the seller, and that all expenses incurred after that time are to be borne by the buyer.

Johnson v. Macdonald, 9 Mees. & W. 600; Neill v. Whitworth, 18 C. B. N. S. 435.

The purchaser has a right to insist on performance by the seller of the contract terms relating to the shipment, as condition precedent of the seller's right to enforce the contract, and where time is the essence of the contract, and delivery delayed by the breach as to shipment, such consequent delay in delivery is a material fact.

Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188 (29: 366); Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Rhodes, 121 U. S. 255 (30: 920); Hoare v. Rennie, 5 Hurlst. & N. 19; Bowes v. Shand, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 445; Reuter v. Sala, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 239; Welsh v. Gossler, 89 N. Y. 540.

The same principle is applied where the contract by its terms calls for delivery or successive deliveries at a specified time.

Coddington v. Paleologo, L. R. 2 Exch. 193; King Philip Mills v. Slater, 12 R. I. 82, 34 Am. Rep. 603; Tyers v. Rosedale & F. Iron Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 195.

In the case at bar there is no question of the performance by the sellers of the terms of the contract of sale as to shipment within the designated time.

The plaintiffs below having fully performed the contract in respect to the shipment, the defendants below were bound by the contract to accept delivery of the sugars on their arrival at Philadelphia and as they arrived, notwithstanding that they did not all arrive by the Empress of India, but that a part arrived by the Trinidad.

Neill v. Whitworth, 18 C. B. N. S. 435, L. R. 1 C. P. 684.

The entirety of the contract was not destroyed by the circumstance that the subject of the sale was of such a character as to be divisible.

Mansfield v. Trigg, 113 Mass. 250.

There is no question here of successive deliveries under a contract calling for such deliveries at stipulated times.

Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188 (29: 366); Bowes v. Shand, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 455; Cunningham v. Judson, 100 N. Y. 179.

In the construction of commercial contracts effect must be given to the entire contract, according to the intent of the parties as expressed in the language used by them according to its ordinary meaning, and it cannot be contradicted, varied, or enlarged by interpretation.

Robbins v. Clark, 127 U. S. 622 (32: 293); Coddington v. Paleologo, L. R. 2 Exch. 167; Hoare v. Rennie, 5 Hurlst. & N. 19.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question is whether the contract between the parties required all the sugar to be brought to Philadelphia in the Empress of India, upon which it was originally shipped. This depends upon the meaning of the terms of the writing in which the parties must be assumed to have embodied and expressed their whole intention, and to have defined all the conditions of the contract. The court is not at liberty, either to disregard words used by the parties, descriptive of the subject-matter, or of any material incident, or to insert words which the parties have not made use of. Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188 [29: 366]; Filley v. Pope, 115 U. S. 213 [29: 372]; Watts v. Cumors, 115 U. S. 353 [29: 406]; Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Rhodes, 121 U. S. 255 [30: 920]; Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510 [35: 837]; Bowes v. Shand, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 455; Welsh v. Gossler, 89 N. Y. 540; Cunningham v. Judson, 100 N. Y. 179; Iasigi v. Rosenstein, 141 N. Y. 414.

This contract was made in June, 1889, for the sale of sugar described as "shipping or to be shipped during this month from the Philippines to Philadelphia, per steamer Empress of India." A contract "to ship by" a certain vessel for a particular voyage ordinarily means simply "to put on board," not including the subsequent carriage; and there is nothing in this contract to show that a different meaning was in the contemplation of the parties.

*The words "ex ship" are not restricted [64] to any particular ship, and by the usage of merchants, as shown in this case, simply denote that the property in the goods shall pass to the buyer upon their leaving the ship's tackle, and that he shall be liable for all subsequent charges of landing. They do not constitute a condition of the contract, but are inserted for the benefit of the seller. See Neill v. Whitworth, 18 C. B. N. S. 435, and L. R. 1 C. P. 684.

The clause "sea-damaged, if any, to be taken at a fair allowance," contemplates the risk of damage to the goods by perils of the sea, and does not restrict to any particular ship the subsequent transportation of such goods to their destination.

In the clause "no arrival, no sale," the word "arrival" evidently refers, as the word "sale" must necessarily refer, to the goods which are the subject of the contract, and not to the particular vessel on which they are shipped; and the whole effect of the clause is that, if the goods never arrive at their destination, the buyers acquire no property in them, and do not become liable to the sellers for the price.

The remaining clause, which provides that if the Empress of India, by unforeseen accident, is unable to load in June, and the sellers cannot secure another steamer during that month, the contract is to be void, touches the matter of loading only. The contract fixes no limitation of time in any other respect.

The contract nowhere requires that the sugar shall arrive at Philadelphia by the Empress of India, and essentially differs in this respect from the cases cited at the bar, of contracts for the sale of goods "to arrive" by, or "on the arrival" of, a ship named, as in Lovatt v. Hamilton, 5 Mees. & W. 639; Johnson v. Macdonald, 9 Mees. & W. 600; and Hale v. Rawson, 4 C. B. N. S. 85. A particular ship being designated as to the putting on board only, and not as to the arrival, it is not to be inferred that the goods must be carried to their destination in the same ship.

The sugar in question having been put on board the Empress of India, and the conditions of the contract thus satisfied, so far as that ship was concerned, the subsequent transportation and delivery of the goods were to be governed [65] by the *general rules of the maritime law. By that law, as understood in England, the master, from the necessity of the case, had the right, and, by our law, the duty, in case of disaster to his ship, to tranship the goods and send them on by another vessel, if one could be had. The Maggie Hammond v. Morland, 76 U.S. 9 Wall. 435, 458 [19:772, 780]; 3 Kent, Com. 212.

In the able argument for the plaintiffs in error it was admitted that the rule that the master in case of necessity is the agent of all concerned applied to the seller, who was the owner, and to the insurer, and to any one having an insurable interest in the goods; but it was contended that the plaintiffs in error, before the arrival of the goods, had no insurable interest therein, and Stockdale v. Dunlop, 6 Mees. & W. 224, was relied on as decisive of this. But that case was decided upon the single ground that there the contract for the sale of goods was oral, and therefore incapable of being enforced. It is well settled that any person has an insurable interest in property, by the existence of which he will gain an advantage, or by the destruction of which he will suffer a loss, whether he has or has not any title in, or lien upon, or possession of, the property itself. In the present case, the plaintiffs in error, under a valid contract in writing, had 161 U. S. an insurable interest, by reason of the title which would accrue to them upon arrival and delivery, and of the injury which they might suffer by a previous loss of the goods. Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 509, 513 [18:524, 526]; Filley v. Pope, 115 U. S. 213, 220 [29:372, 373]; Wilson v. Jones, L. R. 2 Exch. 131, 151; 3 Kent, Com. 276.

Judgment affirmed.

AMANDA W. FRANCE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOHN W. CONNOR ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 65-72.)

Territorial law as to dower.

The abolition of dower by the Wyoming territorial statute of December 10, 1889, is not annulled or superseded by the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, chap. 397, § 18, conferring and regulating the right of dower. Said § 18 applies to the territory of Utah only, and not to the other territories of the United States.

[No. 63.]

Argued May 2, 3, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Wyoming to review a judgment of that court affirming a judgment for defendants in a proceeding for the assignment of dower in lands in the county of Carbon, in said territory, brought by Amanda W. France, plaintiff, against John W. Connor et al. Affirmed.

See same case below, 3 Wyo. 445.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

*This was a petition for the assignment [66 and setting off of dower in lands in the county of Carbon and territory of Wyoming, filed April 1, 1889, in the district court for that county, and alleging that the plaintiff on February 7, 1887, intermarried with James France, then and until his death a resident and citizen of that county and territory; that he died August 21, 1888, intestate, leaving the plaintiff his widow, and having been seised, during the marriage, of an estate of inheritance in lands situated in that county, and fully described in the petition; that, upon his death, the plaintiff, by virtue of the marriage, became entitled to dower in these lands, which had never been assigned or set off to her, and which she had never received any compensation or equivalent for, or at any time lawfully released her right to; that on March 16, 1888, he, being insolvent, made an assignment, according to the laws of the territory, to the defendants for the benefit of his creditors, of all his property, including these lands; and the defendants took and since held possession of these lands, and refused to assign and set off to the plaintiff her dower therein. The defendants filed a general demurrer, which was sustained, and judgment entered for the defendants.

The plaintiff filed a petition in error in the supreme court of the territory, which, upon the admission of the state of Wyoming into the Union, was entered and argued in the supreme court of the state, and the judgment affirmed upon the ground that the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, chap. 397, § 18, did not apply to the territory of Wyoming. 3 Wyo. 445. The plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

NOTE.—As to dower, how barred, see note to Birrett v. Failing, 28:505.

Messrs. A. B. Browne, Charles N. Potter, and A. T. Britton for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Samuel Shellabarger and Melville C. Brown for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

[67] *By a statute of the territory of Wyoming, passed December 10, 1869, and embodied in the subsequent codes of the territory, "dower and the tenancy by the curtesy are abolished, and neither husband nor wife shall have any share in the estate of the other, save as herein provided." Wyo. Stat. 1869, chap. 41, § 1; Comp. Laws of 1876, chap. 42, § 1; Rev. Stat. of 1887, § 2221.

The single question in this case is whether this provision of the territorial statute has been annulled or superseded by § 18 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, chap. 397, conferring and regulating the right of dower; or, in other words, whether this section applies to the territory of Utah only, or extends to all the territories of the United States. In order to determine this question, it becomes necessary to consider the scope and the connection of the various parts of the act. 24 Stat. at L. 635.

The act is entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act to Amend § 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in Reference to Bigamy, and for Other Purposes,' approved March 22, 1882."

Sections 1 and 2 relate to testimony in prosecutions for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation; §§ 3-5 define and punish the offenses of adultery, incest, and fornication. These five sections do not mention the place of commission of any offense, and may perhaps be held to include "any territory, or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction," since so much of the act of March 22, 1882, chap. 47, referred to in the title of this act, as defined and punished offenses, expressly included any such territory or place. 22 Stat. at L. 30. But upon the question whether such provisions apply to the District of Columbia there have been conflicting opinions. United States v. Crawford, 6 Mackey, 319; Knight v. United States, 5 App. D. C.—. And we are not now required to determine the application of those provisions of the act of 1887.

The next three sections of this act are in terms limited to the territory of Utah. Section 6 [68] relates to the institution of *prosecutions for adultery; § 7, to the powers of commissioners of the courts; and § 8, to the powers of the marshal and his deputies as peace officers.

Sections 9 and 10 relate to evidence, by certificate or otherwise, of marriages "in any of the territories of the United States."

Section 11 disapproves and annuls all laws enacted by the legislature of the territory of Utah, providing for or recognizing the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit or to be entitled to any distributive share in the estate of their father, and enacts that no illegitimate child shall hereafter be entitled to inherit from the father, or to receive any distributive share in his estate, unless born within twelve months after the passage of the act, or made legitimate under the act of Congress of March 22, 1882, chap. 47, § 7. See Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 688 [34: 832, 834].

Section 12 disapproves and annuls all statutes of the territory of Utah conferring jurisdiction upon the probate courts, other than over estates of deceased persons, or over guardianships of the persons and property of infants or insane persons, and transfers the jurisdiction so withdrawn to the district courts of the territory.

Section 13 directs that proceedings shall be instituted to forfeit and escheat to the United States property obtained or held by corporations in violation of the act of June 1, 1862, chap. 126, § 3 (12 Stat. at L. 501), or of section 1890 of the Revised Statutes,—each of which provides that "no corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes shall acquire or hold real estate in any territory, during the existence of the territorial government," of a greater value than $50,000,—and that the proceeds of the forfeiture shall be applied to common schools "in the territory in which such property may be;" but that houses of worship, parsonages, and burial grounds shall be exempt from forfeiture. The terms of the acts referred to, as well as those of the section itself, show that it extends to all the territories. And § 14 provides for the discovery of documents in such proceedings "in any territory of the United States."

*Sections 15, 16, and 17 disapprove and [69] annul the acts of the legislature of the territory of Utah, and of the so-called government of the state of Deseret, creating or continuing the Mormon corporations known as "The Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company" and "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." See Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. v. United States, 136 U. S. 1 [34: 478].

Then comes section 18, relating to dower, the extent and effect of which are now in question.

Then follow seven sections, each of which is restricted, in terms, to the territory of Utah: § 19 requires the judges of probate in Utah to be appointed by the President of the United States, with the consent of the Senate, and annuls the laws of Utah providing for their election by the territorial legislature; § 20 makes it unlawful for women to vote at any election in Utah, and annuls all laws of Utah providing for their registration or voting; § 21 annuls all laws of Utah providing for numbering or identifying the votes at elections; § 22 abolishes the election districts and the apportionment of representatives established by the legislature of Utah, provides for new election districts and a new apportionment, and declares that none but citizens of the United States shall be entitled to vote at any election in that territory; § 23 temporarily continues in force in Utah provisions of § 9 of the act of 1882 concerning the registration of voters and the conduct of elections; § 24 requires of voters, officers, and jurors in Utah an oath to obey this act and those of which it is an amendment, and disqualifies those convicted under this act, or under the act of 1882, or guilty of polygamy or of cognate offenses; § 25 abolishes the office of superintendent of schools, created by the laws of Utah, requires a commissioner to be appointed instead by the supreme court of the territory, and prescribes his duties.

Section 26 (which might perhaps have been more appropriately inserted after § 13 or § 14) provides that all religious societies may hold, through trustees nominated and appointed as therein directed, "in a territory," real estate necessary for houses of worship, parsonages, and burial grounds.

70] *The 27th and final section annuls all laws of the so-called state of Deseret, or of the territory of Utah, for the organization of the militia, and requires the militia of Utah to be organized under and subject to the laws of the United States.

The leading provisions of § 18 are as follows:

"(a) A widow shall be endowed of third part of all the lands whereof her husband was seised of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage, unless she shall have lawfully released her right thereto.

"(b) The widow of any alien who at the time of his death shall be entitled by law to hold any real estate, if she be an inhabitant of the territory at the time of such death, shall be entitled to dower of such estate in the same manner as if such alien had been a native citizen."

The whole section was taken from the statutes of the state of New York, with little more than verbal changes, one of which was a substitution of "the territory" for "this state" in the second sentence just cited. N. Y. Rev. Stat. pt. 2, chap. 1, tit. 3, §§ 1-8.

It was argued by the plaintiff in error that these words, "the territory," not being restricted to the territory of Utah, mean any territory in which the land lies of which a widow seeks to be endowed.

To this it was answered that, if such had been the intention of Congress, it would have been expressed, either by such general words as "a territory," or "any territory," or else, as in § 13, by such a definition as "the territory in which such property may be;" and that the words "the territory," without more, in § 18, grammatically and naturally refer to the last antecedent, which is the territory of Utah, mentioned in § 17. But there are broader considerations leading to the same result.

Most of the other sections of the act relate to the territory of Utah only; and, whenever it is intended to include other territories in them, the intention is expressed in so many words, either in the section itself, or in earlier statutes to which it distinctly refers.

71] *Not only the three sections which immediately precede § 18, but the seven sections which immediately follow it, are expressly restricted to the territory of Utah.

The restriction to the territory of Utah of the provisions denying the right of voting to women, in § 20, and to polygamists, in § 24, is the more marked, because women had the right to vote in the territory of Wyoming; (Wyo. Rev. Stat. of 1887, § 1103) and the act of Congress of 1882, referred to in § 24, had prohibited polygamists from voting in any territory of the United States. Act of March 22, 1862, chap. 47, § 8 (22 Stat. at L. 31).

The only section other than § 18 in the act of Congress of 1887, which affects the title that any member of a man's family shall take in his estate, is § 12, enacting that illegitimate children shall take no share by descent or distribution in the estate of the father; and this section is restricted to the territory of Utah, although § 7 of the act of 1882, referred to in the saving clause of this section, legitimated the issue of Mormon marriages "in any territory of the United States." 22 Stat. at L. 31.

The well-known fact that the practice of plural marriages was more common and more firmly rooted in Utah than in any other territory afforded special reasons for protecting the lawful wife and children, by reinstating in that territory the rules of the common law, securing to her the right of dower, not permitting illegitimate children to inherit from their father.

Under the laws of the territory of Utah, as existing at the time of the passage of the act of Congress of 1887, all illegitimate children inherited from their father; no right of dower was allowed; and there was no community of property between husband and wife, but all property acquired by either, before or after marriage, remained his or her separate property absolutely. Utah Comp. Laws of 1876, §§ 677, 1020, 1022.

At the time of the passage of the act of 1887, there were, beside Utah and Wyoming, six other organized territories of the United States—New Mexico, Arizona, Dakota, Montana, Idaho, *and Washington—to all of which § 18 of that act must apply, if it applies to Wyoming. The wife's right of dower in the husband's lands existed in Montana only, and had been expressly abolished by territorial statute in Dakota, Idaho, and Washington. In New Mexico and Arizona, as well as in Idaho and Washington, the law of community of property between husband and wife, derived from the civil law through the laws of Spain and France, prevailed, to a greater or less extent. Martinez v. Lucero, 1 N. M. 208, 216; N. M. Comp. Laws of 1884, §§ 1087, 1422; Charauleau v. Wolfenden, 1 Ariz. 243; Ariz. Comp. Laws of 1877, §§ 1968, 1977; Dak. Civ. Code of 1877, §§ 78, 779; Mont. Stat. Feb. 11, 1876; Idaho Stat. Jan. 6, 1875, §§ 2, 9-11; Wash. Code of 1881, §§ 2400-2412, 2414.

Although Congress has the undoubted power to annul or modify at its pleasure the statutes of any territory of the United States, yet an intention to supersede the local law is not to be presumed unless clearly expressed. Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333 [33: 637]; Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682 [24: 832].

It cannot be presumed that Congress, in an enactment which was peculiarly called for in the territory of Utah, intended to make so important a change in the law of real property in other territories of the United States.

For these reasons, which are substantially those upon which the court below proceeded, its judgment is affirmed.

THOMAS BALL, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JULIA F. HALSELL, Executrix of J. G.
HALSELL, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 72-83.)

Contract to give attorney a share of moneys collected from the government—restriction of compensation.

1. A contract to give an attorney one half of all money which may be received by him for prosecuting a claim against the government on account of Indian depredations, acting under which the attorney had procured a recommendation from the Interior Department for payment, but no appropriations previous to the Indian depredation act of March 3, 1891, does not entitle him, on obtaining judgment in the court of claims under that act, to any compensation for his services except the allowance which the court may make to him in rendering the judgment, since that act expressly declares such contracts void.
2. A restriction of the compensation of attorneys on collection of claims against the United States is one of the terms and conditions which the United States may impose upon its consent to be sued.

[No. 471.]

Submitted December 18, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas to review a judgment for the defendant, Julia F. Halsell, Executrix, in an action brought by Thomas Ball to recover compensation as attorney for prosecuting a claim against the United States on account of Indian depredations and loss of property by means thereof. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action brought August 18, 1893, in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas, by Thomas Ball, a citizen of the state of Virginia, against Julia F. Halsell, a citizen of the state of Texas, residing in that district, and the widow, legatee, and executrix of J. G. Halsell, upon a written contract made with the plaintiff by said Halsell in his lifetime, in these words:

We, the undersigned parties of the first part, do hereby constitute and appoint Thomas Ball our lawful attorney to receive, and to make, sign, and give all necessary acquittances and receipts for, one half of all money which may be received by him as our attorney at law, for prosecuting claims against the United States government, on account of the depredations of the Comanche and Kiowa Indians on our property of horses, mules, and cattle in the state of Texas. Said one half being the amount

NOTE.—As to attorney's compensation contingent on success or from proceeds of suit; a fixed sum or a percentage; purchase of interest in the suit or subject of litigation by attorney,—see note to McMicken v. Perin, 15: 504.

As to construction of written contracts, how far a question for the court, see note to Ward v. United States, 20: 792.

As to lien of an attorney for compensation, see note to Texas v. White, 19: 992.

agreed by us to pay him of all that he may recover of said government for said depredations.

Given under our hands this 22d day of May, A. D. 1874.

J. G. Halsell.

The signature of the contract was admitted. The other material facts, as alleged in the petition and found by the court (to which the parties, waiving a trial by jury, submitted the case), were as follows:

The plaintiff presented to the Department of the Interior in March, 1875, a claim of Halsell, amounting to $24,860, for such depredations, and prosecuted it before the *department. [74 and the department recommended payment of the sum of $19,625 to Halsell for such depredations. No appropriation was made by Congress to pay the sum so awarded. On March 6, 1891, after the passage by Congress of the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 538, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Adjudication and Payment of Claims Arising from Indian Depredations," Ball, acting under his power of attorney, brought a suit in behalf of Halsell, under the provisions of that act, in the court of claims, to recover the sum so awarded by the Department of the Interior; and after the death of Halsell, and the substitution of his executrix as claimant in his stead, judgment was rendered for the sum of $17,720, in her favor, and against the United States and the Kiowa and Comanche tribes of Indians; and by the terms of that judgment the sum of $1,500 was awarded to Ball as the claimant's attorney. Soon afterwards the United States paid this sum to him, and paid the amount of the judgment for $17,720, less this sum, to the executrix.

In the present suit Ball claimed to be entitled to recover, under the contract aforesaid, one half of said amount of $17,720 less the sum of $1,500 paid him.

The defendant in her answer alleged that "the contract described in the plaintiff's petition, if any such was ever made, was declared void by the 9th section of the act of March 3, 1891, of the Congress of the United States, entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Adjudication and Payment of Claims Arising from Indian Depredations;' and by the authority and directions of the same section an allowance, and all that said act permitted to be paid the plaintiff under his said employment was made to the plaintiff in the judgment rendered by said court of claims in favor of this defendant, and was paid to him out of the Treasury of the United States."

Upon the facts above stated, the circuit court made the following conclusion of law: "The court being of opinion that said contract is rendered nugatory, and the provision therein made for compensation for said attorney, Thomas Ball, is superseded by the 9th section of the act of March 3, 1891, and being of opinion that said contract is not *enforceable, and [75 that said statute above referred to fixes and provides for the payment of all the compensation which attorneys prosecuting the claim under said act are entitled to receive, judgment is rendered for the defendant." The plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

Mr. John J. Weed, for plaintiff in error:

The contract between the plaintiff in error and J. G. Halsell, dated May 22, 1874, was a legal contract, and having been fully performed by the plaintiff in error, he was entitled to be paid the compensation therein stipulated to be paid upon such performance.

Wylie v. Coze, 56 U. S. 15 How. 416 (14: 753); Wright v. Tebbitts, 91 U. S. 252 (23: 320); Stanton v. Embry, 93 U. S. 548 (23: 983); Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 46 (28: 64, 65).

The contract between the plaintiff in error and Halsell, being a contract authorized by law, was protected by the Constitution from the effect of any act of Congress which would impair its obligation or deprive the plaintiff in error of such rights of property as were therein secured to him.

Union P. R. Co. v. United States ("Sinking Fund Cases") 99 U. S. 700 (25: 496); Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87 (3: 162); Bowman v. Middleton, 1 Bay, 252; Wilkinson v. Leland, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 627 (7: 542); Terrett v. Taylor, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 43 (3: 650); Ervine's Appeal, 16 Pa. 256, 55 Am. Dec. 499; People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 325; United States v. Klein, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 128 (20: 519).

Such claims, although no provision of law existed for the ascertainment of their validity and amount, constituted such rights of property as are recognized by this court.

Erwin v. United States, 97 U. S. 392 (24: 1065); Comegys v. Vasse, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 193 (7: 108).

A statute which is remedial in its character and provides for the judicial determination of claims against the United States, is neither "an act of grace" a bounty, a gift, nor a donation.

DeGroot v. United States, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 419 (18: 700); United States v. Clyde, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 35 (20: 479); United States v. Anderson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 56 (19: 615).

The acceptance by the plaintiff in error of the sum of $1,500 allowed by the court of claims in its judgment in the case of Halsell v. United States, and its subsequent payment by the United States to the plaintiff, did not render the contract made by Halsell with the plaintiff, not enforceable in the courts of the United States.

Redfield v. United States, 27 Ct. Cl. 473.

The receipt by the plaintiff of the sum of $1,500, allowed by the court of claims and paid by the United States, did not satisfy or discharge the obligations of the defendant in error to the plaintiff under the contract of May 22, 1874.

Bostwick v. United States, 94 U. S. 53 (24: 65).

Messrs. Henry C. Coke and Julia F. Halsell, in person, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

In determining the construction and effect of the contract sued on, it is important to keep in mind the acts of Congress and the decisions of this court bearing upon the subject.

In Kendall v. United States, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 113 [19: 85], certain attorneys in 1843 (before Congress had passed any act regulating assignments of claims against the United States) made an agreement with the representatives of the Western Cherokees, a branch of the Cherokee tribe of Indians, to prosecute a claim of the Western Cherokees against the United States, and to receive directly from the United States 5 per cent of all sums collected upon the claim. By a treaty between the United States and the Cherokee tribe in 1846, it was agreed that certain sums found due to the Western Cherokees should be paid by the United States directly to the heads of families per capita, and should not be assignable. 9 Stat. at L. 874. And by the act of September 30, 1850, chap. 91, making an appropriation of the sum necessary to fulfil that treaty, Congress provided that "in no case shall any money hereby appropriated be paid to any agent of said Indians, or to any other person or persons than the Indian or Indians to whom it is due." 9 Stat. at L. 556. This court held that the attorneys could not maintain a suit in the court of claims to recover, as compensation for their services in procuring the treaty and appropriation, the 5 per cent that the Indians had agreed should be paid to the attorneys by the United States; and, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "We apprehend that the doctrine has never been held that a claim of no fixed amount, nor time or mode of payment, a claim which has never received the assent [78 of the person against whom it is asserted, and which remains to be settled by negotiation or suit at law, can be so assigned as to give the assignor an equitable right to prevent the original parties from compromising or adjusting the claim on any terms that may suit them.

. . . We have no hesitation in saying that the United States, under the circumstances, had the right to make the treaty that was made, without consulting plaintiffs or incurring any liability to them. The act of Congress which appropriated the money only followed the treaty in securing its payment to the individual Indians without deduction for agents. And both the act and the treaty are inconsistent with the payment of any part of the sum thus appropriated to plaintiffs." 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 116-118 [19: 86].

By the act of February 26, 1853, chap. 81, § 1, "all transfers and assignments hereafter made of any claim upon the United States, or any part or share thereof, or interest therein, whether absolute or conditional, and whatever may be the consideration therefor, and all powers of attorney, orders, or other authorities for receiving payment of any such claim, or of any part or share thereof, shall be absolutely null and void, unless the same shall be freely made and executed in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses, after the allowance of such claim, the ascertainment of the amount due, and the issuing of a warrant for the payment thereof." 10 Stat. at L. 170. This section has been re-enacted, in almost the same words, in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3477.

At the first term of this court after the passage of the act of 1853, it was said by this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Grier, that "this act annuls all champertous contracts with agents of private claims." Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 57 U. S. 16 How. 314, 336 [14: 953, 962]. And the act has since been held by this court to include all specific assignments, in whatever form, of any claim against the United States under a statute or treaty, whether to be presented to one of the executive departments, or to be prosecuted in the court of claims; and to make every such assignment void, unless it has been assented to by the United States. United States v. Gillis, 95 U. S. 79 [24: 503]; Spofford v. Kirk*, 97 U. S. 484 [24:1032]; McKnight v. United States, 98 U. S. 179 [25: 115]; St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. United States, 112 U. S. 733 [28: 861]; Hager v. Swayne, 149 U. S. 242, 247 [37: 719, 721].

In Spofford v. Kirk, above cited, the owner of a claim against the United States for military supplies had, before its allowance or the issue of a warrant for its payment, drawn upon the attorneys employed by him to prosecute it an order to pay to a third person a certain sum out of any moneys coming into their hands on account of the claim; the order had been accepted by the drawees, and sold by the payee to a purchaser in good faith for value; and the drawer and acceptors, after the issue of the treasury warrant, declined to admit the validity of the order. It was adjudged that the accepted order, otherwise an equitable assignment, was void, by reason of the statute, and therefore passed no right in the fund, and could not be enforced against the drawer and acceptors.

That decision has never been overruled or questioned by the court, although the act has been held not to apply to general assignments made by a debtor of all his property for the benefit of his creditors, whether under a bankrupt or insolvent law, or otherwise (Erwin v. United States, 97 U. S. 392 [24: 1065]; Goodman v. Niblack, 102 U. S. 556 [26: 229]; Butler v. Goreley, 146 U. S. 303 [36: 981]); nor to enable the original claimant to recover of the United States a sum once paid by the United States to his attorney in fact, holding a power of attorney, made before the allowance of the claim and the issue of the warrant, and remaining unrevoked (Bailey v. United States, 109 U. S. 432 [27: 988]); nor to invalidate a contract of partnership in furnishing supplies to the United States, or a promise by one to another of the partners to pay a sum already due him under the partnership articles, out of money to be received from the United States for such supplies (Hobbs v. McLean, 117 U. S. 567 [29: 940]); nor to affect the right of a mortgagee of real estate leased to the United States, or of a pledgee of the rents thereof, to recover from the mortgagors and pledgeors the amount of rents paid to them by the United States. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Shepherd, 127 U. S. 494 [32: 163].

80 *In the latest case in which the act was considered, the court, speaking by the present Chief Justice, said: "The legislation shows that the intent of Congress was that the assignment of naked claims against the government for the purposes of suit, or in view of litigation or otherwise, should not be countenanced. At common law, the transfer of a mere right to recover in an action at law was forbidden as violating the rule against maintenance and champerty; and, although the rigor of that rule has been relaxed, an assignment of a chose in action will not be sanctioned when it is opposed to any rule of law or public policy." Hager v. Swayne, 149 U. S. 242, 247, 248 [37: 719, 721].

By several decisions of this court, indeed, beginning at December term, 1853, contracts for contingent fees, by which attorneys employed to prosecute claims against the United States were to be allowed a proportion of the amount recovered in case of success, and nothing in case of failure, were held to be lawful and valid. Wylie v. Coxe (1853) 56 U. S. 15 How. 415 [14: 753]; Wright v. Tebbitts (1875) 91 U. S. 252 [23: 320]; Stanton v. Embry (1876) 93 U. S. 548 [23: 983]; Taylor v. Bemiss (1883) 110 U. S. 42 [28: 64]. The reason for upholding the validity of such contracts was first stated by Mr. Justice Miller, in Taylor v. Bemiss, as follows: "The well-known difficulties and delays in obtaining payment of just claims, which are not within the ordinary course of procedure of the auditing officers of the government, justify a liberal compensation in successful cases, where none is to be received in case of failure. Any other rule would work much hardship in cases of creditors of small means, residing far from the seat of government, who can give neither money nor personal attention to securing their rights." 110 U. S. 45 [28: 65]. The proportion allowed to the attorneys in Wylie v. Coxe was one twentieth; in Wright v. Tebbitts, one tenth; in Stanton v. Embry, one fifth; and in Taylor v. Bemiss, one half.

Congress has evidently considered that, in some cases at least, to permit contracts to be made for the payment to attorneys, by way of contingent fee, of a large proportion of the amount to be recovered, is in danger of leading to extortion and oppression.

*It was apparently owing to such considerations that Congress, in the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 538, when conferring upon the court of claims jurisdiction of claims arising from Indian depredations, including such claims as had been examined and allowed by the Department of the Interior, and providing that the judgments of that court, unless reversed or modified on rehearing or appeal, should "be a final determination of the causes decided, and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto," enacted, in § 9, that "all sales, transfers, or assignments of any such claims, heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in the due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys, are hereby declared void; and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of such judgments shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators, or transferee under administrative proceedings, except so much thereof as shall be allowed the claimant's attorneys by the court for prosecuting said claim, which may be paid direct to such attorneys; and the allowances to the claimant's attorneys shall be regulated and fixed by the court at the time of rendering judgment in each case, and entered of record as part of the findings thereof; but in no case shall the allowance exceed 15 per cent of the judgment recovered, except in case of claims of less amount than $500, or where unusual services have been rendered or expenses incurred by the claimant's attorney, in which case not to exceed 20 per cent of such judgment shall be allowed by the court." 26 Stat. at L. 851-854.

The contract now sued on begins in the form of a power of attorney, appearing on its face to have been intended to be signed by several persons, constituting and appointing Ball their attorney "to receive, and to make, sign, and give all necessary acquittances and receipts for, one half of all money which may be received by him, as our attorney at law, for prosecuting claims against the United States government" on account of Indian depredations; and the instrument ends with *this clause: "Said one half being the amount agreed by us to pay him of all that he may recover of said government for said depredations." It is signed by Halsell only.

The instrument was a unilateral contract, not signed by the attorney, nor containing any agreement on his part, and—so long at least as it had not been carried into execution—might be revoked by the principal, or might be disregarded by him in making a settlement with the United States, or might be treated by him as absolutely null and void in any contest between him and the attorney. Kendall v. United States, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 113 [19: 85]; Spofford v. Kirk, 97 U. S. 484 [24: 1032]; Bailey v. United States, 109 U. S. 432, 439 [27: 988, 990]; Missouri v. Walker, 125 U. S. 339 [31: 769].

By the very terms of the contract the attorney was to be paid only out of money recovered and received by him from the United States. Although he prosecuted the claim before the Department of the Interior, and that department recommended payment of a certain sum upon the claim, yet before that sum had been paid, or Congress had made any appropriation for its payment, and, therefore, before he had either recovered or received any money from the United States, or was entitled to any compensation by the terms of the contract now sued on, Congress passed the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 358.

By this act, as already stated, Congress, while giving to the court of claims jurisdiction and authority to inquire into and finally adjudicate certain claims arising from Indian depredations, including such as had been examined and allowed by the Department of the Interior, not only declared void all sales, transfers, or assignments of such claims, theretofore or thereafter made,—except in the administration of the estates of deceased persons,—and all contracts theretofore made for fees and allowances to claimant's attorneys, but expressly provided that all treasury warrants in payment of the judgments of the court should be made payable and be delivered only to the claimant, or to his heirs, executors, or administrators, except so much thereof as the court, at the time of rendering the judgment, and as part thereof, should allow to be paid directly to the claimant's attorney, not exceeding in any case 20 per cent of the amount recovered.

[83] *In view of previous experience, this last provision was a wise, reasonable, and just provision for the protection of suitors; and it was clearly within the constitutional power of Congress.

As was said by Chief Justice Taney, "It is an 161 U. S.

established principle of jurisprudence, in all civilized nations, that the sovereign cannot be sued in its own courts, or in any other, without its consent and permission; but it may, if it thinks proper, waive this privilege, and permit itself to be made a defendant in a suit by individuals, or by another state. And as this permission is altogether voluntary on the part of the sovereignty, it follows that it may prescribe the terms and conditions on which it consents to be sued, and the manner in which the suit shall be conducted, and may withdraw its consent whenever it may suppose that justice to the public requires it." Beers v. Arkansas, 61 U. S. 20 How. 527, 529 [15: 991, 992]; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 505 [31: 216, 229]; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 17 [33: 842, 848].

Much reliance was placed by the plaintiff upon the recent decision of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in Davis v. Com. 164 Mass. 241 [30 L. R. A. 743], in which an agent whom the state of Massachusetts had employed to prosecute a claim of the state against the United States, and to whom the state had agreed to pay, in full compensation for his services, 2 per cent of the amount recovered, was held to be entitled to recover from the state the amount of the compensation so agreed upon; notwithstanding that Congress, in the act appropriating money to pay the claim of the state, had provided that no part of the money should be paid by the state to any attorney or agent under a previous contract between him and the representative of the state. But the case was treated by the court as not free from difficulty; and it differed in several respects from the case at bar. The original agreement between the agent and the state was expressly authorized by its legislature, and was therefore lawful and valid when made. That agreement, as construed by the court, did not necessarily require the agent's compensation to be paid out of money received from the United States. The act of Congress, as the court observed, "did not *undertake to declare [84] void any contracts theretofore made between the representative of the state and an agent or attorney." It did provide that no part of the money received from the United States should be paid by the state to its agent. The act was passed after the services in question had been substantially performed. The act itself fixed the fact and the amount of the liability of the United States; appropriated the money to pay it; and left nothing to be ascertained by subsequent judicial proceedings.

But in the present case, as has been seen, the original agreement was contrary to the express terms of the act of Congress of 1853. That agreement cannot, as it appears to us, be construed as a promise of the principal to pay to the attorney any sum whatever, except out of money recovered and received by the attorney from the United States. The act of Congress of 1891 expressly declared void "all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys." This act was passed before the attorney had either recovered or received any money upon the principal's claim against the United States. The act did not recognize either the lawfulness or the amount of the claim, or make any appropriation for its payment. But it provided for its ascertainment and adjudication by judicial proceedings, and for the allowance, by the judgment in those proceedings, of a reasonable compensation to the attorney. The restriction of the compensation of attorneys to the amounts so allowed by the court was one of the terms and conditions upon which the United States consented to be sued.

In the suit brought by Ball on behalf of Halsell against the United States under the act of 1891, the court of claims rendered judgment in favor of the executrix of Halsell against the United States for $17,720, a smaller amount than had been recommended by the Department of the Interior, and fixed the allowance to Ball at the sum of $1,500, between 8 and 9 per cent of the amount of the judgment. The United States have paid this sum to Ball, and the rest of the judgment to Halsell's executrix.

For the reasons above stated, Ball cannot 85] maintain this *action upon the contract between him and Halsell; and he does not sue, and could not recover, upon a quantum meruit. Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 57 U. S. 16 How. 314, 337 [14: 953, 962].

Judgment affirmed.

CHARLES SMITH, Plff in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 85-90.)

Evidence in criminal case—erroneous instruction.

1. On a trial for murder, evidence that the deceased was a larger and more powerful man than the defendant, as well as evidence that the deceased had the general reputation of being a quarrelsome and dangerous person, is competent,—especially if there is evidence tending to show that his character in this respect was known to the defendant.
2. On a trial for murder, where several witnesses who testified that the deceased had the reputation of being a quarrelsome and dangerous character had been arrested for various offenses, and one of them convicted, while none of them had kept a gambling place, an instruction to the jury to cast aside as worthless matter such testimony if it comes from “keepers of dives and gambling houses and gambling hells and violators of law and prison convicts,” with reiterated statements to the effect that men of pure character only are competent to know what character is,—is error, and entitles defendant to a new trial, as the credibility of witnesses is a matter for the jury, and the instruction withdrew this matter from their consideration.

[No. 608.]

Argued and Submitted November 19, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas

NOTE.—As to questions of law and fact for court and jury, see note to King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 3: 155.

As to threats by the deceased in cases of homicide, when admissible in evidence,—see note to Wiggins v. Utah, 23: 941.

to review a judgment convicting Charles Smith of the murder of John Welch. Reversed, and case remanded with directions for a new trial.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an indictment in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas for the murder, at the Cherokee Nation in the Indian country, on September 27, 1894, of John Welch, a negro and not an Indian, by shooting him, with a pistol.

*At the trial the government introduced [86 evidence tending to show that Welch and the defendant, about noon, at a fair-ground in Muscogee, at a spot close by their respective tents, and near a merry-go-round, a dance hall, gambling places, refreshment booths, and other tents and buildings, and in the presence of a crowd of people, fell into dispute; that the defendant ran into his tent, and, finding one Scott Gentry inside, snatched Gentry's pistol from his belt, came out, and shot and killed Welch; and that Welch was unarmed at the time.

The defendant admitted the killing, and contended that he did it in self-defense; and, being called as a witness in his own behalf, testified that he knew Welch, “was very nearly raised up with him,” and they had “tussled together all the way up from boys;” that Welch was a bigger and much stronger man than himself; that he knew that Welch had a pistol the night before; and that, when he shot Welch, Welch was advancing, with his right hand at his hip pocket, towards the defendant, and threatening to kill him.

The defendant also called witnesses, who testified that the deceased had previously made threats against the defendant's life; and five other witnesses, living at Muscogee, who testified that they had known Welch for years, and that he had the general reputation of being a man of quarrelsome and dangerous character.

Each of these five witnesses was asked by the district attorney, on cross-examination, whether he had ever been arrested for anything. In answer to this question, one of them testified that he had been arrested, tried, and acquitted for murder, and had been arrested for gambling and discharged. A second witness testified that he had been arrested for “fighting and gambling” only. A third witness testified that he had once been arrested, three or four years before, and brought to Fort Smith, for selling whiskey; and, on re-examination, that the grand jury ignored the charge, and that he had never been convicted of anything. A fourth witness testified that he had been arrested for “fighting and whiskey,” but for nothing else, and had twice “served a jail *sentence for whiskey.” The [87 fifth witness testified that he had never been arrested for anything; and there was no other evidence of the arrest or conviction of any of these witnesses, or that any of them had anything to do with keeping a gambling place.

The court, in the charge to the jury, instructed them as to the evidence of the character of the deceased as follows: “Now, what is reputation? It is the reflection of character. Character is the thing itself. It is that which a man makes day after day, and hour after hour, and year after year, by his bearing and conduct in the community where he lives. If that thing is reflected by the words spoken by men of credit, by men of standing, by men of pure character standing before you, that such reputation is so reflected as that you can believe it, of course it is entitled to consideration and to be taken in the case if it is applicable. But it is to come from men who are morally and mentally competent to know what it means. If a man is without character himself, if his action has been characterized by crime, if his conscience has been seared by criminal conduct, he is thus rendered incompetent to know what character is. He has none himself, and he is incompetent to determine when other men have one. And above all is it necessary, important, and essential to the interests of public justice, that justice should not be defeated by men of that character scraped from the four corners of the earth. You are to see to it that it comes from a pure source; and then, again, you are to see to it that it is the reflection, not by keepers of dives and gambling hells, and violators of law, and prison convicts, but it is the reflection of honest and conscientious men, of men who possess character themselves; men of integrity; men whose judgments make up in your community your character that you prize so highly, because it is the opinion of honest, intelligent, judicious, and just men and women in your community. That is the source that character is to come from, and the only source from which you can derive it in a reliable way. If it does not come from that source, but comes from the source I have designated, cast it 88 aside as so much worthless matter invoked wrongfully in cases of this character." To this instruction the defendant at the time excepted; and, after being convicted and sentenced for murder, sued out this writ of error.

161 U. S.

Messrs. Wm. M. Cravens and C. J. Frederick for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The main question in controversy at the trial was whether the killing of Welch by the defendant was in self-defense. Upon that question any evidence which, according to the common experience of mankind, tended to show that the defendant had reasonable cause to apprehend great bodily harm from the conduct of the deceased towards him just before the killing was admissible; and upon principle, and by the weight of authority, evidence that the deceased was a larger and more powerful man than the defendant, as well as evidence that the deceased had the general reputation of being a quarrelsome and dangerous person, was competent, especially if his character in this respect was known to the defendant, which there was evidence in this case tending to show. Wiggins v. Utah, 93 U. S. 465 [23: 941]; Allison v. United States, 160 U. S. 203, 215 [ante, 385, 400]; State v. Benham, 23 Iowa, 154, 92 Am. Dec. 416; Com. v. Barnacle, 134 Mass. 215, 45 Am. Rep. 319; Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405; State v. Bryant, 55 Mo. 75; Marts v. State, 26 Ohio St. 162; 161 U. S.

State v. Nett, 50 Wis. 524; State v. Turpin, 77 N. C. 473, 24 Am. Rep. 455; Whart. Hom. (2d ed.) §§ 606-623, and cases cited. In Wiggins v. Utah, above referred to, evidence that "the deceased's general character was bad, and that he was a dangerous, violent, vindictive, and brutal man" was admitted at the trial, and was assumed to be competent, both in the opinion of this court delivered by Mr. Justice* 89 Miller, and in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Clifford. 93 U. S. 466, 470, 474 [93: 942-944].

The testimony introduced by the defendant to the character of the deceased was therefore competent and material.

All that was shown, by way of impeaching the credibility of any of the five witnesses who testified to this point, was that one of them had been arrested, tried, and acquitted for murder, and had been arrested for gambling, and discharged; another had been arrested for fighting and gambling; another arrested for fighting and selling whiskey; and another arrested, convicted, and imprisoned for selling whiskey. There was no evidence that any of the witnesses, except this one, had been convicted of any offense whatever, or that any one of the five had anything to do with keeping a gambling place.

Yet the court, in instructing the jury as to the weight to be given to the evidence of the character of the deceased, told them that reputation was the reflection of character, and, in order to be entitled to consideration, must "come from a pure source," and be "the reflection of honest and conscientious men, of men who possess character themselves, men of integrity, men whose judgments make up in your community your character that you prize so highly, because it is the opinion of honest, intelligent, judicious, and just men and women in your community," and that "if a man is without character himself, if his action has been characterized by crime, if his conscience has been seared by criminal conduct, he is thus rendered incompetent to know what character is; he has none himself, and he is incompetent to determine when other men have one;" and charged the jury "to see to it that it is the reflection, not by keepers of dives and gambling hells, and violators of law, and prison convicts," and, if it comes from that source, to "cast it aside as so much worthless matter invoked wrongfully in cases of this character."

This heaping up of injurious epithets upon the witnesses, coupled with the injunction (which could have no application to anything before the court except their testimony) to "cast it aside as so much worthless matter invoked wrongfully," could not have been understood by the jury otherwise than as *a com- 90 mand to disregard all the testimony introduced in behalf of the defendant, bearing upon the character of the deceased as a quarrelsome and dangerous man.

The character of a quarrelsome and dangerous man is not always so well known to peaceable and law-abiding citizens that their testimony upon the subject can be had. In this, as in other matters involved in the administration of the criminal law, it is often necessary to resort to those who are more familiar with the persons between whom, and the places in which, quarrels and affrays are apt to take place.

No doubt has been suggested as to the competency of any of the witnesses in question; and their credibility was a matter to be determined by the jury. The judge having in effect peremptorily withdrawn this matter from their consideration, the defendant is entitled to a new trial. Hicks v. United States, 150 U. S. 442 [37: 1137]; Starr v. United States, 153 U. S. 614 [38: 841]; Allison v. United States, 160 U. S. 203 [ante, 395].

It is, to say the least, doubtful whether evidence of an arrest only, not followed by a conviction, is competent to affect the credibility of a witness. Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 593; Van Bokkelen v. Berdell, 130 N. Y. 141. But such evidence having been admitted without objection as to these witnesses, and having been previously introduced by the defendant's counsel in cross-examining the witnesses for the government, the expression of a decisive opinion upon it would be out of place.

It becomes unnecessary to consider the other exceptions to the rulings and instructions of the court.

Judgment reversed, and case remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and to order a new trial.

91] UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ANNA CALLAGHAN, Administratrix, etc.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 91-95.)

Dismissal of writ of error—exception, when waived—general exception.

1. A writ of error will not be dismissed on account of the defective character of a bond, since a proper bond may be allowed to be filed if necessary.
2. In an action against a railway company for damages for its negligence, an exception to a refusal to instruct the jury to find for the defendant, requested at the conclusion of defendant's evidence, is waived if the defendant afterwards puts in evidence one of the company's rules which may have an important bearing on the case, and does not renew the motion.
3. A general exception taken to the refusal of a series of instructions will not be considered if any one of the propositions is unsound.

[No. 271.]

Submitted January 22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a judgment affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court in favor of the plaintiff, NOTE.—As to damages for personal injury from negligence, see note to Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 26: 141.

As to exception, when must be taken, to be available on review, see note to Phelps v. Mayer, 14: 643.

As to what questions the United States Supreme Court will review on writ of error; bill of exceptions, see note to Parks v. Turner, 13: 883.

James Callaghan, against the Union Pacific Railway Company for damages for injuries received by him through the negligence of defendant. There was a motion to dismiss or affirm. Affirmed.

See same case below, 56 Fed. Rep. 988.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action brought by James Callaghan against the Union Pacific Railway Company, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Colorado, to recover damages for injuries received by him through the alleged negligence of defendant. The evidence tended to establish these facts: On August 18, 1890, a repair train operated by defendant, consisting of five flat cars, loaded with timber to be used in repairing bridges, three box cars, and a caboose, in running from Trinidad to Trinchera, went through a defective bridge, and Callaghan, who was riding on the train, was injured.

Heavy storms had prevailed during the preceding week, causing extensive washouts and damages to the roadbed and bridges, so that none but repair trains had passed over the line between Trinidad and Trinchera for three days.

Callaghan was a section foreman on a branch railroad from Trinidad to Sopris, and some time on August 17 he received orders from the superintendent of the railway company to take all the men in his section and assist in repairing the line between Trinidad and Trinchera, and accordingly went to Trinidad, where he was joined by some other section foremen with their crews, all being under one De Remer, a contractor *in the employment of the company, who had been called in to assist in repairing the road, but who had no control over the management of the train, which was in charge of a conductor, with an engineer and fireman.

The train left Trinidad about 5 P. M., Sunday, the 17th, pursuant to orders received from the superintendent, then at Trinchera, and who had that day examined the bridge, which subsequently fell, but, so far as appeared, gave no directions or warning to De Remer, or the trainmen, in respect of its condition. The train proceeded slowly during the night, De Remer and a track walker going in front with a lantern, and before morning they found one bridge washed out and another rendered dangerous by floods, and repaired them. The bridge where the accident occurred was about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Trinchera and 3 miles south of Adair, another station on the road. The approaches at each end of it had been washed away for over 15 or 20 feet, so that it was unsafe. The foreman of that section discovered its condition on the 17th, and caused the usual danger signal, a red flag, to be placed along the road between the rails at about 700 feet north of the bridge, and its condition was known to the road master as well as to the superintendent before the train left Trinidad.

When the train reached Adair it was running about 15 miles an hour. The section foreman was there and signaled the train to stop for the purpose of telling them about the bridge, and if it had stopped, would have done so. The engineer saw his signal and commenced to stop, and had slowed up to about 4 miles an hour, when the conductor signaled him to go ahead. The train then went on without giving the section foreman any opportunity to give information concerning the danger. The bridge could be seen for about 900 feet north on the road, but the engineer apparently neither saw its condition nor the red flag, but drove his train upon it, and the car upon which Callahan was riding went through.

At the conclusion of defendant's evidence, except reading the rules, defendant asked the 93] court to instruct the jury that *there was no evidence sufficient to warrant a verdict for plaintiff, which request was denied, and defendant excepted. Defendant then introduced in evidence the company's rule 227, which read as follows:

"In case of an extraordinary rain storm or high water, trains must be brought to a stop, and a man sent out to examine bridges, trestles, culverts, and other points liable to damage, before passing over. Conductors will make careful inquiry at all stopping places, and, when thought advisable, make extra stops to ascertain the extent and severity of storms, taking no risk. In case of doubt as to the safety of proceeding, they will place their trains upon a siding, and remain there until certain it is safe to proceed."

Thereupon plaintiff offered and introduced evidence to show that there was a conductor on the train. Defendant then asked the court to give to the jury the following instructions:

"1. The court is asked to instruct the jury that, under the evidence in this case, the accident appears to have been caused by the failure of the engineer of the work train to observe the rules and regulations of the company in respect to running trains in cases of extraordinary floods, etc., and in his failure to observe the danger signal that, according to the evidence, had been placed in places where he ought to have seen the same in the exercise of the care that was required of him in respect thereto.

"2. The court is asked to instruct the jury that they are not at liberty to infer from the evidence in the case that the accident was caused by the negligence of the conductor in signaling the engineer to proceed after the train had slowed down, since such signal to the engineer in no wise released the engineer from care in respect to observance of all precautions necessary to prevent an accident under the circumstances, the evidence showing that the engineer must have been aware of the likelihood of danger at any place along the line.

"3. The court is asked to instruct the jury that the mere fact that the accident would not probably have happened if the conductor had allowed the train to be brought to a stop at Adair affords no ground for saying that not stopping the 94] *train at Adair was the cause of the accident, since it is true that if the train had not started from Trinidad or Adair or run at all the accident would not have happened, and the mere fact of starting the train, or continuing the train in motion after it had started, does not make the running of the train under those circumstances the proximate cause of the accident by which the plaintiff was injured.

"4. The court is asked to instruct the jury that the jury are not at liberty to infer, or even from the mere fact that the conductor gave signal to proceed after the engineer had slowed up at Adair was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff, since such signal to proceed can be held to proceed in precisely the same manner as the engineer was bound to proceed under the rules and regulations of the company under which he was acting, and in view of what the engineer knew of the dangers he was bound to apprehend from the floods, etc., that had existed for some days prior to the accident; and that even if the jury believe from the evidence it was negligent in the conductor to proceed after he had slowed down, yet the plaintiff will not be entitled to recover because of such negligence of the conductor unless they further believe from the evidence that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury."

The record then states: "But the court refused to give each and every of said instructions; to which ruling of the court the defendant, by his counsel, then and there duly excepted." The court thereupon charged the jury at large upon the whole case. No exception was taken to any part of the charge. The jury found for plaintiff, judgment was entered on the verdict, the cause taken on error to the circuit court of appeals for the eight circuit, and the judgment affirmed. 56 Fed. Rep. 983. This writ of error was then allowed and a supersedeas bond given and approved, in which no penal sum was named. A motion to dismiss or affirm was submitted. Callaghan subsequently died and the cause was revived in the name of Anna Callaghan, administratrix, etc.

Messrs. John F. Dillon and John M. Thurston for plaintiff in error, in opposition to motion.

Messrs. C. S. Thomas and W. H. Bryant for defendant in error, in favor of the motion.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

We should not dismiss this writ of error on account of the defective character of the bond, but allow a proper bond to be filed, if necessary, which in this instance it is not, as the motion to affirm must be sustained.

It is settled that an exception to the refusal of the trial court to instruct the jury to find for the defendant is waived if made by defendant without resting his case. The question goes to the sufficiency of the evidence, and that is, of course, of the entire evidence. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 144 U. S. 202, 206 [36: 405, 406]. After defendant's motion for an instruction in its favor was denied, it put in evidence its rule 227, which manifestly might have had an important bearing. The motion was not renewed, and we think the action of the court cannot be assigned for error.

Again, it is firmly established that where propositions submitted to a jury are excepted to, in mass, the exception will be overruled provided that any of the propositions be correct, and where a general exception is taken to the refusal of a series of instructions, it will not be considered if any one of the propositions is unsound. Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Pace, 158 U. S. 36 [39: 887]. It was contended by defendant that the accident was the result of the engineer's negligence alone, and that therefore plaintiff could not recover. In the light of the evidence the first instruction requested by defendant was properly refused, and, without considering the others, the exception as taken to the ruling of the court must fail. And no exception was saved to any of the instructions given by the court on the whole case.

Judgment affirmed.

96] WILLIAM M. FISHBACK ET AL.,

Appts.,

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 96-101.)

Jurisdiction of United States courts—jurisdictional amount.

1. The facts upon which the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States rests must appear in the record of all suits prosecuted before them.
2. An aggregation of the amounts of the taxes to be collected in different counties cannot be made for the purpose of obtaining the jurisdictional amount of $2,000, in a suit in a circuit court of the United States to restrain the railroad commissioners of a state and the tax collectors of its counties from enforcing the collection of taxes assessed on a telegraph company by such commissioners, and certified to the several counties, and warrants for collection of which have been delivered to the several county tax collectors, it not being shown that any one of the county assessments exceeded that jurisdictional amount; nor can the jurisdiction be sustained against the commissioners to restrain their making the assessment as a whole, where they had already made it.

[No. 341.]

Argued January 22, 23, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas perpetually enjoining the defendants and their agents and deputies from enforcing the collection of taxes assessed against the Western Union Telegraph Company in an action brought by that company against Wm. M. Fishback et al., commissioners, et al. Reversed, and cause remanded with directions to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a bill filed by the Western Union Telegraph Company January 2, 1894, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas against William M. Fishback, Henry B. Armistead, and Charles B. Mills, constituting the board of railroad com-

NOTE.—As to amount necessary to give jurisdiction in circuit court cases prior to act of 1875; amount necessary since act of 1875; amount in dispute,—see note to Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 37: 256.

As to direct taxes, see note to Scholey v. Rew, 23: 99.

As to power of states to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County Comrs. 10: 1022.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 21: 63.

missioners for the state of Arkansas, and some forty-seven clerks of different counties in the state in which complainant had lines of telegraph, alleging that the complainant was a corporation and citizen of New York and each of the defendants was a citizen of Arkansas, "and that the amount or value in controversy in this suit exceeds the sum of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs;" that on and prior to April 8, 1893, complainant was and had ever since been engaged in the business of operating telegraph lines and sending telegrams over the same to different parts of the United States, with extensive cable lines under the sea, having its general office in the city of New York; that on that day the general assembly of Arkansas passed *an act entitled "An Act to Assess[97 and Collect Taxes from Certain Corporations," a copy whereof was attached to and made part of the bill; that, as stated in the company's return under the act, the value of the lines of the company within Arkansas, made upon the basis of actual cost less depreciation, would not exceed $102,229.68, and that if valued on the basis of the cost of the reproduction of an entirely new line, would be $282,763.71; that any apportionment to Arkansas of the company's capital stock on a mileage basis would necessarily include the value of bonds, real estate, contracts, franchises, and patent rights, all of which were outside the jurisdiction of the state of Arkansas; that in Arkansas the gross receipts averaged $23 per mile of wire, and that the net earnings in Arkansas did not exceed $6 per mile of wire; that taking the entire capital of the company at the stock exchange price of July 1, 1893, if the apportionment thereof to the state of Arkansas upon the mileage basis were taxed at an average of 2 per cent, "which is probably the average rate of taxation in Arkansas," it would require the company to pay a tax annually in Arkansas of nearly 50 per cent of its earnings from all its business in that state, whether from interstate or local traffic, which was a rate of taxation unheard of, grossly unequal, and substantially destructive. It was further alleged, among other things, that on July 1, 1867, the company formally accepted the provisions of the act of July 24, 1866, now U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5263, 5269, and by virtue thereof the company was an agent of the government of the United States in the transmission of intelligence by electricity, and that the enforcement of the scheme of taxation provided in the alleged law would substantially destroy the value of the company's property in Arkansas and prevent it from performing its obligations under said act. Schedules of the real estate of the Western Union Telegraph Company, of the miles of wire, and poles of all the lines owned by the company within the state of Arkansas, and the location thereof in each county, and of the gross receipts for 1892, were also made part of the bill. The bill charged that the act in question was unconstitutional and void for reasons given at length, but averred that *the board of railroad [98 commissioners of the state, composed of the governor, secretary, and auditor, had nevertheless assessed complainant's property for taxes within the state, under said act, at the sum of $195 per mile of its lines of telegraph therein, making the whole amount of property thus assessed $396,387, and a copy of the assessment was made a part of the bill, showing the number of miles, the value per mile, and the total value in each county; also the mileage in cities and towns, and the total value thereof.

And it was also alleged that the secretary of state had certified said several assessments to the several county assessors, who had listed the same as property owned by complainant subject to taxation for 1893 in those counties, and had returned said assessments to the county clerks thereof, whose duty it was to make out tax books for their respective counties, enter the assessments, levy the taxes thereon at the rate fixed for state, county, and all other purposes, extend the same on the tax books, and deliver them to the tax collectors with warrants requiring the collection of said taxes.

The prayer of the bill was that the railroad commissioners should be required to show the grounds of their assessment; that the act of April 8, 1893, he decreed to be unconstitutional and void; that the act of the board in assessing complainant's property for taxation be canceled; and that defendants be enjoined from proceeding under said act or pursuant to said assessment, to execute the same, and the county clerks specifically restrained from discharging the duties thereby imposed.

On January 29, 1894, complainant filed an amended bill averring that since the filing of the original bill the county clerks had, pursuant to the assessment of complainant's property by the railroad commissioners, made out the tax books for their several counties, entered the said several assessments, levied the taxes thereon at the rate fixed for state, county, and all other purposes, spread the same upon the tax books and delivered the books to the several tax collectors of the several counties, together with a warrant authorizing and requiring the collection of the same. The amended bill then charged that forty-seven persons, 99 naming them, were the *tax collectors for the counties severally named, and citizens of Arkansas, prayed that they be made parties defendant, and be enjoined from proceeding to collect the taxes.

Defendants demurred to the bill and amended bill, and on February 20, 1894, the circuit court overruled the demurrer, whereupon complainant dismissed the bill as to the several county clerks, and the defendants electing to abide by their demurrer, it was decreed "that the defendants and each and every of them, their agents and deputies, be perpetually restrained and enjoined from taking any steps or proceeding in any manner to enforce the collection of taxes assessed against the property of the Western Union Telegraph Company under the assessment made by defendants, William M. Fishback, Henry B. Armistead, and Charles B. Mills, in their capacity as a board of railroad commissioners for the said state of Arkansas, under the provisions of an act of the general assembly entitled 'An Act to Assess and Collect Taxes from Certain Corporations,' approved April 8, 1893, and for costs." An appeal to this court was duly prayed and allowed, citation waived, cost bond approved and filed, together with an assignment of errors.

161 U. S.

Messrs. A. H. Garland, James P. Clarke, and R. C. Garland for appellants.

Messrs. Rush Taggart, John F. Dillon, Willard Brown, Charles W. Wells, and U. M. Rose for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It is argued that under the averments of the bill the circuit court had jurisdiction on two grounds: (1) diverse citizenship; (2) in that the case made by the bill was one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. Even if this *were so, the circuit court [100 could not take cognizance of the suit unless the matter in dispute exceeded, exclusive of costs and interest, the sum of $2,000. 24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373, § 1; 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866; United States v. Sayward, 160 U. S. 493, 498 [ante, 508, 509].

In Wolter v. Northeastern R. Co. 147 U. S. 370 [37: 206], we held that "a circuit court of the United States has no jurisdiction over a bill in equity to enjoin the collection of taxes from a railroad company, when distinct assessments in separate counties, no one of which amounts to $2,000, and for which, in case of payment under protest, separate suits must be brought to recover back the amounts paid, are joined together in the bill, making an aggregate of over $2,000.

The rule is without exception that the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States rests must appear in the record of all suits prosecuted before them. Ex parte Smith, 94 U. S. 455 [24: 165]; Metcalfe v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586 [32: 543]. The general averment in this bill that "the amount or value in controversy in this suit exceeds the sum of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs," was a mere conclusion, and it was nowhere shown that the amount of any one of these distinct county assessments, the collection of which was entrusted to these tax collectors, exceeded that sum, while, on the contrary, the total valuation of the property of the telegraph company assessed as belonging to or operated by it in any one county was such as to preclude the idea that the amount of the assessment in such county would approach $2,000. If the rate of taxation in Arkansas did not exceed 2 per cent as indicated in the return of the telegraph company to the railroad commissioners, the highest amount of taxes in any one county would fall below $400.

Although if these county assessments were aggregated they would considerably exceed $2,000, yet the several county clerks or tax collectors cannot be joined in a single suit in a Federal court, and the jurisdiction sustained on the ground that the total amount involved exceeds the jurisdictional limitation, as already ruled in Walter's Case; nor do we *find [101 any ground as we did in Northern P. R. Co. v. Walker, 148 U. S. 391 [37: 494], upon which an amendment could be permitted.

Without intimating in any degree under what circumstances, if at all, such a bill might lie, we may add that jurisdiction cannot be sustained here on the ground that, as the railroad commissioners were parties defendant, this bill might be treated, though they had already acted, as seeking to restrain the making of the assessment as a whole.

631

Decree reversed with costs, and cause remanded with a direction to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction.

WILLIAM M. FISHBACK et al., Appts.,
v.

PACIFIC EXPRESS COMPANY.

Argued January 22, 23, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

[No. 342.]

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

Messrs. A. H. Garland, James P. Clarke, and R. C. Garland for appellants.

Messrs. Westel W. Morsman and John W. Moore for appellee.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE: This case differs in no essential respect from that just decided, and must take the same course.

Decree reversed with costs, and cause remanded with a direction to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction.

BOARD OF FLOUR INSPECTORS for the Port of New Orleans ET AL., Appts.,
v.

BOOTH F. GLOVER ET AL.

(See S. C., "New Orleans Flour Inspectors v. Glover," Reporter's ed. 101-103.)

Vacating order dismissing appeal.

An order dismissing an appeal from an injunction against enforcing a statute because it has been repealed, where the injunction is in fact too broad because it restrains actions at law to test rights claimed to have accrued under the act before it was repealed, may be vacated and the decree reversed and the cause remanded, with direction to dismiss the bill.

[No. 88.]

Petition for rehearing submitted January 11, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana enjoining defendants from enforcing an act of the Louisiana general assembly in regard to the inspection of flour. This court dismissed the appeal and a petition for rehearing was presented. Order dismissing the appeal vacated, and the decree reversed, and cause remanded, with direction to dismiss the suit.

See same case, 160 U. S. 170 [ante, 382].

Mr. J. R. Beckwith for appellants and petitioners.

Note.—As to when a judgment at law will be enjoined by a bill in equity, see note to Davis v. Tileston, 12: 366.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill filed by complainants June 19, 1891, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana against the Board of Flour Inspectors for the Port of New Orleans and the individual members thereof, to enjoin the enforcement of a certain act of 1870 of the general assembly of Louisiana. The ground of equity interposition set up was want of adequate remedy at law, as indicated by the following averments: "Your orators show that they respectively each receive their large consignments of flour from other states of the Union almost daily, and, as each lot arrives at the port of New Orleans, the defendants claim and insist on the right and power to inspect the same on its arrival and to make such inspections compulsory, and claim and demand their fees of 2 cents a barrel therefor on every barrel arriving, and if such fees are not paid the defendant board will bring a great multitude of suits and prosecutions under said statute to enforce its illegal claims; that as to each of your orators such suits will be each of small amounts, in inferior courts, and will be of great number, each arising out of almost daily inspections and involving large, constant, and daily expenses, many counsel fees, and much loss of time, vexation, annoyance, and irreparable injury; that there is no practicable method under the said act of 1870 or any other law of Louisiana of paying said fees to said board under protest and recovering the same; that such a course would involve for each of your orators a multiplicity of controversies and suits and great expense, loss of time, and vexation, and if each of your orators should recover judgments from time to time against the board for the return of such fees as unduly paid they could have no judgments for their counsel fees, nor has the defendant board any fund or property whatever to respond to the same, nor is there any appropriation or provision of law to pay the same, and the collection of such judgments or any of them would be utterly impossible." *The court granted a preliminary in- [103] junction, on condition of bond being given for $10,000, enjoining defendants from enforcing the act of 1870 by "demanding any inspection of flour imported or brought to the port of New Orleans by complainants," and "from demanding from complainants by suit or otherwise any fees for compulsory inspection established by said law."

Defendants demurred, their demurrer was overruled, and, they electing to abide by it, a decree was entered January 25, 1892, perpetually enjoining defendants "from enforcing against the complainants or any of them the act No. 71 of the extra session of the general assembly of Louisiana of the year 1870, by demanding any inspection of flour imported to the port of New Orleans for sale by the complainants from states of the United States other than Louisiana or from foreign countries, and from demanding from any of the complainants or suing any of them for any fees of compulsory inspection of such flour under said act No. 71 of 1870, extra session." From this decree defendants prosecuted an appeal to this court.

Upon the submission of the case, it appearing that the act complained of as unconstitutional was repealed June 28, 1892, we were of opinion that the case came within the rule laid down in Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651 [ante, 293], and the appeal was accordingly dismissed. 160 U. S. 170 [ante, 382].

Our attention has been since called by counsel to the fact that the decree was so broad as to restrain defendants from testing at law their right to recover fees prior to the date when the repealing act went into effect, which restraint was of course left in force by the dismissal of the appeal. We should not, therefore, have entered the order of dismissal, but it is equally clear that the bill cannot be maintained for an injunction against bringing actions at law if appellants should be so advised.

The order hereinbefore entered dismissing the appeal will therefore be vacated and the decree reversed, without costs to either party, and the cause remanded to the circuit court with a direction to dismiss the bill.

Ordered accordingly.

104] EUGENE BEEBE ET AL., Plffs. in

Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 104-115.)

Lien of judgment—sale of land—alias execution—original execution—conveyance by debtor—levy—presumption.

1. In Alabama a judgment in itself imposes no lien upon the property of the judgment debtor, real or personal, but the issue of an execution and its delivery to the officer are necessary to create a lien.
2. A sale of land under an alias execution in Alabama which was duly issued on the return of a prior valid execution relates back and defeats a conveyance by the judgment debtor made after the prior original execution was delivered to the officers, and before the sale.
3. The presumption is that alias executions were preceded by others regularly issued.
4. In Alabama, where an execution comes to the hands of the sheriff the lien attaches and continues from term to term, provided alias and pluries writs are duly issued and delivered; and while it is so kept alive the lien is, upon levy and sale, paramount to any intermediate conveyance of the debtor.
5. The fact of the levy of an original execution does not make a sale under an alias execution issued and levied on the same property invalid.
6. The presumption is that an execution was rightly issued, nothing appearing to the contrary, although issued before the expiration of the time, in a consent for stay of execution indorsed on the judgment record, where the judgment debtor was notified of the levy and did not complain that the execution was premature.
7. An execution is not absolutely void because issued during the period for which a stay had been agreed upon,—especially when this agreement is a mere memorandum which does not form part of the judgment and therefore a sale under such execution is valid as against persons claiming under the judgment debtor where he takes no steps to quash the execution or to vacate the levy.

[No. 71.]

Argued November 18, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Alabama to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the United States, against Eugene Beebe et al., defendants, for the recovery of land. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action "in the nature of ejectment," as so denominated in the Alabama Code, brought by the United States against Eugene Beebe, Sims Phillips, and Adeline Thomas for the recovery of an undivided one-fourth interest in a tract of land known as the Montgomery race track, containing 80 acres, in the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of Alabama. Beebe defended as landlord, and Phillips and Thomas were his tenants. Trial was had, a verdict rendered for plaintiffs, and judgment entered thereon accordingly. On the trial plaintiffs put in evidence a deed executed by Josiah Morris and wife, June 14, 1873, to Eugene Beebe and Ferrie Henshaw of an undivided one half of the 80 acres in question, of which it was admitted Morris was seised and possessed at that date. The records *of two separate judgments recovered in favor of the United States against Beebe and others, December 19, 1876, at the regular November term, 1876, of the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of Alabama, for the sums respectively of $991 and $1,638.68, were put in evidence. The consideration clause in each instance concluded, "for which let execution issue." Above the record of each judgment appeared the amount thereof in figures, followed by the words: "Stay of ex. till 25th March, 1877. R.," and at the foot of each judgment were these words: "And by consent execution is stayed until the 25th of March, A. D. 1877."

Two alias executions issued on said judgments May 10, 1877, "with the indorsements thereon," were put in evidence. They ran in one of the forms of an alias writ, "Again you are hereby commanded," and were entitled on the back, "Alias fi. fa." Each had indorsed upon it (in almost verbally identical words) the following:

Received in office January 23d, 1877.

Geo. Turner, U. S. Marshal.

To satisfy the within execution I have levied, this 5th day of April, 1877, on an undivided half interest in the following described property, to wit: . . .

2nd. The tract of land known as the Montgomery race track, near Montgomery, containing 80 acres, more or less. . . .

Notice in writing given the defendant.

Geo. Turner, U. S. Marshal.

Returned for alias, not advertised and sold for want of time. April 6th, 1877.

Geo. Turner, U. S. Marshal.
P'r F. J. Jost, Dep.

Below these indorsements, on each writ, the clerk of the court certified, under his hand and seal, May 10, A. D. 1877, "the foregoing page to contain a true copy of the return of the marshal on the execution issued next last preceding this in the aforesaid cause as the same appears of record and on file in my office as clerk of said court."

There was also indorsed on each writ, "Received in office May 10, 1877," which included said tract of land.

On the execution for $1,633.68 appeared this return:

"The property of the defendant Beebe, herein described [certain property being named as excepted], was, on the second day of July, 1877, sold to the United States for $1,000, and deed made to the United States for the same.

"Geo. Turner, U. S. Marshal."

Plaintiffs then introduced in evidence a deed of the United States marshal to the United States, dated July 2, 1877, and duly acknowledged and recorded, reciting the levy of execution on the property and the sale thereof on that date, after due advertisement, to the United States, as the highest and best bidder, and conveying all Beebe's interest in the tract.

Defendants offered in evidence a deed from Beebe to Henshaw, dated March 22, and acknowledged and recorded March 23, 1877. This instrument recited that a copartnership had existed between Beebe and Henshaw, under the name of E. Beebe & Co.; that Beebe would be found on the settlement of the affairs of the firm to be indebted to it, and also to Henshaw for moneys advanced and paid out by him in excess of his proportion as partner, the precise amount of which could not be ascertained until the debts of the firm were paid and a settlement had between Beebe and Henshaw; that Beebe and Henshaw were owners as partners of real and personal property, which was enumerated, and included an undivided half interest in a tract of land called the "old Montgomery race track;" and, therefore, "to protect and secure" the creditors of the firm and to enable Henshaw "the more easily and readily" to settle and pay its debts and "to protect and secure" Henshaw for moneys paid out and advanced for the firm in excess of his proportion, and "to protect and secure him" for all moneys that Beebe might owe the firm or Henshaw on a settlement between them of the firm's affairs, Beebe conveyed all his interest in the property described, as partner or otherwise, to Henshaw, "in trust, to sell the same at such times and places and on such terms, for credit or for cash, or for part cash and part credit, at private or public sale, as the best interests of the said creditors of said firm and of him and myself as he may determine, and to apply the proceeds thereof to the payment of the debts of the said firm, and to the payment of what I may be found indebted to said firm or to said Ferrie Henshaw on the settlement between us of the affairs and business of said firm, and if any excess should remain in his hands from the sale of said property after the payment of said debts of said firm and of what I may owe the said firm or owe him on the said settlement of the business and affairs of said firm, then he shall pay back to me such excess; and if there should remain in his hands any of said property not required to be sold for the purposes aforesaid, then on such final settlement between us he shall reconvey the same to me, my heirs, or assigns."

Plaintiffs objected to the introduction of this deed in evidence on the grounds, among others, that it "is void upon its face," and that it "sets up no claim superior to the title of the United States acquired at the execution sale." Beebe was then sworn as a witness, and defendants proposed to prove by him that at the time of the execution of the deed offered in evidence Beebe and Henshaw were in copartnership; that at that date the partnership was indebted to various persons in amounts aggregating $40,000, and Beebe was indebted to Henshaw about $2,000 individually, and also about the same sum on account of partnership matters; that the property was purchased while Beebe and Henshaw were partners, and was purchased with partnership assets; that the deed had been delivered to and accepted by Henshaw; but defendants admitted that Henshaw had never sold any of the property conveyed by the deed, and that nothing had been done thereunder. The court sustained plaintiff's objection to the introduction of the deed, and refused to allow the same to be read in evidence, and defendants excepted. There-108 upon plaintiffs offered in evidence a deed by Henshaw to Beebe, dated February 23, 1878, which recited that the debts and business affairs of the partnership had been fully settled without the necessity of having to sell any of the property for that purpose, and, therefore, Henshaw reconveyed to Beebe an undivided one-half interest in and to the property. In that connection defendants "proved" (offered to prove) that after March 22, 1877, Henshaw became incapable of attending to business; and that thereupon Beebe procured Henshaw to execute the deed of February 23, 1878, at which time the debts and business affairs of the partnership had not in fact been settled and paid.

The court instructed the jury that "if they believed the evidence the plaintiff was entitled to recover the land sued for in the complaint filed in this cause."

The following errors were assigned: "(1) The rejection of the deed executed by the plaintiff, Eugene Beebe, to Ferrie Henshaw on the 22d day of March, 1877, offered in evidence by the plaintiffs in error, conveying to said Henshaw the property involved in this cause. (2) The rejection of said deed, offered in evidence by the plaintiffs in error, in connection with the facts the plaintiffs in error proposed to prove by the testimony of the said Eugene Beebe. (3) The rejection of the testimony of said Eugene Beebe, offered by the plaintiffs in error in connection with said deed and to support the same. (4) The charge of the court to the jury 'that if they believed the evidence the plaintiff was entitled to recover the land sued for in this cause.'"

Messrs. H. C. Tompkins and H. S. Cattell, for plaintiffs in error:

Where a plaintiff claims under a sale under execution, the burden is upon him to prove that defendant had an estate or interest in the lands which were subject to such execution; and, necessarily, if he makes out a prima facie case, defendant may rebut it by showing he had no such title. There is no estoppel against defendant.

Doe, Davis, v. McKinney, 5 Ala. 719; Elmore v. Harris, 13 Ala. 360; Doe, Cook, v. Webb, 18 Ala. 810; You v. Flinn, 34 Ala. 409; Smith v. McCann, 65 U. S. 24 How. 398 (16: 714); Badham v. Cox, 11 Ired. L. 456; Dickinson v. Smith, 25 Barb. 102; Westheimer v. Reed, 15 Neb. 662; McArthur v. Oliver, 60 Mich. 606.

When the United States go into court as plaintiffs they have no other or greater right than any citizen who is a plaintiff.

Mitchel v. United States, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 711 (9: 283); United States v. The Siren ("The Siren") 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 159 (19: 131); United States v. Beebe, 17 Fed. Rep. 36.

The rights of judgment creditors in the Federal courts are the same as those of judgment creditors in the state courts, and in determining whether a judgment is a lien upon property, or what interest in property can be sold under execution, we are to look to the statutes of the state in which the Federal court rendering the judgment sits.

U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 914, 967; United States v. Morrison, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 124 (7: 804); Williams v. Benedict, 49 U. S. 8 How. 107 (12: 1007); Ward v. Chamberlain, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 430 (17: 319).

In Alabama, from the adoption of the Code of 1852 to the enactment of the act of February 28, 1887, making a recorded judgment a lien, judgments were not liens on the defendant's property, either real or personal.

Daily v. Burke, 28 Ala. 328; Curry v. Landers, 35 Ala. 280; Dane v. McArthur, 57 Ala. 448; Walker v. Elledge, 65 Ala. 52; Enslin v. Wheeler, 98 Ala. 200.

The deed offered in evidence by the defendants and excluded on the objection of plaintiffs, grants, bargains, sells, and conveys to Henshaw all of Beebe's interest and estate in the property described. The use of these words very clearly operated to divest out of Beebe his entire legal title and interest in the lands.

4 Kent, Com. *461; Jones v. Reese, 65 Ala. 134; Chapman v. Abrahams, 61 Ala. 108; Chambers v. Ringstuff, 69 Ala. 140.

An interest in lands which may be levied on under execution under the laws of Alabama is where the defendant has a perfect equity, having paid the purchase money.

Shaw v. Lindsey, 60 Ala. 344; Smith v. Cockrell, 66 Ala. 64; Goodbar v. Daniel, 88 Ala. 583.

Where the instrument conveys property to a trustee to apply the same, or the proceeds thereof, to the payment of some or all of his debts and to return the surplus, if any, to the debtor, it passes all of the grantor's title, legal and equitable, and leaves in him no equity of redemption whatever.

Martin v. Hausman, 14 Fed. Rep. 160; 161 U. S.

Briggs v. Davis, 21 N. Y. 574; Hoffman v. Mackall, 5 Ohio St. 124, 64 Am. Dec. 637; Mills v. Williams, 31 Mo. App. 447; Burrill, Assignments, 6th ed. § 8.

If the facts offered to be proved were true, the property was subject to the payment of those partnership debts, and to what might be due the copartner on a settlement of the partnership, before any of it could have been appropriated to the payment of the individual debts of Beebe.

United States v. Hack, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 271 (8: 941); Claggett v. Kilbourne, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 346 (17: 213); Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 18 (26: 635); Emanuel v. Bird, 19 Ala. 596, 54 Am. Dec. 200; Abraham v. Janney, 102 Ala. 431, 28 L. R. A. 161; Donelson v. Posey, 13 Ala. 752; Andrews v. Brown, 21 Ala. 437, 56 Am. Dec. 252.

Until the lien, in execution of which the sale was made, attached, Beebe had full dominion over his property, and could alienate it, unincumbered by any lien, to a purchaser.

Adler v. Fenton, 65 U. S. 24 How. 407 (16: 696); Morsell v. First Nat Bank, 91 U. S. 357 (23: 436); Gamble v. Fowler, 58 Ala. 576; Lovell v. Webb, 62 Ala. 271, 282.

Where the assignment is of partnership property to pay partnership debts, the statute gives the United States no priority over partnership creditors; on the contrary, the courts recognize that their claims are prior to that of the government.

United States v. Hack, supra.

If the government did under the statute obtain a right to priority of payment out of the property assigned, that would give it no right to enforce the payment by sale under execution.

United States v. Hooe, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch. 73 (3: 370); Prince v. Bartlett, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 431 (3: 614); Thelussan v. Smith, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 396 (4: 271); Lewis v. United States, 92 U. S. 618 (23: 513).

If the defendant at the time of the sale, or at the time the lien, in the enforcement of which the sale was made, attached, did not have such an interest in the property as could be sold under execution, and such a legal title as will support ejectment, then no subsequently acquired title of the defendant will inure to the benefit of such purchaser.

Doe, Cook, v. Webb, 18 Ala. 810; Badham v. Cox, 11 Ired. L. 456; Westheimer v. Reed, 15 Neb. 662; Bates v. Bacon, 66 Tex. 348; Pratt v. Phillips, 1 Sneed, 543, 60 Am. Dec. 162; McArthur v. Oliver, 60 Mich. 606.

Messrs. J. M. Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, and George H. Patrick, for defendants in error:

The levy fixed upon the legal title to the property in question, which was alive when the deed in question was made and which continued in force, so that the subsequent sale related back and divested all legal title out of Beebe and overrode his deed to Henshaw.

Daley v. Perry, 9 Yerg. 444.

Courts have the power at any time to quash executions irregularly issued, but a motion must be made and presented with diligence, and any considerable delay will be treated as a waiver.

Henderson v. Henderson, 66 Ala. 556.

An application made after seven years, without explanation or excuse, was held to come too late.

Steele v. Tutwiler, 68 Ala. 107; Haggood v. Goddard, 26 Vt. 401.

An execution prematurely issued is not void. It is merely irregular and voidable, and must be respected and enforced until set aside on motion.

Lynch v. Kelly, 41 Cal. 232; Scribner v. Whitchee, 6 N. H. 63, 23 Am. Dec. 708; Allen v. Portland Stage Co. 8 Me. 209; Cody v. Quinn, 6 Ired. L. 193, 44 Am. Dec. 75; Shelton v. Pitts, Phil. L. 178, 93 Am. Dec. 586; Rosenfield v. Palmer, 5 Daly, 318; Stewart v. Stocker, 13 Serg. & R. 199, 15 Am. Dec. 589; Lowber & W.'s Appeal, 8 Watts & S. 389, 42 Am. Dec. 302; Wilkinson's Appeal, 65 Pa. 190; Carpenter v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 1 Lea, 202; Miller v. O'Bannon, 4 Lea, 398; Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flip. 305; Blaine v. The Charles Carter, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 331 (2:638).

In Alabama, where an execution is issued and comes to the hands of the sheriff the lien attaches, and even without a levy this lien continues from term to term, provided alias and pluries executions issue without a term elapsing, and a lien so kept alive is upon levy and sale under such execution, paramount to any intermediate conveyance by the judgment debtor.

Toney v. Wilson, 51 Ala. 501; Parks v. Coffey, 52 Ala. 32; Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597; Gamble v. Fowler, 58 Ala. 576; Childs v. Jones, 60 Ala. 352; Carlisle v. May, 75 Ala. 504; Perkins v. Brierfield Iron & C. Co. 77 Ala. 409.

If the levies did not avail to fix a lien on the legal title of Beebe, nevertheless, when alias executions issued and were levied, he had such an equitable interest as was subject to levy by the laws of Alabama; and plaintiff, having acquired this interest, can sustain an action of ejectment.

Cotton v. Carlisle, 85 Ala. 175; Shaw v. Lindsey, 60 Ala. 344; Smith v. Cockrell, 66 Ala. 64; Goodbar v. Daniel, 88 Ala. 583.

The supreme court of Alabama was not controlled by the technical distinction between assignments and mortgages, or deeds of trust.

Watts v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 76 Ala. 477; Warren v. Lee, 32 Ala. 440; Longmire v. Goode, 38 Ala. 577; DuBose v. Carlisle, 51 Ala. 592; Danner v. Brewer, 69 Ala. 191; Anniston Carriage Works v. Ward, 101 Ala. 674.

The deed to Henshaw was not an absolute assignment for the benefit of creditors, which left no equitable right in him, but it was a deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage, which left in him an equity of redemption.

Hargadine v. Henderson, 97 Mo. 375; Cooper v. Brock, 41 Mich. 488; Danner v. Brewer, 69 Ala. 199.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

[109] *The exception saved by defendants was to the refusal of the court to admit the deed of March 22, 1877, in evidence, and the first three errors assigned may be considered together.

It is the settled law of Alabama that a judgment in itself imposes no lien upon the property of the judgment debtor, real or personal, but that the issue of an execution and its delivery to the officer are necessary to create a lien. Dane v. McArthur, 57 Ala. 448; Carlisle v. Godwin, 68 Ala. 137; Perkins v. Brierfield Iron & C. Co. 77 Ala. 409.

Under Ala. Code 1867, § 2871, applicable here, executions could be levied on real property to which the defendant had a legal right or a perfect equity, having paid the purchase money, or in which he had a vested legal interest in possession, reversion, or remainder, whether he had the entire estate or was entitled to it in common with others; on personal property of the defendant; on an equity of redemption in land or personal property.

The deed of Morris of June 14, 1873, to Beebe and Henshaw, "their heirs and assigns," conveyed an undivided one-half interest in the lands to the grantees and vested in each of them an undivided one-fourth interest as tenants in common. This was so held in Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Henshaw, 89 Ala. 448, 451, and that "this being the case, although a partnership existed between Beebe and Henshaw, upon the death of the latter the legal title of his undivided one-fourth interest descended to, and vested in, his heirs, also as tenants in common with each other and with Beebe."

Defendants conceded legal title in Beebe, but by way of answering the objection to the instrument of March 22, 1877, as on its face lacking in good faith, evidence was tendered to show that the real estate was purchased with partnership funds, though not for partnership purposes. Hatchett v. Blanton, 72 Ala. 423, 435; Parsons, Partn. *365.

The evidence in this regard, such as it was, was offered in connection with the question of the admissibility of the deed of March 22, 1877, and the action of the court to which an exception was saved was solely to the refusal to permit that deed to be introduced.

*If valid executions were issued and [110] delivered to the marshal as early as January 23, 1877, and, on return, alias executions were issued and duly levied, then the subsequent sale related back and took the legal title out of Beebe, prior to March 22, 1877, so that the deed of the latter date was immaterial, and there was no error in refusing to admit it.

It is argued that the only executions shown by the record to have been issued on the judgments were those of May 10, 1877, but we do not think so. The executions of that date were alias writs, and the presumption is that they were preceded by others regularly issued. Sellers v. Hayes, 17 Ala. 749; Pollard v. Cocke, 19 Ala. 188. But the fact did not rest upon presumption, for these writs bore the indorsements of the receipt by the marshal, January 23, 1877, of the previous writs; their levy on the property in question, April 5, 1877; and their return April 6, 1877, for want of time to advertise the sale. And the return of the marshal covering the date of the receipt and the levy of the prior writs was duly indorsed upon the alias writs and certified to by the clerk of the court under his hand and seal. All this was admitted in evidence without objection, and if defendants desired to raise the objection that the original executions ought to be produced, they should have done so then, when, if well founded, the objection could have been removed.

The Code of 1867 provided that the clerk should issue executions as soon after the adjournment of the court as practicable, within the time prescribed, namely, if the session was one week, within ten days; if two weeks, within fifteen days; if three or more weeks, within twenty days; the day, month, and year of its receipt was required to be indorsed thereon; return to be made three days before the first day of the return term, which was the next term after its date, unless issued less than fifteen days before court, and then the term next thereafter; and the reason for its nonexecution in whole or in part was required to be stated in the return. §§ 2838, 2839, 2851-2854.

Sections 2872 and 2873 were as follows:

"Sec. 2872. A writ of fieri facias is a lien only 111] within the *county in which it is received by the officer, on the land and personal property of the defendant subject to levy and sale from the time only that the writ is received by the sheriff; which lien continues as long as the writ is regularly issued and delivered to the sheriff without the lapse of an entire term.

"Sec. 2873. The liens of executions as between different judgment creditors, and between judgment creditors and purchasers from the defendant for valuable consideration, are hereby declared to be: That if an entire term elapse between the return of an execution and the suing out of an alias, the lien created by the delivery of the first execution to the sheriff is lost; but if an alias be sued out before the lapse of an entire term, and delivered to the sheriff before the sale of property under a junior execution, the lien created by the delivery of the first execution must be preferred."

The regular terms of the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of Alabama began on the 1st Monday of November, 1876, and the 1st Monday in May, 1877, and these writs were issued, delivered, and levied without the lapse of an entire term as specified in the statute. Carlisle v. May, 75 Ala. 502. According to the settled rule in Alabama where an execution comes to the hands of the sheriff, the lien attaches and continues from term to term provided alias and pluries writs are duly issued and delivered; and, while it is so kept alive, the lien is, upon levy and sale, paramount to any intermediate conveyance of the debtor. Parks v. Coffey, 52 Ala. 32; Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597; Childs v. Jones, 60 Ala. 352; Perkins v. Brierfield Iron & C. Co. 77 Ala. 403, 410; Massingill v. Downs, 48 U. S. 7 How. 760, 767 [12: 903, 906].

The original executions here had been duly issued and levied but returned for want of time to advertise and sell. The alias writs were then taken out, and apparently a new levy and sale made thereunder. In some jurisdictions a formal venditioni exponas might have been issued, but these alias writs with their indorsements thereon of the prior levy were quite as efficacious, and the sale could be sustained as made under the original or new levy.

112] *In Dryer v. Graham, 58 Ala. 623, 626, the supreme court of Alabama said: "It rests in the election of the plaintiff in execution to take out an alias execution, or a writ of venditioni exponas. If he desires merely a sale of the property on which a levy has been made, and not of other property, or the acquisition of a lien on other property, a venditioni exponas is the proper writ. The venditioni exponas continues the lien of the execution which has been levied, as to the property on which the levy was made, whether the property be real or personal. The writ is, indeed, merely for the continuation and completion of the original execution. And if its mandate is for the sale of land on which there has been a previous levy, it not only compels a sale, but confers the authority to sell, and the title of the purchaser has relation to the date of the lien of the execution. . . . A venditioni exponas is in its nature and operation, as to the property on which the levy may have been made, an alias execution. It merely commands and authorizes, as to real estate, the completion of the execution already begun."

Certainly this sale was none the less valid because there had been a levy of the original writs, and alias executions were issued and levied on the same property.

But it is contended on behalf of plaintiffs in error that no executions could have issued until March 25, 1877, by reason of the memoranda on the judgment records that "by consent execution is stayed until the 25th day of March, A. D. 1877."

Assuming that the consent for a stay was given by some one acting for the government, although that does not appear, yet from the fact that executions were issued before the expiration of the time, the presumption would be reasonable, nothing appearing to the contrary, that they were rightly issued, and that either the agreement lacked consideration, or was not authorized, or had been by mutual assent annulled, or that the terms of the agreement had not been complied with by defendants.

The supreme court of Mississippi held in Jones v. Bailey, 5 How. (Miss.) 564, where plaintiffs agreed to stay of execution for a certain time, "unless defendants consent for its issuance *sooner," and execution was is- 113 sued without regard to the agreement and property sold, that the presumption was that it issued with the consent of defendants.

The marshal's return on the original writs showed that notice of the levy thereof was given Beebe in writing as required by statute (§ 2857); and the fact that he did not complain that the executions had been issued contrary to agreement renders the presumption that they were not obnoxious to that objection well nigh, if not altogether, unanswerable.

Aside from this, as the executions were in fact issued and received by the marshal January 23, 1877, the question thus suggested would be whether the executions were voidable or absolutely void, if the consent for a stay was lawful and the executions were taken out in violation thereof.

In Freeman on Executions (2d ed.) §§ 25, 26 et seq., a text book cited and relied on in numerous decisions of the supreme court of Alabama, it is said that the decided preponderance of authority is in favor of the proposition that the premature issue of an execution is an irregularity merely; that the execution is erroneous but must be respected and may be enforced until it is vacated in some manner prescribed by law; that no one but the defendant can complain of it, and even he cannot do so in any collateral proceeding. And among other cases, Blaine v. The Charles Carter, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 328 [2: 636], is cited, which was decided by Chief Justice Marshall on circuit and his decree affirmed by this court, Mr. Justice Chase delivering the opinion. In that case, under an act of Congress providing that "until the expiration of ten days, execution shall not issue," certain executions were collaterally objected to on the ground that they were issued within ten days, and the court said: "If irregular the court from which they issued ought to have been moved to set them aside; they were not void, because the marshal could have justified under them, and if voidable, the proper means of destroying their efficacy have not been pursued." So, an execution issued after a year and a day is voidable, but not void; even the defendant cannot attack it collaterally; and a levy and sale, made under it, are sufficient to transfer his title. Freem. Executions, § 29. In Brevard v. Jones, 50 Ala. 221, 242, this was so held, and the court remarked: "It can make no difference if the plaintiff in execution is the purchaser, because the question is not one of notice, but of the status of the execution."

In Steele v. Tutwiler, 68 Ala. 107, 110, the supreme court of Alabama referred to Morgan v. Evans, 72 Ill. 586, 22 Am. Rep. 154, which ruled that an execution was not void, but voidable where it issued on a dormant judgment after the time limited by statute; and Stewart v. Stocker, 13 Serg. & R. 199, 15 Am. Dec. 589, where a similar ruling was made in respect of an execution issued on a judgment confessed prematurely, contrary to the terms of a bond; and the court said: "In all such cases, though the execution may be erroneous and irregular, it must be respected and enforced until vacated by a motion to quash, or in some other manner prescribed by law. Freem. Executions, § 25. And it is the duty of the party seeking to take advantage of irregularities or defects of this character to move with proper diligence at the earliest opportunity. Undue laches is treated as a waiver of the right, and operates as an irrevocable renunciation of it. Freem. Executions, §§ 76, 30. And after a delay of seven years in this case, without explanation or excuse, we think the motion comes too late." And to the same effect see Henderson v. Henderson, 66 Ala. 556, 558. Again, it is held that executions issued contrary to agreement between the parties are subject to the same rules as other premature executions. In Cody v. Quinn, 6 Ired. L. 193, 44 Am. Dec. 75, it was decided that a memorandum made on the docket, with the consent of the parties by the clerk, "No fi. fa. to issue until October or until ordered," was no part of the judgment, and if execution were issued before then it was not void. In Townsend v. Fontenot, 42 La. Ann. 890, which was a suit to restrain the execution of a judgment recovered in a suit to enforce payment of certain notes with recognition of a mortgage and vendor's privilege, the judgment contained the following statement, prepared and written by plaintiff's counsel, and inserted by plaintiff's instructions: "The attorney of plaintiff in this suit declares he has been instructed not to seize or sell said *property before the end [115 of the year;" and it was held to operate a stay of execution.

But in the case in hand the judgment records are complete and perfect in themselves, and executions were thereby ordered to issue. The entries as to stay purported to be memoranda of an agreement of counsel were evidently placed where they were as memoranda merely, and did not form part of the judgments. Even if the entries could be treated as the act of the court, and the executions were improperly issued, which is not to be presumed under the circumstances disclosed by this record, they would not have been absolutely void and incapable of being validated.

So far as appears, Beebe never took any steps to quash the executions or to vacate the levy, if any ground existed for doing so, and the evidence that they issued and were levied was admitted without objection on the trial. We regard the position now taken on his behalf as destitute of merit. The circuit court properly excluded the deed of March 22, 1877, and, this being so, no error was committed in the charge to the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Gray, who was not present at the argument, and Mr. Justice Peckham, who was not then a member of the court, took no part in the decision.

STEPHEN W. CAREY ET AL., Appts.,
v.
HOUSTON & TEXAS CENTRAL RAIL-WAY COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 115-133.)

Question of jurisdiction—ancillary suit—jurisdiction therein.

1. No question of jurisdiction over a foreclosure sale or the rendition of a decree therein can be availed of in a subsequent suit to annul the decree for fraud as a question of jurisdiction which can be certified for the purpose of a direct appeal from the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States.
2. Where the United States circuit court had jurisdiction of a foreclosure suit only upon the ground of diverse citizenship, a suit to vacate the decree therein for collusion and fraud is an ancillary suit and a continuation of the main suit, and the jurisdiction of that court over it rests on the jurisdiction over the main suit, and depends entirely on diverse citizenship; and the

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court depending on parties and residence, see note to Emory v. Greenough, 1: 640.

As to colorable conveyances to enable suit to be brought; motive of transfer; when no objection; coupons; residence of assignor,—see note to McDonald v. Smalley, 7: 287.

As to jurisdiction of United States courts over common-law offenses, see note to United States v. Coolidge, 4: 124.

As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question; what constitutes Federal question,—see note to Hamblin v. Western Land Co., 37: 267.

decree of the circuit court of appeals therein is final under the act of March 3, 1891, § 6, and an appeal therefrom cannot be taken to this court.

[No. 642.]

Submitted December 23, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit dismissing an ancillary suit brought by Stephen W. Carey et al., plaintiffs, against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company et al., to vacate a certain decree and a sale thereunder of the property of said company, rendered in a foreclosure action. On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.

See same case below, 45 Fed. Rep. 438, 52 Fed. Rep. 671, and same case 150 U. S. 170 [37: 1041].

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a bill filed by Carey, a citizen and resident of New Jersey, and seven other persons, citizens and residents of New York and citizens of Great Britain, respectively, as stockholders of the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, in their own behalf and in behalf of all others similarly situated, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Texas, against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, No. 1, a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the state of Texas and a citizen of that state, residing in the eastern district; the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, No. 2, likewise a citizen of Texas and a resident of the eastern district; the Central Trust Company of New York, a citizen of New York; the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company of New York, as trustee, a citizen of New York; Nelson S. Easton and James Rintoul, as trustees, citizens and residents of New York; Benjamin A. Shepherd, trustee, a citizen of Texas; and many other persons and corporations, citizens of New York, Kentucky, Texas, and Louisiana; to impeach and vacate a certain decree of the circuit court entered in the consolidated cause hereafter mentioned.

The Houston & Texas Central Railway Company was a corporation and citizen of the state of Texas and a resident of the eastern district of that state, owning a railway consisting of a main line from Houston to Dennison; a line from Hempstead to Austin, called the Western Division; and a line from Bremond to Ross, known as the Waco & Northwestern Division; and a large quantity of lands acquired from the state. The property of the company was subject to the lien of seven mortgages, known as 117] the main line first mortgage, Western Division first mortgage, Waco & Northwestern Division first mortgage, Main Line and Western Division consolidated mortgage, Waco & Northwestern Division consolidated mortgage, income and indemnity mortgage, and general mortgage. The company made default January 1, 1885, in the payment of interest on its main line first mortgage bonds and its Western Division first mortgage bonds. On February 11, 1885, Nelson S. Easton and James Rintoul, citizens and residents of the state of New York, trustees under the main line first mortgage and Western Division first mortgage, filed their two bills in equity in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Texas against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company as a corporation and citizen of the state of Texas for the purpose of enforcing the trust provided in the mortgages, protecting the trust property, obtaining proceedings for the sale of certain lands covered by the mortgages, and for other relief; and prayed for an accounting, an injunction, a decree of sale of part of the trust property, and for a receiver. These suits were numbered 183 and 184 on the equity docket. The railway company appeared and answered these bills.

On February 16, 1885, the Southern Development Company, a corporation organized under the laws of California and a citizen and resident of that state, in its own behalf and in behalf of all other persons similarly situated, who might intervene in the suit to protect their own interests, filed its bill of complaint in the circuit court against the railway company as a corporation organized under the laws of Texas, alleging among other things that it was a creditor of the defendant for large sums advanced for supplies, labor, operating, and managing expenses, and other necessary expenses, which defendant had promised to pay out of its earnings; that the indebtedness was in equity a charge upon defendant's income and property; that there had been a diversion of the income and that by reason thereof a lien had resulted in complainant's favor which it was entitled to have enforced. The bill alleged the absolute insolvency of the railway company, and that loss and injury would be occasioned by a sale of the property ⁱⁿ parcels, and prayed for the 118 appointment of receivers and the payment of complainant's claim out of the rents, revenues, and earnings of the property. The railway company appeared in this suit, which was numbered 185, and on February 20, 1885, an order was made by the circuit court appointing Benjamin G. Clark and Charles Dillingham joint receivers of all the property, real and personal, of said company. On the succeeding 20th of April, the Southern Development Company amended its bill, making Nelson S. Easton and James Rintoul, trustees, the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, a corporation and citizen of the state of New York, and Benjamin A. Shepherd, trustee under the income and indemnity mortgage, a citizen of Texas, and a resident of the eastern district of that state, defendants thereto, and praying that accounts might be taken, liens and encumbrances marshaled, net earnings applied, and if the amounts realized should not be sufficient for the payment of the claim, that the property should be sold for that purpose. The railway company answered the bill on its merits, and the defendants Easton and Rintoul, trustees, filed demurrers.

March 18, 1885, the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, a corporation and citizen of New York, filed its bill in equity in the circuit court against the railway company, which was numbered 188 on the equity docket, alleging that it was the trustee under the Waco & Northwestern Division first and consolidated mortgages, and the Main Line and Western Division consolidated mortgages; that the mortgagors had violated many of their agreements and that default had been made in the payment of interest; that the company was insolvent; that the suits hereinbefore mentioned were pending; that the trust property was in jeopardy; and it prayed for an accounting, injunction, and a decree of sale of part of the trust property and for a receiver of all the property of every description of the railway company, with the usual powers. The railway company answered this bill on the merits, June 22, 1885.

The circuit court made three orders on May 7, 1885, in these cases: In No. 185, as to sales of lands and their proceeds, and directing the receivers to account; in Nos. 183 and *184, making that order applicable to those cases, and in No. 188, making the same order as to that case.

January 21, 1886, Easton and Rintoul, trustees in the two mortgages involved in Nos. 183 and 184, citizens of the state of New York, filed two other bills in equity for the foreclosure and sale of the railway property covered by those mortgages; that to foreclose the main line first mortgage was numbered 198, and that to foreclose the Western Division first mortgage was numbered 199. In No. 198 complainants made the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company and Benjamin A. Shepherd, a citizen and resident of Texas, and trustee under the income and indemnity mortgage, defendants, and as to the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company averred that as trustees under the mortgages or deeds of trust, "hereinafter described, that company would be found benefited by, and it is to their advantage that, the judgment and relief hereinafter prayed for, or some part thereof, should be granted to your orators. That said property covered by the said first mortgage on said main line, as well as all the other property, assets, and effects of said railway company, being now in the hands of this court, by the receivership existing in respect of the same, and your orators thereby being required by law to institute this action in this court and to come before this tribunal, in order to reach the property in its possession, and to obtain its rights concerning the same, and all the parties interested in the property covered by said mortgage on the main line, as well as all the other mortgages and property of said railway company, being now before the court in said actions hereinbefore described as Nos. 183, 184, 185, and 188, on the equity docket of this court, the said Farmers' Loan & Trust Company may and should be made a party defendant in this cause irrespective of its citizenship. And said corporation should be brought in as a defendant herein by the order and direction of this court, and should be bound by the judgment and proceedings herein."

The record does not show that this company was made a defendant or appeared at this stage of the proceedings.

In No. 199 the same parties were joined as defendants and a like averment made as to the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company. Process was issued under both of these bills against the railway company and Shepherd, trustee, and duly served upon them. Thereafter, and on April 24, 1886, the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company filed a bill in equity in the circuit court for the foreclosure of the general mortgage, which was numbered 201. The railway company was made sole party defendant, and the bill prayed for a sale of all the property of the railway company to satisfy the mortgage debt. Process was issued and served.

On May 26, 1886, an order was entered by Mr. Justice Woods and the circuit judge in the six suits upon the mortgages, whereby it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed that no further proceedings should be taken in causes Nos. 183, 184, and 188, without notice to the railway company, and that causes Nos. 198, 199, and 201 should be consolidated under No. 198, under the name and style of "Nelson S. Easton and James Rintoul, Trustees, and the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, Trustee, against The Houston & Texas Central Railway Company and Benjamin Shepherd, Trustee, consolidated cause;" that in said cause Easton and Rintoul should stand as complainants as trustees under the mortgages made by the defendant railway company, dated respectively July 1, 1866, and December 21, 1870; that the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, expressly assenting thereto, should stand as complainant, as trustee under the mortgages made by the railway company, dated, respectively, June 16, 1873, October 1, 1872, May 1, 1875, and April 1, 1881; that Shepherd should stand as defendant, as trustee under the mortgage made by the railway company, dated May 7, 1877; that the bills filed in causes Nos. 198, 199, and 201 should stand as bills in the consolidated cause, and might be amended by either complainant, as it might be advised, and that any party might file an answer to any original or amended bill; and that in case any one or more of the bills filed by the complainants, in the causes consolidated, should be finally dismissed, the remaining bill or bills should continue to stand as the bill in such consolidated cause. On the same day an order was made in said consolidated cause [121 No. 198, appointing Nelson S. Easton, James Rintoul, and Charles Dillingham receivers of all the property of the railway company, and directing Clark and Dillingham, as receivers in No. 185, to immediately transfer and deliver all said property to the receivers so appointed. May 27, 1886, and after the possession of all the property in controversy had passed into the hands of Easton and Rintoul and Dillingham, as receivers, the court made a decree dismissing the bill of the Southern Development Company in No. 185 for want of equity, and declared and directed that "all said property being now in the custody of the court, and such custody and control being continuous, the entry of this decree shall operate ipso facto a transfer of the legal custody of said property from said Clark and Dillingham to said receivers in No. 198." Various amendments were subsequently filed.

The railway company answered in consolidated cause No. 198, September 3, 1886. The Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, though complainant in the consolidated cause, answered the bills of Easton and Rintoul, trustees, August 2, 1886.

On April 30, 1888, Shepherd, trustee, with leave of court, filed a cross bill in No. 198 to foreclose the income and indemnity mortgage, and the railway company answered admitting the truth thereof.

On May 1, 1888, the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company filed bills in the nature of cross bills, with leave of court, to foreclose the Main Line and Western Division consolidated mortgage and the Waco & Northwestern Division consolidated mortgage. The railway company answered these bills May 2, 1888, and the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company answered Shepherd's cross bill on the same day. All the mortgages were thus under foreclosure except the Waco & Northwestern Division first mortgage.

On May 4, 1888, the court made its decree of foreclosure and sale in consolidated cause No. 198. The property was sold under the decree September 8, 1888, at Galveston, Texas. The property covered by the Waco & Northwestern Division first mortgage was purchased subject 122] to that *mortgage by George E. Downs for $25,000, and all the residue of the property of the railway company was sold to Frederick P. Olcott, president of the Central Trust Company, for $10,580,000. The sale was duly confirmed December 4, 1888.

On December 23, 1889, Carey and others, as stockholders of the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, filed their bill in the circuit court for the vacation of said sale and decree, and an amended bill February 18, 1890. The contents of these pleadings are largely set forth in Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 170 [37:1041]. The gravamen of the bill was that the decree was entered through collusion and fraud. Briefly, the bill alleged that prior to 1883, defendant Huntington, who, with his associates, controlled the Southern Development Company, formed a syndicate with them for the purpose of acquiring, in his own interest and in the interest of that company, and of the Southern Pacific Company, the control of the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company in such manner that the railway might be run solely in the interest of the syndicate and the Southern Pacific Company, the rights of the stockholders being effectually shut out and barred. The bill further alleged that in January, 1885, the holders of the first mortgage bonds presented their coupons for payment, and it was fraudulently contrived by Huntington and his associates so that the coupons were cashed and secretly taken up by the Southern Development Company, without notice to the holders thereof; that thereupon that company commenced suit against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company in the circuit court, and in February, 1885, the appointment of receivers was procured in that suit, the order being made with the consent of the railway company through its solicitors; that subsequently defendants Easton and Rintoul, trustees, filed their bills in the circuit court for foreclosure; and the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company filed its bill, which said bills were numbered 198, 199, and 201, and the causes were by consent consolidated as No. 198; that the suit of the Southern Development Company was dismissed, and thereupon receivers of the 123] railway company were *appointed in the consolidated cause, the company through their counsel consenting. It was also averred that in none of the mortgages was it provided that the failure to pay interest upon any of the bonds should be taken to precipitate the maturity of the principal, nor did they provide for nor permit the sale of the railway prior to the maturity of the principal of the bonds; and that the answer of the railway company in said suits expressly denied that the principal sum of the bonds had become due or demandable, and averred that the court had no power to decree a sale of the railway prior to the maturity thereof or prior to the sale of the lands covered by the mortgages.

The bill then set up an agreement for the reorganization of the railway company, and alleged that in pursuance thereof and of the scheme mapped out, complainants in the consolidated causes applied for and on consent procured to be entered the decree of May 4, 1888, for the foreclosure of the mortgages and a sale of the property, and the sale followed accordingly.

The bill charged that "the said decree was and is absolutely invalid and void and beyond the power of the court to grant; that there was no foundation for said decree or jurisdiction in the court to award it, and that the same was entered by consent and agreement and without any investigation or adjudication by the court, but was the result of agreement simply, and was procured, as complainants allege on information and belief, by collusion and fraud on the part of said Huntington and his associates and the directors and officers of said Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, and was and is a part of the scheme to acquire possession of said railway in the interest of said Huntington and the said Southern Pacific Company without regard to the rights or interests of the holders of the stock of the said company No. 1 and in direct disregard of the provisions and terms of the mortgages; that the defenses interposed that the principal of the mortgages had not become due and that the said railway could not be sold without a sale first of the lands, and the other defenses interposed were substantially abandoned and withdrawn as part *of the said wrongful and fraudulent [124 scheme herein referred to; that the said defenses were never submitted to the court for adjudication or determination, nor was evidence heard or offered to sustain the same, but the decree was the result of the agreement which the bondholders had made with the said Southern Pacific Company and Central Trust Company, and the rights of the stockholders were not considered or protected by any of the parties to the record in said cause, nor submitted to the court for adjudication or investigation, nor were the stockholders in any way advised or permitted to be informed of the transaction herein complained of."

It was further averred that the decree fixed no amount due, and no amount which the company was required to pay to redeem, and that it contradicted the provisions of the mortgages.

The organization of a company styled the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, designated in the bill as No. 2, after possession under the sale was acquired for the purpose of operating the railway, was then set up, and the terms on which the stockholders of the original company were informed September 1, 1889, they could participate in the new company, which required payment of an enormous and unnecessary assessment, and constituted an attempt to compel the stockholders of company No. 1 to turn over their stock to Huntington and his associates, etc. The prayer of the bill was that the decree rendered by the court May 4, 1888, in the consolidated cause, be vacated and set aside and adjudged to be fraudulent, collusive, illegal, and void, and that complainants be permitted to intervene and become parties defendant in said suit, and be heard and defend the same; that the sale of the railway and lands of the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, No. 1, under said decree be vacated and set aside, and the said railway and lands be restored to the possession of the receivers; that defendants be enjoined temporarily and perpetually from delivering or recording any mortgage upon the property of the company referred to in said decree, and from issuing, alienating, or parting with any of the shares of stock of the new or reorganized [25] *Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company, No. 2, or any bonds secured by mortgage upon any property claimed to be possessed by said company, or any stock or bonds issued or intended to be issued pursuant to the reorganization agreement; and for general relief.

The principal defendants at first demurred, and then answered the bill, denying the allegations upon which complainants sought to impeach the validity of the decree of the circuit court in the foreclosure proceedings and other transactions referred to. Complainants filed replications. A motion for an injunction pendente lite was denied. Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 45 Fed. Rep. 438.

The cause came on for final hearing on the pleadings and proofs November 16, 1892, and the circuit court entered a final decree dismissing the bill as to all the defendants with costs. Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 671.

Complainants prayed two appeals from this decree, one to the circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit, and the other to this court. The appeals were allowed, citations issued, and assignments of errors filed. On motion of appellees, the appeal to this court was dismissed November 13, 1893. Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 170 [37: 1041]. The case on the appeal taken to the circuit court of appeals was heard by that court, Circuit Judge McCormick presiding, and on June 5, 1894, being one of the days of November term, 1893, a decree was rendered affirming the decree of the circuit court.

May 2, 1895, a petition was presented to Circuit Judge McCormick, praying the allowance of an appeal from the decree to this court, which on the same day was allowed by an order in writing upon the petition, and at the same time a citation was signed, and a cost bond approved. The petition for appeal and the order allowing the same and the bond and assignment of errors were all filed May 2, 1895, in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of appeals. The record was filed here June 4, 1895, and appellees now move to dismiss the appeal.

Messrs. J. Hubley Ashton, E. B. Kruttschnitt, and Adrian H. Joline for appellants, in favor of motion to dismiss.

Messrs. Jefferson Chandler, A. J. Dit-tenhoefer, George Clark, and Russell H. Landale for appellants, in opposition to motion.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

By the 5th section of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), it is provided that appeals may be taken from the circuit courts directly to this court "in any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue; in such cases the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision." And we held in respect of the direct appeal to this court taken from the decree of the circuit court in this cause that such an appeal was not authorized simply because the jurisdiction of the circuit court over another suit previously determined by the same court might be involved, and we said: "It is the jurisdiction of the court below over the particular case in which the appeal from the decree therein is prosecuted, that, being in issue and decided against the party raising it and duly certified, justifies such appeal directly to this court. This suit to impeach the decree of May 4, 1888, and to prevent the consummation of the alleged plan of reorganization, was a separate and distinct case, so far as this inquiry is concerned, from the suit to foreclose the mortgages on the railroad property; and no question of jurisdiction over the foreclosure suit or the rendition of the decree passed therein can be availed of to sustain the present appeal from the decree in this proceeding." Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 170, 180 [37: 1041, 1044].

We are quite content with the conclusion there reached, for this suit is in itself unquestionably a distinct suit in the sense in which those words were used in disposing of the former appeal; and in respect of it the jurisdiction of the circuit court was not in issue, nor was any question of *jurisdiction certified. [127] Carey and his cocomplainants did not intervene in consolidated cause No. 198, and seek to have the question of the jurisdiction of the circuit court therein certified to this court and appeal directly therefrom, nor did they file a bill of review for error of law apparent in that the circuit court took jurisdiction as a court of the United States. The gravamen of the bill they did file was fraud and collusion, and the allegations of want of jurisdiction relate to prematurity in the attempt to foreclose or to other matters not bearing on the jurisdiction of the Federal courts as such. And the prayer was that the decree be vacated and adjudged fraudulent, collusive, illegal, and void; that complainants might be permitted to intervene and become parties defendant; that the sale of the railroad and lands of the company under the decree be vacated and set aside; "and the said railway and lands be restored to the possession of the receivers appointed by this court or such other officers or receivers as the court may name;" for injunction and general relief.

But the question now before us is whether the decree of the circuit court of appeals affirming the decree of the circuit court upon the merits is made final by the 6th section of the act of March 3, 1891, which provides that

161 U. S.

"the judgment or decrees of the circuit court of appeals shall be final in all cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy being aliens and citizens of the United States, or citizens of different states; also in all cases arising under the patent laws, under the revenue laws, and under the criminal laws, and in admiralty cases."

The suits "of a civil nature, at common law or in equity," of which the circuit courts of the United States have original cognizance, are enumerated in the 1st section of the judiciary act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373) as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866).

It is denied that the jurisdiction of the circuit court in the present suit depended entirely or at all upon the fact that the opposite parties were citizens of different states, and insisted 128] *that jurisdiction was entertained because it was a bill to set aside a foreclosure decree entered in the circuit court by consent and in pursuance of a fraudulent plan to reorganize the company, and the res was in possession of the court whether "rightfully or wrongfully." The ground of jurisdiction thus suggested is not a ground of Federal jurisdiction, but of the exercise of the power of courts of superior general jurisdiction; and it undoubtedly exists over all suits and proceedings ancillary, auxiliary, or supplemental to other suits, of which the circuit courts have cognizance as courts of the United States.

The character of this jurisdiction is thus treated by Mr. Justice Miller in Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 609, 633 [17: 886, 895], where, speaking for the court, he said: "It is not a question whether the proceeding is supplemental and ancillary or is independent and original, in the sense of the rules of equity pleading; but whether it is supplemental and ancillary, or is to be considered entirely new and original, in the sense which this court has sanctioned with reference to the line which divides the jurisdiction of the Federal courts from that of the state courts. No one, for instance, would hesitate to say that, according to the English chancery practice, a bill to enjoin a judgment at law is an original bill in the chancery sense of the word. Yet this court has decided, many times, that when a bill is filed in the circuit court, to enjoin a judgment of that court, it is not to be considered as an original bill, but as a continuation of the proceeding at law; so much so that the court will proceed in the injunction suit without actual service of subpoena on the defendant, and though he be a citizen of another state, if he were a party to the judgment at law."

In Rouse v. Letcher, 156 U. S. 47 [39: 341], we have already adjudged that the 6th section authorizes no appeal to this court from a decree of a circuit court of appeals in an ancillary or supplemental suit or proceeding in the circuit court, where the jurisdiction of that court in the main or original suit depends entirely upon the parties being citizens of different states. In that case the main foreclosure suit 129] was between *citizens of different states, and receivers had been appointed. A proceeding by intervention was afterwards instituted in the circuit court against the receivers, who appealed to this court from the decree of the circuit court of appeals against them, and the appeal was dismissed because the opposite parties to the foreclosure suit were citizens of different states, and the decree was therefore made final by the statute. And we said:

"And since, where jurisdiction would not obtain in an independent suit, an intervening proceeding may nevertheless be maintained as ancillary and supplemental under jurisdiction already subsisting, such proceeding is to be regarded in that aspect, even in cases where the circuit court might have had jurisdiction of an independent action. Here, as we have said, the jurisdiction of the circuit court was invoked in the first instance by the filing of the bill, and it was under that jurisdiction that appellee intervened in the case, and that jurisdiction depended entirely upon diverse citizenship. . . . If the word 'controversy' added anything to the comprehensiveness of the section, the fact remains that the exercise of the power of disposition over this intervention, whether styled suit or controversy, was the exercise of power invoked at the institution of the main suit, and it is to that point of time that the inquiry as to the jurisdiction must necessarily be referred. Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turck, 150 U. S. 138 [37: 1030]. Nor can the conclusion be otherwise because separate appeals may be allowed on such interventions. Decrees upon controversies separable from the main suit may indeed be separately reviewed, but the jurisdiction of the circuit court over such controversies is not, therefore, to be ascribed to grounds independent of jurisdiction in the main suit."

Rouse v. Letcher was followed in Gregory v. Van Ee, 160 U. S. 643 [ante, 566], and it was there observed:

"The circuit courts of the United States have cognizance of suits as provided by the acts of Congress, and when their jurisdiction as Federal courts has attached, they possess and exercise all the powers of courts of superior general jurisdiction. Accordingly, they entertain and dispose of interventions and the *like on familiar and recognized principles of general law and practice, but the ground on which their jurisdiction as courts of the United States rests is to be found in the statutes, and to that source must always be attributed. Manifestly, the decree in the main suit cannot be revised through an appeal from a decree on ancillary or supplemental proceedings, thus accomplishing indirectly what could not be done directly. And even if the decree on such proceedings may be in itself independent of the controversy between the original parties, yet if the proceedings are entertained in the circuit court because of its possession of the subject of the ancillary or supplemental application, the disposition of the latter must partake of the finality of the main decree, and cannot be brought here on the theory that the circuit court exercised jurisdiction independently of the ground of jurisdiction which was originally invoked as giving cognizance to that court as a court of the United States."

Complainants and defendants in the bill under consideration were not all citizens of different states, and the jurisdiction of the circuit court over the suit did not purport to be founded upon diverse citizenship. Independently, therefore, of the foreclosure suit, the decree in which was sought to be impeached, the bill was not sustainable in the circuit court.

It is very well settled that a bill in equity by a corporation or the stockholders of a corporation in the circuit court to set aside a final decree of that court against the corporation in a foreclosure suit upon the ground that such a decree was obtained by collusion and fraud, and the court had no jurisdiction to make it, is an ancillary suit and a continuation of the main suit so far as the jurisdiction of the circuit court as a court of the United States is concerned. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 609 [17: 886]; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276 [28: 145]; Pacific R. Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 111 U. S. 505, 523 [28: 498, 504]. The bill in the latter case was brought in the circuit court for the eastern district of Missouri by a corporation, a citizen of Missouri, against another corporation, also a citizen of Missouri, other citizens of Missouri, and others, alleging fraud and collusion in the [131] original foreclosure suit *and praying that the decree of foreclosure and sale be set aside. Mr. Justice Blatchford, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"The bill falls within recognized cases which have been adjudged by this court, and have been recently reviewed and reaffirmed in Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276 [28: 145]. On the question of jurisdiction the suit may be regarded as ancillary to Pacific R. Co. v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 289 [25: 932], so that the relief asked may be granted by the court which made the decree in that suit, without regard to the citizenship of the present parties, though partaking so far of the nature of an original suit as to be subject to the rules in regard to the service of process which are laid down by Mr. Justice Miller in Pacific Railroad v. Missouri P. R. Co. 1 McCrary, 647. The bill, though an original bill in the chancery sense of the word, is a continuation of the former suit, on the question of the jurisdiction of the circuit court. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 609, 633 [17: 886, 895]."

The same principle was applied to a bill by the stockholders of a corporation filed for the purpose of impeaching a decree of foreclosure and sale, by Mr. Justice Jackson, then circuit judge, in Foster v. Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 628, in the circuit court for the northern district of Ohio, where he said:

"There is no want of jurisdiction growing out of the fact that some of the defendants to the present suit are citizens of the same state (Ohio) with the complainant, inasmuch as this suit may properly be regarded as ancillary or supplemental to the original suit in which the decree complained of was made. It is well settled that in such cases suit may be maintained without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 609 [17: 886]; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276 [28: 145]; Pacific R. Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 111 U. S. 505 [28: 498]. It is also well settled that a shareholder may interpose and set the machinery of the law in motion for the protection of corporate rights, or the redress of corporate wrongs, when the corporate management, after proper demand, refuse or fail to act in the matter."

The decree in that case was affirmed by this court (146 U. S. *88 [36: 899]), and there [132] is a marked resemblance between the bill exhibited there and that before us.

We regard it as not open to argument that the jurisdiction of the circuit court, as a court of the United States, over this suit, rested on the jurisdiction of that court over the suit in which the decree of May 4, 1888, was rendered, and we think it clear that that jurisdiction depended entirely upon diverse citizenship.

The bill in No. 201 was filed by the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, trustee, a citizen of New York, against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, a citizen of Texas, April 24, 1886, to foreclose the general mortgage, and no other party was named as defendant. The ground of Federal jurisdiction was diverse citizenship. How efficacious a decree could have been rendered in that cause, if it had stood alone, we need not consider, nor inquire when persons who might be considered necessary parties may be dispensed with as such. It may be noted, however, that the general mortgage was the last mortgage, and prior encumbrancers, the validity of whose encumbrances is not drawn in question, are not indispensable parties to a bill to foreclose a mortgage so situated. Hagan v. Walker, 55 U. S. 14 How. 29, 37 [14: 312, 316]; Jones, Mortg. § 1439.

The bills in Nos. 198 and 199 were filed by Easton and Rintoul, trustees, citizens of New York, January 21, 1886, against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company and Benjamin A. Shepherd, trustee, both citizens of Texas, to foreclose the main line first mortgage and the Western Division first mortgage, and it was alleged that the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, trustee, under subsequent mortgages, should be made a party defendant and brought in by the order and direction of the court, in view of the fact that the property was in the circuit court's possession, and complainants had therefore been obliged to institute their suit therein. These cases were consolidated by the order of May 26, 1886, the parties being arranged, for the purposes of jurisdiction, on the one side or the other of the matters in dispute, as indicated in Pacific R. Co. v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 289 [25: 932], and, unless that *order is to be disregarded, the ques- [133] tion whether either case lacked an indispensable party became immaterial. Thereafter cross bills and answers were filed as has been stated. The jurisdiction over these three separate suits and over the consolidated cause depended entirely upon diverse citizenship, and if maintainable as to either of them, could be maintained as to all by reason of lawful possession of the res.

In No. 185 the Southern Development Company, a corporation and citizen of California, filed its bill against the railway company as a corporation and citizen of Texas, February 16, 1885, the jurisdiction resting upon diverse citizenship, and in that suit the court appointed receivers February 20, 1885, and took and retained possession of the property under that receivership up to May 26, 1886, when it was transferred to the receivers appointed in the consolidated cause, who thereby became receivers under each of the separate bills so consolidated, all of which had in fact been filed long after the property was in the possession of the court. Certainly, possession under one or the other of these bills drew to the court the right to decide upon conflicting claims to the ultimate possession and control of the property, to marshal all liens upon it, and to enforce them. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Texas C. R. Co. 137 U. S. 171, 201 [34: 625, 635].

We conclude, therefore, that as the jurisdiction of the circuit court for the eastern district of Texas as a court of the United States was invoked throughout the litigation upon the ground of diverse citizenship, and as this bill must be regarded as ancillary, auxiliary, or supplemental to the foreclosure suit, or, as it were, in continuation thereof, the decree of the circuit court of appeals was made final by the 6th section of the act of March 3, 1891, and the appeal to this court from that decree will not lie.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Justice Peckham was not a member of the court when this motion was submitted, and took no part in its disposition.

134] BANK OF COMMERCE and JAMES A. OMBERG, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE for the Use of the CITY OF MEMPHIS.

BANK OF COMMERCE and JAMES A. OMBERG, Plffs. in Err.,

v.
STATE OF TENNESSEE and the COUNTY OF SHELBY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 134-148.)

Exemption from taxation—bank stock—state decision—exemption of surplus.

1. A charter of a bank which gives it a lien on its stock for debts due it by stockholders, and provides that it "shall pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes," constitutes an exemption of the stock in the hands of shareholders from any other tax than that thus imposed by the charter.
2. A subsequent revenue law of a state which imposes an additional tax on the shares of stock of such bank in the hands of shareholders impairs the obligation of the contract and is void.
3. The decision of a state court in favor of an exemption from taxation, claimed by a bank by virtue of a contract with the state, is not subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709.

NOTE.—That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations,—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a con-
161 U. S.

4. The exemption from taxation of stock of a bank, upon payment of an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent upon each share, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes, does not grant exemption to the surplus belonging to the bank, as the surplus is distinct property from the capital stock.

[Nos. 668, 669.]

Argued January 20-22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a judgment of that court in favor of the State in each of two suits in equity brought by the State for the use of the City of Memphis in the one case, and for the County of Shelby in the other, against the Bank of Commerce et al. to recover the amounts of certain taxes alleged to be due such city and county. Reversed as to so much of the judgment as is against the shareholders.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William H. Carroll, R. J. Morgan, T. B. Turley, and L. B. McFurland, for plaintiffs in error:

A grant whereby the corporators, their associates and successors, in the plaintiff in error corporation, are invested with the immunities and subjected to the liabilities given to the Gayoso Savings Institution imposes upon such corporators, their associates and successors, the liability to pay the annual excise or tax as a consideration for the exercise of the franchises annexed to the grant of that institution, and entitles them to the exemption from all other taxes, for the annual excise is stipulated to be in lieu of all other taxes.

Farrington v. Tennessee, 5 U. S. 679 (24: 558); Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 44 U. S. 3 How. 133 (11: 529); State v. Butler, 15 Lea, 107; State, Memphis, v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614; Memphis v. Union & P. Bank, 91 Tenn. 555; New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 116 (24: 355); Piqua Branch of State Bank v. Knoop, 57 U. S. 18 How. 369 (14: 977); Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U. S. 18 How. 336 (15: 402); Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 448 (17: 179); Society for Savings v. Coite, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 594 (18: 897); Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 119 U. S. 144 (30: 350); Taylor v. Secor ("State R. Tax Cases") 92 U. S. 575 (23: 663).

The proviso to the 3d section of chapter 26 of the Extra Session Acts of 1891, and the 10th subdivision of § 7 of chap. 2 of the Session Acts of 1887, which the supreme court of the state of Tennessee held to be valid laws, authorizing the assessment and taxation of surplus and undivided profits in the Bank of Commerce, are repugnant to the contract provision of the Constitution of the United States, because they impair the obligation of that contract, which the state of Tennessee made with it and its shareholders on the 29th of February, 1856.

Union Bank v. State, 9 Yerg. 490; DeSoto Bank v. Memphis, 6 Baxt. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 530; Memphis v. Hernando Ins. Co. 6 Baxt.

tract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to power of states to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County, 10: 1022.

As to direct taxes, see note to Scholey v. Rew, 23: 99.

527; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429 (39: 759); Bank of Commerce v. McGowan, 6 Lea, 703; Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 493 (26: 810); Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 136 (29: 832); New Haven v. City Bank, 31 Conn. 106; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 688 (39: 311).

Messrs. S. P. Walker, C. W. Metcalf, and F. T. Edmondson, for defendant in error:

If the decision in Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 (24: 558), is to be considered as controlling, the charter tax in question is laid upon the shares of stock, and the exemption is of the shares alone; the capital stock and franchises of the defendant bank are taxable, under the rulings of that case.

The commuted charter tax is to be paid by the corporation on the capital stock, and the exemption is of that subject of taxation alone.

Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 (24: 558); Memphis v. Farrington, 8 Baxt. 539; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 97 U. S. 697 (24: 1091); Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129 (29: 830); Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. ("Delaware Railroad Tax") 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 206 (21: 888); Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 665 (29: 770).

The surplus is taxable in any event.

However the general question of charter exemption may be determined, the capital stock paid in, or the shares of stock of the defendant bank subscribed and issued since the adoption of the state Constitution on the 5th of May, 1870, is or are taxable.

Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 170 (24: 423); Ex parte North East & S. W. A. R. Co. 37 Ala. 679; Howard v. Kentucky & L. Mut. Ins. Co. 13 B. Mon. 282; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 245 (4: 561); Aspinwall v. Daviess County Comrs. 63 U. S. 22 How. 376 (16: 299); Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Berry, 112 U. S. 621 (28: 841); Chicago City R. Co. v. Allerton, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 235 (21: 903); State v. Bull, 16 Conn. 179; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 688 (4: 671); Frost v. Frostburg Coal Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 278 (16: 637); Trask v. Maguire, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 391 (21: 938); Memphis v. Memphis City Bank, 91 Tenn. 574.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

These are writs of error to the supreme court of the state of Tennessee, sued out by the plaintiffs in error for the purpose of reviewing the judgment of the state court in favor of the state in each case. They are both of them suits in equity brought by the state for the use of the city of Memphis in the one case, and by the state and the county of Shelby in the other, for the purpose of recovering the amounts of certain taxes alleged to be due the city of Memphis and the county of Shelby for various years, commencing in 1887. The suits are substantially alike and involve the same questions, and the decision of the one will be the decision of the other. In the further discussion it will only be necessary to refer to the first case.

The bill, after it was amended, set forth the material facts necessary to raise the questions herein involved. It alleged the incorporation of the bank in 1856, and in its charter was contained the following provision: "Said institution shall have a lien on] the stock for debts due it by the stockholders before and in preference to other creditors, except the state for taxes; and shall pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." It alleged that notwithstanding the above provision, there had been assessed upon the stock certain amounts, alleged to be due for taxes, for the years 1887 to 1890, inclusive, by virtue of chapter 2 of the general tax laws of the state for the year 1887, and chapter 104 of the laws of 1889, and in the amended supplemental bill an additional sum was claimed for the taxes from 1891 to 1894, inclusive, under the above-mentioned acts. The bill also made claim to recover the ad valorem taxes on the surplus and undivided profits of the plaintiff in error bank for the years 1892, 1893, and 1894, under the proviso contained in § 3 of chapter 26 of the Extra Session Acts of 1891, the proviso reading: "Provided, That the surplus and undivided profits in such bank, banking association, or other corporation shall be assessable to said bank or other corporation, and the same shall not be considered in the assessment of the stock therein." All the material allegations necessary to show a valid and legal assessment upon the stock were set forth in the bill, unless the provision in the charter of the bank above alluded to prevents the assessment of such stock or shares of stock in the hands of shareholders in any other way or for any other sum than that stated in the charter. The bill also alleged that complainant was advised that the capital stock in a corporation and shares of stock in the hands of shareholders were separate and distinct subjects of taxation, and that in the absence of any exemption clause it was [136 within the power of the state, without subjecting such legislation to the objection of double taxation, to have taxed both the capital stock of the corporation and the shares of stock in the hands of the stockholders; that the charter tax, bonus, or whatever else it may be called, of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent to be paid to the state is a tax upon the shares of stock, and that the language "in lieu of all other taxes" means in lieu of all other taxes on the shares of stock, and that it has no effect to exempt the capital stock of the corporation from taxation. The question of law whether the capital stock is subject to ad valorem taxes or the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders was submitted to the court for determination. The bill also sets forth that after the adoption of the Constitution of Tennessee of 1870 (on the 4th day of May in that year) the capital of the bank had been increased from either \$60,000, or from \$200,000, to \$1,000,000, and the plaintiffs allege that the new stock, whatever may be the amount thereof, aside from all other questions, is taxable.

To the original bill a demurrer was filed upon the ground that the general tax laws, under which the taxes against the bank or its shareholders were assessed and sought to be collected, were violative of the contract provision of the Constitution of the United States. The demurrer was overruled with leave to the defendants to rely on it in their answer. Thereupon a stipulation was made, in each case fixing the basis of the reassessments for the years 1891 to 1894, inclusive, waiving the necessity for the discovery of the shareholders in the bank upon the bank's agreeing "that for the purposes of this case the shares of stock in the name of J. A. Omberg shall be taken as validly and legally assessed for the years aforesaid." It was further stipulated "that any liability that might be adjudged against Mr. Omberg as a shareholder in such corporation should be treated as establishing a like liability of all the shareholders therein, and that for such liability of all the shareholders as thus established a decree should be entered against the corporation, the said corporation consenting that complainants have a decree against it for 137] any liability for taxes that may be hereinafter established against the shareholders." The stipulation between the parties was that the defendant J. A. Omberg should, for the purpose of testing the liability of the shareholders for taxes, be considered and treated as a representative of all the shareholders, and that a liability decreed against him for taxes due as a shareholder should be considered as the liability of all the shareholders duly established, and that a decree in favor of complainants should be entered against the bank and against its unknown shareholders.

The case thereupon was heard upon the amended and supplemental bills, the stipulations above spoken of, which were filed, and the demurrer of the defendants which raised the question that the tax laws under which these taxes were sought to be collected against it and its shareholders were void, because in conflict with U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10. The chancellor before whom the case was tried was of opinion that the demurrer was well taken, and accordingly dismissed the bill of complaint. The supreme court of the state of Tennessee reversed this decree of dismissal and held, first, that the owners of shares of stock in the Bank of Commerce were thus liable for ad valorem taxes to the city of Memphis; and, second, that the bank was liable for ad valorem taxes to the city for the years 1892 to 1894, inclusive, on its surplus and undivided profits. Judgment was entered accordingly, and the plaintiffs in error, the Bank of Commerce and J. A. Omberg, have sued out this writ of error to obtain a review of the judgment by this court.

The errors assigned are: (1) That the supreme court of Tennessee erred in adjudging a liability of the shareholders in the Bank of Commerce to pay to the state of Tennessee or to the county of Shelby or to the city of Memphis ad valorem taxes on their shares of stock for the years specified, because, as is alleged, the shareholders are thereby deprived of the immunity from taxes guaranteed to them by the contract contained in the charter of the Bank of Commerce, and that the general 138] tax laws affirmed to be valid against them are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. (2) For the like ground error is assigned to so much of the decree as denies to the plaintiff in error, the Bank of Commerce, an exemption from taxation on its surplus and undivided profits, notwithstanding its exemption therefrom under its charter provision.

161 U. S.

The claim of the state seems to have been in the alternative, that either the corporation was liable for the taxes assessed under the general laws above referred to, or else that the shareholders were, and the bill was framed with the idea of obtaining a final decision in regard to which of the two parties was liable without making it necessary to commence two actions for that purpose. The defendants, *the 140 bank and shareholders, claimed entire exemption from all taxes upon either the corporation or the shareholders, other than the taxes imposed in the charter. In support of its claim that the correct construction of the charter clause, as now presented, is that the charter tax was laid on the capital stock, and that it was exempted from further taxation, and that the shares of stock were subject to general taxation, counsel for the state refer to the decision in the case of Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 [24: 558]. In that report, at page 681 [558], Mr. Justice Swayne quotes the exemption clause of the charter in question as taken from the record in that case as follows: "That the said company shall pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of the capital stock subscribed, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." A full and correct quotation of the clause (which is in reality the same in both cases) has already been given, but it may be repeated here. It is as follows: "Said institution shall have a lien on the stock for debts due it by the stockholders before and in preference to other creditors, except the state for taxes; and shall pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." The record from which Mr. Justice Swayne made his quotation omitted the prior portion of the clause just set forth, and counsel for the state herein claim that the decision in the Farrington Case, by this court, which held "that the exemption was a contract between the state and the bank limiting the amount of tax on each share of stock, and that a subsequent revenue law of the state which imposed additional taxes on the shares in the hands of the shareholders impaired the obligation of the contract and was void," was not decisive of this case. The difference between the provision as quoted by Mr. Justice Swayne and the actual provision is, as counsel claim, material, and must lead to different results, because the first quotation was misleading, and the record did not state the whole clause. It was upon this assumed difference that the supreme court of Tennessee, in this case, came to the conclusion it did, and held that the *charter tax was on the capital stock 141 and the exemption from further taxation was an exemption of that stock, and that the shares of stock were, in the hands of the shareholders, subject to general taxation. As this court in the Farrington Case has held that the charter tax was laid on the shares of stock, and that the same were not subject to other or further taxation, the Tennessee court acknowledged the controlling force of that decision upon the case then before it, provided the question was the same or in substance the same as was considered and decided in the Farrington Case. The state court then proceeded to point out in its opinion what it considered to be the material difference between the two provisions, and it held that the provision which gives a lien on the stock for debts due the bank by the stockholders before and in preference to other creditors, except the state for taxes, materially changes the meaning from that contained in the exemption clause quoted in the Farrington Case, and that the language as now quoted naturally implied that the tax referred to in the charter was upon the capital stock, and that the lien reserved by the state for taxes does not refer to the annual charter tax, for the reason that the charter tax was to be paid by the corporation, but that it referred to such other or general tax as might be levied by the state upon the shares, thus showing that the intention of the state was to reserve to itself the right to tax the shares in the hands of the shareholders, and to exempt the stock as the property of the corporation. It was also said that it was neither natural nor reasonable to assume that the state reserved a lien on the shares which were the property of the shareholders to pay a tax that the corporation was required to pay. In other words, it could not be supposed that the state required one person to pay a tax and reserved a lien upon the property of another to secure its payment, and that if the lien of the state was reserved for securing the payment of the charter tax the state was placed in the attitude of having voluntarily postponed itself to every other creditor of the corporation because all creditors must be paid before the shareholder gets anything. 142] These reasons, which commended themselves to the supreme court of Tennessee, were sufficient in the judgment of that tribunal to show a difference in the meaning of the two clauses, and it therefore came to the conclusion it did notwithstanding the decision of this court in the Farrington Case, and the shareholders were held liable to pay the tax claimed by the state authorities.

On the other hand, it is said that the difference in the language used in the two quotations is wholly immaterial in any event, and that whatever portion of the clause may have been omitted in the record in the Farrington Case, the whole charter of the bank was before the court for its examination, and it cannot be supposed that in a case of such importance, argued by such eminent counsel as those who appeared in that case, there was anything overlooked or omitted. The claim is therefore made that the court must have regarded the portion of the clause omitted in the record as immaterial.

We do not think under the circumstances that we ought now to come to a different conclusion upon the question of exemption from that which was arrived at by this court in the Farrington Case. As the whole charter was then before the court, we are not prepared to say that its force was misunderstood, or that there was an omission by the court to consider all the language of the exemption clause simply because a portion of it is omitted in the quotation from the record made in the opinion therein delivered. We are not inclined, therefore, to overrule or distinguish the Farrington Case, and we must now hold that the charter clause of exemption limits the amount of tax on each share of stock in the hands of the shareholder, and that any subsequent revenue law of the state which imposes an additional tax on such shares in the hands of shareholders impairs the obligation of the contract, and is void. This compels us to reverse the judgments herein against the shareholders.

Counsel for plaintiffs in error also urged in the course of their argument before us that the Farrington Case not only decided that the shareholders were exempt from any further taxation by reason of this clause in the charter, but that the corporation was also thereby exempted, so that the only tax *that could [143 be collected from either the corporation, the shareholders, or both, was the $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent mentioned in the charter.

Within this general claim of exemption is embraced the right to tax the stock in this bank issued since the adoption of the present Constitution of Tennessee, in 1870. The charter (which was granted long before the adoption of that Constitution) provides (§ 2) that the capital stock of said company shall be divided into shares of $50 each, and when 200 shares shall have been subscribed, and the sum of $1 per share paid thereon, the shareholders may meet and elect five directors. Section 4 provides that the "bank may receive on deposit any and all sums not less than $1 per week offered as stock deposits. . . . and when such deposits shall amount to $50 they may, at the option of the depositor, become stock in the institution." The parties to this suit agreed by stipulation that on the 5th day of May, 1870 (the day the Constitution was adopted), the capital stock of the bank was $200,000, and that on March 17, 1887, and on sundry days prior to June 1, 1887, it was regularly increased to $600,000, and that on the 17th day of March, 1890, and on sundry days prior to June 1, 1890, it was again regularly increased to $1,000,000. The supreme court allowed the claim of exemption and held that the stock issued since the adoption of the new Constitution stood in all respects as to taxation the same as the stock earlier issued, notwithstanding the provision of the Constitution for the taxation of all property, and that therefore the bank was not liable to the tax claimed by the state authorities. The validity of the claim made by the bank for exemption of the new as well as of the old stock was therefore admitted by the state court as a right protected by the Federal Constitution.

The plaintiffs in error claim that as to this portion of the decision of the supreme court of Tennessee it cannot be reviewed by this court, because it was in favor of the bank. The bank by its answer to the bill drew in question the validity of the acts of the assessing officer of the state acting under the authority of the general statutes of Tennessee, providing *for the assessment of its property, on the [144 ground that the authority exercised by the assessing officer under the Tennessee statutes impaired the obligation of the contract entered into between the state and the bank in its charter, and the decision of the supreme court of Tennessee was against the validity of the authority so exercised under those general revenue laws.

The state court decided in favor of the exemption claimed by the bank by virtue of its contract with the state. The protection of the constitutional provision was thus accorded it.

We are of the opinion that this court cannot in this case review that decision.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, gives jurisdiction to this court, among other things, upon writ of error to review the final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of the state in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or authority exercised under, any state, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision of the state court is in favor of their validity. Here the decision of the state court is against the validity of the acts of the assessing officer acting under the authority of the revenue laws as applied to the property of the bank, and is in favor of the exemption claimed under the contract.

In Murdock v. Memphis, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 590 [22: 429], it was held that, under the provisions of the act of February 5, 1867 (14 Stat. at L. 385, of which U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709 is substantially a transcript), it was essential to the jurisdiction of this court to review a question decided in a state court, that one of the questions mentioned in the Federal statute must have been raised and presented to the state court, and that it must have been decided by the state court against the right claimed or asserted by plaintiff in error under the Constitution, treaties, laws, or authority of the United States. To the same effect are New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co. 125 U. S. 18 [31: 607]; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Todd County, 142 U. S. 282 [35: 1014].

[145] *We cannot, therefore, review the decision of the state court allowing the claim of exemption from taxation of the capital stock of the bank, although the consequence is that in these cases both the capital stock and the shares thereof in the hands of the shareholders escape any taxation other than the charter tax.

Accepting, as we do, the authority of the Farrington Case for the point therein decided, which exempts the stock in the hands of the shareholders from any further tax than that which is provided for in the charter, and being concluded in this case by the decision of the supreme court of Tennessee in favor of the exemption of the capital stock of the corporation, we are not here called upon to examine the validity of the claim of the bank as to the decision of this court in cases preceding that of Farrington, where counsel allege it has been determined that both the corporation and the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders are exempt from further taxation under clauses which are said to be similar to those in the charter under consideration.

In this case of Bank of Commerce v. State of Tennessee for the Use of the City of Memphis (the first of the above-entitled actions), the supreme court held that the bank was liable to pay the municipal taxes under the revenue law (Acts 1891 (Extra Sess.) chap. 26, § 3), above mentioned, upon its surplus and undivided profits. Section 3 of that act has already been referred to, but the material portion of it is here set forth, and is as follows:

"Provided that the surplus and undivided profits in such bank, banking association, or other corporation shall be assessable to said bank or other corporation, and the same shall not be considered in the assessment of the stock therein."

The corporation plaintiff in error demands the same exemption from taxation on its surplus that has been accorded it for its capital stock, and it bases its contention upon the same clause of exemption in its charter. We think it cannot be sustained as to the surplus, which we believe is taxable under the law above quoted. This whole demand of exemption from taxation made by the bank and its shareholders must be *considered with [146] reference to the general rule governing claims of that nature. It is well known, has long existed, and is undoubted. New Orleans City & L. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 192, 195 [36: 121, 122]; Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 665 [29: 770], and many cases there cited; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 686 [24: 558, 560]; West Wisconsin R. Co. v. Trempealeau County Supers. 93 U. S. 595 [23: 814]; Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 527 [22: 805].

These cases show the principle upon which is founded the rule that a claim for exemption from taxation must be clearly made out. Taxes being made the sole means by which sovereignties can maintain their existence, any claim on the part of any one to be exempt from the full payment of his share of taxes on any portion of his property must, on that account, be clearly defined and founded upon plain language. There must be no doubt or ambiguity in the language used upon which the claim to the exemption is founded. It has been said that a well-founded doubt is fatal to the claim; no implication will be indulged in for the purpose of construing the language used as giving the claim for exemption, where such claim is not founded upon the plain and clearly expressed intention of the taxing power.

The capital stock of a corporation and the shares into which such stock may be divided and held by individual shareholders are two distinct pieces of property. The capital stock and the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders may both be taxed, and it is not double taxation. Churchill v. Utica ("Van Allen v. Assessors") 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 573 [18: 229]; New York v. Tax Comrs. 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 244 [18: 344], cited in Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 687 [24: 560].

This statement has been reiterated many times in various decisions by this court, and is not now disputed by any one. In the case last cited, Mr. Justice Swayne, in delivering the opinion of the court, enumerated many objects liable to be taxed other than the capital stock of a corporation, and among them he instanced: (1) the franchise to be a corporation; (2) the accumulated earnings; (3) profits and dividends; (4) real estate belonging to the corporation and necessary for its business; and he adds that "this enumeration shows the searching *and comprehensive taxation to [147] which such institutions are subjected where there is no protection by previous compact." And in Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129 [29: 830], at page 136 [832], Mr. Chief Justice

Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, says "that in corporations four elements of taxable value are sometimes found: First, the franchise; second, the capital stock in the hands of the corporation; third, the corporate property; and fourth, the shares of capital stock in the hands of the individual stockholders."

The surplus belonging to this bank is "corporate property," and is distinct from the capital stock in the hands of the corporation. The exemption, in terms, is upon the payment of an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent upon each share of the capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes. The exemption is not, in our judgment, greater in its scope than the subject of the tax. Recognizing, as we do, that there is a different property in that which is described as capital stock from that which is described as corporate property other than capital stock, and remembering the necessity there is for a clear expression of the intention to exempt before the exemption will be granted, we must hold that the surplus has not been granted exemption by the clause contained in the charter under discussion. The very name of surplus implies a difference. There is capital stock and there is a surplus over, above, and beyond the capital stock, which surplus is the property of the bank until it is divided among stockholders.

The case of Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 493 [26: 810], does not hold to the contrary of this doctrine. This question was not therein discussed or decided. The question which was decided related only to the taxation of real property not used by the bank in its business, and it was held liable to taxation.

The case is no authority for the proposition contended for here, namely, that the whole surplus of this bank is exempt from taxation. No individual shareholder has any legal right to claim any portion of this surplus. Until divided by the board of directors it remains the property of the corporation itself, and in the sense in which the words "capital stock" are [148]*used in the exemption clause the surplus does not form any part thereof. It is said that the purpose of incorporating a bank is to enable the institution to accumulate profits and to make dividends out of them, and that the dividends cannot be made until the profits have been accumulated, and that under this ruling profits would come under the description of surplus to be taxed before distribution in a dividend. It is true that dividends cannot rightfully be made until profits have accumulated; but it is one thing to accumulate profits each six months or annually and then divide them among the stockholders by way of dividends, and quite another thing to accumulate profits year after year, and, while still declaring dividends, accumulate a surplus which is not so divided. The sums accumulated by way of profits between the regularly recurring dividend days might not be regarded as surplus, provided those profits were regularly distributed in dividends. The surplus in this case is clearly not of that kind which has been saved for the purpose of being distributed by dividends. It may be true that the general effect of a tax on this surplus might indirectly operate upon the shareholder by possibly lessening the value of his shares to some extent, but that is not the same as if a tax had been laid upon those shares. In levying the charter tax it was conceded that the tax has always been measured by the par value of the shares of stock, while the actual value of such shares, because of the large surplus owned by the bank, may have been very much greater, and the statute under which the surplus is taxed provides that such surplus must not be considered in the assessment upon the stock; so that provision is made whereby a tax upon the surplus and the charter tax upon the shares of stock will neither be double nor unjust taxation. Although a surplus may be required by the national banking act, and also by the laws of good and safe banking, yet we do not perceive that this fact has any material effect upon the question.

We are therefore of opinion that the surplus was properly taxed, and that the bank's claim of exemption as to such surplus is without foundation in law. These views lead to a reversal of so much of the judgment as is against the shareholders*, and the cases are therefore remanded to the state court for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Mr. Justice White concurs in so far as the decree recognizes the exemption of the shares of stock from all taxation except that enumerated in the contract, but dissents from the conclusion as to the power to tax the surplus and undivided profits.

COUNTY OF SHELBY, CITY OF MEMPHIS,
W. B. HENDERSON, ET AL., Appts.,
v.

UNION & PLANTERS' BANK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 149-161).

State decisions, when not binding—capital stock of corporation—exemption of bank from taxation.

1. This court when construing the meaning of a state statute as to what contract is contained therein, and whether the state has passed any law impairing its obligation, is not bound by the previous decisions of the state courts, except when

NOTE.—As to direct taxes, see note to Scholey v. Rew, 23: 99.

As to power of states to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County Comrs. 10: 1022.

That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations,—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to when an injunction to restrain the collection of a tax will be granted, see note to Dows v. Chicago, 20: 65.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Ersine v. Van Arsdale, 21: 63.

As to jurisdiction of United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws,—see notes to Hart v. Lamphire, 7: 679; and Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

they have been so long and so firmly established as to constitute a rule of property, but will decide independently whether there is a contract and whether its obligation is impaired.

2. There is a clear distinction between the capital stock of a corporation and the shares of stock of such corporation in the hands of its individual shareholders, so that the taxation of the one property is not the taxation of the other.
3. A charter giving a bank a lien on shares of its capital stock for debts of shareholders, and imposing a certain tax on shares of stock to be in lieu of all other taxes, exempts such shares in the hands of shareholders from further taxation, but does not exempt the corporation from taxation on its capital stock or surplus or accumulated profits.

[No. 766.]

Argued January 20-22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee granting an injunction at the suit of the Union & Planters' Bank, to restrain the County of Shelby et al. from collecting any tax upon the surplus of the bank on the ground of a clause in the charter of the bank exempting such surplus from taxation. Reversed, and cause remanded with directions to dismiss the suit.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. P. Walker, C. W. Metcalf, and F. T. Edmondson, for appellants:

The only effect of the charter of the defendant bank is to exempt the shareholders, as individuals, from taxation on account of their shares of stock therein. The charter tax is laid upon the shares of stock, and the words "in lieu of all other taxes" mean in lieu of all other taxes upon the same subject of taxation—to wit, the share of stock. There is no exemption, express or implied, of the capital stock or franchises of the corporation.

Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 (24: 558); Tennessee v. Whitworth, 22 Fed. Rep. 80, 117 U. S. 136 (29: 833); New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U. S. 265 (30: 411); Churchill v. Utica, ("Van Allen v. Assessors") 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 573 (18: 229); New York v. Tax Comrs. 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 244 (18: 344); Jones & N. Mfg. Co. v. Com. 69 Pa. 137; Union Bank v. State, 9 Yerg. 490; Memphis v. Farrington, 8 Baxt. 539; Cooley, Taxn. (1886) § 231.

The capital stock and shares of stock are distinct subjects of taxation; and, in the absence of a charter or contract exemption, the state would have had the undoubted power to tax both the capital stock and the shares of stock.

Union Bank v. State, supra; Memphis v. Ensley, 6 Baxt. 553, 32 Am. Rep. 532; Nashville Gaslight Co. v. Nashville, 8 Lea, 407; South Nashville Street R. Co. v. Morrow, 87 Tenn. 406, 2 L. R. A. 853; Farrington v. Tennessee, supra; New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U. S. 277 (30: 415); Cooley, Taxn. § 231.

The power to tax both the capital stock and the shares of stock, in the absence of charter exemption, being undoubted, it must be adjudged that the power as to both subjects of taxation remains unimpaired, except to the extent that it appears, in unmistakable terms, to have been surrendered. The exemption of the one does not by implication exempt the other.

Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Debolt, 57 U. S. 16 How. 416 (14: 997); Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. ("Delaware R. Tax"), 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 225 (21: 894); Erie R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 498 (22: 598); Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 575 (22: 816); Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 686 (24: 560); Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 665 (29: 770); Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 136 (29: 832).

An accumulated surplus is a distinct and separate subject of taxation.

New York v. Tax Comrs. 94 U. S. 415 (24: 164); Central Nat. Bank v. United States, 137 U. S. 355 (34: 703); First Nat. Bank v. Peterborough, 56 N. H. 38, 32 Am. Rep. 416; State, North Ward Nat. Bank, v. Newark, 39 N. J. L. 380; State v. Bank of Smyrna, 2 Houst. (Del.) 99, 73 Am. Dec. 699.

Messrs. William H. Carroll and Isham G. Harris, for appellee:

The legislature of Tennessee had the power under the state Constitution of 1834 to grant to corporations created by it exemption from taxation, and such exemption must either confer total or partial immunity from taxation, and extend for any length of time the legislature might deem proper.

Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Hecks, 9 Baxt. 445; State v. Butler, 13 Lea, 400; State, Memphis, v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614; University of the South v. Skidmore, 87 Tenn. 156; Memphis v. Union & P. Bank, 91 Tenn. 546; Memphis v. Memphis City Bank, 91 Tenn. 577; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 (24: 558); Tipton County v. Locomotive & Mach. Works, 103 U. S. 523 (26: 341); Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 493 (26: 810); Hazen v. Union Bank, 1 Sneed, 115; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 499 (38: 798).

From the words employed to express the immunity from taxation, it is apparent the parties intended it should include all taxes; otherwise greater burdens are at once imposed on the bank in an excise tax, and the right to impose additional taxes reserved.

Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 137 (29: 832); Platt v. Union P. R. Co. 99 U. S. 48, 60 (25: 424, 428).

The taxes set out in the bill are direct taxes upon the funds out of which dividends must be declared, and are in substance as taxes on the shares of stock.

Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 683 (39: 311), 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 1; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429 (39: 759).

The charter necessarily exempts all the property of the bank required for the successful prosecution of its business.

The acquisition of surplus and undivided profit is indispensable to such prosecution—therefore they are within the exemption.

Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Reid, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 264 (20: 568); Cook v. State, Camden & B. C. R. Co. 33 N. J. L. 475; State, Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co., v. Mansfield Comrs. 23 N. J. L. 510; State, New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. v. Hancock, 35 N. J. L. 537; State v. Flavell, 24 N. J. L. 370; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Crawford County Supers. 29 Wis. 116; State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Berks County Comrs. 11 Pa. 202; State, New Jersey R. & Transp. Co., v. Newark, 26 N. J. L. 519; State, Elizabeth Library Asso., v. Leester, 29 N. J. L. 541.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decree of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Tennessee, granting an injunction at the suit of the Union & Planters' Bank to restrain the municipal authorities from collecting any tax laid upon the surplus of the bank, on the ground that such surplus is exempt under a clause in the charter of the bank similar to the one discussed in the above cases of the Bank of Commerce. The circuit court granted the injunction and permanently enjoined the municipal authorities from the collection of the tax. They have appealed to this court.

There are two grounds, either of which, if decided in favor of appellants in this case, would result in upholding the validity of the tax upon the surplus: First, if it should be held that by the true interpretation of the charter the exemption, while applying to the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders, does not extend to the corporation itself, the tax would be valid; second, even if the tax on the capital stock were void, that upon the surplus might still be upheld on the authority of the case of Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 134 [ante, 645]. We have already held in that case that a tax on the surplus was valid, but the question whether a tax on the capital stock of the bank was valid could not be raised there, because the case was before us on a writ of error taken to a state court, and the question in the state court was decided in favor of the exemption claimed by the bank. This being an 151] appeal from a judgment of the United States circuit court, both questions are open for our decision. We think it therefore proper to here decide the question first above stated.

Various decisions of the courts of Tennessee have been cited by counsel on both sides as to the meaning of the exemption clause, whether or not it covered the capital stock and the shares also. Generally, the courts of that state held before the decision by this court of Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 [24: 558], that the charter tax was laid upon the corporate capital stock, and the exemption was of that stock from any further tax. Subsequently to the decision in that case the state courts have held that under the construction given to the clause in the Farrington Case and in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 493 [26: 810], the tax was on the shares, and the exemption covered both the capital stock and the shares thereof. The decision giving exemption to both classes of property was adjudged alone upon the authority cited. In such a case as this, where we are to construe the meaning of the clause of the statute as to what contract is contained therein, and whether the state has passed any law impairing its obligation, we are not bound by the previous decisions of the state courts, except when they have been so long and so firmly established as to constitute a rule of property (which is not the case here), and we decide for ourselves independently of the decisions of the state courts, whether there is a contract and whether its obligation is impaired. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 244, 256 [27: 922, 926]; Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 665-667 [29: 770, 771]; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 486, 492 [38: 793, 795].

While according to the decisions of the supreme court of Tennessee the respect which is most justly due them on account of the high character of that tribunal, nevertheless the responsibility is upon us to determine the question independently, and we cannot agree with that court in its construction of the decisions of this court in the two cases mentioned. Indeed, one of the judges of the state court said in the course of an opinion (Memphis v. Union & P. Bank, 91 Tenn. 553) that since the Farrington Case the court had *recognized 152 the decision and had, at the same time, adhered to its own former decisions that no ad valorem tax could be lawfully laid on the capital stock, and thus the effect of the two decisions, the one Federal and the other state, was that both classes were exempted. Other judges said they were exempted by reason of the Federal decisions.

We stated in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 134 [ante, 645], that the tax provided in this charter is laid upon the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders, and they are exempt from any further taxation on account of their ownership of such shares. In that respect we followed the case of Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 [24: 558], and we refused in the Bank of Commerce Case to overrule or distinguish it; but it is claimed on the part of the appellee herein that the Farrington Case also decided that the charter tax is in lieu of all other taxes, not only upon the shares in the hands of the shareholders, but that it exempts the corporation and all its property from any further taxation. We cannot give so broad an effect to the decision in the Farrington Case. The question of the exemption of the corporation and its property from taxation did not arise in that case, and there was no adjudication of that question by its decision. Farrington was the owner of certain shares of stock in the bank, and the state and the county of Shelby each claimed the right, under the law, to assess taxes against him by reason of his ownership of those shares, at the same rate that taxes were assessed and levied upon other taxable property. He resisted the payment of the taxes upon the ground that by virtue of the exemption clause in the charter the bank, its franchise, its capital stock, and also the shares of stock of the individual stockholders, were subject to no taxation other than at the rate specified in the charter.

Although in setting forth the grounds of his resistance to the payment of the tax, Farrington stated that the bank, its franchise and its capital stock, were not subject to taxation, still that was not a material question. If the shares of stock owned by him were not subject to taxation in his hands, that was sufficient for him, and the question of the exemption of property of the corporation would not be involved. The *corporation was not a party to 153 the suit, and although in the opinion written upon the decision of the question whether the shares were liable to taxation in his hands, it may have rather been assumed that the stock was not subject to taxation as against the corporation, or that the whole stock was exempt in whosoever hands it was, the matter actually decided was the exemption from taxation of these shares in the hands of the shareholders. In the suit that was instituted it was agreed that if in any event the decision was adverse to Farrington, judgment should be rendered against him for a certain number of dollars, the amount of the tax assessed against him, and if the decision should be in his favor, then the judgment was to be that the taxes were illegally assessed, and that said shares of stock were to be exempt from all other taxation, except the $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent to the state, as provided for in the 10th section of the bank's charter, and the collection of any further tax was to be enjoined. The trial court rendered a decree enjoining the collection of the tax, which was reversed by the supreme court of the state on the ground that the shares of stock were not the property or thing exempted, and it was therefore adjudged that Farrington should pay to the state the sums of money assessed upon his shares. Farrington thereupon sued out a writ of error, and coming into this court the judgment of the supreme court of Tennessee was reversed, and it was held that the charter tax was upon the shares of stock in the hands of its shareholders, and that they were consequently exempt from the payment of any further tax.

There are undoubtedly some expressions in the opinion of Mr. Justice Swayne which lend color to the idea that, in his belief, not only were the shares in the hands of the shareholders exempt from any further taxation than that imposed by the charter, but that the property of the corporation was itself exempt from any taxation other than that provided for in that section; the latter question, however, was not before the court and was not decided by it, and we are of opinion that assuming that the charter tax was laid upon the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders, the exemption from 154 *further taxation applies to the subject which was taxed under the charter, and is not of any greater scope, and that it would not, therefore, include the exemption from taxation of either the capital stock or the surplus, which is the property of the corporation itself. We come to this conclusion because of the fact, well established by the decisions of this as well as many state courts, that there is a clear distinction between the capital stock of a corporation and the shares of stock of such corporation in the hands of its individual shareholders. So separate are these properties, and so distinct in their nature, that the taxation of the one property is not the taxation of the other. This is no new doctrine, and the distinction between the two properties was recognized by the supreme court of Tennessee as long ago as in the case of Union Bank v. State, 9 Yerg. 490, decided in 1836. It was held that, under the clause of the charter there under consideration, any further tax on the capital stock than that which was provided for in the charter itself was void, but that the state might tax the shares of stock in the hands of individuals notwithstanding the exemption from further taxation on the capital stock.

We do not admit the claim made by the counsel for appellee, that the Farrington Case must have decided the exemption of the stock of the corporation, because in the case of Wicks v. Tennessee (mentioned in note to Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 [24:558], at page 690 [561]), as is claimed, the exemption was of the capital stock of the corporation which was held nevertheless to come within the principle of the main case decided. There was no material difference in the meaning of the exemption clause in the various cases mentioned in the note to the Farrington Case. Those clauses were of substantially the same import as that in the Farrington Case, and they are set forth in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Strong at page 692 [562] of the report. The whole court was of one opinion upon the subject that there was no substantial difference in the extent of the exemptions contained in the several charters, although there was some difference in their phraseology, but the question was, as stated by Mr. Justice Strong, Which of the parties was to *receive the benefit of the exemption, 155 namely, Was it to be the corporation, or was it intended for the individual stockholder? It was upon that question that the court divided; those in the minority believing that the exemption was intended in each case for the corporation, while the case as actually decided holds that the individual shareholder was entitled to the benefit from the exemption, and there is no adjudication that that exemption extended also to the corporation and its property.

Other cases in this court are cited by counsel for the appellee, which it is claimed are authority for their proposition of exemption of the corporate property from further taxation. Among them is the Piqua Branch of State Bank of Ohio v. Knoop, 57 U. S. 16 How. 369 [14:977]. The 16th section of the general banking law of the state of Ohio, passed in 1845, required the bank to set off 6 per cent of each semi-annual dividend made by it for the use of the state, which sum or amount so set off was to be in lieu of all taxes to which the company or stockholders therein would otherwise be subject. Subsequently, the state passed an act providing for other and different taxation. The bank refused to pay, whereupon the treasurer of the county brought an action to enforce payment of such tax, and it was claimed on the part of the treasurer that the provision of the general banking law, above mentioned, was not a contract fixing the amount of the tax, but was a law prescribing a rule of taxation until changed by the legislature. This court held that it was a contract, and that as the operation of the law providing for a different tax increased the tax upon the bank, it was protected by the terms of its contract, and was not bound to pay that increase. The claim was also argued in that case, on the part of the state, that it was not within the power of any legislature to tie up the hands of subsequent legislatures in the exercise of the powers of taxation, and hence the provision in question, if construed as an attempt to accomplish that end, must be held to be void. But it was held in this court that the legislature had the power to pass the act in question, and that the bank was entitled to be protected from any further or other taxation. The question, which of the two properties, the bank or the shares 156 [of stock in the hands* of the shareholders, was liable to taxation, was not in the case, and was not decided, but the language of the statute is totally different and much more comprehensive than the language of the charter now before the court. In the Ohio Case the payment was to be in lieu of all taxes to which the company or the stockholders would otherwise be subject, embracing both propositions. The case is certainly no authority for the claim made on the part of this appellee.

The next case is that of Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U. S. 18 How. 331 [15: 401]. This is substantially the same case as that just above mentioned, with the sole difference that the state in 1851 adopted a new Constitution, in which it was declared that taxes should be imposed upon banks in the mode which an act subsequently passed in 1852 purported to carry out. An assessment was made upon the bank which would result in a larger tax than that provided for in the charter, and one of the shareholders in the bank commenced a suit in equity against the directors to prevent them from paying the tax, on the ground that the bank was exempt from any such payment, and that it would be a misapplication of the capital or profits of the bank if either were taken to pay such tax. This court again decided as to the validity of the contract in favor of the bank, and that there was no material distinction between the two cases arising from the fact that the state of Ohio had adopted a new Constitution in the meantime and under that had passed an act providing for a different method of assessing the property of the bank. This was held to be wholly immaterial as having no effect upon the validity and binding force of the original contract for exemption contained in the charter of the bank.

The same question again came before this court in Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 436 [17: 173], the only purpose of which case seems to have been to ask of this court a re-examination of the questions already decided and a reversal of its judgments already twice rendered. This was refused, and the opinion closed by citing the language of the Chief Justice in Knoop's Case as follows: "I think that by the 16th section of the act of 1845, the state of Ohio bound itself by a contract 157 [*to levy no higher tax than the one there mentioned upon the banks or stocks of banks organized under that law during the continuance of their charters. In my judgment, the words used are too plain to admit of any other construction." Nothing in those cases, construing the charter of the Ohio bank, affords any countenance to the claim made here.

One other case from this court is cited, that of Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 44 U. S. 3 How. 133 [11: 529]. The question in that case depended upon the constitutionality of a tax imposed by the legislature of Maryland in 1841, it being alleged to be in violation of a contract made by the legislature in 1821. The legislature of Maryland in 1821 continued the charters of several banks to the year 1845, upon condition that they would make a road and pay a school tax, and it was provided that if any banks should accept and comply with the terms and conditions of the act the faith of the state was pledged not to impose any further tax or burden upon them during the continuance of their charters under the act. Subsequently a tax was levied upon the stockholders as individuals, according to the amount of their stock, and it was held that by the legislation of 1821 continuing the charters of the banks upon conditions which had been accepted and performed by the banks, a contract was created relating to something beyond the franchise, and that it exempted the stockholders from the tax which the state endeavored to levy upon them thereafter.

This case lends some color to the claim made by the appellee, and yet we do not think it is decisive in favor of that claim. It was a peculiar case. The banks were all in existence, and the question was in regard to their accepting a condition upon compliance with which their charters were to be extended. The act of acceptance, it was stated, would be that of the individual shareholders. The tax was on the shares, and the question which was made was whether the act of the legislature of Maryland of 1841, in imposing a tax upon those shares, impaired the obligation of the contract theretofore entered into between the bank and the state of Maryland. There were two classes of banks, designated as the old and new banks. The old were those which were chartered previous to the *year 1821, and the new those 158 which were chartered after the year 1830, and taxes had always, since the incorporation of the banks, been assessed upon their real and personal property in all the cities and counties of the state in the same manner as upon property of the same kind belonging to individuals, and they had always been paid by the banks up to this time. Mr. Justice Wayne in the course of his opinion puts the question: "Does it (the act in question) exempt the respective capital stocks of the banks, as an aggregate, and the stockholders from being taxed as persons on account of their stock? We think it does both. The aggregate could not be taxed, without its having the same effect upon the parts that a tax upon the parts would have upon the whole. Besides, the legislature, in proposing the terms and conditions of the act, used the word 'banks' with reference to the consent or acceptance of the act being given by the stockholders, according to a fundamental article of their charters. The acceptance of the act could only be made by the stockholders. They did accept, and the state recognized it as the act of the stockholders. It could not have been given or been recognized in any other way. True it is that when accepted and recognized it became a contract with the banks. But its becoming a contract with the banks determines of itself nothing. We must look in what character or by whose assent it was to become a contract with the state, to ascertain the intention of the legislature in making the pledge, 'that upon any of the aforesaid banks accepting of and complying with the terms and conditions of this act, the faith of the state is hereby pledged not to impose any further tax or burden upon them during the continuance of their charters under this act.'"

The Justice then proceeded in the opinion to discuss the question as to what was meant by the language of exemption, and it was claimed that by reason of the peculiar nature of the act of acceptance, which was that of the stockholders as distinguished from the corporate action of the bank by the board of directors, the exemption was offered and directed to that authority which could accept the condition and perform it, namely, the stockholders themselves, and hence it was *worked out that the meaning of the legislature, under the circumstances of that case, was to exempt from further taxation the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders. An examination of this case shows that the question of the exemption of both the corporation and the shareholders did not technically arise, although in the course of his opinion Mr. Justice Wayne gives an exemption to both, as above quoted. That case has been the subject of criticism in several instances, notably in the case of New York v. Tax Comrs. 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 244 [18: 344], and in New Orleans City & L. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 195 [36: 122], and cases therein cited. Giving to the Gordon Case the full weight of authority for the point actually decided, it does not hold that language such as we have in the case under consideration operates to exempt both the capital stock of the corporation and the shares of stock in the hands of its shareholders from all taxation beyond that mentioned in the charter, and we are entirely unwilling to unnecessarily extend the authority of that case so as to cover the question here. Long after that case was decided this court in many cases, notably that of Churchill v. Utica ("Van Allen v. Assessors") 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 573 [18: 229], and New York v. Tax Comrs. supra, recognized the separate and distinct character of the two properties, the capital stock and the shares thereof in the hands of individual shareholders, and such separate property in our opinion is strong proof of the limitation of the exemption to the property which is taxed.

Another case decided in this court is that of Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 493 [26: 810]. That was a case where the questions arose under this same general statute of exemption. The taxing authorities had taxed the bank on all its real estate, consisting of its banking house, a portion of which only it used for the transaction of its own business and it rented the balance, and it was taxed also for three other pieces of real estate bid in by it upon sales under trust deeds to secure indebtedness. The charter provided that the bank might "purchase and hold a lot of ground for the use of the institution as a place of business, and at pleasure sell and exchange the same, and may hold such real or personal property or estate as may be conveyed to it to secure [160] debts due the institution, and may *sell and convey the same." The supreme court of the state held that while the bank was not liable to be taxed on that portion of its building used by it for the transaction of its business, it was liable for the taxes on the remainder, and also on the other real estate purchased by it. The bank appealed from the decree of the state court, claiming an exemption of the entire property from taxation under its charter. The state did not appeal, although the decree of the court held a portion of the property nontaxable. It will thus be seen that the only question open for review here was, whether the portion actually taxed was exempt, and this court was of the same opinion as the supreme court of Tennessee, and held that as to the portion of the property not used for banking purposes, and as to the other real estate of the bank, it was not exempt from the payment of a tax thereon. The fact of the exemption from taxation of that portion of the property used by the bank in its business seems to have been assumed without argument or decision by this court. There is nothing in that case which affords support to the contention here.

161 U. S.

Nor is there anything in the case of Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129 [29: 830], tending to show that the court in the case of Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679 [24: 558], held that the exemption covered both properties, the corporation and the shares. Mr. Chief Justice Waite in the Whitworth Case, on page 136 [832], said, in speaking of the Farrington Case, that the question was whether the clause in the charter, there quoted, exempted the shares in the hands of the stockholders from any further taxation by the state. He said: "The court, three justices dissenting, held that it did, because, as the charter tax was laid on each share subscribed, the further exemption must necessarily have been of the shares in the hands of the holders, although the tax as imposed was payable by the corporation. In all cases of this kind the question is as to the intent of the legislature, the presumption always being against any surrender of the taxing power." No comfort can be extracted from the remarks of the Chief Justice as even tending to show that the exemption clause covered both the property of the corporation and the shares of stock in the hands of individual shareholders.

*We have found no case in this court [161] which is authority for the proposition that language, such as is under consideration in this case, exempts from further taxation both the capital stock of the corporation and the shares of stock in the hands of individual shareholders. As the Farrington Case decides that this language does not import that the charter tax is laid upon the shares in the hands of individual shareholders, and that those shares are exempt from further taxation, that question is set at rest, and there being nothing in any case which extends that language to both properties, we hold that when it is made applicable to the separate shares in the hands of individual shareholders, it does not apply to or cover the case of the capital stock of the corporation, and that such stock is liable to be taxed, as the state may determine.

This determines the liability of the capital stock of the Union & Planters' Bank to taxation, and of course it overrules any claim on the part of that bank for exemption from taxation of its surplus or accumulated profits. The question whether such surplus could be taxed if the capital stock itself were to be regarded as exempt has also been decided in the preceding case of the Bank of Commerce.

The decree of the circuit court must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded to that court, with directions to dismiss the bill with costs.

Mr. Justice White dissents.

MERCANTILE BANK and C. H. RAINE, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE for the Use of the
CITY OF MEMPHIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 164-173.)

Exemption from taxation.

A judicial sale of the charter of a bank by a receiver does not carry an exemption from taxation of shares of stock given by the charter to shareholders where there was no sale of any specific shares of stock, and the sale was made after the state Constitution had prohibited exemptions from taxation, although purchasers of the charter were recognized by the legislature as a corporation.

[No. 676.]

Argued January 20-22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a decree of that court reversing a decree of the Chancery Court of Shelby County, Tennessee, and holding that the plaintiff in error was not entitled to immunity from taxation, and decreeing against the shares of stock and surplus for the full amount of the taxes claimed in an action brought by the State of Tennessee for the use of the city of Memphis for the purpose of collecting taxes alleged to be due. Affirmed.

See same case below, 95 Tenn. 212.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

This also is a bill filed by the state of Tennessee against the Mercantile Bank for the purpose of collecting taxes alleged to be due plaintiff below under the statutes of that state.

The bill alleges that the legislature of Tennessee, by an act passed February 29, 1856, incorporated by Gayoso Savings Institution, and by the 3d section of the act it was provided that the institution should "pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of the capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." The company, as complainants allege, was duly organized under the act of incorporation, at what date it is not known, but at all events it was engaged in a general banking business in the city of Memphis from a date as early as 1856 down to the year 1869. In that year the institution failed, and a bill was filed by its president, John C. Lavier, in the proper court, for an administration of the affairs of the company as an insolvent corporation under the laws of the state. In the course of the proceedings one E. B. McHenry was appointed receiver of the assets of the company by the court, and on the 11th day of June, 1880, the court directed the receiver to sell the charter of the company. On the 28th of June of that year the receiver did sell the charter at public auction for the sum of \$201, to Julius A. Taylor, and the sale was afterwards duly reported to and confirmed by the court. On the 26th of March, 1881, the legislature of the state passed an act changing the name of the company to that of the Mercantile Bank, and thereupon Mr. Taylor undertook to sell the charter to John R. Goodwin and others, who organized the bank with a capital stock of \$200,000. Since the year 1885 the company has been carrying on a general banking business in the city of Memphis, claiming to be organized under and to have all the rights, privileges,*and immunities originally granted [163 to the Gayoso institution, and that by virtue of this claim neither the defendant company nor its shareholders have paid any taxes whatever to the state, county, or municipality since its organization, except the $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent, as provided in the charter.

Complainant charged that it was wholly incompetent to sell the charter of the Gayoso Savings Institution, and that the defendant company had no right or title thereto, and especially that it had no rightful claim to immunity from taxation as contained in that charter, and it is averred that all the stock of the defendant company was subscribed for and issued since the adoption by the state, on May 4, 1870, of the Constitution of that year. For the year 1891 the capital stock of the company was assessed at a valuation of $160,000. The bill then further alleges the various statutes of the state of Tennessee providing for the assessment of shares or of the capital stock of corporations, and various other allegations are made tending to show a valid assessment either upon the capital stock or the shares of stock in the hands of shareholders, if the claim for exemption be not well founded. It prays for a discovery of the names of the shareholders, and that the court may determine whether the corporation or the shareholders have any immunity from taxation under the charter of that company; and that complainants have a decree against the defendant corporation for such taxes, with interest, etc.

To that bill the defendants filed a demurrer, and as grounds thereof stated that the defendant, the Mercantile Bank, is treated and sued in the proceeding as a corporation organized under the charter above mentioned, and exercising all the powers and franchises conferred by it and in the enjoyment of the privileges and immunities bestowed by it, and that therefore the complainants cannot treat the defendant as a corporation under such charter and at the same time deny its right and title thereto; that it cannot treat the defendant as a corporation under that charter and then deny the existence of the charter; that it cannot sue the said defendant as a corporation under the charter for the purpose of imposing burdens on it, and then deny the benefit of *the privi- [164 leges and immunities conferred thereunder; that if the Mercantile Bank has no right or title to the charter, and if the charter was destroyed and ended by the judicial proceedings referred to, then there is no such corporation as the Mercantile Bank, and the business conducted under that name is a mere partnership, and the bill should have been filed against the persons composing such partnership. Another ground of demurrer was, that it appeared in the 3d section of the charter above mentioned, under which the bank was organized, and it appears on the face of the bill, that the bank was to pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock, which was to be in lieu of all other taxes, and that this constituted a contract between the state on the one side and the bank or shareholders on the other, under which both the capital of the bank and the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders were exempt, and that the various acts of the legislature subsequent to the grant of that charter and providing for the assessment of the shares of stock in corporations, if applied to the defendant corporation, impaired the obligations of the contract, and are in conflict with U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, and are void.

NOTE.—That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations.—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to powers and duties of receivers, see note to Davis v. Gray, 21: 447.

This demurrer was overruled, with leave to insist upon the grounds thereof upon the hearing.

Complainants then, by leave of court, filed their amended and supplemental bill, adding various allegations not material to here notice, except that it was stated that by a stipulation between the parties the defendant corporation had assumed the payment of any liability that might be established against the shareholders therein, and that the defendant C. Hunter Raine should be made a defendant in his capacity as a shareholder, and that whatever liability should be established against him should be taken as established against all the shareholders in the defendant corporation, and that the liability of all those established should be assumed by the defendant corporation.

To avoid the labor and expense of taking proof 165] and to *bring the case to a final hearing, the parties then agreed upon certain facts, among which are the following: That the charter of the Gayoso Savings Institution and all amendments thereto referred to in the pleadings are set forth in the statement. The 1st section of the charter named certain individuals, and it was enacted that they and their associates and successors "be, and they are hereby, created a body politic and corporate by the name and style of the Gayoso Savings Institution, and by that name shall have succession," etc. Provision is then made for subscription for the capital stock, which is to be divided into shares of \$50 each, and when 200 shares shall have been subscribed and the sum of \$1 per share paid thereon the shareholders may meet and elect five directors. The 3d section contains the exemption clause, which, as therein set forth, is as follows: "Said institution shall have a lien on the stock for debts due it by the stockholders, before and in preference to other creditors, except the state for taxes, and shall pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." Section 4 granted to it the usual banking privileges as therein set forth. An amendment to this charter, passed March 26, 1881, changed the name of the Gayoso Savings Institution to the Mercantile Bank of Memphis. The statement also shows who were the owners of the capital stock of the Gayoso Savings Institution at the time of the commencement of the suit of John

C. Lanier against the institution, mentioned in the original bill.

It is also stated that on the 5th day of March, 1881, Julius A. Taylor (the purchaser of the charter at the receiver's sale in June, 1880), and eight other persons, who were associated with him, held a meeting as stockholders of the Gayoso Savings Institution, the minutes of which meeting are therein set out. The minutes set forth that on the 5th day of March, 1881, a meeting of the stockholders of the Gayoso Savings Institution was held in Memphis, at which certain stockholders were present and who were therein named, and that one of them was elected chairman of the meeting, and he reported that the *requisite [166 number of shares, 200, had been duly subscribed to as follows (giving the names of the subscribers), and that the sum of $1 per share each had been paid in. It was then moved and seconded to proceed to the election of six directors, which was carried, and such directors were then elected. Just before the time of this meeting the parties therein named signed and executed a stock subscription paper, which is in the following words: "We, the undersigned, agree to take stock in the Gayoso Savings Institution of Memphis, Tennessee, to the amount set opposite our respective names, and to pay the same in such manner as may be ordered by the board of directors, having this day paid in the sum of $1 on each share." Here follow the names of the subscribers. These are the "stockholders" who are mentioned in the minutes of the stockholders' meeting. It is stated that this organization of the institution was continued regularly and without intermission, but without the actual transaction of any banking business until 1883, and that in April, 1883, the said Julius A. Taylor and his associates transferred their stock in the corporation, by regular and proper transfer of the certificates of stock, to John R. Godwin and his associates, and on April 17, 1883, John R. Godwin and his associates, at a stockholders' meeting of said corporation, increased the capital stock to $200,000, and began a regular banking business under said charter, and said corporation has, under that organization, continued said banking business down to the present date, with the same capital stock of $200,000.

The regularity of the organization from the 5th day of March, 1881, the date when Julius A. Taylor and his eight associates held the stockholders' meeting above mentioned, is not questioned. Of the \$200,000 capital stock which was issued by John R. Godwin and his associates on the 17th of April, 1883, \$180,000 was new stock, which was divided between said John R. Godwin and his associates. The Gayoso Savings Institution from the time it was originally organized under its charter in 1856 to the date when the bill was filed in the case of John C. Lanier and others in 1869, *regularly paid year after year to the state [167 of Tennessee the commutation tax mentioned in its charter of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock, and since the 5th day of March, 1881, the defendant corporation, under the name of the Gayoso Savings Institution and the Mercantile Bank, has constantly paid said commutation tax to the state down to this date. It is further stated that the defendants can produce no evidence of the payment of said commutation tax during the interval above shown. Proper copies of the decree of sale of the charter in the case of John C. Lanier against the Gayoso Savings Institution, the receiver's report of the sale and the decree confirming the same are set forth in the agreed statement, and it is admitted that part of the papers in that case are lost or mislaid and cannot be found.

It was further admitted that on June 10, 1880, the receiver in the case of Lanier v. Gayoso Savings Institution filed a petition in the case asking for instructions as to what should be done with the charter. The petition was lost and no copy could be found. It was stated that there was never any transfer of the certificates of stock from the old stockholders in the Gayoso Savings Institution to Julius A. Taylor and his associates, unless as a matter of law such transfer can be made out as the legal effect of the facts above stated. With one or two exceptions all the old stockholders in the Gayoso Savings Institution were residents of the city of Memphis and the state of Tennessee, and none of them ever claimed any interest in the charter or the business being conducted thereunder or in the stock issued thereunder after the sale of the charter to the said Julius A. Taylor. It is alleged that "the defendants contend that the legal effect of the facts herein stated and of the steps taken in said case of John C. Lanier v. Gayoso Savings Institution, as set forth above, was to make a legal transfer of the stock in said Gayoso Savings Institution from the persons who owned the same at the time said bill was filed in said case to the said J. A. Taylor and his associates and their successors. This proposition is denied by complainants, and the question is submitted for decision to the court." [168] Further facts in relation to the *assessment of stock are also set forth, as are also certain cross bills filed by certain depositors in the bank against Lanier, and others who were officers and directors in the bank, alleging fraud on their part in the reception of deposits and in the payment of certain debts or claims. Upon this agreed statement of facts and the bill and supplemental bill and demurrer the parties went to trial.

The decree in the chancery court was in favor of plaintiffs in error on all points. An appeal was taken by the state to the supreme court. That court reversed the decree of the chancery court, and held that the plaintiff in error was not entitled to the immunity from taxation contained in the 3d section of the charter passed in 1856, and gave a decree against the shares of stock and surplus for the full amount of the taxes claimed by the city and county from the year 1888 down. The defendants below sued out a writ of error from this court, and assigned as ground of error that the judgment of the court should have been in their favor, denying the right of the state or city to recover any taxes from either the corporation or shareholders because of the immunity from taxation granted to them by the 3d section of the charter, and that a denial of that right deprived the defendants below of the immunity guaranteed to them by the contract contained in the 3d section of the charter, and that the tax laws affirmed to be valid against them are repugnant to the contract provision of the Constitution of the United States. As a second ground of error, it was stated that the court erred in denying to the corporation, plaintiff in error, an exemption from taxation on its surplus and undivided profits. And the third ground was stated to be error of the court in adjudging a liability of the corporation plaintiff in error to pay the privilege tax mentioned therein on the same ground of immunity granted to it by the 3d section of the charter.

Messrs. T. B. Turley and L. E. Wright for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. S. P. Walker, C. W. Metcalf, and F. T. Edmondson for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Peckham* delivered the [169] opinion of the court:

By the original charter granted to the Gayoso Savings Institution in 1856, under which an organization was effected and the institution did business for many years, an exemption was granted to it similar to that granted in the case of the Bank of Commerce, decided at this time. That exemption was applicable to the shareholders upon their shares of stock, and did not apply to the capital stock of the institution. The shareholders in this case have been assessed at a greater rate than is permitted by the 3d section of the charter in question, and the assessment would therefore be void if that section is applicable to this case.

The corporation plaintiff in error can make title to the charter in question only by virtue of the sale thereof under the decree in the suit of Lanier against the Gayoso Savings Institution, which was commenced in 1869. There is not a particle of evidence which in terms shows the transfer of the shares of stock in that institution owned by its shareholders at the time when the charter was sold, nor is there any evidence from which such transfer of stock by those shareholders to Taylor and his associates can properly be inferred; neither they nor their assignees of the charter can claim to be the same original corporation by reason of any previous purchase of specific shares held by the former shareholders. The record shows that the receiver was ordered "to sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash the charter of the Gayoso Savings Institution, together with all the rights and privileges thereunder." It was the charter which the receiver assumed to sell and which alone he did sell, and not any specific shares of stock. The report of the receiver shows that under that order, which was made on the 11th of June, 1880, he advertised the charter of the Gayoso Savings Institution for sale on the 29th day of June, 1880, "together with all rights, privileges, and franchises thereunder," and that on the last-named day the charter was struck off and sold to Julius A. Taylor at and for the sum of $201, "his being the highest, best, and *last bid; that such bid was followed [170] by paying to the receiver the amount of same in cash, which the receiver holds subject to the order of the court." On the 21st of July, 1880, the chancellor made a decree, in which

It is stated that the cause "came on to be further heard on the report of sale by the receiver filed herein, which is in words and figures following: [Here insert report]; and there being no exception to said report, the same is in all things confirmed, and the title to the charter of the Gayoso Savings Institution, with all the powers, privileges, and franchises thereunto belonging, is hereby vested in J. A. Taylor, his heirs, and assigns." This citation from the record is clear evidence of what the transaction purported to be. There is no mention or hint of any assignment or transfer of the shares of stock to the purchaser of the charter by the then owners of such shares, and it seems to be quite clear that none such was ever made. At any rate, there is not the slightest proof upon the subject showing affirmatively that it was made. At the time of the sale of the charter under the decree in the Lanier suit the Constitution of Tennessee had been adopted by the people in 1870, and since that time has been in full force and operation. That Constitution prohibited exemptions from taxation, and provided that all property, real, personal, or mixed, should be taxed, excepting such as in explicit terms was exempt, stating what property might be and what should be exempt from taxation, and directing that all the rest shall be taxed.

We may inquire now, What was the effect of the sale of the charter under the decree in the Lanier Case? We have been referred to no statute authorizing the sale of charters of corporations circumstanced as the Gayoso Savings Institution was at the time of this sale, and it is questionable, to say the least, whether any title to the charter passed by the proceedings under the decree in the Lanier Case. In order to show the existence of a contract of exemption the corporation plaintiff in error must connect itself with and show that it or its shareholders are entitled to the benefit of the provision of exemption contained in the charter of 1856. Certainly no greater power was exercised by the court of chancery in decree-171]ing the sale of the charter in the Lanier suit than would have been the case had a statute existed providing for the mortgaging of the charter, and its subsequent sale at foreclosure, on breach of condition named in the mortgage. Such a sale, it has been held, does not transfer to the purchaser the franchise to be a corporation, but only the right to reorganize as a corporation, subject to the laws, constitutional and otherwise, existing at the time of the reorganization. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Berry, 112 U. S. 609 [28: 837]. The franchise to be a corporation is distinguished from the franchise to exercise as a corporation the banking powers named in this charter. The exemption from taxation contained in the 3d section of the act of 1856 was a personal privilege in favor of the corporation therein specifically referred to, and it did not pass with the sale of that charter, and there is no express or clear intention of the law requiring that exemption to pass as a continuing franchise to the purchaser thereof. Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217 [23: 860]; Wilson v. Gaines, 103 U. S. 417 [26: 401]; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 244 [27: 922]. In the face of the constitutional provision prohibiting exemption, it can still less be claimed that the sale of the charter carried the exemption. All that Mr. Taylor and his associates could have acquired by the purchase of the charter, after the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, if they acquired anything, were the rights and privileges mentioned in the charter, and subject to the provisions of the Constitution and laws existing at the time of such purchase.

The meeting of Julius A. Taylor and his eight associates on the 5th of March, 1881, was nothing more than an attempt to reorganize by reason of the sale to Taylor under the decree in the Lanier suit. Immediately prior to the organization of that meeting, Taylor and his associates had subscribed for and agreed to take stock in the Gayoso Savings Institution of Memphis, Tennessee, to the amount set opposite their respective names, and to pay the same in such manner as might be ordered by the board of directors, having that day paid in the sum of $1 on each share. These subscribers for stock at once held a meeting, assuming to act as stockholders of the Gayoso Savings Insti-172]tution, and attempting to reorganize that institution by virtue of the purchase of the original charter, and they assumed by these proceedings to become an organization and corporation known as the Gayoso Savings Institution. It is at least very doubtful whether they succeeded in this way in accomplishing that purpose. However that may be, they claimed to be and assumed to act as a corporation known by that name, and there was, so far as appears, no other corporation of that name and no other proceeding on the part of any one claiming to be that corporation or to have any rights therein. Assuming to act as a corporation by the name of the Gayoso Savings Institution of Memphis, Tennessee, is by no means the same as being in fact the original corporation whose charter they purchased and whose corporate name they took. So far, by their action they had not become a corporation at all, but were simply assuming to be one. The legislature, however, passed an act on the 26th of March, 1881, changing the name of the Gayoso Savings Institution, which these stockholders claimed and assumed to be, to the name of the Mercantile Bank of Memphis, and thus recognized them as a corporation, and from that time the corporation continued regularly and without intermission until 1883, when Taylor and his associates transferred their stock, by regular and proper transfer of the certificates of stock, to John R. Godwin and his associates, who, since the 17th of April, 1883, have been doing a regular banking business under the charter down to the present time. They are the successors of the purchasers of the charter, and have been substantially recognized as a corporation by the legislature.

It may thus be that the corporation plaintiff in error is in fact organized and doing business under the general provisions of the charter of 1856 by virtue of the sale of the charter and the recognition of the legislature, and exercising the banking franchise and other rights granted therein to the original shareholders, but not as the identical corporation originally incorporated, and for that reason it is without the immunity from taxation contained in the 3d section of the charter. There is nothing, 173]therefore, legally inconsistent in *treating the corporation of plaintiff in error as a corporation doing business by virtue of the charter of 1856, and the legislative recognition accorded to Taylor and his associates in 1881, while at the same time the exemption contained in that same charter is held not to have passed by any of the proceedings above mentioned. This view of the case disposes of the objection taken by plaintiff in error to the position of the state as being inconsistent in that it assumes by taxing the corporation plaintiff in error or its shareholders and by its bill of complaint in this suit to treat the former as a corporation, while at the same time denying it the exemption contained in the 3d section of the act of 1856. We agree that the bill of complaint and the supplemental bill in this suit both proceed upon an implication that the corporation plaintiff in error is actually a corporation under the provisions of the charter of 1856 alone, and that it has no other charter under which to justify its corporate existence than the one just named; but for the reasons already given, the attitude of the state is not inconsistent in treating the plaintiff in error as a corporation, and at the same time denying to it any title to the exemption claimed. The corporation may exist under and by virtue of the purchase of the charter at the receiver's sale, and the legislative recognition and the assumption of the state that it is a corporation, and yet not have the title to the exemption, because it is not in fact or in law the same corporation originally incorporated.

The judgment must be affirmed.

Mr. Justice White concurs in the result.

(NOTE.—No. 677, by stipulation, abides the event of foregoing case.)

PHOENIX FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY of Memphis, Tennessee, and JOHN JOHNSON, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE for the Use of the CITY OF MEMPHIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 174-188.)

Immunity from taxation — denial of claim — right to tax presumed — Federal question.

1. Immunity from taxation is not granted to a company by granting to it "all the rights and privileges" of another company to which had been granted "all the rights, privileges, and immunities" of still another prior company which had such exemption. The omission of the word "immunities" raises a doubt as to the exemption, which requires the denial of its existence.

2. The existence of a well-founded doubt is equivalent to a denial of the claim to an exemption from taxation.

3. The universal rule in regard to taxation is that the power and the right to tax are always presumed. The exemption from taxation must be clearly granted. Mere silence is the same as a denial of exemption.

4. The decision of the supreme court of a state as to the weight to be given to a judgment of a court of that state is not reviewable in this court because it is not a Federal question.

[No. 269.]

Argued January 20-22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the Chancery Court of Tennessee for Shelby County, and for the recovery of taxes due from the Phoenix Fire Insurance Company of Memphis or its stockholders to the city of Memphis, in an action brought by the State of Tennessee for the use of that city against said company and another. Affirmed.

See same case below. 91 Tenn. 566.

Mr. B. M. Estes for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. S. P. Walker and F. T. Edmondson for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill filed by the plaintiffs below in the chancery court of Tennessee for Shelby county, in October, 1891, to recover taxes alleged to be due from the corporation, plaintiff in error, or its stockholders, to the city of Memphis for the years 1888 to 1891, inclusive. The complainant's bill alleged that neither the defendant company nor its shareholders had any immunity from taxation, and that if any such immunity existed it could not operate to protect both the shareholders and the capital stock. Judgment was accordingly prayed in the alternative against the corporation or the stockholders according as the taxes might be held to have been laid upon one or the other. A demurrer was interposed to the bill, which was sustained in the court below, but upon appeal to *the supreme court, [174 that judgment was reversed. 91 Tenn. 566. The latter court held that the charter of the company contained no immunity from taxation, and that both its shares of stock and capital stock were subject to the taxing power of the state and municipality. The case was thereupon remanded to the court below for further proceedings. It having been determined by the supreme court that the complainant upon the allegations of the bill was entitled to a discovery of the names and residences of the stockholders, a stipulation was entered into between the parties to avoid the necessity of the discovery, by which it was agreed that the corporation would assume any liability that

NOTE.—As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to when an injunction to restrain the collection of a tax will be granted, see note to Dows v. Chicago, 20: 65.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 21: 63.

660

As to power of states to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County Comrs. 10: 1022.

As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

might be established against the stockholders, and that a decree might be entered accordingly, and that the defendant Johnson should be made a defendant in his capacity of a stockholder and as the representative of all the others.

By its answer the defendant company claimed immunity from taxation both for itself and its shareholders, and also set up a plea of res judicata, and alleged various objections to the validity of the several assessments upon which complainant claimed taxes due to the state. The case was duly tried, and judgment for the complainant was rendered by the trial court, in which it was adjudged that by the charter neither the defendant company nor its shares of stock had any immunity from taxation, and that both were, for the years mentioned in the bill, subject to the taxing power of the state. The court decided the Federal question made by the defendants below against them, and adjudged that the state tax laws set up in the record, under which the taxes were levied, were not violative of the Constitution of the United States, or void as claimed by the defendants. This judgment was in substance affirmed by the supreme court, and the defendants below sued out a writ of error, and the record is now here for review.

The question first arising is as to the correctness of the judgment holding that the plaintiffs in error were not entitled to any immunity from taxation either as to the capital stock or the shares of stock in the hands of stock-176] holders. The *following are the facts: The Bluff City Insurance Company of Memphis was duly incorporated by an act of the legislature of Tennessee, and by § 10 of the act of incorporation it was enacted "that said company shall pay to the state an annual tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent on each share of the capital stock subscribed, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." On the 20th day of March, 1858, the legislature of Tennessee incorporated the De Soto Insurance Company, and that charter was amended on the 30th of March, 1860, and by § 11 of that act "all the rights, privileges, and immunities" of the Bluff City Insurance Company were granted to the De Soto Insurance Company. On the 11th day of March, 1867, the legislature incorporated the Washington Fire & Marine Insurance Company of Memphis, Tennessee, and by that act "all the rights and privileges" (omitting the word "immunities") of the De Soto Insurance Company of Memphis, Tennessee, granted to it in its charter or amendments were granted to the Washington Fire & Marine Insurance Company, above named, and by the act of the legislature, approved March 28, 1881, the name of the Washington Fire & Marine Insurance Company was changed to the Phoenix Fire & Marine Insurance Company of Memphis, Tennessee, being the plaintiffs in error. The act of incorporation and the amendments thereto were duly accepted by plaintiff in error and its stockholders, and since that time the business of fire and marine insurance has been conducted by it in Memphis, under the last corporate name.

It will thus be seen that the Bluff City Insurance Company was to pay to the state a certain annual tax on each share of capital stock subscribed, which was declared to be in lieu of all other taxes, and the question is now presented, whether by virtue of these various statutes the plaintiff in error was granted an immunity from taxation to the same extent as that given to the Bluff City Insurance Company and to the De Soto Insurance Company. Is immunity from taxation granted to plaintiff in error under language which grants "all the rights and privileges" of a company which has such immunity? In statutes, as is sometimes the case in legal *documents, more[177] words are occasionally used than are necessary to convey the meaning of those who passed the statute or executed the document, and it may happen that this very excess of verbiage tends to confuse rather than to enlighten one as to the meaning intended. The words "rights, privileges, and immunities" when used in a statute of the kind under consideration are certainly full and ample for the purpose of granting an exemption from taxation contained in the first or original statute, and when in granting to still another company certain rights the word "immunities" is dropped, its absence would seem and ought to have some special significance. In granting to the De Soto company "all the rights, privileges, and immunities" of the Bluff City company, all words were used which could be regarded as necessary to carry the exemption from taxation possessed by the Bluff City company, while in the next following grant, that of the charter of the plaintiff in error, the word "immunities" is omitted. Is there any meaning to be attached to that omission? And, if so, what? We think some meaning is to be attached to it. The word "immunity" expresses more clearly and definitely an intention to include therein an exemption from taxation than does either of the other words. Exemption from taxation is more accurately described as an "immunity" than as a privilege, although it is not to be denied that the latter word may sometimes and under some circumstances include such exemption. It must always be borne in mind in construing language of this nature that the claim for exemption must be made out wholly beyond doubt, for, as stated by Mr. Justice Harlan in Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 569 [30: 732]: "It is the settled doctrine of this court that an immunity from taxation by a state will not be recognized unless granted in terms too plain to be mistaken." See also Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 146 U. S. 279 [36: 972]. In leaving out a word which, if used, would be regarded as specially and particularly including an exemption from taxation granted to another company, it seems to us that a very grave doubt is cast upon the title of plaintiff in error to the exemption claimed, and in such case the existence *of a well founded doubt is [178 equivalent to a denial of the claim.

The learned counsel for plaintiff in error have cited many statutes of the state of Tennessee in which it is said the word "immunities" is sometimes used where no exemption from taxation was intended, and he quotes a section from one act (Private Acts 1866-'67, § 49 of an act, page 155), which grants "all the powers, privileges, and immunities" of another company that had no exemption, and in another case there were granted "all the rights, franchises, and privileges" of a railroad company which had an exemption from taxation. Many other instances of a like nature are cited. The result of it is to occasion great difficulty in determining what was really intended by the legislature in these various acts. The learned counsel for plaintiff in error also state that about the time these charters in question were granted the legislature customarily expressed the purpose to tax corporations when no exemption was intended. The inference is sought to be drawn in favor of exemption, if the legislature did not affirmatively grant the right to tax. We cannot assent to any such view, and we could come to no such conclusion from an examination of the general statutes cited by counsel. It is a complete overturning of the universal rule in regard to taxation. The power and the right to tax are always presumed, and the exemption is to be clearly granted. Mere silence is the same as a denial of exemption.

We can see nothing in the "surrounding circumstances" which counsel claim should influence our examination and conclusion as to the meaning of these statutes, that in any way induces the belief that an exemption was plainly intended. Our attention has not been called to circumstances which we should regard as of that nature, nor is our judicial knowledge of them sufficient in kind or degree to cause us to conclude that this exemption was intended to be granted to plaintiff in error. We do not find that at this time there was, as counsel insist, any settled rule of the courts that the word "privileges" always embraced exemption from taxation, or that "rights and privileges" and "privileges and 179] immunities" were used *indiscriminately and interchangeably, and always included such exemption. The different words above quoted were undoubtedly used in different statutes, and sometimes it might be insisted that one thing was meant and sometimes another, but we cannot find that there was any well known and definite rule governing the courts of Tennessee at that time which made the words "privileges" or "rights," when used in cases of this nature, include, beyond any doubt and in all cases, an exemption from taxation.

In Wilson v. Gaines, 9 Baxt. 546, it was held by the supreme court that as the state in its Constitution (Const. 1834, art. 11, § 7), used in the same connection all the words "rights," "privileges," "immunities," and "exemption," each of these words was to be given, in statutory interpretation, a meaning so limited as not to include anything expressed by the others, and that when any one of them is found in a statute the legislature must be conclusively presumed to have used it in its restricted sense. This decision of the Tennessee court tends very strongly to the idea that the words "immunity" or "exemption" would have been required to secure the exemption to a company in a case like this. It is true that this view was not assented to by this court as being the correct one (Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 139, 146 [29:833, 835]), and it is simply cited for the purpose of showing what the Tennessee court did decide in regard to the meaning of its own Constitution in reference to this subject.

That the legislature was, about the time in question, freely incorporating various companies and granting them exemption from taxation with considerable liberality is not a sufficient reason to induce this court to depart from the universal and well-established rule making a claim for exemption a matter to be proved beyond all doubt. The circumstance which we regard as very significant and which has already been alluded to, consists in the omission of the word "immunities" in the grant to plaintiff in error. That omission we attach great weight to, and the least that can be said of it is that it involves the question in doubt.

It cannot be denied that the decisions of this court are *somewhat involved in relation [180 to this question of exemption. It is difficult in some cases to distinguish the language used in each so far that the different results arrived at by the court can be seen to be founded upon a real difference in the meaning of such language. The question has sometimes arisen upon the consolidation of different companies, and sometimes upon a sale under a mortgage foreclosure. Among the former is the case of Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301 [38:450], where under the laws of Missouri (Act of March 2, 1869, § 2) there was a provision that the consolidated companies should be "subject to all the liabilities and bound by all the obligations of the companies within this state," and "be entitled to the same franchises and privileges under the laws of this state as if the consolidation had not taken place." The question was said to admit of doubt whether under the name "franchises and privileges" an immunity from taxation passed to the new company. Various cases are cited in the opinion, which was delivered by Mr. Justice Brown, showing the grounds taken by this court in such cases. In Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 114 U. S. 176 [29:121] (a foreclosure case), it decided that an immunity from taxation enjoyed by one railroad company did not pass to the purchaser under the foreclosure of a mortgage, although the act provided that the purchaser should forthwith become a corporation, "and should succeed to all such franchises, rights, and privileges as would have been had by the original company but for such sale and conveyance." The case followed that of Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217 [23:860] (also a foreclosure case), where it was held that the words "franchises, rights, and privileges" did not necessarily include a grant of exemption or immunity from taxation. See also, to same effect, Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Berry, 112 U. S. 609 [28:837]. The case of Pickard v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 130 U. S. 637 [32:1051], may also be referred to upon the point that exemption, although it might be granted, must be considered as a personal privilege not extending beyond the immediate grantee unless otherwise so declared in express terms, and it was therein declared that such immunity *would not pass merely by a con- [181 veyance of the property and franchises of a railroad company, although such company might itself hold property exempt from taxation. In that case Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, said: "It is true there are some cases where the term 'privileges' has been held to include immunity from taxation, but that has generally been where other provisions of the act have given such meaning to it. The later and, we think, the better opinion is that unless other provisions remove all doubt of the intention of the legislature to include the immunity in the term 'privileges' it will not be so construed. It can have its full force by confining it to other grants to the corporation." This language is referred to by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller in the case of Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 146 U. S., where, at page 297 [36: 979], he says: "We do not deny that an exemption from taxation may be construed as included in the word 'privileges,' if there are other provisions removing all doubt of the intention of the legislature in that respect," citing the Pickard Case.

Looking at the other side, we find the case of Humphrey v. Pegues, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 244 [21: 326], where there was a grant to a railroad company of "all the rights, powers, and privileges" granted by the charter of another company which exempted the property of such other company from taxation, and it was held that the property of the first company was thereby also exempted. Mr. Justice Hunt in delivering the opinion of the court said that "a more important or more comprehensive privilege than a perpetual immunity from taxation can scarcely be imagined. It contains the essential idea of a peculiar benefit or advantage or special exemption from a burden falling upon others." Again, in Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 139 [29: 833], it was held that a right to have shares in its capital stock exempt from taxation within the state was conferred upon a railroad corporation by a state statute granting to it "all the rights, powers, and privileges," or granting it "all the powers and privilege" conferred upon another corporation named, if the latter corporation possessed by lawsuchright of exemption. Theques-182] tion in that case *arose as to the meaning of certain statutes passed by the legislature of Tennessee, resulting in the consolidation of certain railroads therein mentioned. In the course of his opinion Mr. Chief Justice Waite cites the case of Philadelphia & W. R. Co. v. Maryland, 51 U. S. 10 How. 376, 393 [13: 461, 468], where Mr. Chief Justice Taney, speaking of a statute which authorized the union of two railroad companies and secured to the union company "the property, rights, and privileges which that law or other laws conferred on them" (the separate companies or either of them), said that such language extended to the union company the exemption from taxation contained in the charter of one of the uniting companies. Mr. Chief Justice Waite continuing, in his opinion said: "As has already been seen, the word 'privilege' in its ordinary meaning, when used in this connection, includes an exemption from taxation." The decision in this last case should be confined to the peculiar language used in the various statutes therein cited, wherein, aside from the word "privilege," it may be argued that, considering all the language used in those statutes, the intention of the legislature to exempt the company named from taxation may fairly well be made out.

The later cases of Pickard v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 130 U. S. 637 [32: 1051], and Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 146 U. S. 279 [36: 972], show that there must be other language than the mere word "privilege" or other provisions in the statute removing all doubt as to the intention of the legislature before the exemption will be admitted. The case of Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 486 [38: 793], adds nothing to the discussion on either side. The particular point was not in that case, but it seems to be cited by counsel for plaintiffs in error for the purpose of showing what was the general condition of the state at the time of the adoption of the Constitution in 1834, and what was the policy of the state in regard to internal improvements, which the Constitution declared ought to be encouraged. The incorporation of an insurance company would hardly come within the most liberal meaning of the term "internal improvements."

*If this were an original question, we [183 should have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff in error did not acquire the exemption from taxation claimed by it, and we think at the present time the weight of authority, as well as the better opinion, is in favor of the same conclusion which we should otherwise reach.

Second. Concluding, as we have, that this plaintiff in error insurance company is not exempt from taxation by the language of the statutes above mentioned, we come to the consideration of the second defense interposed by its shareholders. It seems that some time in the year 1873 the shareholders or some of them were sued by the city of Memphis to collect from them certain taxes alleged to be due that city for the year 1872 upon the shares of stock held by them. By the decision of the supreme court of Tennessee the city recovered a judgment. A stipulation was then entered into between the parties to that suit, which is in the record, by which it appears that the same questions involved in that suit were fully and fairly presented in the case decided in favor of the plaintiffs, at that term of court, wherein the state of Tennessee and Shelby county were complainants, and Napoleon Hill and others, stockholders in the Memphis Fire & General Insurance Company, were defendants, and which action had been carried to the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error for its decision of the questions, and, therefore, to save the expense of argument in the case, it was agreed by counsel for all parties that the Memphis City Case should abide by the decision of Tennessee v. Hill, which should be conclusive upon the parties to the stipulation in all things the same as though actually rendered in that case. If the decree in the Hill Case were affirmed, then this decree was to be affirmed, and if the other should be reversed, then this was to be reversed. After the signing of that stipulation, the Hill Case was duly prosecuted by writ of error and argued before the Supreme Court of the United States, where the judgment in favor of complainant was reversed and the cause remanded to the supreme court of Tennessee with directions to enter its decree therein for the defendant Hill. This was 184] done, and, in accordance *with the stipulation above mentioned, a decree was thereupon entered in the Memphis city action, reversing the judgment in favor of plaintiff, and adjudging and decreeing that the tax levied and assessed by the city of Memphis upon the defendant's share of stock was illegal, and adjudging that the city of Memphis could not legally assess said shares of stock for taxation, in the hands of the owners thereof, and that such shares were exempt from any and all municipal taxation, and the city and its officers were perpetually enjoined from collecting or proceeding to collect such taxes. This judgment was entered by consent, and pursuant to the stipulation of the parties entered into at the time the writ of error was sued out in the Hill Case and it is now set up and offered in evidence as an adjudication in favor of the shareholders of the insurance company who are admitted to be the direct successors of the shareholders of the company sued in the former action, and the decision of the state court, refusing the benefit of that adjudication to the shareholders, is claimed to have been error, and to present a Federal question for review by this court. The judgment is not claimed as an adjudication or estoppel in favor of the corporation, because the corporation was not a party to the suit.

We think the decision of the supreme court as to the weight to be given the judgment is not reviewable by us because it is not a Federal question. The former judgment determined that, as between the city and the shareholders, the latter were not subject to pay the taxes for the years specified. In the action now under consideration we have determined that there was no immunity conferred either upon the corporation or the stockholders by the statutes cited. On the trial of this action the former judgment was offered in evidence by the shareholders, and it was held to constitute no bar to the maintenance of this action by the plaintiff, nor did it operate as an estoppel upon their right to claim taxes for subsequent years. The judgment offered in evidence was the judgment of a state court, and the refusal to accord to it all that was claimed for it in the nature of an estoppel by counsel for plaintiffs in error was, in any event, no more 185] than *a refusal to give to a judgment of one of its own courts that degree of force as evidence which it was by the general law entitled to. In no event was it anything other than error committed by the court below in regard to the general law or rule of evidence, which has nothing of a Federal question connected with it. It is entirely different from the case of a refusal of a state court to give the proper effect to a judgment of a court of the United States. If a state court erroneously refuse to give such weight and effect to a judgment of one of the courts of the United States a Federal question arises, which is within the jurisdiction of this court to review upon writ of error to the supreme court of the state. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. v. Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. 120 U. S. 141 [30: 614]. Although no higher sanctity or effect can be claimed for the judgment of a Federal court than is due under the same circumstances to judgments of state courts in like cases (Dupasseur v. Rochereau, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 130, 135 [22: 588, 590]; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3 [27: 346]), yet in the case of a judgment of the former court the Constitution provides that full faith and credit shall be given it, and whether it has or has not been given it by a state court is a Federal question, while if the state court erroneously decides a question of law regarding the weight to be given one of its own judgments in its own courts and among its own citizens, that error is not subject to review by this court, because it constitutes no Federal question.

If it were otherwise, every decision of a state court, claimed to be erroneous, which involved the failure to give what the defeated party might claim to be the proper weight to one of its own judgments, would present a Federal question, and would be reviewable here. There is no question of contract in the case. It is wholly one of evidence as to whether or not a prior judgment in a state court operated as an estoppel against the plaintiff below, and prevented the state court from granting it the relief to which it would otherwise be entitled. In granting relief it was bound to consider the Federal question, as to whether there was or was not a contract of immunity, and that question was open to review here and we have just *reviewed it. It is, moreover, quite [186] doubtful whether the court below committed any error, even if the question were to be regarded as of a Federal nature and open to us for review. Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301, 314 [38: 450, 456].

It is said that a suit for taxes for one year is no bar to a suit for taxes for another year; that it is not the same transaction, and the judgment in a prior action can never operate as an estoppel other than as to those matters which were in issue and controverted, and upon the determination of which a finding or verdict was rendered. It is not necessary in this case, however, to determine whether there was any one particular fact in issue and litigated in the first case, and which would be closed from further controversy, and which, as thus decided, would preclude a recovery in this case. We hold that the question in any event, as presented in this case, was not a Federal one.

These views render a discussion of any other question in the case unnecessary, and lead to an affirmance of the judgment herein.

Mr. Justice White dissents.

MEMPHIS CITY BANK ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE for the Use of the
CITY OF MEMPHIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 183-193.)

Exemption from taxation—new charter—banking power—estoppel.

1. A change of the business of a company from that of insurance to that of banking under a law

NOTE.—As to reserved power to alter, amend, or repeal charters. see note to Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 26: 961.

As to when an injunction to restrain the collection authorizing such change is such a material and radical change that, when made after the state Constitution had prohibited exemptions from taxation, the legislature has no power to continue an exemption from taxation granted by the charter to the insurance company so that it will continue to exist in favor of such company exercising an exclusively banking business.

2. The effect of a state law giving to a company having by its charter the right to receive moneys in trust or otherwise, the right to do a banking business, is to grant a new charter to the extent of granting banking powers, and the company, if it avails itself of the privileges mentioned in such law, takes them subject to the Constitution and laws then in force.
8. The power to receive in trust for any person moneys or other valuable thing, give acknowledgment therefor, and to loan surplus funds, given to an insurance company by its charter, does not authorize it to conduct a general banking business.
4. A judgment establishing an exemption of the shareholders of a corporation from taxes is not an estoppel against a later action based upon facts of a totally different nature and after a change in the charter and business of the company.

[No. 674.]

Argued January 20-22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a judgment of that court reversing the judgment of the court below and for the recovery of taxes upon the shares of stock in the Memphis City Bank and upon the surplus and undivided profits thereof in an action brought by the State of Tennessee for the use of the city of Memphis against the Memphis City Bank et al. Affirmed.

See same case below, 91 Tenn. 574.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

This suit is similar to those which precede, and is brought for the collection of taxes against the corporation plaintiff in error or its stockholders. It was tried upon an agreed statement of facts. Those which are material to the present inquiry are the following: The defendant corporation in January, 1870, under its then name of the Memphis City Fire & General Insurance Company, was duly organized under the charter granted to it on the 24th of January, 1870, and the organization under it was in all respects valid and no question is made upon the same. The defendant from that date down to the year 1887 carried on an insurance business under its charter in the city of Memphis. In that year, in pursuance of the powers granted in Acts 1887, chap. 190, the corporation (also claiming the right to do so under the powers conferred by its charter) changed its business from that of insurance to that of banking, and since that date down to the present time has exclusively conducted a banking business in Memphis. Section 2 of the original charter empowers the corporation to receive in trust from any person, moneys, jewels, plate, and other valuable things, and to give acknowledgment therefor in such form as the directors of the corporation may deem best suited to the protection and convenience of depositors and the company. And the corporation was also authorized to loan its surplus funds on any public stock, or of any incorporated company, or of the United States, or either of them, or to invest such funds in any real or personal estate, choses in action, or other good securities. Section 7 provides that there shall be levied a state tax of $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent upon the amount of capital stock actually paid in, to be collected in the same way and at the same time as the other taxes are by law collected, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes and assessments. Acts 1887, chap. 190, enacted that any company incorporated under the laws of Tennessee, having by its charter the right to receive moneys *in trust or otherwise, should be held to have the power to receive deposits and loan the same and its capital stock on any kind of commercial or business paper or real estate, buy and sell exchange and all kinds of public or private securities and commercial paper. It was also further provided in that act "that the exercise of any of the granted powers should not operate to forfeit any franchise, right, power, privilege, or immunity granted in the original charter, and that the nonuser of a part of a corporation's powers, privileges, and franchises should not have the effect of forfeiting any franchise, right, power, privilege, or immunity contained in its charter."

On the 23d of January, 1889, the legislature passed an act changing the name of the corporation plaintiff in error from that of the Memphis City Fire & General Insurance Company to that of the Memphis City Bank, and since that time it has conducted business under the latter name. From its first organization in 1870 down to the present time it has regularly and constantly paid to the state of Tennessee the charter tax provided for in § 7 of its charter, and has regularly filed with the comptroller of the state the statement required and called for by the 7th section of that charter.

The opinion of the supreme Court of Tennessee delivered upon the demurrer to the bill in this case will be found reported in 91 Tenn. 574, under the name of Memphis v. Memphis City Bank. In the year 1872 the state of Tennessee, the county of Shelby, and the city of Memphis undertook to tax the shares of stock of the Memphis City Fire & General Insurance Company at their market value in the hands of the shareholders, at the same rate as other property was taxed. The shareholders denied this right and claimed an exemption from all taxation except to the extent of the tax provided for in the 7th section of the charter. Thereupon an agreed case was made up between the parties, the state of Tennessee on the one side and Napoleon Hill, a stockholder in the company, on behalf of all the other stockholdof a tax will be granted, see note to Dows v. Chicago, 20: 65.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 21: 63.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to estoppel by judgment, see note to Aspenden v. Nixon, 11: 1059.

That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations,—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

ers, on the other side. The case was made in conformity with the laws of Tennessee, and the 189] question submitted to the *second chancery court of Shelby county and state of Tennessee to determine whether the said county or state had the right to impose a tax upon the shares other than the $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent provided for in its charter. The case was regularly heard in the second chancery court of Shelby county, and decided in favor of the shareholders, and against the power to tax. It was then carried to the supreme court of Tennessee, where the decision of the chancery court was reversed, and the power to tax affirmed. The case was heard in the supreme court in connection with several cases of the same character under the title of Memphis v. Farrington, 8 Baxt. 539. Mr. Hill sued out a writ of error from this court in behalf of himself and the other shareholders, and the case was regularly heard in this court upon the Federal question, and upon that hearing this court reversed the decree of the supreme court of Tennessee and affirmed that of the second chancery court of Shelby county, and upon a mandate properly issued from this court to the state court a judgment was entered in favor of said Hill and the other shareholders in the company. The case, as decided by this court, is reported under the name of Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, [24: 558]. The plaintiffs in error herein rely upon that final decree as being a full, final, and complete adjudication of all questions involved in this case, and as being res judicata and binding upon the parties hereto.

Upon these agreed facts the case was tried and judgment given for the shareholders, which, upon appeal, was reversed by the supreme court of Tennessee, and judgment entered for the city of Memphis for the recovery of taxes upon the shares of stock in the Memphis City Bank and upon the surplus and undivided profits for the years therein named, and it is to review this judgment that the plaintiffs in error come here.

Messrs. T. B. Turley, T. M. Scruggs, and L. E. Wright for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. S. P. Walker, C. W. Metcalf, and F. T. Edmondson for defendant in error.

190] *Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is whether the corporation plaintiff in error could, while availing itself of the general act (Acts 1887, chap. 190, above referred to), change its business from that of insurance, as provided in its charter granted in January, 1870, to that of banking, and still retain the exemption from the payment of any taxes other than those provided for in § 7 of that charter. After such change of business and by virtue of § 14 of the general revenue law of the state, passed in 1887, the state assumed to tax the plaintiffs in error at a greater rate than that provided for in the original charter, and it is to collect these taxes that this suit is brought. At the time the act of 1887, chap. 190, was passed, under which the corporation plaintiff in error claimed the right to change its business (while also at the same time claiming that right under its original charter), the Constitution of Tennessee, adopted in 1870, was in full force. The Constitution provided (art. 2, § 28) that "all property, real, personal, or mixed, shall be taxed, but the legislature may except such as may be held by the state, counties, cities, or towns." By the Constitution of 1870, art. 2, § 8, it was provided, among other things, "that no corporation shall be created or its powers increased or diminished by special laws, but the general assembly shall provide by general laws for the organization of all corporations hereafter created, which laws may at any time be altered or repealed, and no such alteration or repeal shall interfere with or divest rights which have become vested."

Under these two provisions of the Constitution, giving effect to both, the legislature could not even by general law grant or preserve an immunity from taxation, not otherwise existing, total or partial, to the capital stock or shares of a corporation. The 28th section of the 2d article of the Constitution requires that all property shall be taxed except such as is exempt by that section, or is by that section authorized to be exempt by the legislature, and this kind of property in question *in this [191] case does not come within either class spoken of in that section. We think that the change from the business of insurance to that of banking is a material and radical change, and to such an extent that the legislature, under the Constitution of 1870, would have no power to continue an exemption from taxation granted by the charter to the insurance company so that it should continue to exist in favor of a company exercising an exclusively banking business. The legislature was powerless in the face of the constitutional provision mentioned to provide "that the exercise of any of the granted powers should not operate to forfeit any franchise, right, power, privilege, or immunity" granted in the original charter. The supreme court of Tennessee has so construed the Constitution. 91 Tenn. 574.

That court holds that the legislature could not, by enacting such a proviso in connection with the authority given by it to a corporation to change its business, transfer an exemption from taxation granted to that corporation while exercising the powers originally granted to it by its charter prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1870.

The substantial effect of Acts 1887, chap. 190, when made applicable to any company having, by its charter, the right to receive moneys in trust or otherwise, was to grant a new charter to the extent of granting banking powers, and the company, availing itself of the privileges mentioned in such act, took them subject to the Constitution and laws then in force. It was not, properly speaking, a mere act increasing the powers of the corporation so that such corporation could perform other acts of a nature similar to those which it was already authorized to perform by its original charter. It was not an increase but it was a change of powers to the extent that those granted by the act of 1887 were of a totally different character and nature. An insurance corporation differs radically from a banking corporation, and the powers given to one cannot be exercised by the other without some authority granted by the state through its legislature. This corporation plaintiff in error, since the passage of the act in question, has not only availed itself of the privileges there-192] in granted, *but it has totally abandoned the exercise of the powers originally granted to it in its charter of 1870, and by such abandonment on the one hand and the exercise of the privileges granted to it by the act of 1887 on the other, it has become, in substance and effect, a banking corporation, and necessarily it must look to the act of 1887 as its authority for the exercise of its banking privileges. The original contract of exemption from taxation was manifestly granted to the original corporation to be availed of by it while it was in the exercise of its corporate powers as an insurance company. It cannot be held to go with the corporation when it abandons the performance of the acts authorized in its original charter and proceeds to exercise the privileges of and do a business as a banking corporation by virtue of the act of 1887. As a result, when it assumes to make use of the privileges granted to it under the act last named, it must do so subject to the Constitution and laws existing at the time when that act was passed, and its rights and privileges must be exercised in subordination thereto.

Upon the proposition argued by plaintiffs in error, that they have the right to engage in their present business of banking by virtue of the original charter, we are of opinion that such right does not exist. The power to receive in trust for any person moneys or other valuable thing, and of giving their acknowledgment therefor, and to loan their surplus funds as provided in the 2d section of the original charter, in no sense authorizes them to conduct a general banking business. They must look to the act of 1887 alone for their power to transact that kind of business, and for the reasons we have stated they are not entitled to the exemption provided for in § 7 of their charter.

Second. We do not think that the plea of res judicata can be upheld upon the facts as stated. The former judgment was entered in an action commenced long prior to the act of 1887 to recover taxes alleged to have become due while the corporation plaintiff in error was engaged in its original business of an insurance company, and the judgment was upon the right of its shareholders to be exempt from any 193] further *taxation than that provided for in the charter while the company was doing business as such insurance company. The judgment could therefore not be an estoppel or operate in any manner as a bar to the maintenance of this action, based upon facts of a totally different nature, and arising long after the judgment was obtained in the former action.

The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

(NOTE.—No. 675, by stipulation, is to abide event of foregoing case.)

PLANTERS' FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
 v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE for the Use of
 the CITY OF MEMPHIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 193-198.)

Exemption from taxation—constitutional prohibition.

1. Many years' delay in accepting a charter which contains an exemption from taxation is fatal to the exemption although the legislature recognizes the existence of the corporation under the charter, when before the acceptance a constitutional provision has prohibited such exemptions.
2. A suit against a corporation for taxes, based on a denial of the right to an exemption from taxation granted by its charter, for the reason that the acceptance was after a constitutional prohibition of exemption is not such a collateral attack upon the charter as to be a calling in question of the existence of the corporation, and to be in the nature of a quo warranto, in which the state must act through its attorney general.

[No. 678.]

Argued January 20-22, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a judgment of that court in favor of the plaintiff, the State of Tennessee, for the use of the city of Memphis, against the defendants, the Planters' Fire & Marine Insurance Company et al., for the amount of taxes alleged to be due on the capital stock or shares of stock in said company.
Affirmed.

See same case below, 95 Tenn. 203.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

This is another bill filed by the state of Tennessee for the use of the city of Memphis against defendants *below to recover [194] taxes alleged to be due on the capital stock or shares of stock in the corporation plaintiff in error. The supreme court of Tennessee gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff below, and the plaintiffs in error have brought the case here for review. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, among which are the following: On the 24th day of March, 1860, the Energetic Insurance Company of Nashville was incorporated. By the 60th section of that

NOTE.—As to direct taxes, see note to Scholey v. Rew, 23: 99.

As to power of states to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County Comrs. 10: 1022.

That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations,—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to when an injunction to restrain the collection of a tax will be granted, see note to Dows v. Chicago, 20: 65.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 21: 63.

As to reserved power to alter, amend, or repeal charters, see note to Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 28: 961.

charter it was provided "that said company shall pay to the state an annual tax or bonus of $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent on each share of the capital stock subscribed, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." On the 10th day of December, 1866, the Planters' Insurance Company was incorporated, and thereafter it conducted a general fire insurance business in the city of Memphis up to the year 1885. No immunity from taxation was granted that company. On the 27th day of March, 1885, the name of the Energetic Insurance Company was changed to the Planters' & Marine Insurance Company of Memphis, and the company was authorized to remove its situs and office to the then taxing district of Shelby county, now the city of Memphis.

From the time of the passage of the act providing for the incorporation of the Energetic Insurance Company in 1860 down to the 30th day of January, 1884, no action was taken by the incorporators named in the act towards organizing a corporation accepting the charter. On the last-named date a meeting was had of some of the incorporators, named in the act, and the first minutes which can be found in the office of the defendant corporation, or which it can produce, are the minutes of the incorporators, stockholders, and directors held on that day. Six individuals were named in the original charter as incorporators, together with such other persons as might thereafter be duly associated with them, and at this meeting of the stockholders in January, 1884, four of them were present, and the other incorporators mentioned in the charter were dead at that time. It appears from those minutes that, pursuant to the terms and stipulations of an act of the legislature of Tennessee, a meeting was 195] that day—*January 30, 1884—called of the incorporators of the Energetic Insurance Company of Nashville, and in response to that call four of such incorporators appeared. A moderator was selected and books were opened, or ordered to be opened, for subscriptions to the capital stock of the company, and it was resolved that the first directory should consist of five persons. Stock was then subscribed by the various persons, amounting to $100,000, and the stockholders thus subscribing being present either in person or by proxy, it was unanimously agreed by the incorporators present that the stockholders should go into an election for directors, and that the incorporators as such should adjourn. Thereupon, on the same day, it appears from the minutes that a meeting of the stockholders of the company was held and a board of directors elected, and the stockholders then voted to call a meeting of the directors for the same day. A meeting of the directors was then held, and a president, secretary, and treasurer of the company elected, and from that day (January, 1884) the organization of the corporation plaintiff in error was regular and continuous.

After its name was changed by the legislature to the Planters' Fire & Marine Insurance Company, and it was authorized to remove its situs to the city of Memphis, its stock was increased to \$150,000, and it removed its place of business to Memphis, and bought out the assets and property of the Planters' Insurance Company and reinsured its risks. Since that time the defendant has regularly paid the commutation tax of $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent on each share of capital stock subscribed to the state of Tennessee, pursuant to the terms of the charter, up to the present time. By virtue of the general revenue laws of the state, the corporation plaintiff in error, or its stockholders, have been taxed upon the capital stock or shares of stock at a greater rate than that provided for in the 60th section of the act of incorporation, and the plaintiffs in error claim that by virtue of that 60th section they are entitled to exemption from all taxation, except that therein provided for.

Messrs. T. B. Turley and L. E. Wright for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. S. P. Walker, C. W. Metcalf, and F. T. Edmondson for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

The claim set up by plaintiffs in error is that the insurance company was duly incorporated as the Energetic Insurance Company of Nashville, under the act passed March 24, 1860; that it is the same company as therein incorporated, and entitled to all the benefits and immunities, among them that of exemption from taxation granted by that charter.

The defendants in error deny that claim, and assert the right to tax by virtue of the general revenue laws of the state. They assert that by reason of the failure to accept the charter and organize thereunder until after the lapse of twenty-four years the corporation did not acquire the right of exemption provided for in the 60th section of the charter because, at the time the company was organized in 1884, the Constitution of the state of Tennessee, adopted in 1870, was in full force, and by that Constitution any exemption of the property of the corporation, its capital stock or its shares of stock, was prohibited.

The plaintiffs in error answer that they are either a corporation organized under that charter or else there is no corporation, and the individuals assuming to act as such should be sued in their individual capacity, and if liable at all for any taxes whatever, they must be liable as individuals only. They further say that the state by its action herein recognizes them as a corporation, and if a corporation at all, they are such under the original charter above-mentioned, and if they be a corporation under such charter, they are entitled to all the rights and privileges and immunities granted by that charter as a whole, and that they cannot be prosecuted as a corporation under that charter for the purpose of compelling them to *pay taxes and, at the same time, be de- 197 nied the right of exemption from such payment granted by that 60th section. They also allege that this action of the state is a collateral attack upon their charter by denying their immunity from taxation given by the 60th section, and therefore calling in question its existence as a corporation, and an action of that kind can only be maintained by the state by means of a quo warranto, either against the corporation itself for the exercise of powers not granted it, or against the individuals for assuming to exercise the corporate powers.

For the purpose of effecting a dissolution of a corporation grounded upon some alleged forfeiture of its rights and powers, the state must act through its attorney general and by action in the nature of quo warranto. This is not such an action, and the dissolution of the corporation is not its object. The state in effect so far recognizes it as a corporation as to demand payment of taxes on its capital stock or on its shares of stock, and when as a defense to that action the corporation plaintiff in error, or its stockholders, set up its alleged right of exemption under the 60th section of the charter, the answer of the state is: You are not entitled to that exemption because at the time your charter was accepted, twenty-four years after it was granted by the legislature, the Constitution of the state prevented the grant of any exemption such as is claimed by you, to which the plaintiffs in error rejoin that in this action you cannot look at the time when the charter was accepted, but as the corporation is acting under the original charter, the 60th section remains in full force.

We think that even in this action it is proper for the state to inquire as to the time of the acceptance of the charter for the purpose of determining what powers were actually granted. If the charter had been accepted and the individuals organized under it prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, then the exemption might have gone with it; but we think it entirely possible to hold that by the acceptance of the charter, assuming it to have been within a reasonable time, but after the Constitution was adopted, such acceptance (while subsequently recognized by the legislature in permitting it to *change its situs) must be taken in connection with the provisions of the Constitution existing at the time, and that while the incorporators might take all the other rights, powers, and privileges granted by the charter, so far as to give them the franchise to be a corporation and exercise the powers therein granted, the immunity of exemption would not pass under the grant. It might possibly have been held, in a direct attack of the state upon the charter, that there had been an unreasonable delay in accepting it, and that consequently there was in law no corporation under the charter. That course was not taken, and the legislature, after the assumed organization under the charter in 1884, passed an act changing the name of the corporation and permitting it to change its situs. It might therefore be claimed that it thereby recognized the existence of the corporation under the charter, but in subordination to the Constitution and laws existing at the time when the charter was accepted.

We think upon these facts the exemption from taxation did not pass to the corporation, and the assessments were in consequence legal and valid.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

(NOTE.—No. 679, by stipulation, is to abide the event of this cause.)

HOME INSURANCE & TRUST COMPANY ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, for the Use of the
CITY OF MEMPHIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 198-200.)

Exemption from taxation.

An act giving a corporation all the "powers, rights, reservations, restrictions, and liabilities" of another company does not give an exemption from taxation which the latter may possess.

[No. 672.]

*Argued and Submitted January 20-22, 1896.
Decided March 2, 1896.*

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a decree of that court in favor of the State of Tennessee for the use of the city of Memphis, plaintiff, against the defendants, the Home Insurance & Trust Company et al., for the recovery of certain taxes. Affirmed.

See same case below, 95 Tenn. 212.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The plaintiffs below sought by this bill to recover certain taxes against the Home Insurance Company, or its shareholders, under the general revenue laws of the state, at a greater rate than the plaintiffs in error claimed they are liable to pay. This case was also tried on an agreed statement of facts, by which it appears that on the 29th day of February, 1856, the legislature of Tennessee passed an act incorporating the Home Insurance Company. On March 20, 1858, the legislature passed an act, the 14th section of which provides "that the name of the Home Insurance Company of Memphis be changed to that of the Home Insurance & Trust Company, and said company may organize with all the forms, officers, terms, powers, rights, reservations, restrictions, and liabilities given to and imposed upon the Memphis Life & General Insurance Company, provided nothing herein contained shall in any wise be construed to release said company from any existing liability."

The present company organized under this charter. The Memphis Life & General Insurance Company, referred to in the above section, was chartered March 2, 1854, the 30th section of which reads: "That there shall be a state tax of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent upon the amount of the capital actually paid in." It is conceded that the Home Insurance Company has regularly paid this tax. The supreme court of

NOTE.—As to direct taxes, see note to Scholey v. Rew, 23: 99.

As to power of states to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County Comrs. 10: 1022.

That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations,—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 7: 939.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 22: 805.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 21: 63.

Tennessee held that the shares of stock, the capital stock, the surplus and franchises of the company, were subject to taxation, and that the exemption from taxation claimed by it and its shareholders was not well founded. The court rendered a decree against the company under the stipulation, by which the company assumed the liability of its shareholders for taxes against them, from which decree plaintiffs in error have prosecuted this writ of error.

Mr. Frank P. Poston for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. S. P. Walker, C. W. Metcalf, and F. T. Edmondson for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

It is quite questionable whether § 30 of the act incorporating the Memphis Life & General Insurance Company grants to that company an immunity from taxation. Without discussing or deciding that question, however, we think that, assuming the exemption to exist in favor of that company, it did not pass to the Home Insurance Company by virtue of the 14th section of the act of 1858, above quoted. We think the words contained in that section, referring to the Memphis Life & General Insurance Company, are of no broader significance than those referred to in the case of Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 174 [ante, 660].

Upon authority of that case, therefore, this judgment must be affirmed.

HOME INSURANCE & TRUST COMPANY and Bunn F. Price, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE and Shelby County.

[No. 673.]

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is precisely similar to the last preceding one, and must be governed by our decision in that.

Judgment is therefore affirmed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ISAAC S. LYON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 200-208.)

Certificates of indebtedness—recovery upon.

1. Certificates of indebtedness are valid obligations of the District of Columbia when issued for paving and curbing done under a valid contract with the corporation of Washington, and that corporation and its successor, the District, have failed in the duty to make the required assessments for the payment of the same, although at the time the certificates are issued the assessments cannot be lawfully made because the title to the lots has passed to a bona fide purchaser.

2. A purchase in good faith at a void sale for non-payment of assessments upon lots for paving and curbing, when made involuntarily and to protect the interests of the purchaser as the holder of certificates of indebtedness given by the District of Columbia to the contractor who did the work, and the surrender of the certificates for the purchase price of the lots on the sale, will not preclude such holder from recovering the amount paid by him on the sale from the District, as it was through its fault that the sale was void and the lots not subject to a lien for the assessments.

[No. 135.]

*Argued and Submitted December 20, 1895.
Decided March 2, 1896.*

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review a judgment of that court in favor of plaintiff, Isaac S. Lyon, against the District of Columbia, defendant, for the amount of certificates of indebtedness, and an additional amount paid upon the sale of lots. Affirmed.

See same case below, 20 D. C. 484.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action of assumpsit to recover from the District of Columbia the sum of $4,082.70, with interest from October 5, 1881, and was tried, by stipulation, without a jury, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term. Judgment was rendered in plaintiff's favor, March 28, 1892, and thereupon this writ of error was sued out. The opinion of the court by James, J., is reported 20 D. C. 484.

Under the act of Congress of February 28, 1865 (13 Stat. at L. 434, chap. 48) the corporation of Washington had ample power and authority to make local improvements and to levy and collect taxes to pay for the same.

On November 2, 1869, the corporation of Washington passed an act for the improvement in question, as follows:

"Be it enacted . . . That the mayor be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to cause the curbstones to be set and the footways and gutters paved on the north side of P street north, between Sixteenth street west and Rock Creek; the work to be contracted for and executed in the manner and under the superintendence provided by law; and to defray the expenses of said improvement, a special tax, equal to the cost thereof, is hereby imposed and levied on all lots or parts of lots bordering on the line of the improvement; the said tax to be assessed and collected in conformity with the provisions of the act approved October 12, 1865." Acts 67th Council, chap. 236, p. 116.

The act of October 12, 1865, referred to, extended prior acts of May 23 and 24, 1853, to special improvements thereafter made, and provided that the cost and expense of every local improvement, "unless otherwise provided for in the act or acts ordering the same,

NOTE.—As to payment voluntary and under protest; when money wrongfully and illegally exacted can be recovered back,—see note to Bank of United States v. Bank of Washington, 8: 299.

As to failure of title, how far a defense to purchase price,—see note to Greenleaf v. Cook, 4: 172.

As to contracts; their interpretation and validity,—see note to Bell v. Bruen, 11: 89.

202]shall be levied, assessed, collected, *and paid, and the payment thereof enforced," as provided in those acts. Webb, Dig. 360-362.

The act of May 23, 1853 (Webb, Dig. 155), provided for proposals for setting curbstones, etc.; petition for the improvement and plan of the property; superintendence by a commissioner of improvements with two assistants appointed from among those interested in the improvement; that the commissioner of improvements should proceed to execute the work "immediately after the expiration of forty days from the passage of any act laying a tax for the purpose of setting the curbstone and paving the footway on any avenue or street, . . . and according to the proper graduation in front of the lot or lots thereby taxed; and it is hereby understood that the said lot or lots shall alone be answerable for the amount taxed for such improvement," unless the owner shall do the work himself, "in which case the tax laid for the purpose shall become released;" that upon the completion of the work the commissioner "shall deposit with the register a statement exhibiting the cost of setting the curbstone and paving the footway in front of each lot or part of lot separately, and the amount of tax to be paid by each proprietor of said lots or parts of lots, and the register shall then, without delay, place in the hands of the collector of taxes a list of the persons chargeable with such tax, together with the amount due by each person; and the collector shall, within ten days after receiving such list, give notice in writing to each proprietor," . . . to pay within thirty days, and on default collect the tax, with 10 per cent interest, "in the same manner as other taxes upon real property are by law collected;" and that the work should be paid for by certificates of stock, commonly known as "paving stock," issued by the mayor and given to the contractors, and redeemable from time to time as the taxes were collected.

None of the provisions of the act of May 24, 1853, are important in connection with this case.

The act of June 10, 1867 (Webb, Dig. 467), provided for the appointment of a superintendent and inspector of paving of footways, etc., and enacted that "the said superintendent and 203]inspector shall also be charged with the duty of making all assessments on lots or parts of lots bordering on any street, alley, or avenue, which shall have been paved."

A later act on the subject, that of October 28, 1867 (65th Council, chap. 6), provided "that from and after the passage of this act, all taxes assessed on private property . . . for the laying of foot pavements and gutters, curbing and paving alleys, shall be collected as follows: one fourth of such assessment within thirty days after the service of the notice by the collector of taxes, and the remaining three fourths in three equal annual payments, for which deferred payments it shall be the duty of the mayor to issue certificates of indebtedness bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum."

By act of Congress of February 21, 1871 (16 Stat. at L. 428, chap. 62, § 40), it was provided that "the charters of said cities (Washington and Georgetown) severally . . . shall be continued for the following purposes, to wit. "For the collection of all sums of money due to said cities respectively; . . . for the enforcement of all contracts made by said cities respectively, and all taxes, heretofore assessed, remaining unpaid; . . . for the collection of all just claims against said cities, respectively; . . . for the enforcement of all legal contracts against said cities, respectively, . . . until the affairs of said cities, respectively, . . . shall have been fully closed;" . . . and (§ 41) "upon the repeal of the charters of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, the District of Columbia be and is hereby declared to be the successor of said corporations, and all the property of said corporations and of the county of Washington shall become vested in the said District of Columbia."

From the agreed statement of facts, supplemented on the hearing below by the addition of a single fact by consent of counsel for both parties, it appeared that one Henry Birch set the curbstone and paved the footway and gutter in front of lots 1 to 12, inclusive, in square 156, under a valid contract executed in 1870 with the corporation of Washington, covering the improvement in front of other lots as well; that the work was duly completed and accepted on or about *November 17, [204 1870, and that its cost, to be paid to Birch, was $2,054.10, no part of which had ever been collected or paid; that the municipal officers failed to comply with the requirements of law relating to assessment and notice; that the superintendent and inspector of paving and footways withheld the statement of the cost of the work from the register and the assessment from record until November, 1871, at "the sole request and procurement of the owner of said lots, whereby he, the owner, was enabled to sell and did sell said lots without any record notice of such assessment, to the purchaser," namely October 2, 1871. In the meantime and after the work was completed, the corporation of Washington had been succeeded by the government of the District of Columbia, and the offices under the corporation of Washington had been abolished, and the superintendent and inspector was without any authority to make the assessment against these lots, yet on or about November, 1871, "the records were erased and altered, whereby an assessment against lots was interpolated over and above the signatures already made of the mayor, ward commissioner, and other officers of the corporation, presumably to make it appear that they had approved the same, when as a matter of fact they had not."

It is explained in Lyon v. Alley, 130 U. S. 177 [32: 899], that the superintendent entered the work under Birch's contract with the proper proportionate charge against each lot, as to all other lots except those in question, and that the change in the record was made by an interlineation in red ink, signed by the officer, and reading "Entered November 17, 1870. This work was done at this date, but, by request of the owner, not entered until November, 1871."

March 9, 1872, the District of Columbia issued and delivered to Birch four certificates of indebtedness against these lots for the cost of the work, signed by the governor and register, and Birch sold and transferred them to plaintiff for value before maturity. The certificates stated that there was due from the corporation of Washington to Birch and his assigns the sums named, bearing interest from November 17, 1871, at 10 per cent, being issued under the 205] corporation *ordinance of October 28, 1867, for setting the curbstone and paving the footway in front of the lots in question, and that the principal and interest was to be paid "out of the special tax fund, agreeably to the terms of the above recited act." On June 7, 1874, these lots were advertised for sale by the collector of taxes for nonpayment of the assessment or certificates, whereupon the sale was enjoined at the instance of the then owner by a temporary restraining order of the court, but neither Birch nor plaintiff were made parties to said cause and neither of them had any knowledge of the order passed therein. The collector of taxes, upon the service of the temporary injunction, made no entry or memorandum thereof against these lots, but by mistake did so as to the same numbered lots in another square. October 5, 1881, the collector of taxes again advertised the lots for sale and sold them for the nonpayment of the assessment or certificates to plaintiff, and there was issued to him, upon his surrendering the certificates, which were canceled, and paying $3 in money, twelve tax sale certificates. At this time, to wit, October 5, 1881, plaintiff had no knowledge whatever of the restraining order or any of the proceedings in the case in which it was granted, and "neither he nor his assignor, Birch, were aware of any invalid proceedings connected with said assessment, and said purchase was involuntary on the part of plaintiff and made to protect his interest in said certificates of indebtedness and save the same from sacrifice." The certificates of indebtedness thus surrendered "were computed and accepted as valid by the District of Columbia at said sale at and for the sum of $4,079.70, which, with $3 paid in cash, made $4,082.70 as the purchase price paid for such lots on October 5, 1881, by this plaintiff."

It further appeared that John B. Alley, having become owner of the lots, filed a bill against plaintiff to set aside the tax sale, and that in February, 1885, the supreme court of the District of Columbia granted the relief prayed (Alley v. Lyon, 3 Mackey, 456), and that its decree was affirmed on appeal (130 U. S. 177 [32: 899]); and it was agreed that "the assessment was illegally levied, and the collector of taxes 206] was without authority and *jurisdiction to sell, and said sale was not made according to law and was void."

Plaintiff first learned of the invalid proceedings connected with said assessment and sale in the early part of 1882, and at once made application to defendant for a return of the certificates of indebtedness and the money accepted by the collector of taxes as the purchase price of said lots, tendering in return the certificates of tax sale, but his application was refused.

And it was stipulated that if the court should be of opinion that plaintiff was legally entitled to recover, it might give judgment in his favor for the amount paid by him at the sale, $4,082.70, with interest thereon from October 5, 1881.

Messrs. Sidney T. Thomas and Andrew B. Duvall for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Isaac S. Lyon, defendant in error, in person.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court of the District of Columbia held that the effect of the applicable acts "was to charge the municipality, not with a direct indebtedness for the work done under its ordinance, but with the duty to work out a payment therefor by seeing to it that the cost should be charged as a lien upon adjoining lots, and by enforcing this lien and collecting the special tax from the lot owners;" that the District "became invested with authority, and was charged with the duty, to secure such liens and collect and pay over to the contractor such taxes, in payment for work done under an ordinance of the city of Washington. This power could have been exercised and this duty could have been performed in the present case at any time before the 2d day of October, 1871, when it was cut off by the sale of the lots in question to an innocent purchaser;" that "if the resource of payment out of the special tax could have been secured by the District, and was lost *by its omission, a duty to pay the con- [207 tractor would fairly belong to the District, and an issue of certificates of indebtedness to him would not be a void act;" and these certificates were negotiable and were assigned for value to an innocent purchaser; that plaintiff acted in good faith in making the purchase at the tax sale; that the collector did not act as plaintiff's agent for the collection of the certificates, but in the exercise of public functions and for the District, and that as the District had received and retained the proceeds of the transaction, it had treated the sale as made on its account; and, in conclusion, that as the certificates were valid, and between the parties were purchase money, and as the sale gave nothing to the plaintiff, but the District retained and had disabled itself to return the certificates, it was liable for the amount thereof.

We concur in these views. The work was done in pursuance of a valid contract, and the city and the District received the benefit thereof. As the city, and then the District, failed to make the required assessments, the District became liable and the certificates of indebtedness were valid obligations. Memphis v. Brown, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 289, 310, 311 [22: 264, 268]; Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341 [24: 659]; Chicago v. People, 56 Ill. 327; Kearney v. Covington, 1 Met. (Ky.) 329; Cumming v. Brooklyn, 11 Paige, 596; Reilly v. Albany, 112 N. Y. 30; Fisher v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 482; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Portland, 24 Or. 188; Cole v. Shreveport, 41 La. Ann. 839; Morgan v. Dubuque, 28 Iowa, 575; Fort Worth City Co. v. Smith Bridge Co. 151 U. S. 294, 302 [38: 167, 170].

The certificates admitted the indebtedness and postponed payment until the amount thereof could be realized from an assessment, which it turned out the District could not then lawfully make, though it could have been done prior to October 2, 1871; and there is no pretense that the particular means of payment failed through any laches or fault on the part of Birch or the plaintiff. The tax sale was void, but the agreed case shows that plaintiff purchased thereat involuntarily and in good faith to protect his interest in the certificates, and paid the full amount in these due-bills. 208]He was *not bound to take the risk of losing his money because of the invalidity of the assessment and the want of authority in the officer to sell, an officer not acting for him but for the District, and no adequate reason is perceived for cutting him off from reclaiming his certificates and recovering thereon, in view of this total failure of consideration without fault on his part.

Judgment affirmed.

SANTIAGO AINSA, Admr. with the Will Annexed of FRANK ELY, Deceased, ET AL.,
Appts.,

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 208-234.)

Expediente—testimonio—Mexican grant, when not established—survey—quantity—appraisement and sale—juridical possession.

1. An expediente is a complete statement of every step taken in the proceedings for a Mexican grant, and a testimonio is the first copy of the expediente.
2. A Mexican grant of a specific quantity of land within exterior boundaries containing a larger quantity, which was not located prior to the Gadsden treaty of December 30, 1853, cannot be established under that treaty and the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, creating the court of private land claims, which does not provide for incomplete or imperfect claims unless the claimant had a right to make them perfect and they were such as the United States is bound to respect and permit to become complete and perfect upon the principles of public law or by the provisions of the treaty of cession.
3. The fact that a Mexican commissioner appointed to survey lands granted, with a specification of the quantity, made an estimate of a portion of his measurements, is not equivalent to stamping "more or less" on the transaction, or rendering the specified quantity not of its essence.
4. The quantity named in a grant of lands may be of decisive weight where there is uncertainty in the specific description, and is necessarily so if the intention is plain to convey only so much and no more.
5. An appraisement, advertisement, and sale of a specified quantity of land at the minimum price cannot be enlarged by the words "comprising the vacant public lands" in a certain locality, as used in a Mexican grant, while in other parts of the proceedings it is described as "contained in" or "comprised in" the vacant public lands.

NOTE.—As to Missouri private land claims,—see note to Les Bois v. Bramell, 11: 1051.

For dominion acquired over conquered or ceded territory as affecting vested rights of individuals to property; continuance of former laws until altered by the new sovereign,—see note to Delassus v. United States, 9: 71.

161 U. S.

6. That juridical possession had previously taken place cannot be inferred from a caution to the purchasers, in the final execution of a Mexican grant, "to restrict and limit themselves to the land, holdings, metes, and bounds particularly described in the hereinbefore inserted proceedings of survey."

[No. 429.]

Argued October 25, 28, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Court of Private Land Claims against the defendants, Santiago Ainsa, Administrator, et al., in a proceeding on behalf of the United States to annul an alleged grant of Mexican land and to quiet the title. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a proceeding on behalf of the United States, instituted by direction of the Attorney General in the court of private land claims under act of March 3, 1891, § 8, cl. 3 (26 Stat. at L. 854, chap. 539). The petition alleged that defendants were asserting a claim to the premises in dispute under an alleged Mexican land grant by virtue of the treaty of December 30, 1853, known as the "Gadsden Purchase," and that the title of defendants and each of them was open to question in several particulars set out in the petition. And it was prayed that the defendants be *notified [209 to show cause why the alleged grant should not be declared null and void, and that the title to said land might be quieted and forever settled, and for general relief.

Separate answers were filed by Santiago Ainsa, administrator of Frank Ely, and by Juan Pedro Camou and George H. Howard. Defendants admitted that they claimed the land as tenants in common, and each set up and pleaded his title and asked confirmation of his claim. The New Mexico & Arizona Railroad Company claimed its right of way under them.

The answer of Camou and Howard stated, among other things:

"That, as appears and is shown from and in the said official survey, the minutes whereof are contained in the aforesaid testimonio, the form of the same was nearly square, the northern and southern boundaries conforming, of necessity, angularly with these of the Casita Rancho and the Tumacacori and Calabazas tracts; that within the bounds, natural objects, and monuments set forth and established by the said official survey, there is an excess of about —, more or less, some 4,631 hectares, 21 ares, and 47 centiares, or about — of such said excess, surplus, or demasias, being in that portion of grant lying and being in the state of Sonora, all of which is set forth in the resurvey of the grant and plot thereof had and made A. D. 1886, by the Mexican government upon the petition of your petitioner, Camou, to purchase the said demasias that lay within the Republic of Mexico; which said resurvey and plot thereof and the proceedings thereon, as well as the final sale and grants by the said Republic of Mexico — petitioner Camou of the said demasias within the said Republic, and a final recognition, expressly considered and given, of the aforesaid original grant of —, made A. D. 1843, by the treasurer general of the department of Sonora, are contained, shown, and set forth in the duly authenticated original testimonio, which was made and delivered unto the said Camou by the said Republic as complete and final evidence of title, a copy of which is filed herein and herewith, marked as 'Exhibit B.'" Camou also filed an amended answer, which 210] alleged that "the tract in question had been duly located and recorded in the archives of Mexico, prior to the 25th of September, referred to in article 6 of the Gadsden treaty, and that his grantors and predecessors in interest, who were the owners of the grant at the time of the adoption of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and of the Gadsden treaty, were Mexicans and citizens of the Republic of Mexico, and further allege that the validity of the grant was examined into by the United States surveyor general for Arizona, who made a report thereon, a certified copy whereof, dated February 25, 1881, was made part of his answer. This report states that the grant was "for the exact quantity of $7\frac{1}{2}$ square leagues and 2 short caballerias, notwithstanding the petition was for the vacant land lying between the northern boundary of Casita and the western boundary of rancho Tumacacori;" that the survey "fixed the quantity at exactly $7\frac{1}{2}$ square leagues and 2 short caballerias;" and that "after survey every act in the proceeding up to and including the formal execution of the grant was upon the basis of the exact quantity ascertained by survey." The surveyor general called attention to the importance attached by the Mexican government to the quantity or area of grants of land as shown by the action of the procurator fiscal, hereinafter referred to, in correcting the error of the appraisers in omitting to value the two short caballerias, which being done, "the grant was executed for the definite quantity heretofore stated." In his opinion, as the petition showed that the petitioner wanted the vacant land bounded on the south by the Casita and northerly by the Calabazas without special reference to other boundaries, the claim should be made to bind those ranchos with the easterly and westerly lines so established as to include exactly $7\frac{1}{2}$ square leagues and 2 caballerias, and he recommended confirmation of so much of the claim as should be found in Arizona on a survey made as thus indicated.

Upon the trial the court ruled that the object of the proceeding by the government was simply to bring in the parties in order that the claimants' title might be confirmed if it were found 211] *that their grant was valid; that moreover, the defendants had prayed for such confirmation; and that the burden of proof was upon the defendants. They thereupon offered in evidence a titulo of the land in question, entitled "Title to $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for raising cattle and horses, contained in the vacant public lands between the north boundary of the land of Casita and the west boundary of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas, in the upper Pima country, issued to Don José Elias and his parents, Don Francisco Gonzalez and Doña Balvanera Redondo, residents of the town of Imuris." From this it appeared, although the petition is not in the record, that May 6, 1841, Don José Elias and his parents applied "for the resurvey of the lands of the ranch of Casita, of which they are the owners and possessors, and which are situated in the jurisdiction of the town of Imuris, and also for the survey, appraisalment, and publication of the vacant public lands which they say they need." This part of the application is also described in the proceedings as being "for the survey, appraisalment, and publication, offer and sale of $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for raising cattle and horses, which comprise the vacant public lands situated between the north boundary of the ranch of Casita and the west boundary of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas, in the upper Pima country, in the district of San Ignacio." The application was granted by the superior board of the treasury of the department of Sonora, May 22, 1841, and a resurvey of the ranch Casita was ordered, as also a survey of the public lands sought to be purchased, and the order directed that separate expedientes should be made of both operations. This action of the board was certified to the superior chief of the treasury, May 26, 1841, who on that day commissioned Don Francisco Navamuel to make the surveys. He was directed to resurvey for Don José Elias and his parents the lands of Casita, "giving them the area or number of sitios that legally belong to them, with due separation of the sitios that result in excess within the lawful boundaries of said lands of Casita. And at the same time said *commissioner shall execute, in separate 212 expedientes, the proper survey, appraisalment, and publication of the vacant public lands the parties in interest apply for, after the indispensable judicial information which said commissioner, under his own strictest responsibility, shall cause to be taken before a competent judge and shall aggregate to the original proceedings, and which shall be that of three impartial, capable, and upright witnesses of practical intelligence, by which it is legally and sufficiently proved that the parties in interest need such vacant public lands and have an abundance of stock to stock them with." The commissioner was required to act in strict compliance with the laws of Sonora of May 20, 1825, and July 11, 1834, and to adjust the sitio or sitios contained in the lands of Casita, their overplus, if any, and the vacant public lands, strictly by the regulations, giving to each sitio the area of 25,000,000 square varas, and he was cautioned as soon as the operations as to the excess or overplus resulting within the lawful boundaries of Casita were completed, that that excess should not be published, but appraised in accordance with article 2 of decree No. 51 of May 12, 1835. The commissioner procured evidence that Gonzalez and his wife had 4,000 head of cattle more or less, and proceeded to resurvey the ranch of Casita, and then to survey the vacant public lands. As to this survey he reported that he started at the north cross monument of Casita and directed himself "along the public road that goes toward the north to the presidio of Tubac," 340 cords (17,000 varas), "which ended on the high road, in a flat, where a wide canyon that comes down from the slope of the Pajarito mountains terminates," where he ordered a monument placed, "that of Calabazas being about a thousand steps further on on a high hillock which slopes down on the other side of said canyon. . . . Having asked the party how he wanted the land squared, he replied that he wanted 20 cords to the east; and thereupon they were measured for him 22 cords from the monument which is in the high road, in a straight line guided by the compass, to a hillock that has many oak trees on its slope, and on the summit a pile of stones was placed as a monument." *Having returned to the cross monument on the high road, the commissioner measured west 50 cords (2,500 varas), where he "reached very broken ground, which it was impossible to measure with the cord," when he "made a scrupulous estimate, together with my assistants, of 150 cords, until I arrived to where the Pajarito mountains turned to the north near the place they call Calaveras, said Pajarito mountains having been crossed and within the land surveyed, and there I ordered the party to place a pile of stones as a corner monument." He then returned to the place of beginning, and measured east 22 cords (1,100 varas), "which ended upon some hillocks at the trunk of an oak tree, where a pile of stones was placed," and from the same point he measured and estimated "in several stretches of rough ground, towards the west, 200 cords, which ended on a whitish ridge that has considerable pasture, near the so-called Planchas de Plata, which ridge divides the streams that flow towards the ranch of Agua Caliente and those that go towards Agua Zarca. Thus the south boundary was closed with another 222 cords and is limited there by the ranch of Casita. In this manner was terminated the survey of the vacant public lands, which include $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios, and the party, when it was made known to him, was satisfied and understood the area it encloses, and was warned to place, at the first opportunity, fixed monuments of stone and mortar." The land was then appraised, according to the state law of Sonora, at the minimum price of \$15 per sitio, the amount being put at \$112, 4 reals; and publication was ordered in accordance with that law for thirty consecutive days, by the public crier, "in solicitation of bidders who may make a better valuation." The last publication was on December 10, 1841, when proceedings were suspended, on account of the absence of Don José Elias, until November 28, 1842, when they were referred, as required by the law of Sonora, to the attorney general of the treasury, who reviewed the same, and reported thereon that the survey was 340 cords from the 214] *north to the south and 222 cords from east to west, which, reduced to varas and multiplied, gave 188,700,000 square varas, making " $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 caballerias, a little short, for raising cattle;" that the appraisement made no account of the 2 short caballerias, which were of the value of 5 reals, 10 grains, at the rate of \$15 per sitio, for which reason the total value should be \$113, 1 real, and 10 grains; and recommended a sale "of said $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of public land for raising cattle and horses, included between the north boundary of the ranch of Casita and the west boundary of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas," to the highest bidder on three public offers. This was so ordered January 5, 1843, and after three public offers, January 5, 6, and 7, sale was made to Don José Elias and his parents. The description of the land offered was in these words: "There are going to be sold, on account of the public treasury of the department, $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for raising cattle and horses, contained in the vacant public lands situated between the boundaries of Casita and those of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas, in the upper Pima country." In the third publication the translation uses, instead of the words "contained in the vacant public lands," the words "comprising the vacant public lands," and this difference of phraseology appears in several of the proceedings, that is, sometimes the $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios are described as contained in the vacant public lands, and sometimes as comprising the vacant public lands. The documents in Spanish were not sent up.

The titulo then recites the receipt of \$113, 1 real, and 10 grains, and that in the provisional memorandum book of receipts for the current year the receipt of that sum, "being the value of $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for raising cattle and horses, contained in the vacant public lands between the boundaries of Casita and those of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas, in the upper Pima country," was entered. Thereupon the treasurer of the department of *Sonora, at Arizpe, on January [215 7, 1843, executed the grant as follows: "Therefore, by virtue of the authority which the laws, regulations, and superior orders that govern in the matter confer on me, by these presents, in the name of the Mexican nation, I grant, in due form of law, $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for raising cattle and horses, contained in the vacant public lands situated between the boundaries of Casita and those of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas, in the upper Pima country, in the district of San Ignacio, to Don José Elias, and to his parents, Don Francisco Gonzalez and Doña Balvanera Redondo, residents of the town of Imuris, in said district, to whom I cede, give, and adjudicate said lands, by way of sale, and with all the requisites, stability, and permanence the laws establish, for themselves, their children, heirs, and successors, etc."

Appended to the titulo appeared the following certificate signed by the chief clerk, which was offered in evidence by the defendants as a part thereof: "By supreme resolution of this day, the adjudication of the land referred to in the title issued on the 7th of January, 1843, is approved, under the provisions of article 3 of the law of December 3, 1855, and it is therefore legally confirmed. And in witness thereof and for the purposes that may be necessary this indorsement is made in the department of public works, in Mexico, on the 7th of July, 1886."

A memorandum was introduced in evidence, showing that the Toma de Razon or record book of land titles of Sonora contained an entry that on January 7, 1843, there was issued a title of grant for $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for breeding cattle and horses, contained in or comprising the vacant public lands, situated between the north boundaries of ranch La Casita and the western boundary of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas, in favor of Don José Elias and his parents. It was admitted that certain field notes and a plat thereto attached were made in December, 1891, by a surveyor, now deceased, named Oury, and that, if living and present, he would testify that said field notes and plat contained a survey of the claim according to *the natural objects and other descriptions contained in the original survey, the total area being 78,868.34 acres, of which 25,899.09 were in the United States. These field notes and map were introduced in evidence.

The testimony on behalf of the United States tended to show that by accurate measurement commencing at the north cross monument of the ranch, La Casita, and measuring north along the Tubac road 340 cords of 50 varas each, the measurement would terminate in the Republic of Mexico 3.54 cords, something over 412 feet, south of the line between Mexico and the United States; and that according to Oury's survey there were within the exterior boundaries named in the titulo and within the boundaries of Mexico 12.21 sitios, or about 52,969.25 acres, and within the exterior boundaries and within the United States 5.96 sitios, making in the aggregate 18.17 sitios within the exterior boundaries, or 78,868 acres, and that 7½ sitios contained 32,744 acres.

There was also evidence to the effect, as sufficiently stated by counsel for the United States, that none of the monuments referred to in the titulo are now in existence, and that the monuments now found on the southern boundary of the grant, being the south cross monument, the southeast monument, and the southwest monument, have been recently constructed and are new monuments; that the so-called north cross monument consists of a mound of earth and pebbles about 18 inches high and 10 or 12 feet in diameter, on top of which is a stone 11 or 12 inches square, on which is marked "N de E N X," and has not the appearance of being a monument, but appears more like an ant hill, and about twenty steps from this is a similar mound, except the stone; and that the northeast monument is a recently constructed pile of stone, without mortar, about 4 feet in diameter, built in circular shape; that the southwest corner is not where it ought to be as described by the titulo, and that no such place as "Calaveras," named as one of the calls for the northwest corner, was known in that part of the country.

217] *The United States also offered in evidence a transcript of the expediente referred to in the answer of Camou and Howard, being the same proceedings resulting in the order of July 7, 1886, a certificate of which was indorsed on the titulo and introduced in evidence by all of the defendants.

From these proceedings it appeared that on August 11, 1882, Don José Camou, Jr., through whom defendants Camou and Howard and others claimed, presented to the district judge at Hermosillo a petition alleging that he was a Mexican citizen, and that he was the owner of the ranch known as Los Nogales de Elias, situated on the boundary line of Mexico and the United States, between the ranches "La Casita," "Tumacacori," and "Calabazas," the overplus of which he denounced and sought to purchase under article 8 of a general law of July 22, 1863, "with the understanding that if the other coproprietors of said ranch of 'Nogales' desire to share in this overplus, I do not object that the adjudication may be made in favor of all the owners thereof in the proportion to which they are entitled, provided they contribute to the expenses of the same." On August 17, 1882, it was ordered by the district judge of Sonora that the denouncement above referred to be admitted, and citizen Rosas was appointed as commissioner with instructions to resurvey the ranch called Los Nogales de Elias for the overplus so applied for, and he was required to report the true area of the ranch and the overplus of the same, if any, and was required to proceed under the law of July 20 and August 2, 1863. It was further recited that Rosas, in compliance with the order of the district judge, notified the parties in interest and the owners of the adjoining lands, and proceeded to a resurvey of the ranch according to its exterior boundaries as described in the titulo of the grant, and found within such exterior boundaries and monuments an excess within the Republic of Mexico of 4,631 hectares, 21 ares, and 47 centiares (or 2.64 sitios, being 11,443 73 acres) over and above the 7½ sitios sold in 1843. The report of this survey was made to the district judge and by him referred to the chief of the treasury acting as attorney general, who advised that said excess be adjudicated to José Camou, *Jr., subject [218] to the approval of the board of public works, to which the matter was referred. That board required further explanation of the survey, which was made by Rosas on January 15, 1886, and thereafter the district judge was directed to suspend "approval of the adjudication until it becomes known whether or not it prejudices the growing town of Nogales, and likewise until the validity and legality of the title under which it is pretended to hold said ranch is established," in respect of which there was reason to entertain doubt, because the titulo of ownership issued to Don José Elias in the city of Arizpe by the departmental treasurer of Sonora, January 7, 1843, disclosed the fact "that the origin of the property or the original title was vicious and null, as the sale was made and the title issued by a departmental treasurer, and in the year 1842, when the bases of Tacuhaya were in force, that is, when the national government was not only central but dictatorial, which two circumstances give the title in question the character of manifest nullity."

The objections appear to have been obviated, among other things, by securing from the President of the Republic of Mexico the order of July 7, 1886, already referred to, and the whole matter being again remitted to the district judge the surplus was regularly adjudicated to José Camou, Jr., who paid therefor the value, fixed at $555.74, and costs.

The court of private land claims held that under the original proceedings the right of the grantees was limited to the specific amount of land mentioned in the proclamation of sale and the grant; that the grant was for a specific quantity, and by its express language the quantity was made the controlling matter of the description, and that the intent of the granting officer to reserve to the government the excess over the amount granted within the boundaries was as clearly manifested as it could have been made by a reservation in express language. And that even though a grant such as the court held this to be was unknown to the Mexican law, still, what was actually effected was to be determined by the language made use of, and that the power of the officers to do what they did do need not be inquired into; that while 219] a *parallelogram 340 cords in height and 222 cords in width, measured from the point designated by the commissioner as the cardinal point of survey, would be partly within the territory of Arizona and partly within the state of Sonora, yet that the grant was specific as to quantity but not as to location, and the only effect of the proceedings was to designate certain boundaries within which the quantity of lands granted was to be located; that, of necessity, the location was to be determined by subsequent action, but no action was ever taken. The conclusion was that, at the time of the treaty of cession, the grant had not been located within the meaning of that instrument, and hence by its express terms could not now be recognized as of any validity; and that it was not such a grant as by the terms of the treaty the United States was bound to recognize and confirm, which by the terms of the act creating the court was the test of the rights of the parties.

The court of private land claims entered a decree "that the defendants, or either or any one of them, take nothing by their claim of land lying north of the international boundary line between the United States and Mexico, and that the claims of the various defendants as made in their answers are hereby declared without merit and are disallowed." From this decree an appeal was prosecuted to this court.

Some definitions and explanations may properly be added to the foregoing statement.

A vara equals 32.9927 inches; a cordel, 137.95 feet, or 50 varas; a sitio contains 4,338.464 acres; a caballeria, 105.75 acres; a hectare, 2.471 acres; a "sitio de ganado menor," or sheep ranch, 1,928.133 acres. An expediente is a complete statement of every step taken in the proceedings, and a testimonio is the first copy of the expediente. A grant of final title papers is attached to the testimonio and delivered to the grantee as evidence of title, and entry is made at the time in a book called the Toma de Razon, which identifies the grantee, date of the grant, and property granted. The dictionaries define "Tomar razon," "to register, to take a memorandum of, to make a record of a thing," and "Toma de Razon," "memorandum book."

220] *The "Gadsden Purchase" added a strip along the southern boundary of the territory of New Mexico, and Arizona was detached and made a separate territory in 1863, within which strip and territory the land in controversy is situated.

Mr. Rochester Ford for appellants.

Messrs. Holmes Conrad, Solicitor General, Matthew G. Reynolds, and Luman F. Parker for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

As remarked in Astiazaran v. Santa Rita 161 U. S.

Land & Min. Co. 148 U. S. 80, 81 [37: 376], a case involving title to the ranchos of Tumacacori, Calabazas, and Huevavi, undoubtedly private rights of property within ceded territory are not affected by the change of sovereignty and jurisdiction, and are entitled to protection, whether the party had the full and absolute ownership of the land or merely an equitable interest therein, which requires some further act of the government to vest in him a perfect title. And this is so by the law of nations, "with or without any stipulation to such effect" (Strother v. Lucas, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 410, 436 [9: 1137, 1147]); but when stipulations exist, the terms in which the high contracting parties have expressed themselves are to be observed.

By article 8 of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, Mexicans established in territories previously belonging to Mexico and remaining for the future within the limits of the United States, as defined by the treaty, were free to continue where they then resided or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, "retaining the property which they possess in said territories, or disposing thereof, and removing the proceeds wherever they please;" and "in the said territories, property of every kind, now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy, with *respect to it, guaran-[221 ties equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States." 9 Stat. at L. 922, 929.

Article 6 of the Gadsden treaty, December 30, 1853, is as follows: "No grants of land within the territory ceded by the 1st article of this treaty, bearing date subsequent to the day—25th of September—when the minister and subscriber to this treaty on the part of the United States proposed to the government of Mexico to terminate the question of boundary, will be considered valid or be recognized by the United States, or will any grants made previously be respected or be considered as obligatory, which have not been located and duly recorded in the archives of Mexico." 10 Stat. at L. 1031, 1035.

The difference in language between the two treaties is readily seen. Grants previous to the cession, which have not been located, are by the terms of the latter treaty not to be respected or considered as obligatory, as matter of right, whatever the United States might see fit to do, as matter of grace, under particular circumstances. And grants which have not been located would seem manifestly to be grants of a specific quantity of land within exterior boundaries containing a larger quantity. This was a familiar class of Mexican grants, and is referred to by Mr. Justice Field in Hornsby v. United States, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 224, 232 [19:900, 902], where, delivering the opinion of the court, he said: "As we have had occasion to observe in several instances, grants of the public domain of Mexico, made by governors of the department of California, were of three kinds: 1, grants by specific boundaries, where the donee was entitled to the whole tract described; 2, grants by quantity, as of one or more leagues situated at some designated place, or within a larger tract described by out-boundaries, where the donee was entitled out of the general tract only to the quantity specified; and, 3, grants of places by name, where the donee was entitled to the tract named according to the limits, as shown by its settlement and possession, or other competent evidence. The greater number of the grants which have come before this court for examination have belonged to the second class."

222] *The mode in which private rights of property may be secured, and the obligations imposed upon the United States by treaties fulfilled, belongs to the political department of the government to provide. In respect to California this was done through the establishment of a judicial tribunal, but in respect of the adjustment and confirmation of claims under grants from the Mexican government in New Mexico and in Arizona, Congress reserved to itself, prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1891, creating the court of private land claims (26 Stat. at L. 854, chap. 539), the determination of such claims, enacting as to New Mexico "that the surveyor general for the territory, under the instructions of the Secretary of the Interior, should ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all such claims, and for this purpose might issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do all other necessary acts; and should make a full report on such claims, with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States; and that his report should be laid before Congress for such action thereon as might be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants, and to give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico." Astiazaran v. Santa Rita Land & Min. Co. 148 U. S. 80, 81 [37:376]; 10 Stat. at L. 308, chap. 103, § 8. And similarly as to the surveyor general of Arizona by the act of July 15, 1870. 16 Stat. at L. 304, chap. 292.

As to the claim in question, this officer made the report attached to one of the pleadings, but the claim was never confirmed. An authentic survey and final determination of the location and boundaries of such claims was contemplated in any event. Stoneroad v. Stoneroad, 158 U. S. 240 [39:966]. Then came the passage of the act of March 3, 1891, repealing the prior acts and creating the court whose decree is now under review.

By the 1st subdivision of § 13 of this act it is provided that "no claim shall be allowed that shall not appear to be upon a title lawfully and regularly derived from the government of Spain or Mexico, or from any of the 223] states *of the Republic of Mexico having lawful authority to make grants of land, and one that if not then complete and perfect at the date of the acquisition of the territory by the United States the claimant would have had a lawful right to make perfect had the territory not been acquired by the United States, and that the United States are bound, upon the principles of public law, or by the provisions of the treaty of cession, to respect and permit to become complete and perfect if the same was not at such date already complete and perfect." Here, again, there are significant differences between this phraseology and that used in the act of March 3, 1851, "to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the state of California" (9 Stat. at L. 631, chap. 41), which provided that the board of commissioners thereby created, the district court, and this court, in deciding on the validity of any claim brought before them, should "be governed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the law of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the government from which the claim is derived, the principles of equity, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as they are applicable,"—that is, the decisions theretofore given in relation to titles in Louisiana and Florida, which were derived from the French or Spanish authority previous to the cession to the United States. Frémont v. United States, 58 U. S. 17 How. 542, 553 [15:241, 244].

But under the act of March 3, 1891, it must appear, in order to the confirmation of a grant by the court of private land claims, not only that the title was lawfully and regularly derived, but that, if the grant were not complete and perfect, the claimant could, by right and not by grace, have demanded that it should be made perfect by the former government, had the territory not been acquired by the United States, and by the treaty no grant could be considered obligatory which had not been theretofore located.

It is contended on behalf of the United States that this grant was void because the departmental officers had no power, under the laws of Mexico in force when it purported to be made, to make it without the approval of the supreme government, which it is not claimed had been given; and also, if *otherwise [224 valid, that confirmation could not be accorded because the evidence failed to show that it was duly recorded in accordance with the requirements of the Mexican laws; but we need not enter upon the consideration of either of these propositions, since, assuming that this was a valid grant made by the proper officers and duly recorded, we concur with the court below that it was the grant of a specific quantity of land, and not of the entire 18 leagues contained within the exterior boundaries, and, not having been located at the date of the treaty, could not be confirmed.

It is to be noted that the petition of Don José Elias does not appear in the expediente, and its nonproduction is nowhere accounted for. The recitals in other parts of the proceedings as to the contents of such a petition were not considered in United States v. Cambuston, 61 U. S. 20 How. 59, 63 [15: 828, 830], as conclusive or even satisfactory evidence of that fact; and appellants' argument treats the exact terms of the application as of importance, since they insist it was a petition for all the vacant public lands between the north boundary of Casita and the west boundary of Tumacacori and Calabazas. But the most that can be claimed is that the petition was for 7½ sitios as what was needed for the cattle of Don Elias and his parents, and that Don Elias may have assumed that that number of sitios covered all the vacant lands. And as, in our judgment, the expediente shows that what was directed to be appraised, what was appraised, what was directed to be sold, what was sold, what was paid for and what was purported to be granted, was 7½ sitios and 2 short caballerias, while the alleged preliminary survey indicated general boundaries containing over 18 sitios, we think as the court of private land claims did, that the grant was of 7½ sitios and 2 scant caballerias within exterior boundaries, and that location was a prerequisite to any action by the court.

Appellants insist that the grant of a certain quantity of land situated at some designated place, or within a larger tract described by out-boundaries, was not known to the "State of the West," made up of Sonora and Sinaloa, and 225] reference is made to *certain laws of May 20, 1825, and of July 11, 1834, as showing that lands in that state were to be surveyed before they were sold, and sold by metes and bounds as surveyed. The order of the superior board of the treasury of the department, set forth in the expediente, required compliance with the provisions of the law of July 11, 1834, and also with the regulations for surveying lands for raising cattle and horses made under the law of May 20, 1825, and as to any overplus within the lawful boundaries of Casita, required it not to be published but appraised in conformity with article 2 of decree No. 51 of May 12, 1835.

Article 30 of the law of 1825 provided that the owners of sitios should place at their boundary termini monuments of stone and mortar "as soon as possession thereof is given them; and if within three months from the date of the survey is concluded they do not do so," that a fine should be exacted from them and the monuments ordered constructed at their expense. Article 63 of the law of 1834 was to the same effect, and read: "It is the duty of owners of sitios to place upon the boundary lines of their estates landmarks of stone as ordered by the statutes, as soon as they are in possession of their estates; and if within three months, counting from the date that they receive their title, they have not complied with this regulation, they shall incur a penalty of $25, which they shall pay to the judge for the public funds, and moreover shall cause the said landmarks to be constructed at the cost of said proprietors."

And it is said that in Sonora (and as respects lands acquired under the Gadsden treaty), when public lands were parted with, the transaction constituted an executed contract of purchase rather than a grant. Conceding that the boundaries mentioned in these laws are not out-boundaries but specific boundaries, they are boundaries ascertained by the authentic survey of specific tracts taken possession of as so delineated, and it does not follow that these proceedings were anything more than the court of private land claims found them in effect to be, namely, a grant of a specific quantity of land, which was to be afterwards located.

226] *Compliance with decree No. 51 of Sonora of May 12, 1835, with reference to the overplus in La Casita, was required, as we have said, and moreover the review of the proceeding by the attorney general of the treasury states that the commissioner proceeded "to the resurvey of the ranch of Casita, from which there resulted within this property the same 9 sitios the original surveyor, José Olave, measured and estimated on the 20th day of April, 1742, and 9, - 200,000 square varas more, which do not make half a sitio, and, even if they had reached that fraction, they should not be considered as overplus, under the provisions of the last clause of article 2 of decree No. 51 of the 12th of May, 1835, of the old state, and which is still in force."

That article is as follows:

"Art. 2. Those are likewise 'bona fide' owners who, under the descriptions given in their records of survey, occupy some excess of land; and they are entitled to such excess, even after such excess is shown, without any other requirement than that of paying for the excess in accordance with the quality of the land and the price which prevailed when the land was measured and appraised; and only in case the owner does not want the excess, or when such excess is very great in the opinion of the government, upon the report of the treasury, shall such excess be awarded to any one denouncing or soliciting it; and such person shall bear the expense of the resurvey, if the excess has not been ascertained. In lands measured by calculation (graduacion) none shall be regarded as excess that does not exceed half a sitio."

It thus appears that the resurvey of grants was provided for to ascertain the excess over the quantity intended to be granted, that unless the excess was more than half a sitio it might be disregarded, and that if it exceeded that, the owner of the original grant might be allowed to take it at the valuation. The application of Don José Elias was for a resurvey of the Casita in order that he might obtain the overplus lands therein on an appraisal, whereas if that ranch had been acquired by purchase ad corpus, that is to say, all the lands included by certain metes and bounds, possession delivered *and monuments set up, it is not appar- [227] ent how the necessity for having a resurvey could have existed; and so when in 1882 and 1886, the Mexican government was applied to by defendant Camou, under the law of July 22, 1863, his application proceeded upon the theory that the grant under consideration was a grant of a specific quantity within exterior limits, and what he sought and was accorded was an adjudication of the overplus on paying the value thereof "in conformity with the tariff in force at the time of the denouncement."

Certain articles of the law of July 22, 1863, treat of the ascertainment and disposition of excesses where the indicated boundaries are supposed to cover only a certain quantity of land which, when resurveyed, turns out to be much larger than as described in the titles; and such resurveys had been practised from an early day and were recognized by Don Elias himself in his application in respect of La Casita. Royal Decree, Oct. 15, 1754, § 7 (Reynolds, Spanish & Mexican Land Law, 54); Law of July 11, 1834, chap. 9, § 3 (Reynolds, Spanish & Mexican Land Law, 187); Law of July 22, 1863 (Hall, Mexican Law, 174).

In any view, whether treated upon the principles applicable to a voluntary grant or as a purchase and sale, appellants' contention that Don Elias and his parents took all the public lands north of Casita as one tract by metes and bounds could be sustained only on proof of a determination of such metes and bounds by actual survey and delivery of possession accordingly.

Navamuel was instructed to survey $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios of the vacant public lands "situated between the north boundary of the ranch of Casita and the west boundary of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas," and to measure the land between the north boundary of one tract and the west boundary of another may be supposed to involve considerable difficulty. However, it is said that the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas lay north of these lands, and the surveyor general of Arizona was of opinion that the claim should bind the ranchos of Casita and Calabazas, "with the easterly and westerly lines so established as to include exactly $7\frac{1}{2}$ square leagues and 2 caballerias." The proceedings 228] *show that Navamuel understood that the sale was not to be of a particular tract for a sum in gross, but of a specific number of sitios at the upset price fixed by the appraisal of those sitios, and that he was not to survey the whole of an existing tract, but to delineate a tract containing the desired number of sitios. With that understanding he apparently attempted, partly by measurements and partly by conjecture, to survey a parallelogram of 340 cordels by 222 cordels, which would contain $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios, running a little over, and so far from intending to include all the public lands, he consulted the party "as to how he wanted the land squared," that is, the land to come to him, and acted on his reply.

Appellants deny that Navamuel laid out a parallelogram containing $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios, and insist that instead he designated the boundaries of a tract containing all the public lands, being somewhat over 18 sitios. They say that the northwest and southwest corners were arrived at partly by estimation; that the height of the grant as described was 449.82 cords and not 340 as stated; and that the distance from the north cross monument to the northwest corner was over 470 cords instead of 200. Navamuel did not visit the western boundary, and the southwest corner as claimed seems on the evidence not to be where that corner should be according to the titulo. As to the northwest corner, Oury, in December, 1891, could find no place called Calaveras and no monument 200 cords west of the north cross monument, but as he did find an old monument of loose rock 470 odd cords west at Calabazas pass, and because of Navamuel's reference to the Pajarito mountains in that connection, he concluded to accept that monument as the northwest corner; in other words, he fixed on a point $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles west as the point Navamuel placed at 5 miles and a fraction. We fear that these speculations did injustice to Navamuel, but we think they made it quite clear that to apply the rules of metes and bounds to the entire tract of vacant public lands is quite inadmissible when taken with the other facts and circumstances.

In common-law conveyances the words 229] "more or less," while sometimes having practically no effect, are frequently added to prevent the precise quantity named from being conclusive on the parties, and may operate to make a sale of land one in gross instead of by the acre, but the bare fact that Navamuel estimated a portion of his measurements was not equivalent to stamping "more or less" on the transaction or rendering the specified quantity not of its essence.

So monuments control courses and distances, and courses and distances control quantity, but where there is uncertainty in specific description the quantity named may be of decisive weight, and necessarily so if the intention to convey only so much and no more is plain.

These considerations need not be elaborated or the common-law cases cited examined, inasmuch as we are of opinion on this record that the number of sitios specifically named was controlling.

How much land was appraised and sold and paid for? The minimum price at which the land could be appraised and sold was \$15 per sitio. The price paid was at that rate for exactly $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 caballerias. The commission to the appraisers was for the appraisement of $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios; the appraisement was for $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios; the procurator fiscal in his review of the proceedings pointed out that the appraisers had erred in taking no account of the 2 short caballerias, which he valued at 5 reales, and 10 grains, raising the total value from \$112.50 to \$113.15; the order for publication of notice referred to "the sitios surveyed for Don José Elias and Don Francisco Gonzalez" as "having now been appraised;" and the notices published were for the sale of " $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land appraised at \$113, 1 real, and 10 grains." The order striking off and selling the property to the purchasers, after reciting the assembling of the board, stated that the crier having announced that the $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and the 2 short caballerias of land were to be sold, and that thereupon the agent of Don José Elias and his parents came forward and again offered the \$113, 1 real, and 10 grains, for which the land was *appraised, cou- 230 tinued, "and the midday hour of 12 having sounded, for the last time the crier said: 'Going once, twice, three times; sold, sold, sold; may it do much good, good, good, to Don José Elias and his parents, Don Francisco Gonzalez and Doña Balvanera Redondo.' In these terms this act was terminated, and there was publicly and solemnly sold the $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land for raising cattle and horses, comprising the vacant public lands situated between the boundaries of Casita and those of the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas in the upper Pima country, in the jurisdiction of the town of Imuris, for the sum of \$113, 1 real, and 10 grains, in which they were appraised." It is true that in the translation before us the words "comprising the vacant public lands" are used, while in other parts of the proceedings the specified quantity is described as "contained in" or "comprised in" the vacant public lands, as for instance in the execution of the grant the words are "contained in the public lands." But we do not think this difference, in translation, or if existing in the original, can operate to make this an appraisement, advertisement, and sale of all the public lands north of Casita, no matter what their extent, but that these proceedings and the grant were plainly an appraisement, advertisement, sale, purchase, and grant of the specific quantity of $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 caballerias scant. It is certain that the officers had no authority and did not intend to sell 78,868 acres for the purchase price of 32,744 acres; that in all the proceedings the transaction was limited to 7½ sitios; that Navamuel determined what was needed by Elias as a cattle breeder, made his survey, approved the appraisalment, and published for bids at "a better valuation," on that basis; and that the Mexican government has construed the grant in the same way in ordering a resurvey, and thereupon adjudicating the excess over 7½ sitios.

This brings us to consider whether juridical possession was delivered to the grantee as asserted by appellants.

In United States v. Pico, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 536 [231] [18: 695], where there was "a concession by specific boundaries, and the words 'in extent 12 square leagues' were added to the resolution of approval of the departmental assembly after the description of the tract ceded, it was held that these words did not create a limitation on the quantity granted, as they were evidently not used for any such purpose, but merely indicated a conjectural estimate of the quantity, and Mr. Justice Field observed that "when, in Mexican grants, boundaries are given, and a limitation upon the quantity embraced within the boundaries is intended, words expressing such intention are generally used," and that in case of doubt as to the intention to cede all the land within the designated boundaries, the doubt would be removed by the juridical possession delivered to the grantees, which "proceeding involved an ascertainment and settlement of the boundaries of the land granted by the appropriate officers of the government specially designated for that purpose, and has all the force and efficacy of a judicial determination."

In Malarin v. United States, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 282, 289 [17: 594, 595], Mr. Justice Field again speaking for the court, in setting forth the act of juridical possession described in the expediente in that case, said: "Under the civil as at the common law, a formal tradition or livery of seisin of the property was necessary. As preliminary to this proceeding the boundaries of the quantity granted had to be established, when there was any uncertainty in the description of the premises. Measurements and segregation in such cases, therefore, preceded the final delivery of possession. By the Mexican law various regulations were prescribed for the guidance in these matters of the magistrates of the vicinage. The conditions annexed to the grant in the case at bar required the grantee to solicit juridical possession from the proper judge. In compliance with this requirement, within four months after the issuance of the grant, he presented the instrument to the judge of the district, and requested him to designate a day for delivering the possession. The judge designated a day, and directed that the adjoining proprietors be cited, and that measurers and counters be appointed. On the day designated the proprietors appeared, and two measurers and two counters were appointed and sworn for the faithful discharge of their duties. The line provided for the measurement was produced, and its precise length ascertained. The measurers then proceeded to measure off the land, the judge and the proprietors accompanying them. The measurement being effected, the parties went to the center of the land, and there the judge directed the grantee to enter into the possession, which he did, and gave evidence of the fact 'by pulling up grass and making demonstration as owner of the land.' Of the various steps thus taken, from the appointment of the day to the final act of delivery, a complete record was kept by the judge, and by him transmitted to the grantee after being properly entered upon the 'book of possessions.'"

In More v. Steinbach, 127 U. S. 70, 80, 81 [32: 51, 54, 55], the grant required the grantee to "petition the proper judge to be put in juridical possession by him in virtue of this document, by whom the boundaries shall be marked out, on the limits of which he shall place the proper landmarks. The land now granted is of the extent of 4 square leagues, more or less, as shown by the map which accompanies the expediente. The judge who shall give him possession shall have it measured in conformity with the evidence, the surplus that results remaining in the nation for its proper use." This requirement of the grant was not complied with, and this court said: "The grantees were not invested with such title, and could not be, without an official delivery of possession under the Mexican government, and such delivery was not had, and could not be had, after the cession of the country, except by American authorities acting under a law of Congress."

Appellants' counsel contends that "the juridical possession of 'said 7½ sitios and 2 short caballerias of land, comprising the vacant public lands between the boundaries of Casita and those of Tumacacori and Calabazas,' was, on January 7, 1843, the date of the grant, delivered by Ignacio Lopez, the treasurer general of the department of Sonora, in the presence of the two witnesses, Antonio Teran y Peralta and Joaquin Urias, to the grantees, in pursuance of the survey made November 24, [233] 1841, and following days, in the presence of Marcello Bonilla, the coterminous owner, by which survey the land was segregated from the public domain."

But Ignacio Lopez was not a judicial officer, and had no authority to perform a judicial act; neither Lopez nor the attending witnesses nor the grantees were, on the 7th of January, 1843, upon the land, nor anywhere near it, but were at the city of Arizpe; the coterminous proprietors were none of them then called to give assent to the final act investing the grantees with title and possession, and there was, of course, no physical act on the part of the grantees accepting or taking possession of the grant. The attempt of counsel is to make out the act of juridical possession by reference to the date of the survey, which was more than a year before the land had been sold, bought, and paid for; nor was there at any time any pretense of the formal delivery of possession if it could have been done by anticipation. The application, it will be remembered, was for a resurvey of Casita, as well as for a survey of the public land sought to be acquired, and it appears from the expediente that the mission of Tumacacori and Calabazas was represented by Don Marcello Bonilla on that occasion. And Navamuel also says that "in this manner was terminated the survey of the vacant public lands, which include $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios, and the party, when it was made known to him, was satisfied and understood the area it encloses and was warned to place, at the first opportunity, fixed monuments of stone and mortar." But it still remained for the property to be sold and purchased, and possession to be taken, and though the applicant had the preference at the price fixed by the appraisement, a higher bid would have taken the property.

Nor are we prepared to accede to the suggestion that because, in the final execution of the grant, the purchasers were cautioned "to restrict and limit themselves to the land, holdings, metes, and bounds particularly described in the hereinbefore inserted proceedings of survey," and to comply with the law as to monuments at their boundary termini, therefore it is to be inferred that the act of juridical possession *had already taken place, though not disclosed by Navamuel's report.

The $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios could undoubtedly have been located, juridical possession delivered, and monuments of stone and mortar put up, and the grantees would then have been limited to their metes and bounds thus ascertained; but the grantees did not do this, and, so long as these public lands remained in Mexico, were liable on resurvey to account for the excess over what they actually bought on such terms as the government imposed.

We have referred to the proceedings of 1882, 1886, in Mexico, as furnishing persuasive evidence of the proper construction of this grant under Mexican law, and it may be further observed that the adjudication of the overplus required the location of the $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios, which location Mexico, as the granting government, assumed it had the right to make, and made, out of the land within its jurisdiction. In this way the grant was satisfied by the receipt of all that the grantees had bought and were entitled to under the Mexican law, the result as to the overplus inuring to Camou's cotenants by the terms of his petition.

In any view no reason is perceived for disregarding the construction thus put upon the titulo, and as the land purchased was not located at the date of the cession, the United States were not bound by the treaty to recognize the claim as of right, nor could the court of private land claims confirm it.

The fact that a parallelogram of 340 cordels by 222 cordels, making $7\frac{1}{2}$ sitios and 2 caballerias, if correctly measured from the initial point of Navamuel's survey, would be partly within the territory of Arizona, is immaterial.

Decree affirmed.

Mr. Justice Peckham was not a member of the court at the time this case was argued, and took no part in its decision.

CALEB W. DURHAM, Appl.,

v.
JOHN S. SEYMOUR, Commissioner of Patents.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 215-240.)

Jurisdiction of this court.

An appeal from a decree under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4915, dismissing a bill to obtain a patent for an invention, cannot be taken to this court on the ground that "the validity of a patent" is involved, or that the matter in dispute has a money value exceeding $5,000, as it is not capable of being valued in money.

[No. 769.]

Submitted January 13, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia affirming a decree of the Supreme Court of that district dismissing a suit brought by Caleb W. Durham against the Commissioner of Patents to obtain a decree authorizing such commissioner to issue to him a patent. On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.

See same case below, 23 Wash. L. Rep. 273.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a bill brought by Caleb W. Durham, under the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4915, in the supreme court of the district of Columbia, to obtain a decree authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to issue a patent to him for an improved drainage apparatus for buildings. The supreme court adjudged on the evidence that Durham was not entitled to a decree, and dismissed the bill, whereupon he carried the case by appeal to the court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and that court affirmed the decision of the court below. From this decree an appeal was taken to this court, and a motion was made to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction.

Section 4915 is as follows: "Whenever a patent on application is refused, either by the Commissioner of Patents or by the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon appeal from the Commissioner, the applicant may have remedy by bill in equity; and the court having cognizance thereof, on notice to adverse parties and other due proceedings had, may adjudge that such applicant is entitled, according to law, to receive a patent for his invention, as specified in his claim, or for any part thereof, as the facts in the case may appear. And such adjudication, if it be in favor of the right of the applicant, shall authorize the Commissioner to issue such patent on the applicant filing in the Patent Office a copy of the adjudication, and otherwise complying with *the re- [236

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court where Federal question arises or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty, or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4:97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; and Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

As to jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with state Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws, see note to Commercial Bank of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 12: 169.

quirements of law. In all cases, where there is no opposing party, a copy of the bill shall be served on the Commissioner; and all the expenses of the proceeding shall be paid by the applicant, whether the final decision is in his favor or not."

Section 8 of the act establishing the court of appeals of the District of Columbia and for other purposes, approved February 9, 1893 (27 Stat. at L. 434, chap. 74) provides:

"Sec. 8. That any final judgment or decree of the said court of appeals may be examined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error or appeal, in all causes in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, in the same manner and under the same regulations as heretofore provided for in cases of writs of error on judgments or appeals from decrees rendered in the supreme court of the District of Columbia; and also in cases, without regard to the sum or value of the matter in dispute, wherein is involved the validity of any patent or copyright, or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States."

The act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 443, chap. 355), reads thus:

"That no appeal or writ of error shall hereafter be allowed from any judgment or decree in any suit at law or in equity in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or in the supreme court of any of the territories of the United States, unless the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000.

"Sec. 2. That the preceding section shall not apply to any case wherein is involved the validity of any patent or copyright, or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States; but in all such cases an appeal or writ of error may be brought without regard to the sum or value in dispute."

Mr. Levin H. Campbell for appellee, in favor of motion to dismiss.

Messrs. J. Nota McGill and Don M. Dickinson for appellant, in opposition to motion.

237] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeals to this court from the court of appeals of the District of Columbia are governed by § 8 of the act of February 9, 1893. It is essential to our jurisdiction that it should appear that the matter in dispute in the courts below was money to an amount exceeding $5,000, exclusive of costs, or some right, the value of which could be ascertained in money and exceeded that sum; or that the validity of a patent or copyright was involved; or that the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States was drawn in question. United States v. Seymour ("South Carolina v. Seymour") 153 U. S. 353 [38: 742], and cases cited.

The question here was whether Durham was "entitled, according to law, to receive a patent for his invention, as specified in his claim, or for any part thereof, as the facts in the case may appear." What Durham sought was to obtain an adjudication authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to issue a patent to him, and the matter in dispute was whether Durham was entitled to a patent as for a patentable invention.

Durham had presented his application for a patent, filed in due form, to the commissioner of patents in accordance with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4888, which application was rejected by the Commissioner, and thereupon he appealed to the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term, which affirmed the decision of the Commissioner. He then filed this bill in equity in accordance with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4915, and although, as remarked by Mr. Justice Blatchford in Gandy v. Marble, 122 U. S. 432, 439 [30: 1223, 1224], it is "a suit according to the ordinary course of equity practice and procedure, and is not a technical appeal from the Patent Office, nor confined to the case as made in the record of that office, but is prepared and heard upon all competent evidence adduced upon the whole merits, yet the proceeding is, in fact and necessarily, a part of the application for the patent." Considered in this light it is clear that the validity of a patent was not involved. And we may add that it appears to us to be quite inconsistent with the intention of Congress for this court to take jurisdiction on appeal of applications for patents in view of the provisions in relation to appeals from the circuit courts of appeals under the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517); United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 159 U. S. 548 [ante, 255].

The matter in dispute was not money, and the only remaining inquiry is whether it was a right capable of being ascertained in money and appearing to be of the requisite pecuniary value.

The answer to this inquiry requires the application of the settled and necessary principle that the matter in dispute is, as was said by Mr. Justice Field in Lee v. Watson, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 337, 339 [17: 557, 558], "the subject of the litigation—the matter for which the suit is brought," and that matter here was the issue of a patent, that is, an application to the courts below to hold the alleged invention patentable and authorize a patent to be issued.

It is true that "the discovery of a new and useful improvement is vested by law with an inchoate right to its exclusive use, which he may perfect and make absolute by proceeding in the manner which the law requires," and that an assignment may, under circumstances, be made, which will operate upon the perfect legal title which the discoverer had a lawful right to obtain, as well as upon the imperfect and inchoate interest which he may actually possess. Gayler v. Wilder, 51 U. S. 10 How. 477, 493 [13: 504, 510].

So rights growing out of an invention may be sold, whether the sale in any case carries with it anything of value or not. Hammond v. Mason & H. Organ Co. 92 U. S. 724, 728 [23: 767, 769]. But "until the patent is issued there is no property right in it, that is, no such right as the inventor can enforce. At all events there is no power over its use, which is one of the elements of the right of property in anything capable of ownership." Marsh v. Nichols, 128 U. S. 605, 612 [32: 538, 541]; Brown v. Duchesne, 60 U. S. 19 How. 193 [15: 598].

The right to apply for a patent was being availed of in this proceeding and the invention cannot be regarded for jurisdictional purposes as in itself property or a right of property having an actual value susceptible of estimation in money.

239] *Whether the alleged invention was patentable or not was the question, and that question had no relation to its value in money. If the invention were not patentable, Durham had suffered no loss; if the invention were patentable, it was not material whether it had or had not a money value.

The bill, properly enough, does not allege that any sum of money was in dispute, although there are averments that the value of the invention is generally recognized, and that sundry persons are deriving large profits in making the device sought to be patented. Evidence of that kind, though not controlling, is sometimes introduced in suits on patents as indicative of invention in the production of new and beneficial results, but it is not relevant here, nor are the affidavits presented on the question of value if the patent were granted. The matter in dispute must have actual value, and that cannot be supplied by speculation on the possibility that, in a given case, an invention might be held patentable.

In Sparrow v. Strong, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 97 [18: 49], jurisdiction was sustained on the ground that a mining claim acquired under mining rules and customs recognized by the laws of the territory of Nevada, though the land where it had existed had never been surveyed and brought into market, might be the subject of estimate in money; that the claim might perhaps have existed under the former governments of Spain or Mexico, and that, moreover, mining interests apart from the fee simple rights in the soil existed before the act of Congress of February 27, 1865, under the implied sanction of the Federal government. The distinction between that case and the one before us is obvious.

We are of opinion that the matter in dispute in this case was not capable of being valued in money, and that the appeal must be dismissed.

It is suggested that jurisdiction was entertained in Gandy v. Marble, 122 U. S. 432 [30: 1223]; Hill v. Wooster, 132 U. S. 693 [33: 502]; and Morgan v. Daniels, 153 U. S. 120 [38: 657], to the contrary of the conclusion at which we have arrived. But Morgan v. Daniels and Hill v. Wooster were appeals from circuit courts taken before the passage of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, and when U. S. Rev. Stat. 240] § 699, was in force, which *allowed appeals from those courts irrespective of the sum or value of the matter in dispute in cases "touching patent rights," and while we admit that a patent right does not exist while the proceeding to obtain it is pending, yet we think that such a proceeding constituted a case touching patent rights within § 699. And Gandy v. Marble was an appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia taken before the passage of the act of March 3, 1885, and when the final decrees of that court could be revised by this court on appeal in the same manner and under the same regulations as decrees of circuit courts. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 705; D. C. Rev. Stat. § 846.

Appeal dismissed.

HERMANN R. BALTZER, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 240-246.)

Impairing obligation of contract—decision of state court.

1. The repeal of a constitutional provision which gave the court jurisdiction to hear claims against the state, and making the decision merely recommendatory to the legislature, and denying the right to an execution thereon, does not impair the obligation of a contract with persons holding claims against the state.
2. An erroneous decision to the effect that a constitutional provision giving a court power to hear claims against the state has been repealed does not impair the obligation of a contract, if that would not be impaired by the actual repeal of the provision.

[No. 93.]

Argued February 3, 4, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of North Carolina to review a judgment of that court dismissing a suit brought by Hermann R. Baltzer, plaintiff, against the state of North Carolina, for the recovery of the amount of coupons of bonds issued under the ordinance of the Constitutional Convention of 1868. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

See same case below, 104 N. C. 265.

Mr. Simon Sterne, for plaintiff in error:

It was error for the supreme court of North Carolina to construe the constitutional amendment as a limitation or withdrawal of jurisdiction from that court and to thereby defeat the consideration of plaintiff's claim and his procuring such judgment and limited power of enforcement as the Constitution of the state of North Carolina had secured to him.

Baltzer v. State, 104 N. C. 265; Horne v. State, 84 N. C. 362.

The adoption of this constitutional amendment is not an exercise of the right of a state, being a sovereignty, to prescribe the conditions under which it can be sued, or to withdraw altogether its consent to be sued in its own courts; and it was error for the state court to construe the enactment of the constitutional amendment to be an instance of the exercise of such right.

Beers v. Arkansas, 61 U. S. 20 How. 527 (15: 991); Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443 (31: 216).

NOTE.—As to contracts, their interpretation and validity, see note Bell v. Bruen, 11: 89.

As to what laws are void, as impairing obligation of contracts, see note to Fletcher v. Peck, 3: 162.

As to when new statute of limitations impairs obligation of, see note to Koshkonong v. Burton, 28: 886.

That impairing remedy impairs obligation of contracts, see note to Louisiana v. New Orleans, 28: 132.

Immunity from suits can be secured without impairing the obligation of contracts.

Poindexter v. Greenhow ("Virginia Coupon Cases") 114 U. S. 270 (29: 185); Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1 (33: 842); North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22 (33: 849).

The amendment to § 6, art. 1, of the Constitution of North Carolina impairs the obligation of contracts, is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and is therefore totally null and void, and it was error for the state court to hold it otherwise.

Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 1, 84 (5: 547, 568); Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 311 (11: 143); Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 47 U. S. 6 How. 311 (12: 451).

Any law passed by a state withdrawing from its officers the power of carrying out the contract embraced in its bonds and coupons or certificates of indebtedness is unconstitutional as impairing the obligation thereof.

Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 (27: 448); Antoni v. Greenhow (107 U. S. 769 (27: 463); Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672 (26: 271); Poindexter v. Greenhow ("Virginia Coupon Cases") 114 U. S. 270 (29: 185).

The provision of the Federal Constitution regarding the impairment of the obligation of contracts applies equally to contracts by state and to contracts by individuals.

Flagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52 (29: 805); Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1 (33: 844); United States v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 358 (26: 396).

It is against the rules both of law and of reason to admit by implication in the construction of a contract a principle which goes in destruction of it.

Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432 (24: 716); De Vignier v. New Orleans, 16 Fed. Rep. 11; United States, Foote, v. Howard County Ct. 2 Fed. Rep. 1; New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Wader, 28 Fed. Rep. 265.

In this case the remedy furnished by the state against itself was incorporated into the state Constitution by the same constitutional convention that authorized the issue of plaintiff's bond.

Any attempted amendment to the Constitution, therefore, which either directly or by inference takes away this remedy, impairs the obligation of the contract.

Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 337 (25: 960); South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Alabama, 101 U. S. 832 (25: 973).

This court will construe for itself the provisions of a state constitutional or statutory enactment which is claimed to be in conflict with the Federal Constitution, and will not follow the decisions of the state courts on a question of such construction.

McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662 (34: 304); Delmas v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 661 (20: 757).

The only question before this court is whether the North Carolina constitutional amendment does or does not conflict with the Federal Constitution.

DeSaussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 216 (32: 125); Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 861 (37: 1111).

The amount involved, or value of the matter in dispute, is not a jurisdictional fact in this case.

Buel v. Van Ness, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 312 (5: 624).

161 U. S. U. S., Book 40.

Messrs. James E. Shepherd, Charles M. Busbee, and F. I. Osborne, Attorney General of North Carolina, for defendant in error:

This is an attempt on the part of the plaintiff in error to obtain a decision of this court as to the validity of the state constitutional amendment in respect to its prohibition upon the legislature to levy taxes to pay any portion of a certain class of state bonds, which embraces the claim of the plaintiff without a vote of the people. No such question was decided by the state supreme court. It simply decided that its recommendatory jurisdiction, as to such claims, had been taken away.

Beers v. Arkansas, 61 U. S. 20 How. 527 (15: 991).

The construction and interpretation of a state supreme court of its own Constitution and laws is binding upon this court and therefore, unless some Federal question is involved, the decision of the supreme court of North Carolina that the said constitutional amendment did deprive it of its recommendatory jurisdiction in this case is not the subject of review in this court.

De Saussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 216 (32: 125).

The real and only point before this court is whether it was competent for the state to withdraw its permission to be sued as provided by the clause conferring recommendatory jurisdiction upon its supreme court.

Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 337 (25: 960); North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22 (33: 851); Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1 (33: 844); South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Alabama, 101 U. S. 832 (25: 973); Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443 (31: 216).

The said amendment contains no provision which impairs the contract embraced within its terms.

Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595 (24: 793); Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203 (26: 132); United States v. Quincy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 535 (18: 403).

The obligation of a contract is the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement.

Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122 (4: 529); Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 218 (6: 607); Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518 (4: 629); Walker v. Whitehead, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 314 (21: 357).

(*Mr. Justice White delivered the [241 opinion of the court:

By an ordinance of the Constitutional Convention of the state of North Carolina, held in 1868, certain bonds were authorized to be issued in aid of the Chatham Railroad. Whilst there was some question raised on the subject, in the discussion at bar, it may be, for the purposes of this case, conceded that at the time the ordinance authorizing the bonds was passed, section 11, article 4, of the Constitution of North Carolina, adopted in 1868, was in existence, and was as follows:

"Claims against the state.—The supreme court shall have original jurisdiction to hear claims against the state, but its decision shall be merely recommendatory. No process in the nature of execution shall issue thereon; they shall be reported to the next session of the general assembly for its action."

In 1879 an amendment to the Constitution of North Carolina was submitted by the legislature of that state to the people thereof, and this amendment was ratified by a popular vote in 1880. It is as follows:

"Nor shall the general assembly assume or pay or authorize the collection of any tax to pay, either directly or indirectly, expressed or implied, any debt or bond incurred or issued by authority of the convention of the year 1868, nor any debt or bond incurred or issued by the legislature of the year 1868, either at the special session of the year 1868 or at its regular sessions of the years 1868-69 and 1869-70, except the bonds issued to fund the interest on the old debts of the state, unless the proposing to pay the same shall have first been submitted to the people and by them ratified by the vote of a majority of all the qualified voters of the state at a regular election held for that purpose."

After the incorporation of this amendment in the Constitution of the state, the plaintiff in error commenced in the supreme court of North Carolina an action against that state for the recovery of the amount of interest due on coupons forming part of certain bonds which had been issued under the ordinance of the Constitutional Convention of 1868, *above referred to. The attorney general of the state, reserving all its rights to plead to the jurisdiction, answered, denying both the existence and validity of the bonds and coupons declared on, and pleading the statute of limitations of three and ten years. Thereupon a motion was made by the attorney general on behalf of the state to dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction. This motion prevailed, the court referring, as its grounds for dismissing the suit, to the reasons assigned by it in the previous cases of Horne v. State, 84 N. C. 362, and Baltzer v. State, 104 N. C. 265. The cases thus referred to held that the power of the court to recommend claims to the favorable consideration of the legislature had—quoad claims identical in legal nature with the coupons sued on—been repealed by the constitutional amendment to which we have referred, and that the court was without jurisdiction to render judgment of recommendation on a claim against the state when its validity was denied by the state Constitution. To the judgment thus rendered this writ of error is prosecuted.

In Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 337 [25: 960], this court was called upon to determine whether the repeal, by a state, of a statutory provision authorizing itself to be sued in its own courts, but which gave no power to the courts to enforce their judgments, and which enacted that when such judgments were rendered the money could only be obtained through an appropriation by the legislature, was an impairment of the obligation of a contract entered into by the state whilst the authority conferred by the statute was unrepealed. In speaking on this subject this court, by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, said:

"The question we have to decide is not whether the state is liable for the debts of the bank to the railroad company, but whether it can be sued in its own courts to enforce that liability. The principle is elementary that a state cannot be sued in its own courts without its consent. This is a privilege of sovereignty. It is conceded that when this suit was begun the state had withdrawn its consent to be sued, and the only question now to be determined is whether that withdrawal *impaired the [243 obligation of the contract which the railroad company seeks to enforce. If it did, it was inoperative so far as this suit is concerned, and the original consent remains in full force for all the purposes of the particular contract or liability here involved.

"The remedy, which is protected by the contract clause of the Constitution, is something more than the privilege of having a claim adjudicated. Mere judicial inquiry into the rights of parties is not enough. There must be the power to enforce the results of such an inquiry before there can be said to be a remedy which the Constitution deems part of a contract. Inquiry is one thing; remedy another. Adjudication is of no value as a remedy unless enforcement follows. It is of no practical importance that a right has been established if the right is no more available afterwards than before. The Constitution preserves only such remedies as are required to enforce a contract.

"Here the state has consented to be sued only for the purposes of adjudication. The power of the courts ended when the judgment was rendered. In effect, all that has been done is to give persons holding claims against the state the privilege of having them audited by the courts instead of some appropriate accounting officer. When a judgment has been rendered, the liability of the state has been judicially ascertained, but there the power of the courts ends. The state is at liberty to determine for itself whether to pay the judgment or not. The obligations of the contract have been finally determined, but the claimant has still only the faith and credit of the state to rely on for their fulfilment. The courts are powerless. Everything after the judgment depends on the will of the state. It is needless to say that there is no remedy to enforce a contract if performance is left to the will of him on whom the obligation to perform rests. A remedy is only wanted after entreaty is ended. Consequently, that is not a remedy in the legal sense of the term, which can only be carried into effect by entreaty.

"It is clear, therefore, that the right to sue, which the state of Tennessee once gave its creditors, was not, in legal effect, *a judicial [244 remedy for the enforcement of its contracts, and that the obligations of its contracts were not impaired, within the meaning of the prohibitory clause of the Constitution of the United States, by taking away what was thus given."

Subsequently, in the case of South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Alabama, 101 U. S. 832 [25: 973], the same question was presented on a state of facts somewhat stronger in favor of the contention that there was a contract right than that which had been considered in the foregoing case. There the facts were that the statute of the state existing at the time the contract was made not only authorized a judgment to be rendered against the state, but provided (we quote from the opinion) "that if judgment should be rendered against the state, it was the duty of the comptroller, on the certificate of the clerk of the court, together with that of the judge who tried the cause, that the recovery was just, to issue his warrant for the amount, but no certificate could issue until six months after the recovery of the judgment.' Code 1867, § 2536. It was also the duty of the treasurer to pay all warrants drawn on him by the comptroller under the authority of law (Code, § 442); but the Constitution in force then and now provided in express terms that no money should be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. Const. 1834 and 1870, art. 2, § 24." Upon these facts, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Waite, this court again said:

"We are unable to see any substantial difference between this case and that of Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Tennessee, supra. Under both the Tennessee and Alabama statutes the courts are made little else than auditing boards. If the funds are not voluntarily provided to meet the judgment, the courts are not invested with the power to supply them. In Alabama, a warrant for the payment may be secured, but the state may stop payment by withholding an appropriation. Perhaps the judgment creditor may take one step further towards the collection in Alabama than he can in Tennessee; but both states may refuse to pay, that is, may refuse to make the necessary appropriation, [245] and the courts are powerless to *compel them to do so. In neither state has there been granted such a remedy for the enforcement of the contracts of the sovereignty as may not, under the Constitution of the United States, be taken away."

The statute of North Carolina which we now consider, and which gave the courts of that state power to examine and recommend claims against it to the legislature, is much more restrictive than were the statutes of Tennessee and Alabama passed on in the cases just cited. Applying to this case the reasoning of this court in those cases expressed, it becomes clear that the authority given by the state of North Carolina to its court not being a part of the contract on which the plaintiff in error had a right to rely, its repeal did not impair the obligations of his contract in the sense conveyed by those words when used in the Constitution of the United States. This proposition so necessarily results from the authorities and is so self-evident in reason that it was not denied in the discussion at bar. Indeed, it was frankly conceded that the exercise by a state of the power to repeal a grant of authority to its courts to audit claims against itself would not in any manner violate the obligations of contracts which had been entered into by the state at a time when the power existed. Yet, whilst this concession was made, it was asserted that the impairment of the obligation of the contract, here claimed to have been accomplished, arises from the fact that the state court erroneously held that the amendment to the state Constitution repealed the court's authority to examine and recommend the claim presented to it, when in fact such repeal had not taken place. In other words, it was argued that although the right to have the claim examined and recommended was existing and unrepealed, the state court had impaired the obligations of the contract by holding that such right was nonexistent because repealed by a subsequent provision of the state Constitution. But this is mere reasoning in a vicious circle, for the concession that the right could be taken away without violating the contract clause of the Constitution necessarily implied that the decision of the state court as to repeal vel non in no way involved rights protected from impairment *under the Constitution of [246] the United States. It is apparent that no rights under the Constitution of the United States arose in favor of the claimant from the provision conferring on the courts of the state the authority to examine and recommend, since all the benefits resulting therefrom could admittedly be withdrawn without violating the contract. To give effect to the contention of the plaintiff in error, we should be obliged to announce the contradictory proposition that where there were no rights under the Constitution of the United States to be impaired, yet a decision of the state court had impaired such rights. We should also be obliged to hold that although the state could at its will take away the right without impairing the contract, yet a decision by the court of last resort of the state, that the right had been taken away, was an impairment of the contract. The fallacy contained in the argument results from overlooking the fact that the moment it is admitted that the repeal of the right to have the claim examined and recommended is no impairment of the obligation of the contract secured under the Constitution of the United States, the question whether or not such right has been repealed becomes purely a question of state law to be determined by the state courts.

Judgment affirmed.

HERMANN R. BALTZER and WILLIAM G. TAAKS, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 246, 247.)

Argued Feb. 3, 4, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896

Baltzer v. North Carolina, 161 U. S. 240 [ante, 684] followed.

[No. 52.]

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of North Carolina.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Simon Sterne for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. James E. Shepherd, Charles M. Busbee, and F. I. Osborne, Attorney General of North Carolina, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice White* delivered the [247] opinion of the court:

The claim presented in this case to the supreme court of the state of North Carolina differs somewhat from that relied on in that court in the case of Hermann R. Baltzer v. State of North Carolina, No. 93 of the docket of this court. The question of the power in the state court to give the relief prayed for was by it decided adversely to the plaintiffs in error upon grounds identical with those considered by us in the case just decided. Our reasons for affirmance there expressed are conclusive of the issues here, and consequently the judgment is affirmed.

JANE LYNCH, Appt.,

v.

CHRISTEINA MURPHY, Executrix, ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 247-256.)

Constructive notice—bona fide purchaser—effect of judgment.

1. Constructive notice is not given by the record of an instrument which is not executed with the formalities required by law in order to entitle it to be recorded,—as, where there is no certificate to the official character of the officer before whom the power of attorney to execute the instrument was acknowledged in another state.
2. Reconveyance of land to the grantor under a decree annulling a conveyance for fraud makes him a bona fide purchaser of the property for value with respect to the liens of third persons claiming under the grantee, of which the grantor did not have either actual or constructive notice.
4. A judgment canceling a conveyance in a suit to which all the persons known to the plaintiff as claiming an interest in or encumbrance on the property are made parties is effectual to divest the interest, not legally recorded, of a person who is not a party but who claims under the grantee, and of which the plaintiff had no actual or constructive notice.

[No. 129.]

Argued December 18, 19, 1895. Decided March 2, 1896.

APPEAL from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia affirming the decree of the Special Term of that Court decreeing a deed of trust to be null and void, and that the fund in the registry of the court belongs to the estate of Peter Pippert and under his will passed to the complainant, Christeina Murphy, and the defendants Edwin Marsh and Florence Marsh. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

The complainant below was Christeina Murphy, who sued *in her own right and as executrix and trustee under the will of Peter Pippert, her deceased father. By her bill, complainant sought the cancelation of a deed of trust upon certain land in the city of Washington, devised by her father to complainant and to two of the defendants named in the bill, or, in the alternative, the reinstatement of a deed of trust for the benefit of said Pippert which had been canceled by a judicial decree as hereinafter stated. The deed of trust attacked by the bill purported to have been executed in August, 1874, by Elizabeth English, to one Bean, to secure payment of four notes for $1,000 each, payable to the order of James Lynch. It was averred, in substance, that at the time of the execution of the deed of trust the legal title to the land was in Elizabeth English and Andrew Schwartz, Sr., by virtue of a conveyance from Pippert, made July 27, 1874, and the land which it embraced was encumbered by a deed of trust to Pippert given to secure the unpaid purchase money, $10,390.42. It was also alleged that the deed from Pippert to English and Schwartz was annulled by a decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in a suit instituted by Pippert to cancel his conveyance on the ground of alleged fraud practised upon him in the transaction. At the time of the institution of said suit the Bean deed of trust had been placed by Mrs. English on her three-fourths interest in the property, bought by herself and Schwartz from Pippert, and it was on the land records of the District of Columbia. Neither Lynch nor his trustee Bean were made parties to the suit.

Relief was sought as to the Bean deed of trust upon the ground that it was executed on behalf of Mrs. English by her husband, who had no proper or competent authority in law to execute the same; and it was urged at the trial, among other objections, that the power of attorney under which English assumed to execute the deed of trust was defective and was not entitled to record, because of the absence therefrom of a certificate of the official character of the officer before whom, in Michigan, Mrs. English acknowledged the instrument. It was further urged in the bill as ground of relief that the notes to Lynch were made without consideration, *and that the transaction was [249] part and parcel of a scheme by which English attempted to defraud Pippert, as alleged in the suit of Pippert hereinbefore referred to, and that the defendant Jane Lynch, claiming to be the owner of the notes secured by said deed of trust, and the heirs at law of Bean, the deceased trustee, were threatening to enforce the deed of trust by advertising the premises for sale thereunder.

The controversy in this court being confined to the question of the validity of the apparent deed of trust to Bean, numerous allegations contained in the bill are unnecessary to be referred to.

Of the pleadings filed on behalf of the various defendants, only that of Jane Lynch requires notice. In her answer she set up her ownership of the notes referred to in the Bean deed of trust, claiming that she received them from her husband on the day the notes bore date. She denied any knowledge of the suit to cancel Pippert's conveyance to Mrs. English and Schwartz, and averred that she had no knowledge of the decree in Pippert's suit until very recently, and further averred that her deceased husband parted with full consideration for the notes, and that the transaction was not fraudulent.

While averring that English did have proper and competent authority in law to execute the said deed of trust as the agent of his wife, Mrs. Lynch coupled such averment with the claim that the property purchased from Pippert was in fact paid for by the money of Alexander English, who kept his property in his wife's name so as to be out of the reach of his creditors, and that said English was the real principal, and in giving the deed of trust for the benefit of Lynch he was pledging his own property, though in the name of his wife, for a debt due by him and for which he received the consideration. We quote the following statements in the answer:

"Defendant further says that she is advised and believes and therefore charges that while the said deed of trust is not technically sufficient in law to constitute a valid deed of trust, yet that it was on the part of said English a pledge of property of which he was the real and equitable owner, for a just debt which he owed 250] the said James Lynch; and that the *said deed of trust constitutes an equitable mortgage upon the said premises, which this defendant has the right to have enforced; and that the said Peter Pippert had notice thereof in his lifetime and before the filing of the suit by him hereinbefore referred to; that the complainant herein is not a purchaser thereof, but a mere volunteer, having taken the property as a gift and without paying any value therefor and with full notice of this defendant's claim; and this defendant says that complainant took the land subject to all the equities of this defendant and all other persons whomsoever. Defendant says that the said notes have never been paid, and that it is true that she threatened to enforce the said trust by a sale of said real estate because of the nonpayment thereof."

After the cause was at issue, a decree was entered by consent of all parties, appointing a trustee to make sale and ordering a sale of the property affected by the bill. The following provision is contained therein:

"And whereas the said Jane Lynch, in consideration of the provision hereinafter made, is willing to consent to the decree of sale, now it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said John C. Heald, immediately upon the completion of such sale, shall pay into the registry of this court the sum of $8,000 of the proceeds of said sale, and that the same shall be invested and reinvested under the direction of the court and held until the final determination of this cause in the court of last resort, and that said sum of $8,000 and the notes, securities, or property in which the same shall from time to time be invested and the increase thereof, as to all parties interested in said real estate, shall stand in the place and stead of said real estate, and that if in this proceeding it shall ultimately be decided that the defendant Jane Lynch had a valid lien upon said real estate at the time the bill in this case was filed, for the sum of $4,000, with interest as aforesaid, or only part thereof, then said sum of $8,000 and the increase thereof, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be applied for the satisfaction of such lien."

251] A *sale of the property was had and the fund representing the Lynch claim was paid into the registry of the court.

After the taking of testimony the cause came on for hearing, and, on May 13, 1891, the court at special term entered a decree adjudging the deed of trust to Bean to be null and void; that the fund in the registry of the court belonged to the estate of Peter Pippert, and under his will passed to the complainant and the defendants Edwin Marsb and Florence Marsh. On the appeal of Jane Lynch, the general term, on May 31, 1892, affirmed the judgment of the special term.

Thereupon Mrs. Lynch took an appeal to this court.

Messrs. Wm. G. Johnson and Calderon Carlisle for appellant.

Messrs. A. S. Worthington, Henry E. Davis, and J. C. Heald for appellees.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The question for our determination is whether or not appellant had a valid lien, legal or equitable, upon the real estate in question, at the time the bill of complaint was filed.

We will premise that the decree in the equity cause of Pippert v. English et al. was not void because English and his wife were not personally served with process. Constructive service by publication was authorized by § 787 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia. Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151 [28: 101], relied upon as supporting the proposition that the rights of Mr. and Mrs. English in the land could not be affected by such constructive notice, and that the decree rendered thereon was not entitled to recognition in a Federal court, does not support the contention. The Hart Case was explained in Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316 [33: 918], in *which last case it was held that the duty [252 of determining unsettled questions respecting the title to real estates was local in its nature, to be discharged in such mode as might be provided by the state in which the land was situated, where such mode did not conflict with some special inhibition of the Constitution and was not against natural justice; and we held (pp. 327, 328 [921, 922]) that nothing inconsistent with this doctrine was decided in Hart v. Sansom.

From the evidence contained in the record, we are satisfied that when Pippert instituted the action to annul his conveyance to Mrs. English and Andrew Schwartz, Sr., he did not have actual knowledge that Mrs. English or any one claiming to represent her had encumbered or attempted to encumber the land. The question then presents itself: Was the record of the alleged deed of trust to Bean constructive notice to Pippert? We are relieved from extended discussion in answering this question by the admissions made in the answer of defendant Lynch and in the brief of her counsel.

In the bill of complaint it is charged that Alexander English was without any proper or competent authority in law to execute said deed of trust. This refers to the authority of English to execute the deed of trust, as the attorney of his wife. This allegation is admitted by the answer, for while it is averred therein, "upon information and belief, that said Alexander English did have proper and competent authority in law to execute the trust to said William W. Bean," it proceeds to aver in connection with this allegation that "the true facts in relation thereto" were, in substance, that the payment made by English when the property was purchased from Pippert was made with money belonging to English personally, that he had personally received the benefit of the consideration from Lynch, and that the said deed of trust, "while not technically sufficient in law to constitute a valid deed of trust, . . . was on the part of said English a pledge of property of which he was the real and equitable owner for a just debt which he owed to said James Lynch, and that the said deed of trust constitutes an equitable mortgage upon the said premises, which this defendant has the right to have enforced."

*In the brief of counsel for appellant the [253 matter is thus stated: "The only remaining objection to the Lynch trust is the defective character of the instrument. It is admitted in the answer that the instrument is inartificially drawn and as a mortgage is technically defective." And the argument then proceeds to maintain that the evidence clearly established a good equitable mortgage in favor of appellant.

In the face of these concessions it becomes unnecessary to determine what were the particular defects rendering the writing in question legally invalid.

Having concluded that the deed of trust was inoperative as a legal instrument, we recur to the question whether or not its spreading upon the land records of the District constituted constructive notice. As said by Pomeroy in § 652 of his work on Equity Jurisprudence:

"The record does not operate as a constructive notice, unless the instrument is duly executed, and properly acknowledged or proved, so as to entitle it to be recorded. The statutes generally require, as a condition to registration, that the instrument should be legally executed, and that it should be formally acknowledged or proved, and a certificate thereof annexed. If a writing should be placed upon the records with any of these preliminaries entirely omitted or defectively performed, such a record would be a mere voluntary act, and would have no effect upon the rights of subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers."

Story, Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 404, states the doctrine thus:

"The doctrine as to the registration of deeds being constructive notice as to all subsequent purchasers is not to be understood of all deeds and conveyances which may be de facto registered, but of such only as are authorized and required by law to be registered, and are duly registered in compliance with law. If they are not authorized or required to be registered, or the registry itself is not in compliance with the law, the act of registration is treated as a mere nullity; and then the subsequent purchaser is affected only by such actual notice as would amount to a fraud."

It follows that the recording of the instrument 254 } under *consideration was a mere nullity in a jurisdiction such as the District of Columbia (D. C. Rev. Stat. § 440), where particular formalities are required to authorize the recording. To the cases referred to by the authors first cited may be added Dohm v. Has kin, 88 Mich. 144, and Musgrove v. Bonser, 5 Or. 313, 315, 316, 20 Am. Rep. 737, the defect in the recorded instrument, in both cases, being the absence of a certificate as to the official character of the officer before whom a deed was acknowledged. See also 3 Washb. Real Prop. *592; Wade, Notice, §§ 124-126.

The effect of the decree in Pippert's suit, annulling his conveyance to Schwartz and English, was that Pippert, as the consideration of such cancellation, surrendered the benefit of his vendor's lien and the security of the deed of trust. When this result was accomplished the unpaid purchase money amounted to $10,390.42, and was in fact but $500 less than the entire consideration for the sale, and practically represented the full value of the property. By the reconveyance to him, under the decree, Pippert stood in the position of a bona fide purchaser of the property for value; and, as we have found he did not have actual or constructive notice of the real or supposed equity of Mrs. Lynch, there would seem to be no ground upon which to base the claim that at the time of the institution of this suit Mrs. Lynch had an equitable mortgage or lien upon the property. Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that, as claimed by counsel for the appellant, Alexander English should be regarded in equity as having been the real owner of the property at the time of the transaction with Lynch, though the legal title was in his wife; that Lynch paid to English full consideration for the cash paid and notes delivered by English, and that Lynch accepted the notes on the faith of the security of the property in question. As against English it is clear, under the authorities, that from the nature of the transaction, upon the hypothesis we have stated, a lien would have arisen in equity against English's interest in the land. Jones, Mortg. §§ 162, 163, 166, 168, 169; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1020, 1231; Peckham v. Haddock, 36 Ill. 38; McClurg v. Phillips, 49 Mo. 315; *Gale v. Morris, [255 29 N. J. Eq. 222, 224. But a bona fide purchaser for value of property subject to an equitable mortgage, without notice of such mortgage, takes the property free of the equitable mortgage. Jones, Mortg. § 162, p. 139, citing Watkins v. Reynolds, 123 N. Y. 211. Watkins v. Reynolds was a case where a cestui que trust for life executed a mortgage in fee on the trust estate, and after her death the remainderman in fee executed, under seal, an unattested paper covenanting for sufficient consideration that the mortgage should continue to be a lien on the land. Afterwards he sold and conveyed to another, who paid a sum in cash and contracted to assume certain mortgages and pay certain debts of the vendor to third persons, equal in amount to the remainder of the purchase price. The cash payment and part of these debts were made before the purchaser had actual notice of the agreement to continue the mortgage lien. Upon this state of fact the court, speaking through Peckham, J., held that since the purchaser's agreements were made before notice, and remained in full force after notice, there was no equitable lien against the property in favor of the mortgagee for the purchase money unpaid at the time of such notice.

That notice to Pippert, actual or constructive, was an element essential to the survival of the lien as against Pippert, is admitted in the answer of Mrs. Lynch, expressed by the averment that Pippert had notice of the existence of the supposed deed of trust. As that allegation was not established by the evidence, but the contrary was proved, it follows that the claim of a lien or mortgage upon the property in favor of Mrs. Lynch has not been made out. And this conclusion inevitably results from the following additional considerations:

Pippert instituted and prosecuted his suit for cancellation of his conveyance against all persons known to him as claiming an interest in or encumbrance on the property. He did what the law required in order to make his judgment binding upon all the world, and when the court divested Mrs. English of all her interest in the property, appellant's alleged rights, acquired through her, not having been legally recorded before judgment, were divested by the decree as effectually as if ap-256]pellant* had been a party. There being no actual notice, and the reording of the defective deed not operating as constructive notice, the alleged equitable lien is wholly inoperative against those holding under the decree.

The decree of the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia must be affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer, not having heard the argument, took no part in the decision of this cause.

JOSEPH F. HAMILTON ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

J. T. BROWN ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 256-275.)

Escheat—effect of judgment—quieting title—due process of law—obligation of contract.

1. Judgment declaring that land has escheated to the state, when rendered on a petition containing

NOTE.—As to alienage, effect of, as to title to real estate, see notes to Gouverneur v. Robertson, 6: 488, and Griffith v. Godey, 28: 934.

Escheat of property to the state; what property escheats; conveyance of escheated land; how enforced; lands held by trustee or subject to mortgage; practice.

Originally escheat was the determination of the tenure or dissolution of the mutual bond between the lord and tenant from the extinction of the blood of the latter by either natural or civil means, in which case the land reverted to the original grantor or lord of the fee. 2 Bl. Com. 245, 272; Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 10; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Bl. 123.

In modern law escheat denotes a falling of the estate into the general property of the state, either because the tenant is an alien, or because he has died intestate without lawful heirs to take his estate by succession. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 443; Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 17.

Attainder of treason cannot disinherit in England except during the life of the offender. Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. chap. 106, enlarging 54 Geo. III. chap. 145. In the United States there can be no forfeiture except for treason, and attainder of treason works corruption of blood during the life of the person attainted only. U. S. Const. art. 3, § 3; Bigelow v. Forrest, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 339 (19: 696); Page v. United States, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 268 (20: 135).

Lands held in trust to be sold or conveyed for the benefit of aliens do not escheat or become forfeited. Taylor v. Benham, 46 U. S. 5 How. 233 (12: 130); Ludlow v. VanNess, 8 Bosw. 178; Anstice v. Brown, 7 Paige, 448; Com. v. Martin, 5 Munf. 117; Leggett v. DuBois, 5 Paige, 114, 28 Am. Dec. 413.

Defect of heirs is the most important cause of escheat. 4 Kent, Com. 426, 428; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 444; Swall v. Lee, 9 Mass. 363.

Lands of intestate bastards dying without issue escheat, where the rule is not changed by statute. Doe, Crawle, v. Bates, 6 Blackf. 533.

The lands of a lunatic or madman escheat on his death without heirs, though previously granted by him by deed of bargain and sale. Re Desilver, 5 Rawle, 111, 28 Am. Dec. 645.

161 U. S.

the proper allegations and when no person is in possession of it, is conclusive evidence of the state's title in the land, not only against any tenants or claimants having had actual notice by scire facias or having appeared and pleaded, but also against all other persons interested in the estate and having had constructive notice by publication.

2. Provisions in a judgment vesting title to land in the state on proceedings for escheat are distinct and severable from provisions for a sale and conversion into mouey, of the land, after the title has vested in the state, and may stand good though the latter provisions are invalid.
3. The legislature may provide for determining and quieting the title to real estate within the limits of the state and within the jurisdiction of the court, after actual notice to all known claimants and notice by publication to all other persons.
4. Notice necessary for due process of law in determining the right to the succession of real estate, whether by ordinary administration proceedings or by proceedings in escheat, is afforded by actual notice by service of summons to all known claimants, and constructive notice by publication to all possible claimants who are unknown.
5. The obligation of a contract in a grant, whether from the state or from a private person, is not

Land abandoned by the owner was held to escheat. Holliman v. Peebles, 1 Tex. 673.

In some states escheated property goes into the school fund. State, Roberts, v. Reeder, 5 Neb. 203; State, Atty. Gen., v. Meyer, 63 Ind. 33; Hinkle v. Shadden, 2 Swan, 46; Parchman v. Charlton, 1 Coldw. 381.

In North Carolina escheated property goes to the State University. North Carolina University v. Foy, 2 Hayw. 310; North Carolina University v. Harrison, 90 N. C. 385. In Illinois to the county. Cothrau's Ill. Ann. Stat. chap. 49, § 1.

In England escheats went generally to the King. 1 Bl. Com. 302; In Maryland before the Revolution to the lord proprietary. Thomas v. Hamilton, 1 Harr. & M'H. 190. The Massachusetts and Plymouth colonies claimed escheats as incident to the sovereignty they exercised over the lands in their patents. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 446; 3 Dane, Abr. 140.

In America escheats for defect of heirs belong universally to the state or some corporation thereof as the ultimate proprietor. 4 Kent, Com. 424; 1 Cooley's Bl. Com. 302 note; People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373.

Before 54 Geo. III. chap 155, and 3 & 4 Wm. IV. chap 106, § 10, escheat for corruption of blood by attainder attached to estates coming by descent after the attainder, as well as to estates held at the time. 2 Bl. Com. 253, 254.

The following escheated: A fee simple; an estate-tail where the tenant-in-tail has in himself the reversion in fee, otherwise the estate would pass to the reversioner, and a copyhold estate. The following things do not escheat, viz.: gavelkind, propter delictum tenentis; a rent charge; a right of common, free warren or, indeed, any kind of inheritance which does not lie in tenure, because they rather become extinct; an equity of redemption. Whart. Law Lex. Escheat; 2 Bl. Com. 84.

A vested remainder in fee dependent on a life estate escheats though the life estate has not terminated. People v. Conklin, 2 Hill, 67; Com. v. Naile, 88 Pa. 429.

Under the feudal system movables did not escheat, but the modern statutory rule is otherwise. 4 Kent, Com. 426 note; Com. v. Blanton, 2 B. Mon. 393; State v. Reeder, 5 Neb. 203.

Impaired by a statute providing for escheat on the death of the owner intestate and without heirs, to be declared in proceedings of which actual notice is given to all known claimants, and notice by publication to all others.

[No. 241.]

Submitted November 2, 1894. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas to review a judgment of that court for the defendants, in an action brought by Joseph F. Hamilton et al. against J. T. Brown et al. to recover land in the county of Fayette. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action brought April 12, 1890, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas by Joseph F. Hamilton, a citizen of Missouri, Lewis Hamilton, and Mary A. Post, joined by her husband George Post, citizens of Illinois, Walter B. Hamilton and Elizabeth Fulton, joined by her husband, John G. Fulton, citizens of Kansas, and John F. Hamilton, a citizen of Colorado, against J. T. Brown and twenty-five others, all citizens of Texas, and living in the county of Fayette, within the western district of Texas, to recover land in that county.

The petition alleged that the land consisted of one league, described by metes and bounds, granted to Walter F. Hamilton by the republic of Mexico on April 30, 1831; that on April 13, 1888, the plaintiffs were the owners in fee simple of the land, and entitled to the possession thereof; and that the defendants on that day unlawfully entered thereon and dispossessed the plaintiffs, and had ever since withheld the possession from them.

Trust estates, on the death of the trustee without heirs, escheated, and the lord took the estate freed from the trust; but, by statute, it is now otherwise. 4 Kent, Com. 425, 426; 1 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 279; O'Hanlin v. Den, VanKleeck, 20 N. J. L. 31; Den, Van Kleeck, & O'Hanlon, 21 N. J. L. 582.

On the death of the cestui que trust without heirs, the title remains in the trustee for his own benefit. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Bl. 123, 1 Eden, 177; Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. 443; Wood v. Mather, 38 Barb. 473; Com. v. Naile, 88 Pa. 429.

It seems that the state takes by escheat only the interest of the decedent subject to all encumbrances and debts due by the decedent. Watson v. Lyle, 4 Leigh, 236; Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill, 430, 39 Am. Dec. 658; Farmer's Loan & T. Co. v. People, 1 Sandf. Ch. 139; Brown v. State, 36 Tex. 282; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 185.

At common law, on the dissolution of a corporation, the real estate belonging to it reverted to the grantor, and the personal property escheated to the crown or state. Fox v. Horah, 1 Ired. Eq. 358, 26 Am. Dec. 48; Coulter v. Robertson, 24 Miss. 278, 57 Am. Dec. 168; 2 Bl. Com. 256.

Where the title to escheated lands vests in the state without office found, it may convey its interest at once; and where title does not vest before inquest of office, it may give a valid release of its claim to a party in possession. Ettenheimer v. Heffernan, 66 Barb. 374; McCaughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. 376; Re Malone, 21 S. C. 435; Rubeck v. Gardner, 7 Watts, 455; State, Atty. Gen., v. Tilghman, 14 Iowa, 474; Den, Colgan, v. McKeon, 24 N. J. L. 566.

Where the title of the state is not complete before office found, its conveyance before such time to one not in possession probably passes on interest in the escheated lands. Wilbur v. Tobey, 16 Pick. 177; Jackson, Smith, v. Adams, 7 Wend. 367; Fairfax v. Hunter, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 603 (3: 453); Jones v. Badley, 4 Md. Ch. 187; Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill, 430, 39 Am. Dec. 658; Com. v. Hite, 6 Leigh, 588, 29 Am. Dec. 226; Nettles v. Cummings, 9 Rich. Eq. 440. After the lapse of many years escheat proceedings may be presumed. Vickery v. Benson, 26 Ga. 582.

To complete title by escheat, it was necessary that the lord make entry on the lands and tenements escheated, or sue out a writ of escheat.

Any act which amounted to an implied waiver, as accepting rent or homage, barred the escheat. 2 Bl. Com. 245; Kelly v. Greenfield, 2 Harr. & M'H. 121. The assessment of taxes on escheated property, and the sale thereof to pay the same, have been held not to be a waiver of the state's right to assert title by escheat. Reid v. State, Thompson, 74 Ind. 252.

692

Possession of lands under void deed by persons of color incapable of holding title continued after the incapacity was removed, the state never having escheated the lands, is good as against all others. Beatty v. Benton, 73 Ga. 187.

By grant and warranty the state may estop itself to claim lands as escheated on account of alienage. Com. v. André, 3 Pick. 224.

Inquest of office or office found is still deemed necessary to vest the title in some states. People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373; Wilbur v. Tobey, 16 Pick. 177; Bradstreet v. Oncida County Supers. 13 Wend. 548; Jackson, Smith, v. Adams, 7 Wend. 367; Com. v. Hite, 6 Leigh, 588, 29 Am. Dec. 226; Fairfax v. Hunter, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 603 (3: 453); Taylor v. Benham, 46 U. S. 5 How. 233 (12: 130).

In Indiana title vests without information found unless some one is in possession, when the state must first establish its title. Reid v. State, Thompson, 74 Ind. 252; People v. Cutting, 3 Johns. 1; Catbam v. State, 2 Head, 553.

The burden of proof is on the state, and without proper proof that the lands are subject to escheat, it cannot succeed, even as against a mere occupant. Hammond v. Inloes, 4 Md. 133; People v. Cutting, supra; North Carolina University v. Harrison, 90 N. C. 385.

An inquisition that does not find the death of the tenant intestate and without heirs is a nullity. Ramsey's Appeal, 2 Watts, 228, 27 Am. Dec. 301; North Carolina University v. Harrison, supra; State v. Teulon, 41 Tex. 249.

For the practice in various states, see Congregational Church v. Morris, 8 Ala. 182; Bradley v. Dwight, 62 How. Pr. 300; Com. v. North American Land Co. 57 Pa. 102; Olhsted's Appeal, 86 Pa. 284; Re Malone, 21 S. C. 435; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133; Hall v. Claiborne, 27 Tex. 217; Reed v. State, Thompson, 74 Ind. 252.

Where the occupant has been long in possession, and there are no heirs, distributees, or creditors, the public escheator only, not an administrator, can recover the premises. Smith v. Gentry, 16 Ga. 31.

The weight of authority is, however, that the title vests at once upon the death of the tenant without office found, and parties in possession may be dispossessed by appropriate proceedings. White v. White, 2 Met. (Ky.) 185; Stevenson v. Dunlap, 7 T. B. Mon. 134; Fry, Vaughan, v. Smith, 2 Dana, 38; Farrar v. Dean, 24 Mo. 16; State, Roberts, v. Reeder, 5 Neb. 203; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430; Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475; Den, Colgan, v. McKeon, 24 N. J. L. 566; Den, Van Kleeck, v. O'Hanlon, 21 N. J. L. 582; O'Hanlin v. Den, Van

161 U. S.

The defendants, in a supplemental answer, "say that plaintiffs ought not to have or maintain this action against them, because they say that on the 30th day of March, 1861, one Edward Colier, at that time the lawful district attorney of what was then the first judicial district of Texas, acting for and under authority of the state of Texas, filed, in the name and by the authority of the state of Texas, a petition and began a suit in the district court of Fayette county, Texas, the object and purpose of which suit were to have said district court of Fayette county declare and adjudge that the league of land described in plaintiff's petition in this suit had escheated to the state of Texas, and to have the title to the same devested out of the said Walter Hamilton and his heirs, and have it vested in the state of Texas; that in said petition plaintiff alleged that Walter Hamilton, late a resident of Fayette county, in said state, died on the — day of —, —, intestate, and without heirs, and that no letters of *ad- [258] ministration have ever been granted upon said decedent's estate in Fayette county in which succession should according to law have been opened; that said decedent died seised and possessed of the league of land which is described in the petition of plaintiffs in this suit and which is fully described in said petition; that said Walter Hamilton was the last person seised and possessed of said land; that there are no tenants upon said tract of land, and no person is either in actual or constructive possession of said tract of land or any part thereof, nor is there any person, claiming the estate in and to said tract of land, known to petitioner; that no person has paid the taxes on said land or any part thereof; that the estate in and to said tract of land has escheated to the state of Texas, and praying for the grant of writ of possession in and to said tract of land to said state; that afterwards, to wit, Kleek, 20 N. J. L. 31; Hinkle v. Shadden, 2 Swan, 46; Puckett v. State, 1 Sneed, 355; Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348; Haigh v. Haigh, 9 R. I. 26; McCaughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. 376.

Ejectment has displaced the writ of escheat. Bliss, Anno. Code of N. Y. § 1977.

Generally conveyances of escheated lands cannot be made under provisions for the conveyance of vacant lands. Straub v. Dimm, 27 Pa. 36; Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 10; Armstrong v. Bittinger, 47 Md. 103.

A grant by the state while heirs of the original grantee are living passes nothing. Hall v. Gittings, 2 Harr. & J. 112.

One of four owners of real estate died, and it escheated. After partition proceedings, the state conveyed an undivided fourth interest in the land. Held, that the grantee was not bound by the partition proceedings, the state not having assented thereto. Holmes v. Pattison, 25 Pa. 484.

A legislative act, directing the possession and appropriation of the land, is equivalent to office found. United States v. De Ropentigny, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 211 (18: 627).

Until office found, an alien is competent to hold land against third persons. No one has a right to complain, in a collateral proceeding, if the sovereign does not enforce his prerogative. Osterman v. Baldwin, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 116 (18: 730); Fairfax v. Hunter, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 603 (3: 453); Jones v. Masters, 61 U. S. 20 How. 8 (15: 805); Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208 (25: 603); Craig v. Radford, 16 U. S. 3 Wheat. 594 (4: 467).

The Virginia act of 1779 secured from escheat all the interest acquired by aliens to real property in that state, previous to the issuing of a patent therefor, though it left the rights acquired by them under a patent to be determined by the principles of the common law. Governor v. Robertson, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 332 (6: 488).

The only ground of escheat practically known to our laws is where the owner dies intestate, leaving no inheritable blood, in which case the lands escheat to the people, or fall back into the common ownership of the state. People v. Conklin, 2 Hill, 67; Wallace v. Harmstead, 44 Pa. 501; Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. 443; Jackson v. Jackson, 7 Johns 214; Scott v. Cohen, 2 Nott & McC. 293; M'Caughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. 376; Nettles v. Cummings, 9 Rich. Eq. 440; Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475; Donovan v. Pitcher, 53 Ala. 511, 25 Am. Rep. 634; Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348.

The state takes, not as heir, but because there are no heirs. State v. Ames, 23 La. Ann. 69.

Generally a process known as an "inquest of office," or "of office found," must be instituted 161 U. S.

and carried on in the name of the state, in order to complete its title to the escheated lands. And the state takes the title which the party had, and none other, and takes in the plight and extent by which he held it. 4 Kent, Com. 424; Den, Van Kleek, v. O'Hanlon, 21 N. J. L. 582; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430; Borland v. Dean, 4 Mason, 174.

If a cestui que trust dies intestate, without heirs, the trustee will hold an absolute estate in the property, discharged of the trust. Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. 443.

When the owner of the real estate dies intestate without heirs capable of inheriting it, the title thereof devolves by operation of law upon the state, but, to make its title available, it must be established by a judicial proceeding, in the proper court, in the name of the people. Wallahan v. Ingersoll, 117 Ill. 123.

The right of action to recover lands escheats to the state upon the death of the owner without heirs or next of kin. Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185.

A proceeding by the attorney general, brought in behalf of the state of California to obtain a decree declaring that the property of an alien dying intestate had escheated to the state, is premature if commenced within five years after the death of the intestate. People, Atty. Gen., v. Roach, 76 Cal. 294.

The question of escheat of a decedent's property for nonexistence of heirs can be determined only by the method provided by the statute, and cannot be determined in a proceeding by an heir for an injunction to restrain the escheator from proceeding with his action for escheat. Muir v. Thomson, 28 S. C. 499.

The penalty of escheat is removed, although the act imposing it is not repealed in terms, when, before any inquisition is taken, a statute has declared that the land should be held "indefeasibly as to any right of escheat" in the commonwealth. Com. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 132 Pa. 591, 7 L. R. A. 634.

Proceedings to escheat the estate of an intestate without heirs or kindred may be traversed by any person, including his administratrix, in whose possession the estate is found. Com. v. Crompton, 137 Pa. 138.

The interest of the state in lands of one dying without heirs, upon which was a prior mortgage on foreclosure of which the state was not made party, consists only of the right to enforce its equity of redemption by an equitable action to redeem from the mortgage. Croner v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 471.

on the 18th day of May, 1861, the said district court of Fayette county, Texas, made an order in said suit and caused it to be enrolled in the minutes of the said court, commanding the publication for four successive weeks in a newspaper printed in the state of Texas of a notice setting forth the substance of the allegations of said petition and requiring all persons interested in the estate of said Walter Hamilton to appear and show cause at the next term of said court why the said league of land should not be vested in the state of Texas; that pursuant thereto a notice setting forth at length said order and the substance of said petition was issued by the clerk of said court and published, as required by law, for four successive weeks in a weekly newspaper called the New Era, printed and published in La Grange, in Fayette county, Texas; that sundry persons intervened in said suit, and set up claims to parts of said league of land; that said suit was continued from term to term of said court until the July term thereof in 1871, when there was a trial had, and judgment entered there to the effect that the league of land in controversy in this suit is escheated unto the state of Texas, and the title thereto is devested out of the said Walter Hamilton and his heirs, and forever vested in the state of Texas. A true and correct copy of said judgment, certified to 259] under the hand and *seal of the clerk of the district court of Fayette county, Texas, is hereto attached and is made a part hereof.† That said judgment has never been reversed or vacated, but now remains in full force and effect; that by and because of said judgment the said Walter Hamilton, and all persons claiming through or under him, are estopped and barred of the right to have or maintain this action for the recovery of said land.

"And these defendants further say that afterwards, to wit, on the 7th day of August, 1872, pursuant to the commands of said judgment, the clerk of the district court of Fayette county, Texas, issued and delivered to the sheriff of Fayette county, Texas, an order of sale, commanding him to seize the said league of land, and sell it in manner as directed in the said judgment, and make disposition of the proceeds arising from the sale as provided therein; that said land was so seized and sold by said sheriff, and that these defendants and those under whom they claim became the purchasers of the parts of said league claimed by 260] them at such sale, paid the amounts *of their respective bids to the said sheriff, and received from him deeds conveying the same to them; that for this reason, also, these defendants say that said plaintiffs are estopped from and barred of the right to have or maintain this action."

The plaintiffs, by an amended supplemental petition, demurred generally to this answer as insufficient in law, and also specially excepted to it as follows:

1st. "The escheat proceedings and final judgment obtained therein, set out in defendants' said answer, were begun and prosecuted under and by virtue of an act of the legislature of the state of Texas, entitled 'An Act to Provide for Vesting in the State Escheat Property,' passed March 20, 1848, there being at the date of the filing of said escheat proceedings no other law or statute authorizing escheats; which said act was repealed and annulled by the Constitution of the state of Texas of 1869, long prior to the date when the escheat judgment, pleaded and relied upon by defendants to defeat plaintiff's title, was obtained; in this, that the law of 1848, § 11, provides that the sheriff of the proper county shall seize the real estate escheated to the state, and sell the same in the manner therein provided, while Const. 1869, art. 4, § 20, provides that the comptroller of the state 'shall take charge of all escheated property, keep an accurate account of all moneys paid into the treasury and of all lands escheated to the state,' which provisions are contradictory and conflicting."

2d. If the act of 1848 was not repealed and annulled entirely, then § 11 thereof was repealed and annulled by that provision of the Constitution of 1869, "and, there being no other provisions in said act by which compensation is made to the heirs of the intestates whose property has been escheated, the balance of the said act is not self-acting, and is one of confiscation, and therefore in violation of the 5th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and § 14 of the bill of rights of the Constitution of 1869," by which "no person's property shall be taken or applied to public use without just compensation being made, unless by consent of such person."

*3d. The act of 1848, if not repealed by 261 the Constitution of 1869, "was and is in contravention and violation of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, which provides that 'no state shall pass any bill of attainder or law impairing the obligation of contracts,' in that said law impairs the obligation of the contract between the state of Texas and Walter F. Hamilton and his heirs by virtue of the grant under which they hold said land, and seeks to forfeit or confiscate the private property of said Hamilton, the land, by appropriating it to the com-

†The judgment annexed was as follows: "It is thereupon ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the league of land described and set forth in plaintiff's petition as follows, to wit [giving the description by metes and bounds] be, and the same is hereby, declared escheated unto the state of Texas, and the title thereto is hereby devested out of the said Walter Hamilton, his heirs and assigns forever, and vested in the state of Texas. It is further ordered by the court that the clerk of this court do issue a writ, directed to the sheriff of Fayette county, Texas, commanding him, the said sheriff, to seize and sell the above-described league of land as under execution, without appraisalment, for cash in United States currency, on the first Tuesday in some month, after giving notice of sale as the law directs, in lots of not less than 10 nor more than 40 acres, and turn over the proceeds of said sale, after deducting therefrom the expenses and costs of the same, to the comptroller of public accounts for the state of Texas, taking therefor his duplicate receipt, one of which he shall file among the papers of this cause. It is further ordered by the court that the plaintiff, the state of Texas, do have and recover of the interveners herein, to wit, J. G. Brown, J. J. Short, Wm. Short, and — Short, her costs of suit in this behalf had and expended, for which execution may issue. It is further ordered that the costs incurred herein by the plaintiff be taxed against the state of Texas, and certified by the clerk of this court to the comptroller of public accounts, to be paid by the treasurer upon the warrant of said comptroller."

mon fund without making due compensation therefor."

The court overruled the general demurrer and the special exceptions to the answer, and, upon the plaintiffs' declining to introduce any evidence to support their cause of action, rendered judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiffs tendered and were allowed a bill of exceptions to the rulings and judgment of the court, and sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. H. E. Barnard, Floyd McGown, and West & Cochran for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. S. R. Fisher, T. W. Gregory, Brown, Lane, & Jackson, and Phelps & Willrich for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover land in the county of Fayette and state of Texas.

The petition alleged that the land was granted in 1831 by the Republic of Mexico to Walter F. Hamilton, and that on April 13, 1888, the plaintiffs were the owners in fee simple and entitled to the possession thereof, and the defendants then ousted them.

The defendants, in their answer, relied on proceedings in escheat commenced in 1861, and in which judgment was rendered in 1871.

In those proceedings, as set forth in the answer, the attorney *for the state alleged that Walter Hamilton died intestate and without heirs, seised and possessed of this land, and that the estate in the land escheated to the state of Texas; the court ordered publication of notice to all persons interested in the estate of Walter Hamilton to appear and show cause why the land should not be vested in the state; after due publication of the order of notice, sundry persons intervened in the suit, and set up claims to parts of the land; the case was continued from term to term until July term, 1871, when a trial was had, and judgment entered that the land "be, and the same is hereby, declared escheated unto the state of Texas, and the title is hereby divested out of the said Walter Hamilton, his heirs and assigns forever, and vested in the state of Texas."

The answer alleged that that judgment had never been reversed or vacated, but remained in full force; and that, because of such judgment, Walter Hamilton, and all persons claiming through or under him, were estopped and barred of the right to maintain this action.

The answer further alleged that in 1872, pursuant to the commands of that judgment, the sheriff sold the land by auction, and the defendants and those under whom they claimed became purchasers of parts of the land at such sale, and paid the amounts of their respective bids to the sheriff, and received from him deeds conveying the land to them; and that, for this reason also, the plaintiffs were estopped and barred to maintain this action.

Although it is not directly stated, either in the petition or in the answer, that the plaintiffs claimed the land as heirs of Walter Hamilton, or Walter F. Hamilton, yet it is evident that it was so understood and intended. If the plaintiffs did not claim in his right, then, on the one hand, the Mexican grant to him in 1831, upon which they relied, both in the petition and in the exceptions to the answer, was immaterial; and, on the other hand, neither the judgment in escheat in 1871, nor the sheriff's sale in 1872, set up in the answer, would meet the allegation in the petition that the plaintiffs owned the land in 1888. And it is assumed, in the briefs of both *parties, that [263 the Walter F. Hamilton named in the petition and the Walter Hamilton named in the answer were the same person; and that the question to be decided is whether the judgment in escheat, or the sheriff's sale under that judgment, bars the plaintiffs claiming as his heirs.

By the law of England, before the Declaration of Independence, the lands of a man dying intestate and without lawful heirs reverted by escheat to the King as the sovereign lord; but the King's title was not complete without an actual entry upon the land, or judicial proceedings to ascertain the want of heirs and devisees. Atty. Gen. of Ontario v. Mercer, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 767, 772; 2 Bl. Com. 245. The usual form of proceeding for this purpose was by an inquisition or inquest of office before a jury, which was had upon a commission out of the court of chancery, but was really a proceeding at common law; and, if it resulted in favor of the King, then, by virtue of ancient statutes, any one claiming title in the lands might, by leave of that court, file a traverse, in the nature of a plea or defense to the King's claim, and not in the nature of an original suit. Lord Somers, in The Bankers' Case, 14 How. St. Tr. 1, 83; Ex parte Webster, 6 Ves. Jr. 809; Ex parte Gwydir, 4 Madd. 281; Re Parry, L. R. 2 Eq. 95; People v. Cutting, 3 Johns. 1; Briggs v. The Upper Cedar Point, 11 Allen, 157, 172. The inquest of office was a proceeding in rem; when there was a proper office found for the King, that was notice to all persons who had claims to come in and assert them; and, until so traversed, it was conclusive in the King's favor. Bayley, J., in Doe, Hayne, v. Redfern, 12 East, 96, 103; 16 Vin. Abr. 86, pl. 1.

In this country, when the title to land fails for want of heirs and devisees, it escheats to the state as part of its common ownership, either by mere operation of law, or upon an inquest of office, according to the law of the particular state. 4 Kent, Com. 424; 3 Washb. Real Prop. (4th ed.) 47, 48.

By the Constitution of 1836 of the Republic of Texas, art. 4, § 13, it was provided that the legislature should, "as early as practicable, introduce, by statute, the common law of England, with such modifications as our circumstances, in *their judgment, may require." [264 2 Charters & Constitutions, 1757. And by the statutes of Texas, from the time of its existence as an independent republic, the common law of England, so far as not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of Texas, has been declared to be, together with such Constitution and laws, the rule of decision, and to continue in force until altered or repealed by the legislature. Tex. Stat. Jan. 20, 1840 (Pasch. Dig. (4th ed.) art. 978); Rev. Stat. of 1879, § 3128; Courand v. Vollmer, 31 Tex. 397; Barrett v. Kelly, 31 Tex. 476.

By the Constitution of the state of Texas of 1845 it was provided, in art. 4, § 10, that the district court should have original jurisdiction "of all suits in behalf of the state to recover penalties, forfeitures, and escheats;" and in art. 13, § 4, as follows: "All fines, penalties, forfeitures, and escheats which have accrued to the Republic of Texas under the Constitution and laws shall accrue to the state of Texas; and the legislature shall by law provide a method for determining what lands may have been forfeited or escheated." 2 Charters & Constitutions, 1773, 1781.

By the settled course of decision in the supreme court of the state, no proceedings for escheat can be had, except under and according to an act of the legislature. Jones v. McMasters, 61 U. S. 20 How. 8, 21 [15: 805, 810]; Hancock v. McKinney, 7 Tex. 384, 456; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133.

The legislature, on March 20, 1848, passed a statute, entitled "An Act to Provide for Vesting in the State Escheated Property." General Laws of Texas of 1847-48, chap. 145, p. 210 (Pasch. Dig. arts. 3657-3674).

By § 1 of that statute (Pasch. Dig. art. 3657) "if any person die seised of any real or possessed of any personal, estate, without any devise thereof, and having no heirs, or where the owner of any real or personal estate shall be absent for the term of seven years, and is not known to exist, such estate shall escheat to and vest to the state." The purpose and import of the 2d clause of this section, concerning an owner absent for seven years and not known to exist, have been declared by the supreme court of the state to be "that proof of absence of one who is not known to exist for the length of time mentioned is presumptive evidence of his death. It is not, therefore, a ground for escheat of itself, but evidence of one of the elements of title by escheat." Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 10, 20. This is only important by way of explaining the scope of the statute, since, in the present case, both parties assume and rely upon the death of the former owner.

By § 2 (3658) when no letters testamentary or of administration appear to have been granted upon the estate of a person who has died without heirs, it is made the duty of the district attorney to file in the district court of the county "where such succession is required to be opened," which is as much as to say where his estate would be administered, a petition setting forth "a description of the estate, the name of the person last lawfully seised or possessed of the same, the names of the tenants or persons in actual possession, if any, and the names of the persons claiming the estate, if any such are known to claim, and the facts and circumstances in consequence of which such estate is claimed to have escheated; praying for a writ of possession for the same, in behalf of the state."

Section 3 (3659) requires scire facias to be issued to all persons named in the petition as in possession of or claiming the estate, requiring them to appear and show cause why it should not be vested in the state. Section 4 (3660) further requires an order of notice to be published four weeks in a newspaper printed within the state, stating briefly the contents of the petition, and requiring "all persons interested in the estate" to appear and show cause why it should not be vested in the state. The order of notice by publication to all persons interested in the estate is essential to the jurisdiction of the court; and, if no such notice is shown by the record, a judgment for the state will be reversed on writ of error, even if sued out by parties who were named in the petition and appeared and pleaded in the cause. State v. Teulon, 41 Tex. 249; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133; Hanna v. State, 84 Tex. 664, 667.

*By § 5 (3661) "all persons named in [266 such petition as tenants or persons in actual possession or claimants of the estate" may appear and plead and traverse the facts stated in the petition or the title of the state; "and any other person claiming an interest in such estate may appear and be made a defendant and plead, by motion for that purpose, in open court." By § 6 (3662), if no person, after notice as aforesaid, shall appear and plead, judgment shall be rendered by default for the state. By § 7 (3663), "if any person appear and deny the title set up by the state, or traverse any material fact in the petition, issue shall be made up and tried as other issues of fact." By § 8 (3664), "if after the issue and trial it appears, from the facts found or admitted, that the state hath good title to the estate, real or personal, in the petition mentioned, or any part thereof, judgment shall be rendered that the state shall be seised or possessed thereof, and, at the discretion of the court, recover costs against the defendants." By § 9 (3665), "if it appear that the state hath no title in such estate, the defendant shall recover his costs, to be taxed and certified by the clerk; and the comptroller of public accounts shall, on such certificate being filed in his office, issue a warrant therefor on the treasury of the state, which shall be paid as other demands on the treasury." And by § 10 (3666), "when any judgment shall be rendered that the state be seised or possessed of any estate, such judgment shall contain a description thereof, and shall vest the title in the state."

By § 11 (3667) "a writ shall be issued to the sheriff of the proper county, commanding him to seize such estate, vested in the state;" and "he shall dispose thereof at public auction, in the manner provided by law for the sale of property under execution." By § 12 (3668) a copy of the record and account of sale, exemplified under the seal of the court, is required to be deposited in the office of the comptroller of public accounts, and another copy recorded in the office of the recorder of the county; "and such record shall preclude all parties and privies thereto, their heirs and assigns."

By § 13 (3669) "any party who shall have appeared *to any proceeding, and the dis- [267 trict attorney on behalf of the state, shall have the right to prosecute an appeal or writ of error upon such judgment."

Section 14 (3670) requires that "the comptroller shall keep just accounts of all moneys paid into the treasury and of all lands vested in the state under the provisions of this act."

Sections 15 (3671) and 16 (3672) provide that "if any person appear after the death of the testator or intestate, and claim any money paid into the treasury under this act," as heir, devisee, or legatee, he may, by petition in the district court for the county in which the estate was sold, and after notice to the district attorney, and proof that the petitioner is an heir, devisee, legatee, or legal representative, obtain an order directing the comptroller to issue his warrant on the treasurer for payment thereof.

Section 17 (3673) simply relates to the duty of the district attorney to obtain from the clerk of any probate court moneys or title papers to land, not claimed by any heir, devisee, or legal representative of a deceased person.

By § 18 (3674) "all property escheated under the provisions of this act shall remain subject to the disposition of the state, as may hereafter be prescribed by law."

Tex. Rev. Stat. 1879, §§ 1770-1785, re-enact substantially and almost verbally the provisions of the statute of 1848, except by requiring the publication of the order of notice for eight weeks, instead of four weeks as in § 4, by omitting §§ 12 and 17, and by inserting the words "the proceeds of" at the beginning of § 18.

These proceedings for the escheat of the estate of a deceased person for want of heirs or devisees, like ordinary proceedings for the administration of his estate, presuppose that he is dead; if he is still alive the court is without jurisdiction, and its proceedings are null and void, even in a collateral proceeding. Griffith v. Frazier, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 9, 23 [3: 471, 475]; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34 [38: 896]; Hall v. Claiborne, 27 Tex. 217; Withers v. Patterson, 27 Tex. 491, 497, 86 Am. Dec. 643; Martin v. Robinson, 67 Tex. 368, 375; Caplen v. Compton, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 410. And 268 if the death *of the former owner, intestate and without heirs, is not alleged in the petition, or is not proved at the trial, a judgment for the state is erroneous and reversible by appeal or writ of error. Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 10; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133; Hanna v. State, 84 Tex. 664.

But the whole object in proceedings for escheat, as in proceedings of administration, is to ascertain who are entitled to the estate of a deceased person; in proceedings of administration, to distribute the assets, after payment of debts, among those who come forward and prove themselves to be next of kin; in proceedings for escheat, to ascertain and determine, once for all, so far as concerns the title in the land itself, whether the former owner left no heirs or devisees, that being the single question on which depends the issue whether or not the land has escheated to the state.

Consequently, when (as is admitted in the present case) the former owner was dead; and in the proceedings for escheat (as shown by the record on which the defendants rely) the petition describes the land, gives the name of the former owner, and alleges that he died intestate and without heirs, that no letters of administration upon his estate had been granted, that there is no tenant or person in actual or constructive possession of the land, nor any person known to the petitioner claiming an estate therein, and that the land has escheated to the state of Texas; and an order of notice to all persons interested in the estate has been published, as required by the statute; and, after a hearing of all who appear and plead, judgment is entered, describing the land, and declaring that it has escheated to the state,—the judgment is conclusive evidence of the state's title in the land, not only against any tenants or claimants having had actual notice by scire facias, or having appeared and pleaded, but also against all other persons interested in the estate and having had constructive notice by publication.

That such is the effect of the judgment in favor of the state is clearly shown by the decision in Wiederanders v. State, above cited, in which the reasons for holding that, if the notice required by the statute to all persons interested in the estate *had not been pub- [269] lished, the court had no jurisdiction to enter judgment, even against persons who actually appeared and contested the claim of the state, were stated by the court as follows:

"The purpose for which proceedings of this character are instituted is to have a judicial declaration in the form of a solemn judgment made by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of the persons in interest in so far as publication can give it, that the facts exist which, under the law, cast title upon the state to property with which, at some former time (in case of lands), it had clothed a person with title. . . . The law now in force must be deemed to be a law providing a method for giving effect to escheats. Rev. Stat. 1770-1788. . . . We are of the opinion that the publication of notice, required by the statute, is made necessary to the exercise of the general jurisdiction conferred, and that without it the district court had no jurisdiction to try the case. The object of such a proceeding is not simply to have a decree declaring the escheat, and vesting the title in the state; but by and through process, to be issued under the judgment, to divest, not only the title of persons entitled to take the property of the deceased as his heirs, if perchance any such there be, but also by a sale to divest the title of the state, and to start and confer upon the purchaser a new title deraigned directly from the sovereignty of the soil. Rev. Stat. 1777-1780.

"The proceeding, while not strictly a proceeding in rem, has many of its characteristics; yet the statute does not direct a seizure of the thing, which, in some cases, has been held to support a judgment strictly in rem. It applies to personalty, as well as realty. The mere institution of the proceeding creates no presumption that there is no one capable of taking the estate under the rules regulating the descent of estates of deceased persons—the presumption is to the contrary; and the effect of the judgment, if rendered after all persons interested in the estate are notified of the pendency and purpose of the proceeding, in the only manner in which they can be, if unknown, is to destroy that presumption and to make the title of the state clear. *From the time the [270] property is sold under a valid decree, the claim of the person who might have taken it as heir, devisee, or legatee is against the proceeds of the property, which must be paid into the state treasury (Rev. Stat. 1780-1785), and to recover even that he is driven to a suit. It certainly is not the intention that the purchaser of escheated lands shall be subjected to the peril of losing them after they have been regularly escheated and sold, if an heir, devisee, or legatee shall subsequently make claim; nor that personalty which, from day to day, changes hands, shall be subject to the claim of such persons, however valid such claim may have been if asserted in proper time and place. Yet such results would follow if the jurisdiction of the court is not so brought into exercise, by a substantial compliance with the requisites of the statute as to clothe it with power, by its judgment, to conclusively settle the title to the property as against all persons." 64 Tex. 135-138.

The like opinion was expressed by Chief Justice Shaw upon the effect of proceedings under a similar statute of Massachusetts, in a case in which it was held that a conveyance of real estate of a citizen dying intestate and without heirs could not be made by the commonwealth until the rendition of judgment in its favor upon an inquest of office. The Chief Justice said: "Where a subject dies intestate, as the estate descends to collateral kindred indefinitely, the presumption of law is that he had heirs, and this presumption will be good against the commonwealth until they institute the regular proceedings by inquest of office, by which the fact whether the intestate did or did not die without heirs can be ascertained, and if this fact is established in favor of the commonwealth, it rebuts the contrary presumption, and the commonwealth, by force of the judgment, and of the statute before cited, becomes seised in law and in fact. In such cases, therefore, the court are of opinion that an inquest of office is necessary, and that the commonwealth cannot be deemed to be seised without such inquest. Jackson v. Adams, 7 Wend. 367; Doe. Hayne, v. Redfern, 12 East, 96. So far as this depends upon general principles, it seems to be a rule highly reasonable in [271] *itself, and tends greatly to the security and regularity of titles. By the mode of taking inquests, prescribed by the law of this commonwealth (Stat. 1791, chap. 13, § 2), general notice is to be given of the claim of the commonwealth, any person is admitted to traverse it, a trial by jury is to be had, and costs are given to the prevailing party. These are highly reasonable and equitable provisions, and it is manifestly for the quiet of the commonwealth and the security of the citizen, that they should be pursued, before the commonwealth shall be permitted to take into its own custody and dispose of estates, upon a claim which, if not doubtful, is at least not apparent." Wilbur v. Tobey, 16 Pick. 177, 180.

The Constitution of Texas of 1866, art. 4, § 6, contained a provision similar to that of the Constitution of 1845, as to the jurisdiction of the district court over escheats; and contained no other provision on the subject of escheats. 2 Charters & Constitutions, 1789. That Constitution, as was admitted by the plaintiffs, did not take away the power of the legislature over the subject, or affect the statute of 1848 or proceedings under it.

But it was strenuously contended that this statute was repealed by the Constitution of 1869, which, while embodying, in art. 5, § 7, the provision of the former Constitutions as to the jurisdiction of the district court over escheats, and repeating in art. 4, § 20, the provision of art. 5, § 23, of the Constitution of 1866, establishing the office of comptroller of public accounts, to be elected by the qualified voters of the state for the term of four years, also defined the comptroller's duties as follows: "He shall superintend the fiscal affairs of the state; give instructions to the assessors and collectors of the taxes; settle with them for taxes; take charge of all escheated property; keep an accurate account of all moneys paid into the treasury, and of all lands escheated to the state; publish annually a list of delinquent assessors and collectors, and demand of them an annual list of all taxpayers in their respective counties, to be filed in his office; keep all the accounts of the state; audit all the claims against the state; draw warrants upon the treasurer in favor of the public *creditors; and perform such [272] other duties as may be prescribed by law." 2 Charters & Constitutions, 1794, 1809, 1811.

This definition of the duties of the comptroller in the Constitution of 1869 nearly follows the words of the statutes existing at the time of its adoption. Pasch. Dig. arts. 5414, 5424, 5426, 3670, 5194, 5416, 5418, 5420. The principal difference is in substituting for the words of § 14 of the act of 1848, requiring the comptroller to "keep just accounts of all moneys paid into the treasury, and of all lands vested in the state, under the provisions of this act," the words, "take charge of all escheated property; keep an accurate account of all moneys paid into the treasury, and of all lands escheated to the state."

As the Constitution of 1869 repeats, in so many words, the provision of former Constitutions by which the district court is vested with original jurisdiction of all causes in behalf of the state to recover escheats, and as the statute of 1848 made it the duty of the comptroller to keep accounts, not only of all moneys paid into the treasury, but also of all lands vested in the state, under its provisions, it is difficult to see how the insertion of the general words "take charge of all escheated property," in the definition of the comptroller's duties in the Constitution of 1869, either increased his powers, or diminished those of the district court, in relation to escheats.

The whole object of inserting in the Constitution a definition of the principal duties of the comptroller would seem to have been to fix by the fundamental law a matter which would otherwise have been subject to the discretion of the legislature.

The only doubt thrown upon this arises out of the opinion delivered in Hughes v. State, above cited, in which Mr. Justice Moore said: "Whether this statute had not been repealed by the provision in the Constitution of 1869, which we have cited, may, we think, admit of serious question; but as it is not necessary to the determination of the present case, we are not called upon at present to determine it. We think, however, that it is quite evident this section of the Constitution is in conflict with, and therefore revokes, the authority conferred *by the statute of 1848 upon the court [273] to order the sale of escheated land, if such, indeed, can be held to be the proper construction of this statute in view of the conflicting provisions of its different sections." 41 Tex. 18, 19.

But the weight of that suggestion is much lessened, if not wholly counterbalanced, by several considerations. The decision in that case was put upon the distinct ground that the petition and the proof were both insufficient. In another case, decided at the same term, in which the opinion was delivered by the same judge, as well as in an earlier case of a writ of error to review the very judgment now pleaded, and in at least two later cases, above cited, in each of which this proposition, if sound, would have been decisive, it was not even mentioned. State v. Teulon, 41 Tex. 249; Brown v. State, 36 Tex. 282; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133; Hanna v. State, 84 Tex. 664. And after the Constitution of 1869 had been in force for ten years, the legislature, in revising and codifying the statutes of the state, re-enacted all the material provisions of the act of 1848, both as to obtaining a judgment declaring the land to have escheated, and as to a subsequent sale of the land by the sheriff, and clearly manifested its understanding and intention that the provisions for such a sale did and should remain in force, by prefixing the words "the proceeds of" to the last section, which had directed "all property escheated in accordance with the provisions of" the act to "remain subject to the disposition of the state, as may hereafter be prescribed by law." Rev. Stat. of 1879, § 1785.

The plaintiffs somewhat relied on art. 10, § 6, of the Constitution of 1869, which provides that "the legislature shall not hereafter grant lands to any person or persons, nor shall any certificates for land be sold at the land office, except to actual settlers upon the same and in lots not exceeding 160 acres." 2 Charters & Constitutions, 1816. But this evidently relates only to legislative grants of land, and not to judicial proceedings to declare and enforce escheats.

Even if the suggestion in Hughes v. State, above cited, that art. 4, § 20, of the Constitution [274] of 1869, relating to the *comptroller of accounts, "is in conflict with, and therefore revokes, the authority conferred by the statute of 1848 upon the court to order the sale of escheated land," should be considered as well founded, it would affect only § 11 of the statute, authorizing the sale, and so much of the subsequent sections as concern that subject; and would leave unaffected the preceding sections, providing for a judgment to be rendered, upon due allegation and proof, and after notice to all persons interested, ascertaining and declaring that the land has escheated to the state, and vesting in the state the title to the land. The provisions looking to a judgment vesting title to the land in the state are distinct and severable from the provisions for a sale, and a conversion into money, of the land after it has vested in the state; and if the latter provisions are for any reason invalid, they may be considered as stricken out, and the former provisions stand good. Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649 [36: 294]; Zuernemann v. Von Rosenberg, 76 Tex. 522. And the judgment set up in the answer in this case, so far as it determined that the title of the land had vested by escheat in the state, was valid, even if the order for a sale of the land was not. Ludlow v. Ramsey, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 581 [20: 216].

It follows that, if the sale and conveyance by the sheriff to the defendants were invalid and vested no title in them, the previous judgment, ascertaining and declaring the escheat, vested a good title in the state of Texas against all persons claiming as heirs or devisees of the former owner; and that judgment, although it does not prove the title to be in the defendants, proves it to be out of the plaintiffs, and affords a complete defense to this action. Love v. Simms, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 515, 524 [6: 149, 151]; Christy v. Scott, 55 U. S. 14 How. 282, 292 [14: 422, 426]; Doswell v. De La Lanzo, 61 U. S. 20 How. 29, 33 [15: 824, 826].

As to personal property, indeed, a judgment in rem after notice by publication only might not bind persons who had no actual notice of the proceedings, unless the thing had been first seized into the custody of the court. The Mary, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 126, 144 [3: 678, 684]; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 46 [38: 896, 901]; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 167 [ante, 145, 151]. But it was within the power of the legislature of Texas to provide for determining and quieting the *title to real estate [275] within the limits of the state and within the jurisdiction of the court, after actual notice to all known claimants, and notice by publication to all other persons. Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208, 212 [25: 603, 604]; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316 [33: 918]; Hardy v. Beaty, 84 Tex. 562, 569.

When a man dies the legislature is under no constitutional obligation to leave the title to his property, real or personal, in abeyance for an indefinite period; but it may provide for promptly ascertaining, by appropriate judicial proceedings, who has succeeded to his estate. If such proceedings are had, after actual notice by service of summons to all known claimants, and constructive notice by publication to all possible claimants who are unknown, the final determination of the right of succession, either among private persons, as in the ordinary administration of estates, or between all persons and the state, as by inquest of office or similar process to determine whether the estate has escheated to the public, is due process of law; and a statute providing for such proceedings and determination does not impair the obligation of any contract contained in the grant under which the former owner held, whether that grant was from the state or from a private person.

Judgment affirmed.

CHARLES DAVIS, Plff. in Err.,

v

ELMIRA SAVINGS BANK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 275-290.)

Preference by insolvent national bank.

A preference, under the New York law, of the debt of an insolvent national bank for a deposit by a savings bank, is invalid under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5236, 5242, which require a ratable distribution of the assets of insolvent national banks, and prohibit preferences made in contemplation of or after committing an act of insolvency.

[No. 415.]

Argued January 13, 14, 1896. Decided March 2, 1896.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York to review a judgment of that court establishing a preference to the plaintiff, the Elmira Savings Bank, in the payment of a debt due it from the Elmira National Bank and the receiver thereof on the insolvency of the latter bank and the distribution of its assets, in the hands of Charles Davis, the receiver thereof, defendant, by virtue of the law of the state of New York. Reversed, and case remanded with instructions to dismiss the action.

See same case below, 142 N. Y. 590, 25 L. R. A. 546.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

276 *In March, 1893, the Elmira National Bank, a banking association organized under the laws of the United States, and doing business in the state of New York, suspended payment, and the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States appointed Charles Davis, plaintiff in error, the receiver thereof. The Elmira Savings Bank, which was incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, from November, 1890, kept a deposit account with the Elmira National Bank, and at the time of the appointment of the receiver of the latter corporation there was to the credit of this account of the savings bank the sum of $42,704.67. The opening of the deposit account by the savings bank was sanctioned by the general banking laws of the state of New York as expressed in §§ 118 and 119, which were as follows:

2 N. Y. Laws 1892, p. 1898. "Sec. 118. Available Fund for Current Expenses, How Loaned.—The trustees of every such corporation (savings bank) shall, as soon as practicable, invest the moneys deposited with them in the securities authorized by this article; but for the purpose of meeting current payments and expenses in excess of the receipts, there may be kept an available fund not exceeding 10 per centum of the whole amount of deposits with such corporation, on hand or deposit in any bank in this state organized under any law of this state or of the United States, or with any trust company incorporated by any law of the state; but the sum so deposited in any one bank or trust company shall not exceed 25 per centum of the paid-up capital or surplus of any such bank or company."

